This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world’s books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that’s often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book’s long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

+ Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.

+ Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google’s system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.

+ Maintain attribution The Google “watermark” you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.

+ Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can’t offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book’s appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

THE EPISTLE DEDICATORIE.

To the most Noble and Incomparable Paire of Brethren. William Earle of Pembroke, &c. Lord Chamberlaine to the Kings most Excellent Maiesty. And Philip Earle of Montgomery, &c. Gentleman of his Maiesties Bed-Chamber. Both Knights of the most Noble Order of the Garter, and our singular good Lords.

Right Honourable,

HILST we studie to be thankful in our particular, for the many favours we haue receiued from your L. L. we are falne vpon the ill fortune, to mingle two the most diuerse things that can bee, feare, and rathneffe; rathneffe in the enterprize, and feare of the succeffe. For, when we valew the places your H. H. suftaine, we cannot but know their dignity greater, then to descende to the reading of these trifles: and, while we name them trifles, we have depriu’d our felues of the defence of our Dedication. But since your L. L. haue beene pleas’d to thinke these trifles some-thing, heere-tofore; and haue prosequeuated both them, and their Author living, with so much favour: we hope, that (they out-living him, and he not hauing the fate, common with some, to be exequitor to his owne writings) you will vfe the like indulgence toward them, you haue done vnto their parent. There is a great difference, whether any Booke chooze his Patrones, or finde them: This hath done both. For, so much were your L. L. likeing of the seuerall parts, when they were added, as before they were publisht, the Volume ask’d to be yours. We haue but collected them, and done an office to the dead, to procure his Orphanes, Guardians; without ambition either of selfe-profit, or fame; onely to keepe the memory of so worthy a Friend, & Fellow alius, as was our SHAKESPEARE, by humble offer of his playes, to your most noble patronage. Wherein, as we haue iustly obseru’d, no man to come neere your L. L. but with a kind of religious addresse; it hath bin the height of our care, who are the Prefenters, to make the present worthy of your H. H. by the perfection. But, there we must also crauze our abilities to be consider’d, my Lords. We cannot go beyond our owne powers. Country hands reach forth milke, creame, fruites, or what they haue: and many Nations (we haue heard) that had not gummies & incense, obtained their requestes with a leauened Cake. It was no fault to approch their Gods, by what meanes they could: And the most, though meanest, of things are made more precious, when they are dedicated to Temples. In that name therefore, we most humbly confecrate to your H. H. these remains of your servuant SHAKESPEARE: that what delight is in them, may be euer your L. L. the reputation his, & the faults ours, if any be committed, by a payre so carefull to shew their gratidue both to the living, and the dead, as is

TO THE GREAT VARIETY OF READERS.

ROM the most able, to him that can but spell: There you are number'd. We had rather you were weigh'd. Especially, when the fate of all Bookes depends upon your capacities: and not of your heads alone, but of your purses. Well! it is now publique, & you will stand for your priviledges wee know: to read, and cenfure. Do so, but buy it first. That doth best commend a Booke, the Stationer faies. Then, how odde fower your braines be, or your wisedomes, make your licence the same, and spare not. Judge your fixe-pen'orth, your shillings worth, your five shillings worth at a time, or higher, so you rise to the just rates, and welcome. But, what euer you do, Buy. Cenfure will not drue a Trade, or make the Jacke go. And though you be a Magistrate of wit, and sit on the Stage at Black-Friers, or the Cock-pit, to arraigne Playes dailie, know, thefe Playes haue had their triall alreadie, and good out all Appeals; and do now come forth quitted rather by a Decree of Court, then any purchas'd Letters of commendation.

It had bene a thing, we confesse, worthie to haue bene wished, that the Author himselfe had liu'd to haue set forth, and overseen his owne writings; But since it hath bin ordain'd otherwise, and he by death departed from that right, we pray you do not envie his Friends, the office of their care, and paine, to haue collected, & publish'd them; and so to haue publish'd them, as where (before) you were abus'd with diverse stolen, and surreptitious copies, maimed, and deformed by the frauds and stealthes of injurious imposters, that expos'd them: euen those, are now offer'd to your view cur'd, and perfect of their limbs; and all the reft, absolute in their numbers, as he conceived them. Who, as he was a happie imitator of Nature, was a most gentle expreffer of it. His mind and hand went together: And what he thought, he vterred with that easinesse, that wee haue scarce receiv'd from him a blot in his papers. But it is not our prouince, who onely gather his works, and giue them you, to praiie him. It is yours that reade him. And there we hope, to your diuers capacities, you will finde enough, both to draw, and hold you: for his wit can no more lie hid, then it could be loft. Reade him, therefore; and againe, and againe: And if then you doe not like him, surely you are in some manifest danger, not to vnderstand him. And so we leaue you to other of his Friends, whom if you need, can bee your guides: if you neede them not, you can leade your selues, and others. And such Readers we wish him.

SKETCH
LIFE OF SHAKESPEARE

By ALEXANDER CHALMERS, A. M.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE was born at Stratford-upon-Avon, in Warwickshire, on the 23d day of April, 1564. Of the rank of his family it is not easy to form an opinion. Mr. Rowe says that by the register and certain public writings relating to Stratford, it appears that his ancestors were "of good figure and fashion," in that town, and are mentioned as "gentlemen," an epithet which was more determinate than at present, when it has become an unlimited phrase of courtesy. His father, John Shakespeare, was a considerable dealer in wool, and had been an officer and bailiff (probably high-bailiff or mayor) of the body corporate of Stratford. He held also the office of justice of the peace; and at one time, it is said, possessed lands and tenements to the amount of £500, the reward of his grandfather's faithful and approved services to King Henry VII. This, however, has been asserted upon very doubtful authority. But whatever may have been his former wealth, it appears to have been greatly reduced in the latter part of his life, as we find, from the books of the Corporation, that, in 1579, he was excused the trifling weekly tax of fourpence levied on all the aldermen; and that, in 1586, another alderman was appointed in his room, in consequence of his declining to attend on the business of that office. It is even said that he followed for some time the occupation of a butcher. It must have been, however, at this time, no inconsiderable addition to his difficulties that he had a family of ten children. His wife was the daughter and heiress of Robert Arden of Wellingcote, in the county of Warwick, who is styled "a gentleman of worship." The woodland part of this country was anciently called Arden, afterwards softened to Arden; and hence the name.

Our illustrious poet was the eldest son, and received his early education, however narrow or liberal, at a free school, probably that founded at Stratford. From this he appears to have been soon removed, and placed in the offices of some country attorney, or the seneschal of some manor court, where it is highly probable he picked up those technical law phrases that so frequently occur in his plays, and could not have been in common use, unless among professional men. His early life was incompatible with a course of education; and it is certain, that "his contemporaries, friends and foes, nay, and himself likewise, agree in his want of what is usually termed literature." It is, indeed, a strong argument in favor of Shakespeare's illiterature, that it was maintained by all his contemporaries, many of whom have left upon record every merit they could bestow on him; and by his successors, who lived nearest to his time, when "his memory was green."

In his eighteenth year, or perhaps a little sooner, he married Anne Hathaway, who was eight years older than himself, the daughter of one Hathaway, who is said to have been a substantial yeoman in the neighborhood of Stratford. Of his domestic economy, or professional occupation at this time, we have no information; but it would appear that both were in a considerable degree neglected by his associating with a gang of deer-stealers. Being detected with them in robbing the park of Sir Thomas Lucy of Charlecote, near Stratford, he was so rigorously prosecuted by that gentleman, as to be obliged to leave his family and business, and take shelter in London. Sir Thomas, on this occasion, is said to have been exasperated by a ballad Shakespeare wrote, probably his first essay in poetry.
The ballad, however, must have made some noise at Sir Thomas's expense, as the author took care it should be affixed to his park-gates, and liberally circulated among his neighbors.

On his arrival in London, which was probably in 1586, when he was twenty-two years old, he is said to have made his first acquaintance in the play-house, to which idleness or taste may have directed him, and where his necessities, if tradition may be credited, obliged him to accept the office of call-boy, or prompter's attendant. This is a menial whose employment it is to give the performers notice to be ready to enter, as often as the business of the play requires their appearance on the stage.

But in whatever situation he was first employed at the theatre, he appears to have soon discovered those talents which afterwards made him

Th' applause, delight, the wonder of our stage!

Some distinction he probably first acquired as an actor, although Mr. Rowe has not been able to discover any character in which he appeared to more advantage than that of the ghost in Hamlet. The instructions given to the player in that tragedy, and other passages of his works, show an intimate acquaintance with the skill of acting, and such as is scarcely surpassed in our own days. He appears to have studied nature in acting as much as in writing.

Mr. Rowe regrets that he cannot inform us which was the first play he wrote. More skilful research has since found, that Romeo and Juliet, and Richard II and III were printed in 1597, when he was thirty-three years old; there is also some reason to think that he commenced as a dramatic writer in 1592, and Mr. Malone even places his first play, "First part of Henry VI," in 1589. His plays, however, must have been not only popular, but approved by persons of the higher order, as we are certain that he enjoyed the gracious favor of Queen Elizabeth, who was very fond of the stage: and the particular and affectionate patronage of the Earl of Southampton, to whom he dedicated his poems of "Venus and Adonis," and his "Tarquin and Lucrece." On Sir William Davenant's authority, it has been asserted, that this nobleman at one time gave him a thousand pounds to enable him to complete a purchase. At the conclusion of the advertisement prefixed to Lintot's edition of Shakespeare's poems, it is said, "That most learned prince, and great patron of learning, King James the First, was pleased, with his own hand, to write an amiable letter to Mr. Shakespeare; which letter, though now lost, remained long in the hands of Sir William D'Avenant, as a credible person now living can testify." Dr. Farmer with great probability supposes, that this letter was written by King James, in return for the compliment paid to him in Macbeth. The relater of this anecdote was Sheffield, Duke of Buckingham. These brief notices, meagre as they are, may show that our author enjoyed high favor in his day. Whatever we may think of King James as a "learned prince," his patronage, as well as that of his predecessor, was sufficient to give celebrity to the founder of a new stage. It may be added, that his uncommon merit, his candor, and good-nature, are supposed to have procured him the admiration and acquaintance of every person distinguished for such qualities. It is not difficult, indeed, to suppose, that Shakespeare was a man of humor, and a social companion, and probably excelled in that species of minor wit not ill adapted to conversation, of which it could have been wished he had been more sparing in his writings.

How long he acted has not been discovered, but he continued to write till the year 1614. During his dramatic career he acquired a property in the theatre, which he must have disposed of when he retired, as no mention of it occurs in his will. His connection with Ben Jonson has been variously related. It is said, that when Jonson was unknown to the world, he offered a play to the theatre, which was rejected after a very careless perusal, but that Shakespeare having accidently cast his eye on it, conceived a favorable opinion of it, and afterwards recommended Jonson and his writings to the public. For this candor he was repaid by Jonson, when the latter became a poet of note, with an envious disrespect.

The latter part of Shakespeare's life was spent in ease, retirement, and the conversations of his friends. He had accumulated considerable property, which Gil- don stated to amount to £300 per annum, a sum at least equal to £1000 in our days; but Mr. Malone doubts whether all his property amounted to much more than £200 per annum, which yet was a considerable fortune in those times, and it is supposed that he might have derived £200 per annum from the theatre while he continued on the stage.

He retired some years before his death to a house in Stratford, built by Sir Hugh Clopton, a younger brother of an ancient family in that neighborhood. The principal estate had been sold out of the Clopton family for above a century, at the time when Shakespeare became the purchaser; who having repaired and modelled it to his own mind, changed the name to New Place, which the mansion-house, afterwards erected in the room of the poet's house, retained for many years. The house and lands belonging to it continued in the possession of Shakespeare's descendants to the time of the Restoration, when they were re-purchased by the Clopton family. Here, in May, 1742, when Mr. Garrick, Mr. Macklin, and Mr. Delane, visited Stratford, they were hospitably entertained under Shakespeare's mulberry-tree by Sir Hugh Clopton. His executor, about the year 1752, sold New Place to the Rev. Mr. Gastrell, a man of large fortune, who resided in it but a few years, in consequence of a disagreement with the inhabitants of Stratford. As he resided part of the year at Litchfield, he thought he was assessed too highly in the monthly rate towards the maintenance of the poor; but being very properly compelled by the magistrates of Stratford to pay the whole of what was levied on him, on the principle that this house was occupied by his servants in his absence, he peevishly
THE LIFE OF WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE.

Inferred that that house should never be assessed again; and soon afterwards pulled it down, sold the materials, and left the town. He had some time before cut down Shakespeare's mulberry-tree, to save himself the trouble of showing it to those whose admiration of his great poet led them to visit the classic ground on which it stood. That Shakespeare planted this tree appears to be sufficiently authenticated. Where New Place stood is now a garden.

During Shakespeare's abode in this house, his pleasant wit, and good nature, engaged him the acquaintance, and entitled him to the friendship, of the gentlemen of the neighborhood. Shakespeare, during his retirement, wrote the play of Twelfth Night.

He died on his birthday, Tuesday, April 23, 1616, when he had exactly completed his fifty-second year, and was buried on the north side of the chancel, in the great church at Stratford, where a monument is placed in the wall, on which he is represented under arch, in a sitting posture, a cushion spread before him, with a pen in his right hand, and his left rested on a scroll of paper.

On his grave-stone, underneath, are these lines, in unsewed mixture of small and capital letters:

Go to Poor for Ease AMEN forever.
To thee C.S. Dunt Enriched I HER.
Here in T.S. Most I spare T.H. Stones
And here he H. moves my Boose.

It is uncertain whether this request and inscription were written by Shakespeare, or by one of his friends. They probably allude to the custom of removing skeletons after a certain time, and depositing them in charnel-houses; and similar exorcisms are found in many ancient Latin epitaphs.

We have no account of the malady which, at no very advanced age, closed the life and labors of this unrivaled and incomparable genius. The only notice we have of his person is from Aubrey, who says, "he was a handsome well-shaped man;" and adds, "very good company, and of a very ready, and pleasant and smooth wit."

He family consisted of two daughters, and a son named Hamnet, who died in 1596, in the twelfth year of his age. Susannah, the eldest daughter, and her father's favorite, was married to Dr. John Hall, died July 11, 1649, aged sixty-six. They left only one child, Emilia, born 1607-8, and married April 22, 1626, Thomas Nash, Esq., who died in 1647; and afterwards to Mr. John Barnard, of Abington, in Northamptonshire; but died without issue by either husband. Judith, Shakespeare's youngest daughter, was married to Mr. Thomas Quiney, and died February 14, 1622, in her seventy-seventh year. By Mr. Quiney she had three sons, Shakespeare, Richard, and Thomas, all of whom married, but died unmarried.

In the year 1741, a monument was erected to our poet in Westminster Abbey, by the direction of the Earl of Burlington, Dr. Mead, Mr. Pope, and Mr. Martyn. It was the work of Scheemaker, (who received £200 for it,) after a design of Kent, and was opened in January of that year. The performers of each of the London theatres gave a benefit to defray the expenses, and the Dean and Chapter of Westminister took nothing for the ground. The money received by the performers at Drury Lane theatre amounted to above £200, but the receipts at the Covent Garden did not exceed £100.

From these imperfect notices, which are all we have been able to collect from the labors of his biographers and commentators, our readers will perceive that less is known of Shakespeare than of almost any writer who has been considered as an object of laudable curiosity. Nothing could be more highly gratifying than an account of the early studies of this wonderful man, the progress of his pen, his moral and social qualities, his friendships, his failings, and whatever else constitutes personal history.

Unfortunately, we know as little of his writings as of his personal history. The industry of his illustrators for the last thirty years has been such, as probably never was surpassed in the annals of literary investigation; yet so far are we from information of the conclusive or satisfactory kind, that even the order in which his plays were written, rests principally on conjecture, and of some plays usually printed among his works, it is not yet determined whether he wrote the whole, or any part.

With respect to himself, it does not appear that he printed any one of his plays, and only eleven of them were printed in his lifetime. The reason assigned for this is, that he wrote them for a particular theatre, sold them to the managers when only an actor, reserved them in manuscript when himself a manager, and when he disposed of his property in the theatre, they were still preserved in manuscript to prevent their being noted by the rival houses.

Shakespeare died in 1616; and seven years afterwards appeared the first edition of his plays, published at the charges of four booksellers,—a circumstance from which Mr. Malone infers, "that no single publisher was at that time willing to risk his money on a complete collection of our author's plays." This edition was printed from the copies in the hands of his fellow-managers, Heminge and Condell, which had been in a series of years frequently altered through convenience, caprice, or ignorance.

Of his Poems, it is perhaps necessary that some notice should be taken, although they have never been favorites with the public, and have seldom been reprinted with his plays. Shortly after his death, a very incorrect impression of them was issued, which in every subsequent edition was implicitly followed, until Mr. Malone published a corrected edition in 1780 with illustrations, &c.

DRAMATIS PERSONÆ.

ALFONSO, King of Naples.
SEBASTIAN, his Brother.
PROSPERO, the right Duke of Milan.
ANTONIO, his Brother, the usurping Duke of Milan.
Ferdinand, Son to the King of Naples.
GONZALO, an honest old Counsellor.
ADRIAN, Lords.
FRANCISCO, Lords.
CALIBAN, a savage and deformed Slave.
TRINCULO, a Jester.

STEPHANO, a drunken Butler.
Master of a Ship, Boatswain, Mariners.
MIRANDA, Daughter to Prospero.
ARIEL, an airy Spirit.
IRIS, CERES, JUNO, Spirits.
Nymphs, Reapers.

Other Spirits attending on Prospero.

SCENE, a Ship at Sea; afterwards an uninhabited Island.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—On a Ship at Sea.

A tempestuous noise of Thunder and Lightning heard.

Enter a Skip-master and a Boatswain, as on ship-board, shaking off wet.

Master. Boatswain!

Boats. Here, master: what cheer?

Master. Good. Speak to the mariners: fall to't yarely, or we run ourselves aground: bestir, bestir. [Exit. Enter Mariner's.

Boats. Heigh, my hearts! cheerly, cheerly, my hearts! yare, yare. Take in the topsail; tend to the master's whistle. Blow, till thou burst thy wind, if room enough!

Enter Alonso, SEBASTIAN, ANTONIO, FERDINAND, GONZALO, and Others, from the Cabin.

Alon. Good boatswain, have a' care. Where's the master? Play the men.

Boats. I pray now, keep below.

Ant. Where is the master, boatswain?

Boats. Do you not hear him? You mar our labour.

Keep your cabins: you do assist the storm.

Gon. Nay, good, be patient.

Boats. When the sea is. Hence! What care these rats for the name of king? To cabin: silence! Double us not.

Gon. Good; yet remember whom thou hast aboard.

Boats. None that I more love than myself. You are a counsellor: if you can command these elements to silence, and work the peace of the present, we will not hand a rope more; use your authority: if you cannot, give thanks you have lived so long, and make yourself ready in your cabin for the mischance of the bear, if it so hap. Cheerly, good hearts!—Out of our way, I say.

[Exit. Gon. I have great comfort from this fellow: methinks he had no drowning mark upon him; his complexion is perfect gallows. Stand fast, good fate, to his hanging: make the rope of his destiny our cable, for our own doth little advantage. If he be not born to be hanged, our case is miserable. [Exit.

Re-enter Boatswain.

Boats. Down with the top-mast: yare; lower, lower. Bring her to try with main-course. [A cry within. A plague upon this bowling! they are louder than the weather, or our office.

Re-enter SEBASTIAN, ANTONIO, and GONZALO.

Yet again! what do you here? Shall we give o'er, and drown? Have you a mind to sink?

Seb. A pox o' your throat, you bawling, blasphemous, inconstant dog!

Boats. Work you, then.

Ant. Hang, cur, hang! you whoreson, insolent noise-maker, we are less afraid to be drowned than thou art.

Gon. I'll warrant him for drowning; though the ship were no stronger than a nutshell, and as leaky as an unstanched wrench.

Boats. Lay her a-look, a-look. Set her two courses: off to sea again; lay her off.

Enter Mariner's, wet.

Mar. All lost! to prayers, to prayers! all lost! [Ex. Boats. What! must our mouths be cold? [them. Gon. The king and prince at prayers! let us assist For our case as theirs.

Seb. I am out of patience.

Ant. We are merely cheated of our lives by drunkards.
This wide-chapp'd rascal,—would, thou might'et lie drowning, The washing of ten tides!

Gon. He'll be hanged yet, Though every drop of water swear against it, And gape at wid'st to glut him. [A confused noise within. Mercy on us!—
We split, we split—Farewell, my wife and children!— Farewell, brother!—We split, we split, we split!—
SCENE II.—The Island: before the cell of Prospero.

Enter Prospero and Miranda.

Mir. If by your art, my dearest father, you have Put the wild waters in this roar, allay them.
The sky, it seems, would pour down stinking pitch,
But that the sea, mounting to the welkin's head,
Dashes the fire out. O! I have suffer'd
With those that I saw suffer: a brave vessel,
Who had no doubt some noble creatures 1 in her,
Dash'd all to pieces. O! the cry did knock
Against my very heart. Poor souls, they perish'd,
Had I been any god of power, I would
Have sunk the sea within the earth, or e'er
It should the good ship so have swallow'd, and
The railing souls within her.

Be collected:
No more amazement: Tell your piteous heart,
There's no harm done. Mira.

O, woe the day! No harm.

I have done nothing but in care of thee,
(If thee, my dear one! thee, my daughter!) who Art ignorant of what thou art, nought knowing
Of whence I am; nor that I am more better
Than Prospero, master of a full poor cell,
And thy no greater father.

More to know
Did never meddle with my thoughts.

I should inform thee farther. Lend thy hand,
And pluck my magic garment from me.—So:

[Lays down his robe.

Lie there my art.—Wipe thou thine eyes; have comfort.
The direful spectacle of the wreck, which touch'd
The very virtue of compassion in thee,
I have with such prev'ion 2 in mine art
So safely order'd, that there is no soul
No, not so much perdition as an hair,
Betid to any creature in the vessel
Which thou hear'dst cry, which thou saw'st sink. Sit down;

For thou must now know farther.

You have often
Began to tell me what I am; but stopp'd,
And left me to a booteless inquisition,
Concluding, "Stay, not yet."

The hour's now come,
The very minute bids thee ope thine ear;
Obey, and be attentive. Canas thou remember
A time before we came unto this cell? [Sits down.

I do not think thou canst, for then thou wast not
Out three years old.

Certainly, sir, I can.

By what? by any other house, or person?
Of something the image tell me, that Hath k'ned with thy remembrance.

'Tis far off;
And rather like a dream, than an assurance
That my remembrance warrants. Had I not Four or five women once, that tended me?

Thou hastad, and more, Miranda. But how is it,

That this lives in thy mind? What seest thou else
In the dark backward and abyss of time?
If thou remember'st aught, ere thou cam'st here,
How thou cam'st here, thou may'st.

But that I do not.

Twelve year since, Miranda, twelve year since,
Thy father was the duke of Milan, and
A prince of power.

Sir, are not you my father?

Thy mother was a piece of virtue, and
She said—thou wast my daughter; and thy father
Was duke of Milan, thou 3 his only heir
And princess, no worse issued.

O, the heavens!

What foul play had we, that we came from thence?
Or blessed wast'nt, we did?

Both, both, my girl:

By foul play, as thou say'st, were we heav'd thence:
But blessedly holp hither.

O! my heart bleeds
To think o' the teen' that I have turn'd you to,
Which is from my remembrance. Please you, farther

Pro. My brother, and thy uncle, call'd Antonio—
I pray thee, mark me,—that a brother should
Be so perfidious!—he whom, next thyself,
Of all the world I lov'd, and to him put
The manage of my state; as, at that time,
Through all the signiories it was the first,
(And Prospero the prime duke, being so reputed
In dignity) and, for the liberal arts,
Without a parallel: those being all my study,
The government I cast upon my brother,
And his state grew stranger, being transported
And rapt in secret studies. Thy false uncle—
Dost thou attend me?

Sir, most heedfully.

Pro. Being once perfected how to grant suits,
How to deny them, whom t'advance, and whom
To trash 4 for over-topping, new created
The creatures that were mine, I say, or chang'd them
Or else new form'd them; having both the key
Of officer and office, set all hearts 5 the state
To want their pleas'd ear;—that now he was
The ivy, which had hid my princely trunk,
And sucked'nt my verdure out on't. Thou attend'nt not Mira. O good sir! I do.

I pray thee, mark me.

I thus neglecting worldly ends, all dedicated
To closeness, and the bettering of my mind
With that, which but by being so retired
O'er-priz'd all popular rate, in my false brother
Awak'd an evil nature: and my trust,
Like a good parent, did beget of him
A falsehood, in its contrary as great
As my trust was; which had, indeed, no limit,
A confidence sans bound. He being thus loaded, 6
Not only with what my revenue yielded,
But what my power might else exact,—like one
Who having to untruth, 7 by telling of it,
Made such a sinner of his memory,
To credit his own lie,—he did believe
He was indeed the duke; out of substitution,
And continuing't outward face of royalty,
With all prerogative: hence his ambition
Growing—Dost thou hear?

Your tale, sir, would cure deafness.

To have no screen between this part he play'd
And him he play'd it for, he needs will be
I prize above my dukedom.
Mira. Would I might
But ever see that man!
Pro. Now I arise: — [Puts on his robe again.]
Sit still, and hear the last of our sea-sorrow.
Here in this island we arriv'd; and here
Have I, thy schoolmaster, made these more profit
Than other princes can, that have more time
For vainer hours, and tutors not so careful.
Mira. Heavens thank you for't! And now, I pray you, sir,
For still 'tis beating in my mind, your reason
For raising this sea-storm?
Pro. Know thus far forth.—
By accident most strange, bountiful fortune,
Now my dear lady, hath mine enemies
Brought to this shore; and by my prescience
I find my zenith doth depend upon
A most auspicious star, whose influence
If now I court not, but omit, my fortunes
Will ever after droop. Here cease more questions,
Thou art inclined to sleep; 'tis a good dulness,
And give it way:—I know thou canst not choose.
[MIRANDA SLEEPS.
Come away, servant, come! I am ready now.
Approach, my Ariel: come!
Pro. Enter Ariel.
Ari. All hail, great master; grave sir, hail. I come
To answer thy best pleasure; be 't to fly,
To swim, to dive into the fire, to ride
On the curl'd clouds: to thy strong bidding task
Ariel, and all his quality.
Pro. Hast thou, spirit,
Perform'd to point the tempest that I bade thee? —
Ari. To every article,
I boarded the king's ship; now on the beach,
Now in the waist, the deck, in every cabin,
I fann'd amazement: sometimes, I'd divide,
And burn in many places; on the topmast,
The yards and bowsprit, would I flame distinctly,
Then meet, and join. Jove's lightnings, the precursors
O' the dreadful thunder-claps, more momentary
And sight-outranning were not: the fire, and cracks
Of sulphurous roaring the most mighty Neptune
Seem to besiege, and make his bold waves trouble,
Yea, his dread trident shake.
Pro. My brave spirit!
Who was so firm, so constant, that this coil
Would not infect his reason?
Ari. Not a soul
But felt a fever of the mad, and play'd
Some tricks of desperation. All, but mariners,
Plung'd in the foaming brine, and quitt the vessel,
Then all a-fire with me: the king's son, Ferdinand,
With hair up-staring (then like reeds, not hair)
Was the first man that leap'd; cried, 'Hell is empty
And all the devils are here.'
Pro. Why, that's my spirit!
But was not this nigh shore?
Ari. Close by, my master.
Pro. But are they, Ariel, safe?
Ari. Not a hair perish'd;
On their sustaining garments not a blemish,
But fresher than before: and, as thou bad'st me,
In troops I have dispos'd them 'bout the isle.
The king's son have I landed by himself,
Whom I left cooling of the air with sighs
In an odd angle of the isle, and sitting,
His arms in this sad knot.
THE TEMPEST.

ACT I.

Pro. Of the king's ship
The mariners, say, how thou hast dispose'd,
And all the rest of the fleet?

Ari. Safely in harbour
Is the king's ship: in the deep nook, where once
Thou call'dst me up at midnight to fetch dew
From the still-vex'd Bermoothes, there she's hid:
The mariners all under hatches stow'd;
Whom, with a charm joined to their suffer'd labour,
I have left asleep: and for the rest o' the fleet
Which I dispers'd, they all have met again,
And all' upon the Mediterranean float;
Bound sadly home for Naples,
Supposing that they saw the king's ship wreck'd,
And his great person perish.

Pro. Ariel, thy charge
Exactly is perform'd; but there's more work.
What is the time o' the day?

Ari. Past the mid season.

Pro. At least two glasses. The time 'twill suit six and now
Must be by us both be spent most preciously.

Ari. Is there more toil? Since thou dost give me pains,
Let me remember thee what thou hast promised,
Which is not yet perform'd me.

Pro. How now! moody?

What is 't thou canst demand?

Ari. My liberty.

Pro. Before the time be out? no more.

Ari. I prithee
Remember, I have done thee worthy service;
Told thee no lies, made thee no mistakes serv'd
Without or grudge, or grumblings. Thou diest promise
To bate me a full year.

Pro. Doest thou forget
From what a torment I did free thee?

Ari. No.

Pro. Thou dost; and think'st it much, to tread the ooze
Of the salt deep,
To run upon the sharp wind of the north,
To do me business in the veins o' th' earth,
When it is bak'd with frost.

Ari. I do not, sir.

Pro. Thou liest, malignant thing! Hast thou forgot
The foul witch Sycorax, who, with age and envy,
Was grown into a hoop? hast thou forgot her?

Ari. No, sir.

Pro. Thou hast. Where was she born?

Ari. Sir, in Argier.

Pro. O! was she so? I must,
Once in a month, recount what thou hast been,
Which thou forget'st. This damn'd witch, Sycorax,
For mischiefs manifold, and sorceries terrible
To enter human hearing, from Argier,
Thou know'st, was banish'd: for one thing she did,
They would not take her life. Is not this true?

Ari. Ay, sir.

Pro. This blue-eyed hag was hither brought with child,
And here was left by the sailors: thou, my slave
As thou report'st thyself, wast then her servant:
And, for thou wast a spirit too delicate
To act her earthy and abhor'd commands,
Refusing her grand hests, she did confine thee,
By help of her more potent ministers,
And in her most unmitigable rage,
Into a cloven pine; within which rift
Imprison'd, thou diest pinfully remain.
A dozen years; within which space she died,

And left thee there, where thou didst vent thy groans
As fast as mill-wheels strike. Then was this island (Save for a son that she did litter here,
A freckled whoop, hag-born) not honour'd with
A human shape.

Ari. Yes; Caliban, her son.

Pro. Dull thing, I say so: he, that Caliban,
Whom now I keep in service. Thou best know'st
What torment I did find thee in: thy groans
Did make wolves howl, and penetrate the breasts
Of ever-angry bears. It was a torment
To lay upon the damn'd, which Sycorax
Could not again undo: It was mine art,
When I arrived and heard thee, that made gape
The pine, and let thee out.

Ari. I thank thee, master.

Pro. If thou more murmur'st, I will rend an oak,
And peg thee in his knotty entrails, till
Thou hast howl'd away twelve winters.

Ari. Pardon, master:
I will be correspondent to command,
And do my spritning gently.

Pro. Do so, and after two days
I will discharge thee.

Ari. That's my noble master!

What shall I do? say what? what shall I do?

Pro. Go, make thyself a like nymph o' the sea: be subject
To no sight but thine and mine; invisible
To every eyeball, else. Go, take this shape,
And hither come in' t; go; hence, with diligence.

[Exit Ariel.

Awake, dear heart, awake! thou hast slept well;
Awake!

Mira. The strangeness of your story put [Waking:
Heaviness in me.

Pro. Shake it off. Come on:

We'll visit Caliban, my slave, who never Yields us kind answer.

Mira. 'Tis a villain, sir,
I do not love to look on.

Pro. But, as 'tis,
We cannot miss him: he does make our fire,
Fetch in our wood, and serve in offices
That profit us.—What ho! slave! Caliban!
Thou earth, thou! speak.

[Enter Ariel, like a water-nymph.

Fine apparition! My quaint Ariel,
Hark in thine ear.

Ari. My lord, it shall be done. [Exit

Pro. Thou poisonous slave, got by the devil himself
Upon thy wicked dam, come forth! Enters Caliban.

Cal. As witch'd dew, as e'er my mother brush'd
With raven's feather from unwholesome fen,
Drop on you both! a south-west blow on ye,
And blister you all o'er!

Pro. For this, be sure, to-night thou shalt have cramps,
Sides-stitches that shall pen thy breath up; urchins
Shall, for that vast of night that they may work,
All exercise on thee: thou shalt be pinch'd
As thick as honey-combs, each pinch more stinging
Than bees that made 'em.

Cal. I must eat my dinner.

This island's mine, by Sycorax my mother,
Which thou tak'st from me. When thou cam'st here first,
Sc. II. THE TEMPEST.

Thou strak’dist me, and mad’st much of me; would’st give me
Water with berries in’t; and teach me how
To name the biggest light, and how the less,
That burn by day and night: and then I lov’d thee,
And show’d thee all the qualities of this isle.
The fresh springs, brine pits, barren place, and fertile.
Cursed be I that did so!—All the charms
Of Syenores, toads, beetles, bats, light on you;
For I am all the subjects that you have,
Which first was mine own king: and here you stye me,
In this hard rock, whiles you do keep from me
The rest o’th’ island.

Pro. Thou most lying slave,
Whom stripes may move, not kindness; I have un’d thee,
Fifth as thou art, with human care; and lodg’d thee
In mine own cell, till thou didst seek to violate
The honour of my child.

Cal. O ho! O ho!—would it had been done!
Thou didst prevent me; I had peoples else
This isle with Calibans.

Pro. Abhorred slave,
Which any print of goodness will not take,
Being capable of all ill! I pitied thee,
Took pains to make thee speak, taught thee each hour
One thing or other: when thou didst not, savage,
Know thine own meaning, but wouldst gallop like
A thing most brutish, I endow’d thy purposes
With words that made them known: but th’ vile race,
Though thou didst learn, had that in’t which good natures
Could not abide to be with: therefore wast thou
Deservedly confin’d into this rock,
Who hast descried more than a prison.

Cal. Thou taught me language; and my profit on’t
Is, I know how to curse. The red plague rid you,
For learning me your language!

Pro. Hag-seed, hence! I
Fitch us in fuel; and be quick, thou’rt best,
To answer other business. Shrug’st thou, malice? If thou neglect’st, or dost unwillingly
What I command, I’ll rack thee with old cramps;
Fill all thy bones with aches; make thee roar,
That beasts shall tremble at thy din.

Cal. No, pray thee!—I mean obey: his art is of such power, [Aside] I would control my dam’d god, Setebos,
And make a vassal of him.

Pro. So, slave! hence! [Exit CALIBAN.
Re-enter ARIEL, invisible, playing and singing; FERDINAND following.

ARIEL’s Song.

Come unto these yellow sands,
And then take hands: Courtier’d when you have, and kiss’d
The wild waves whist,
Foot it feety here and there; And, sweet sprites, the burden bear.
Hark, hark!

Burden. Bow, wow.
[Dispersedly.

The watch dogs bark:

Burden. Bow, wow.
Hark, hark! I hear

The strain of strutting chanticere
Cry, cock-a-doodle-doo.

Fr. What music would this music be? i’ th’ air, or th’
It is more;—and sure, it waites upon
Some god o’ th’ island. Sitting on a bank,

Weeping again the king my father’s wreak,
This music crept by me upon the waters,
Allaying both their fury, and my passion.
With its sweet air: thence have I follow’d it,
Or it hath drawn me rather:—but ’tis gone.—
No, it begins again.

ARIEL sings.

Full fathom five thy father lies;
Of his bones are coral made;
Those are pearl that were his eyes;
Nothing of him that doth fade;
But doth suffer a sea-change
Into something rich and strange.
Sea-nymphs hourly ring his knell:
Hark! now I hear them,—ding-dong, ding.

Ferd. The ditty does remember my drown’d father.—
This is no mortal business, nor no sound
That the earth owes!—I hear it now above me.

[Music above.

Pro. The fringed curtains of thine eye advance
And say, what thou seest yond’.

Mira. What is’t? a spirit?
Lord, how it looks about! Believe me, sir,
It carries a brave form:—but ’tis a spirit.

Pro. No, wench: it eats, it sleeps, and hath such senses
As we have; such. This gallant, which thou seest,
Was in the wreck; and but he’s something stain’d
With grief, that’s beauty’s anchor, thou might’st call him
A goodly person. He hath lost his fellows,
And strays about to find ’em.

Mira. I might call him
A thing divine, for nothing natural
I ever saw so noble.

Pro. It goes on, I see, [Aside.
As my soul prompts it—Spirit, fine spirit! I’ll free thee
Within two days for this.

Ferd. Most sure, the goddess [Seeing her.]
On whom these airs attend!—Vouchsafe, my prayer
May know if you remain upon this island, [Kneels.
And that you will some good instruction give,
How I may bear me here: my prime request,
Which I do last pronounce, is, O you wonder?
If you be maid, or no?

Mira. No wonder, sir;
But, certainly a maid.

Fr. My language! heavens!—Rises.
I am the best of them that speak this speech,
Were I but where ’tis spoken.

Pro. How the best?
What wert thou, if the king of Naples heard thee?
Ferd. A single thing, as I am now, that wonders
To hear thee speak of Naples. He does hear me,
And that he does weep; myself am Naples;
Who with mine eyes, ne’er since at ebb beheld
The king, my father, wreak’d.

Mira. Alack, for mercy!
Ferd. Yes, faith, and all his lords; the duke of Milan,
And his brave son, being twain.

Pro. The duke of Milan,
And his more braver daughter, could control thee,
If now ’twere fit to do’t. [Aside.] At the first sight
They have chang’d eyes:—delicate Ariel,
I’ll set thee free for this!—[To him.] A word, good sir, I fear, you have done yourself some wrong: a word.

Mira. Why speaks my father so ungently? This Is the third man that e'er I saw; the first
That e'er I sigh'd for. Pity move my father
To be inclin'd my way?
   Fer. O! if a virgin,
And your affections not gone forth, I'll make you
The queen of Naples.
   Pro. Soft, sir; one word more.—
   [Aside.] They are both in either's powers: but this swift business
I must unessay make, lest too light winning
Make the prize light.—[To him.] One word more: I charge thee,
That thou attend me. Thou dost here usurp
The name thou ow'st not; and hast put thyself
Upon this island as a spy, to win it
From me, the lord on't.
   Fer. No, as I am a man.
   Mira. There's nothing ill can dwell in such a temple:
If the ill spirit have so fair a house,
Good things will strive to dwell with 't.
   Pro. Follow me.—
   [To Ferd.]
Speak not you for him; he's a traitor.—Come.
I'll manacle thy neck and feet together;
Sea-water shall thou drink, thy food shall be
The fresh-brook muscles, wither'd roots, and husks
Wherein the scorn eradied. Follow.
   Fer. No;
I will resist such entertainment, till
Mine enemy has more power.

   Mira. O, dear father!
Make not too rash a trial of him, for
He's gentle, and not fearful.
   Pro. What! I say:
My foot my tutor?—Put thy sword up, traitor;
Who mak'st a show, but dar'st not strike, thy conscience is so possess'd with guilt: Come from thy ward,
For I can here disarm thee with this stick,
And make thy weapon drop.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—Another part of the Island.

Enter ALONSO, SEBASTIAN, ANTONIO, GONZALO,
ADRIAN, FRANCISCO, and Others.

Gon. Beseech you, sir, be merry: you have cause (So have we all) of joy, for our escape is much beyond our loss. Our hint of woe is common: every day, some sailor's wife,
The master of some merchant, and the merchant,
Have just our theme of woe; but for the miracle,
I mean our preservation, few in millions
Can speak like us: then, wisely, good sir, weigh
Our sorrow with our comfort.

Alon. Pr'ythee, peace
Seb. He receives comfort like cold porridge.
Ant. The visitor will not give him o'er so.
Seb. Look; he's winding up the watch of his wit:
by and by it will strike.

Gon. Sir,—
Seb. One,—tell.

Gon. When every grief is entertain'd, that's offer'd,
Comes to the entertainer—
Seb. A dollar.

Gon. Dolour comes to him, indeed: you have spoken truer than you purposed.

Seb. You have taken itewiselier than I meant you should.

Gon. Therefore, my lord,
Ant. Fie, what a spendthrift is he of his tongue!
Alon. I pr'ythee, spare.
Gon. Well, I have done. But yet—
Seb. He will be talking.
Ant. Which, or he or Adrian, for a good wager, first begins to crow?

Seb. The old cock.
Ant. The cockrel.
Seb. Done. The wager?

Ant. A laughter.
Seb. A match.

Ant. Though this island seem to be desert,—
Seb. Ha, ha, ha!

Ant. So, you're paid.

Ant. Uninhabitable, and almost inaccessible,—
Seb. Yet—

Ant. Yet—

Ant. He could not miss it.

Ant. It must needs be of subtle, tender, and delicate temperance.

Ant. Temperance was a delicate wench.
Seb. Ay, and a subtle, as he most learnedly delivered.

Adr. The air breathes upon us here most sweetly.

Seb. As if it had lungs, and rotten oones.

Adr. Or as ‘twere perfumed by a fen.

Gon. Here is every thing advantageous to life.

Seb. True; save means to live.

Adr. Of that there’s none, or little.

Gon. How lush’ and lusty une grass looks! how green!

Seb. The ground, indeed, is tawny.

Adr. With an eye of green in ‘t.

Adr. He misses not much.

Seb. No; he doth but mistake the truth totally.

Gon. But the rarity of it is, which is indeed almost good credit—

Adr. As many vouch’d rarities are.

Gon. That our garments, being, as they were, drenched in the sea, held, notwithstanding, their freshness, and glosses; being rather new dyed, than stain’d with salt water.

Adr. If but one of his pockets could speak, would it not say, he lies?

Seb. Ay, an very falsely pocket up his report.

Gon. Methinks, our garments are now as fresh as when we put them on first in Afric, at the marriage of the king’s fair daughter Claribel to the king of Tunis.

Seb. ’Twas a sweet marriage, and we prosper well in our return.

Adr. Tunis was never graced before with such a pragon to their queen.

Gon. Not since widow Dido’s time.

Adr. Widow? a box o’ that! How came that widow in? Widow Dido!

Seb. What if he had said, widow Èneas too? good jest, how you take it!

Adr. Widow Dido, said you! you make me study of that: she was of Carthage, not of Tunis.

Gon. This Tunis, sir, was Carthage.

Adr. Carthage?

Gon. I assure you, Carthage.

Adr. His word is more than the miraculous harp.

Seb. He hath rais’d the wall, and houses too.

Adr. And it is impennis, in matter will he make easy next?

Seb. I think he will carry this island home in his pocket, and give it his son for an apple.

Adr. And sowing the kernels of it in the sea, bring forth more islands.

Gon. Ay?

Adr. Why, in good time.

Gon. Sir, we were talking, that our garments seem now as fresh, as when we were at Tunis at the marriage of your daughter, who is now queen.

Adr. And the rarest that o’er came there.

Seb. Rate, I beseech you, widow Dido.

Adr. O! widow Dido; ay, widow Dido.

Gon. Is not, sir, my doublet as fresh as the first day I wore it? I mean, in a sort.

Adr. That sort was well fish’d for.

Gon. When I wore it at your daughter’s marriage?

Seb. You cram these words into mine ears against the stomach of my sense. I would have never married my daughter there! for, coming thence, my son is lost; and, in my rate, she too.

Adr. Who is so far from Italy removed, I see again shall see her. O thou, mine heir of Naples and of Milan! what strange fish hath made his meal on thee?

Fro. Sir, he may live.

And ride upon their backs: he trod the water,

Whose enmity he flung aside, and breasted

The surge most swoln that met him: his bold head

‘Bove the contentious waves he kept, and oar’d

Himself with his good arms in lusty stroke

To the shore, that o’er his wave-worn basis bow’d,

As stooping to relieve him. I not doubt,

He came alive to land.

Adr. No, no; he’s gone.

Seb. Sir, you may thank yourself for this great loss

That would not bless our Europe with your daughter,

But rather lose her to an African.

Where she, at least, is banish’d from your eye,

Who hath cause to weat the grief on’t.

Adr. Pr’ythee, peace.

Seb. You were kneel’d to, and importun’d otherwise

By all of us; and the fair soul herself

Weigh’d between loathsomeness and obedience, as

Which end o’ the beam should she bow. We have lost.

Adr. I fear, for ever: Milan and Naples have

More widows in them, of this business’ making,

Than we bring men to comfort them: the fault’s your own.

Gon. So is the dearest of the loss.

My lord Sebastian,

The truth you speak doth lack some gentlenesse,

And time to speak it in: you rub the sore,

When you should bring the plaster.

Seb. Very well.

Adr. And most chirurgeon.

Gon. It is foul weather in us all, good sir,

When you are cloudy.

Seb. Foul weather?

Adr. Very foul.

Gon. Had I plantation of this isle, my lord,—

Adr. He’d sow’t with needle-seed.

Seb. Or docks, or mallowes.

Gon. And were the king on’t, what would I do?

Seb. ’Scap’d being drunk, for want of wine.

Gon. I the commonwealth I would by contraries

Execute all things, for no kind of traffic

Would I admit; no name of magistrate;

Letters should not be known; riches, poverty,

And use of service, none; contract, succession,

Bourn, bound of land, tillth, vineyard, none;

No use of metal, corn, or wine, or oil:

No occupation, all men idle, all;

And women, too, but innocent and pure.

Seb. Yet he would be king on’t.

Adr. The latter end of commonwealth forgets the beginning.

Gon. All things in common end nature should produce,

Without sweat or endeavours: treason, felony,

Sword, pike, knife, gun, or need of any engine,

Would I not have; but nature should bring forth,

Of its own kind, all foissen, all abundance,

To feed my innocent people.

Seb. No marrying among his subjects?

Gon. None, man; all idle; whomes, and knaves.

Seb. I would with such perfection govern, sir,

To excel the golden age.

Seb. ‘Save his majesty!
Ant. Long live Gonzalo!

Gon. And, do you mark me, sir?

Alon. Pr’ythee, no more: thou dost talk nothing to me.

Gon. I do well believe your highness; and did it to minister occasion to these gentlemen, who are of such servile and nimble lungs, that they always use to laugh at nothing.

Ant. 'Twas you we laugh’d at.

Gon. Who, in this kind of merry fooling, am nothing to you: so you may continue, and laugh at nothing still.

Ant. What a blow was there given!

Seb. An it had not fallen flat-long.

Gon. You are gentlemen of brave mettle: you would lift the moon out of her sphere, if she would continue in it five weeks without changing.

Enter Ariel above, invisible, playing solemn music.

Seb. We would so, and then go a bat-fowling.

Ant. Nay, good my lord, be not angry.

Gon. No, I warrant you; I will not adventure my discretion so weakly. Will you laugh me asleep, for I am very heavy?

Ant. Go sleep, and hear us.

[All sleep but ALON, SEB. and ANT.]

Alon. What! all so soon asleep! I wish mine eyes Would, with themselves, shut up my thoughts: I find, They are inclined to do so.

Seb. Please you, sir, Do not omit the heavy offer of it: It seldom visits sorrow; when it doth, It is a comforter.

Ant. We two, my lord, Will guard your person while you take your rest, And watch your safety.

Alon. Thank you. Wondrous heavy. — [ALON. SLEEPS.]

Seb. What a strange drowsiness possesses them! Ant. It is the quality of the climate.

Seb. Why Doth it not, then, our eye-lids sink? I find not Myself disposed to sleep.

Ant. Nor I: my spirits are nimble. They fell together all, as by consent; They dropp’d, as by a thunder-stroke. What might, Worthy Sebastian?—O! what might?—No more— And yet, methinks, I see it in thy face, What thou should’st be. Th’ occasion speaks thee, and My strong imagination sees a crown Dropping upon thy head.

Seb. What! art thou waking?

Ant. Do you not hear me speak?

Seb. I do; and, surely, It is a sleepy language, and thou speak’st Out of thy sleep. What is it thou didst say?

This is a strange repose, to be asleep With eyes wide open; standing, speaking, moving, And yet so fast asleep.

Ant. Noble Sebastian, Thou let’st thy fortune sleep—die rather; wink’st While thou art waking.

Seb. Thou dost amuse distinctly: There’s meaning in thy snores.

Ant. I am more serious than my custom: you Must be so too, if heed me; which to do, Treb’st thou o’er.

Seb. Well; I am standing water.

Ant. I’ll teach you how to flow.

Seb. Do so: to o’er Hereditary sloth doth instruct me.

1 Not in f. 2 Exit ARIEL: in f. 3 from: in f. 4 what: is f.a.

Ant. O! If you but knew, how you the purpose cherish, Whilest thus you mock it! how, in stripping it, You more invest it! Ebbing men, indeed, Most often do so near the bottom run By their own fear, or aloof.

Seb. Pr’ythee, say on.

The setting of thine eye, and cheek, proclaim A matter from thee; and a birth, indeed, Which throses thee much to yield.

Ant. Thus, sir, Although this lord of weak remembrance, this (Who shall be of as little memory, When he is earth’d) hath here almost persuaded (For he’s a spirit of persuasion, only Professest to persuade) the king, his son’s alive. ’Tis as impossible that he’s undrown’d, As he that sleeps here, awakes.

Seb. I have no hope That he’s undrown’d.

Ant. O! out of that no hope, What great hope have you! no hope, that way, is Another way so high a hope, that even Ambition cannot pierce a wink beyond, But doubts discovery there. Will you grant, with me, That Ferdinand is drown’d?

Seb. He’s gone.

Ant. Then, tell me, Who’s the next heir of Naples?

Seb. Claribel.

Ant. She that is queen of Tunis; she that dwells Ten leagues beyond man’s life; she that from Naples Can have no note, unless the sun were post, (The man’l the moon’s too slow) till new-born chins Be rough and razzorable; she, for whom We all were sea-swallow’d, though some cast again; And by that destiny to perform an act Whereof what’s past is prologue, what’s to come, In yours and my discharge.

Seb. What stuff is this!—How say you? ’Tis true, my brother’s daughter’s queen of Tunis; So is she heir of Naples; ’twixt which regions There is some space.

Ant. A space whose very cement Seems to cry out, ‘How shall that Claribel Measure us back to Naples?’—Keep in Tunis, And let Sebastian wake!—Say, this were death That now hath seiz’d them; why, they were no worse Than now they are. There be, that can rule Naples As well as he that sleeps; lords that can prate As amply, and unnecessarily, As this Gonzalo; I myself could make A chough of as deep chat. O, that you bore The mind that I do! what a sleep were this For your advancement! Do you understand me?

Seb. Methinks, I do.

Ant. And how does your content Tender your own good fortune?

Seb. I remember, You did supplant your brother Prospero.

Ant. True:

And look how well my garments sit upon me; Much feater than before. My brother’s servants Were then my fellows, now they are my men.

Seb. But, for your conscience—

Ant. Ay, sir; where lies that? if it were a kybe, ’Twould put me to my slipper; but I feel not This deity in my bosom: twenty consciences, That stand ’twixt me and Milan, candied be they,
And yet I need must curse; but they'll not* pinch,
Fright me with urchin shows, pitch me i' the mere,
Nor lead me, like a fire-brand, in the dark
Out of my way, unless he bid 'em; but
For every tribe are they set upon me:
Sometime like apes, that mole and chatter at me,
And after, bite me; then like hedge-hogs, which Lie tumbling in my bare-foot way, and mount
Their pricks at my foot-fall: sometime am I
All wound with adders, who with cloven tongues
Do hiss me into madness.—Lo, now! lo!

Enter Trinculo.

Here comes a spirit of his, and to torment me
For bringing wood in newly: I'll fall flat;
Parchment, he will not mind me.

Trin. Here's neither bush nor shrub to bear off any weather at all, and another storm brewing; I hear it sing i' the wind: yond' same black cloud, yond' huge one, looks like a foul bombard that would shod his liquor. If it should thunder, as it did before, I know not where to hide my head: yond' same cloud cannot choose but fall by pailfuls.—What have we here?
[Seeing Caliban.] a man or a fish? Dead or alive?
A fish: he smells like a fish; a very ancient and fish-like smell; a kind of, not of the newest, Poor John.
A strange fish! Were I in England now, (as once I was) and had but this fish painted, not a holiday fool there but would give a piece of silver: there would this monster make a man: any strange beast there makes a man. When they will not give a doit to relieve a lame beggar, they will lay out ten to see a dead Indian. Leg'd like a man! and his fins like arms! Warm, o' my truth! I do now let loose my opinion, hold it no longer; this is no fish, but an Islander, that hath lately suffered by a thunder-bolt [Thunder.] Also! the storm is come again: my best way is to creep under his gable-dine; there is no other shelter hereabout: misery acquaints a man with strange bedfellows. I will here shroud, till the drench ¹ of the storm be past.

Enter Stephano, singing: a bottle in his hand.

Ste. I shall no more to set, to sea,
Here shall I die a-shore.—

This is a very solemn tune to sing at a man's funeral.

Well, here's my comfort.

[Drinks.

The master, the seagoer, the boatswain, and I,
The gunner, and his mate,
Lov'd Mall, Meg, and Marian, and Margery,
But none of us car'd for Kate;
For she had a tongue with a tang,
Would cry to a sailor, Go, hang:
She lov'd not the savour of tar, nor of pitch,
Yet a tailor might scratch her where'er she did itch;
Then, to sea, boys, and let her go hang.

This is a scurry tune too; but here's my comfort. [Drinks.

Cal. Do not torment me: O!
Ste. What's the matter? Have we devils here?
Do you put tricks upon us with savages, and men of Inde? Ha! I have not 'soap'd drowning, to be afar now of your four legs; for it hath been said, as proper a man as ever went on four legs cannot make him give ground, and it shall be said so again, while Stephano breathes at nostrils.

Cal. The spirit torments me: O!
Ste. This is some monster of the isle, with four legs, who hath got, as I take it, an ague. Where the devil should he learn our language? I will give him some relief, if it be but for that: if I can recover him, and keep

¹ Music. As water Asphalt, invisible: in f. a. * this: in f. a. * Collier's ed. 1644, reads, "verify"—most of the other editions, "verify" him tame, and get to Naples with him, he's a present for any emperor that ever trod on neat's-lesser.

Cal. Do not torment me, pr'ythee: I'll bring my wood home faster.

Ste. He's in his fit now, and does not talk after the wisest. He shall taste of my bottle: if he have never drank wine afore, it will go near to remove his fit. If I can recover him, and keep him tame, I will not take too much for him: he shall pay for him that hath soundly, and that soundly.

Cal. Thou dost me yet but little hurt; thou wilt anon, I know it by thy trembling: now Prosper works upon thee.

Ste. Come on your ways: open your mouth; here is that which will give language to you, cat. Open your mouth: this will shake your shakings, I can tell you,
and that soundly: you cannot tell who's your friend;
open your jaws again.

[Caliban drinks!]

Trin. I should know that voice. It should be—but he is drowned, and these are devils. O, defend me!

Ste. Four legs, and two voices! a most delicate monster. His forward voice, now, is to speak well of his friend; his backward voice is to utter foul speeches, and to detract. If all the wine in my bottle will recover him, I will help his ague. Come,—Amen! I will pour some in thy other mouth.

Trin. Stephano!

Ste. Dost thy other mouth call me? Mercy! mercy!
This is a devil, and no monster: I will leave him; I have no more spoon.

Trin. Stephano!—if thou beest Stephano, touch me, and speak to me, for I am Trinculo:—be not afraid,— thy good friend Trinculo.

Ste. If thou beest Trinculo, come forth. I'll pull thee by the lesser legs: if any be Trinculo's legs, these are they. Thou art very Trinculo, indeed! How can'st thou be the siege of this moon-calf? Can he vent Trinculos?

Trin. I took him to be killed with a thunder-stroke.
—but art thou not drowned, Stephano? I hope now, though art not drowned. Is the storm overswoln? I hid me under the dead moon-calf's gaberdine for fear of the storm. And art thou living, Stephano? O Stephano! two Neapolitans 'scaped?

Ste. Pr'ythee, do not turn me about: my stomach is not contented.

Cal. These be fine things, an if they be not sprites.
That's a brave god, and bears celestial liquor:
I will kneel to him.

Ste. How didst thou 'scape? How cam'st thou hither? swear by this bottle, how thou cam'st hither.
I escaped upon a butt of sack, which the sailors heaved over-board, by this bottle! which I made of the bark of a tree, with mine own hands, since I was cast ashore.

Cal. I'll swear, upon that bottle, to be thy true subject, for the liquor is not earthly. [Kneels.]

Ste. Here: swear, then, how thou escap'st.

Trin. Swim a-shore, man, like a duck. I can swim like a duck, I'll be sworn.

Ste. Here, kiss the book. Though thou canst swim like a duck, thou art made like a goose.

Trin. O Stephano! hast any more of this?

Ste. The whole butt, man: my collar is in a rock by the sea-side, where my wine is hid. How now, moon-calf! how does thine ague?

Cal. Hast thou not dropped from heaven?

Ste. Out of the moon, I do assure thee: I was the man in the moon, when time was.

Cal. I have seen thee in her, and I do adore thee: my mistriss showed me thee, and thy dog, and thy bush.

Ste. Come, swear to that; kiss the book: I will furnish it anon with new contents. Swear.

Trin. By this good light, this is a very shallow monster:—I afraid of him?—a very weak monster.—The man! the moon!—a most pore credulous monster.—
Well drawn, monster, in good sooth.

Cal. I'll show thee every fertile inch o' the island;
and I will kiss thy foot. I pr'ythee, be my god.

Trin. By this light, a most perfidious and drunken monster: when his god's asleep, he'll rob his bottle.

Cal. I'll kiss thy foot: I'll swear myself thy subject.

Ste. Come on, then; down and swear.

[Caliban lies down.]

Trin. I shall laugh myself to death at this puppy-headed monster. A most scurvey monster: I could find in my heart to beat him,—

Ste. Come, kiss.

Trin. —But that the poor monster's in drink. An abominable monster!

Cal. I'll show thee the best springs; I'll pluck thee berries;
I'll fish for thee, and get thee wood enough.
A plague upon the tyrant that I serve!
I'll bear him no more sticks, but follow thee,
Thou wondrous man.

Trin. A most ridiculous monster, to make a wonder of a poor drunkard!

Cal. I pr'ythee, let me bring thee where crabs grow;
And I with my long nails will dig thee pig-nuts;
Show thee a jay's nest, and instruct thee how
To snare the nimble marmozet: I'll bring thee
To clustering filders, and sometimes I'll get thee
Young scameels from the rock: Wilt thou go with me?

Ste. I pr'ythee now, lead the way, without any more talking.—Trinculo, the king and all our company else being drowned, we will inherit here.—Here; bear my bottle.—Fellow Trinculo, we'll fill him by and by again.

Cal. Farewell, master; farewell, farewell.

[Cal. Sings drunkenly.]

Trin. A howling monster; a drunken monster.

Cal. No more dams I'll make for fish;

Nor fish in firing
At requiring,
Nor scrape trencher: nor wash dish;
Ban 'Ean, Co—Caliban.
Has a new master—Get a new man.
Freedom, hey-day! hey-day, freedom! freedom! heyday, freedom!

Ste. O brave monster! lead the way. [Exeunt.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—Before Prospero's Cell.

Enter Ferdinand, bearing a log.

fer. There be some sports are painful, and their labor

Delight in them sets off: some kinds of baseness
Are nobly undergone; and most poor matters
Point to rich ends. This my mean task
Would be as heavy to me, as odious; but
The mistress which I serve quickens what’s dead,
And makes my labours pleasures: O! she is
Ten times more gentle than her father’s cradled;
And he’s composed of harshness. I must remove
Some thousands of these logs, and pile them up,
Upon a sore injunction: my sweet mistress
Weeps when she sees me work; and says, such baseness
Had never like executor. I forget:
But these sweet thoughts do often refresh my labours:
Most tell it blest when I do it.

Enter Miranda; and Prospero behind.

Mir. Alas! now, pray you, work not so hard: I would, the lightning had Burnt up those logs that you are enjoin’d to pile.
Pray, set it down, and rest you: when this burns,
Twill weep for having wearied you. My father
Is hard at study; pray now rest yourself:
He’s safe for these three hours.

Pro. O, most dear mistress!

The sun will set, before I shall discharge
What I must strive to do.

Mir. If you’ll sit down,
I’ll bear your logs the while. Pray, give me that:
I’ll carry it to the pile.

Pro. No, precious creature; I had rather crack my sinews, break my back,
Than you should such dishonour undergo,
While I sit lazy by.

Mir. It would become me
As well as it does you; and I should do it
With much more ease, for my good will is to it,
And yours it is against.

Pro. Poor worm! thou art infected; This visitation shows it. [Aside.]

Mir. You look wearily.

Pro. No, noble mistress; ’tis fresh morning with me,
When you are by at night. I do beseech you,
Chide that I might set it in my prayers,
What is your name?

Mir. Miranda.—O my father!

I have broke your host to say so. [To herself.] Adm’r’ Miranda!

Indeed, the top of admiration; worth
What’s dearest to the world! Full many a lady
I have ey’d with best regard; and many a time
The harmony of their tongues hath into bondage
Brought my too diligent ear: for several virtues
Have I lik’d several women; never say
With so full soul, but some defect in her
Did guileful with the noblest grace she ow’d,
And put it to the foil: but you, O you!
So perfect, and so peerless, are created
Of every creature’s best.

Mir. I do not know
One of my sex; no woman’s face remember,
Save from my glass, mine own; nor have I seen
More that I may call men, than you, good friend,
My dear father. How features are abroad,
I am skill-less of; but, by my modesty,
The jewel in my dowry) I would not wish
Any companion in the world but you;
Nor can imagination form a shape,
Besides yourself, to like of. But I prattle
Something too wildly, and my father’s precepts
I therein do forget.

Pro. I am, in my condition,
A prince, Miranda; I do think, a king;
I would, not so! and would no more endure
The wooden slavery, than to suffer

The fresh-fly blow my mouth. Hear my soul speak
The very instant that I saw you, did
My heart fly to your service; there resides,
To make me slave to it; and for your sake,
Am I this patient log-man.

Mir. Do you love me?

Pro. O heaven! O earth! bear witness to this sound,
And crown what I profess with kind event,
If I speak true; if hollowly, invert
What best is boded me to muschief! I,
Beyond all limit of ought! else! the world,
Do love, prize, honour you.

Mir. I am a fool,
To weep at what I am glad of.

Pro. Fair encounter
Of two most rare affections! Heavens rain grace
On that which breeds between them! [Aside.]

Pro. Wherefore weep you? [Aside.] At mine unworthiness, that dare not offer
What I desire to give; and much less take,
What I shall die to want. But this is trifling;
And all the more it seeks to hide itself,
The bigger bulk it shows. Hence, bashful cunning,
And prompt me, plain and holy innocence!
I am your wife, if you will marry me;
If not, I’ll die your maid: to be your fellow
You may deny me; but I’ll be your servant,
Whether you will or no.

Mir. My mistress, dearest,
And I thus humble ever. [Kneels.]

Pro. My husband then? [Rises.]

As bondage e’er of freedom: here’s my hand.

Mira. And mine, with my heart in’t: and now farewell,
Till half an hour hence.

Pro. A thousand thousand! [Exeunt Fux. and Mir.]

Let all this grace be with you, and your excellence
At nothing can be more. I’ll to my book;
For yet, ere supper time, must I perform
Much business appertaining.

[Exit.]

SCENE II. —Another part of the Island.

Enter Stephano and Trinculo; CALIBAN following with a bottle

Ste. Tell not me:—when the butt is out, we will Drink water; not a drop before: therefore bear up, and board ‘em. Servant-monster, drink to me.

Trin. Servant-monster? the folly of this island!
They say, there’s but five upon this isle: we are three of them; if the other two be brained like us, the state is tottering.

Ste. Drink, servant-monster, when I bid thee: thy eyes are almost set in thy head.

Trin. Where should they be set else? he were a brave monster indeed, if they were set in his tail.
Ste. My man-monster hath drowned his tongue in sake: for my part, the sea cannot drown me: I swam, ere I could recover the shore, five-and-thirty leagues, off and on, by this light. Thou shalt be my lieutenant, monster, or my standard.

Trin. Your lieutenant, if you list; he’s no standard.

Ste. Well, we’ll not run, monsieur monster.

Trin. Nor go neither; but you’ll lie, like dogs, and yet say nothing neither.

Ste. Moon-calf, speak once in thy life, if thou beest a good moon-calf.

Cal. How does thy honour? Let me lick thy shoe.
THE TEMPEST.

ACT III.

I'll not serve him, he is not valiant.

Trin. Thou liest, most ignorant monster: I am in case to justly a constable. Why, thou debauched fish thou, was there ever man a coward, that hath drunk so much sack as I to-day? Wilt thou tell a monstrous lie, being but half a fish, and half a monster?

Cal. Lo, how he mocks me! wilt thou let him, thy lord?

Trin. Lord, quoth he!—that a monster should be such a natural!

Cal. Lo, lo, again! bite him to death, I pr'ythee.

Ste. Trinculo, keep a good tongue in your head: if you prove a mutineer, the next tree—The poor monster's my subject, and he shall not suffer indignity.

Cal. I thank my noble lord. Wilt thou be pleased to hearken once again to the suit I made to thee?

Ste. Marry will I; kneel and repeat it: I will stand, and so shall Trinculo. [CALIBAN kneels.

Enter ARIEL, invisible.

Cal. As I told thee before, I am subject to a tyrant: a sorcerer, that by his cunning hath cheated me of the island.

Ari. Thou liest.

Cal. Thou liest, thou jesting monster, thou; I would, my valiant master would destroy thee: I do not lie.

Ste. Trinculo, if you trouble him any more in his tale, by this hand, I will supplant some of your teeth. [Exit Trinculo. [Sings. [Caled. You are in error, and you will repent; for I am the dumb slave of Prospero.]

Ste. Thou liest:—Thou canst not.

Cal. What a pious, weeny's this! Thou scurvy patch! I do beseech thy greatness, give him blows, and take his bottle from him: when that's gone, he shall drink nought but brine; for I will not show him where the quick freshes are.

Ste. Trinculo, run into no farther danger: interrupt the monster one word farther, and, by this hand, I'll turn my mercy out of doors, and make a stock-fish of thee.

Ste. Didst thou not say, he lied?

Ari. Thou liest.

Ste. Do I so? take thou that. [Strikes him.] As you like this, give me the lie another time.

Trin. I did not give the lie. Out o' your wits, and hearing too? A pox o' your bottle! this can sack, and drinking do. A murraun on your monster, and the devil take your tale!

Cal. Ha, ha, ha!

Ste. Now, forward with your tale. Pr'ythee stand farther off.

Cal. Beat him enough: after a little time, I'll beat him too.

Cal. Why, as I told thee. 'tis a custom with him I' the afternoon to sleep: then thou may'st brain him, having first seiz'd his books; or with a log batter his skull, or paunch him with a stake, or cut his wexand with thy knife. Remember, first to possess his books; for without them he's but a sol, as I am, nor hath not one spirit to command: they all do hate him, as rootedly as I. Burn but his books; he has brave utenials, (for so he calls them) which, when he has a house, he'll deck withal: and that most deeply to consider is the beauty of his daughter; he himself calls her a nonpareil: I never saw a woman, but only Sycorax my dam, and she; but she as far surpasseth Sycorax, as great'st does least.

Ste. Is it so brave a, lass?

Cal. Ay, lord; she will become thy bed, I warrant, and bring thee forth brave brood.

Ste. Monster, I will kill this man: his daughter and I will be king and queen; (save our graces!) and Trinculo and thyself shall be vice-royes. Doest thou like the plot, Trinculo?

Trin. Excellent.

Ste. Give me thy hand: I am sorry I beat thee: but, while thou livest, keep a good tongue in thy head.

Cal. Within this half hour will he be asleep; wilt thou destroy him then?

Ste. Ay, on mine honour.

Ari. This will I tell my master.

Cal. Thou makest me merry: I am full of pleasure. Let us be jocund: will you tutor the catch you taught me while ere?

Ste. At thy request, monster, I will do reason, any reason. Come on, Trinculo, let us sing. [Sings. Float 'em, and scout 'em; and scout 'em, and float 'em; Thought is free.]

Cal. That's not the tune.

[ARIEL plays a tune on a Tabor and Pipe.]

Ste. What is this same?

Trin. This is the tune of our catch, played by the picture of No-body.

Ste. If thou beest a man, show thyself in thy likeness: if thou beest a devil, take 't as thou list.

Trin. O, forgive me my sins!

Ste. He that dies, pays all debts: I defy thee.——

Cal. Art thou afraid?

Ste. No, monster, not I.

Cal. Be not afraid; the isle is full of noises, Sounds, and sweet airs, that give delight, and hurt not.

Sometimes a thousand twangling instruments Will hum about mine ears; and sometime voices, That, if I then had wak'd after long sleep, Will make me start again, and then, in dreaming, The clouds, methought, would open, and show riches Ready to drop upon me, that when I wak'd I cried to dream again.

Ste. This will prove a brave kingdom to me, where I shall have my music for nothing.

Cal. When Prospero is destroyed.

Ste. That shall be by and by: I remember the story.

Trin. The sound is going away: let's follow it, and after do our work.

Ste. Lead, monster; we'll follow. —I would, I could see this taboror: he lays it on.

Trin. Wilt come? I'll follow, Stephano. [Exit.]
SCENE III.—Another part of the Island.

Enter ALONSO, SEBASTIAN, ANTONIO, GONZALO, ADRIAN, FRANCISCO, and Others.

Gon. By 'tis la'kin. I can go no farther, sir; My old bones ache: here's a mase trod, indeed, Through forth-rights, and meanders by your patience, I needs must rest me.

Alon. Old lord, I cannot blame thee, Who am myself attach'd with weariness, To the dullest of my spirits: sit down, and rest. Even here I will put off my hope, and keep it No longer for my Battler: he is drownd'd, Whom thus we stray to find; and the sea mocks Our frustrate search on land. Well, let him go.

Ast. I am right glad that he's so out of hope. [Aside to SEBASTIAN.

Do not, for one repulse, forego the purpose That you resolv'd to effect.

Sé. The next advantage

Will we take thoroughly.

Ast. Let it be to-night;

For, now they are oppress'd with travel, they Will not, nor cannot use such vigilance, As when they are fresh.

Sé. I say, to-night: no more.

[Solemn and strange music; and PROSPERO above, invisible. Enter several strange Shapes, bringing in a banquet: they dance about it with gentle actions of salutations; and, inviting the King, &c. to eat, they depart.

Alon. What harmony is this? my good friends, hark! Gonz. Marvelous sweet music!

Alon. Give us kind keepers, heavens! What were these?

Sé. A living drollerie. Now I will believe That there are unicorns; that in Arabia There is one tree, the phoenix' throne; one phoenix At this hour reigning there.

Ast. I'll believe both;

And what does else want credit, come to me And I'll be sworn 'tis true: travellers 'er' er did lie, Though fools at home condemn them.

Gon. If in Naples I should report this now, would they believe me?

If I should say, I saw such islanders, (For, certes, these are people of the island) Who, though they are of monstrous shape, yet, note, Their manners are more gentle, kind, than of Our human generation you shall find Many, nay, almost any.

Pro. [Aside.] Honest lord, They have said well; for some of you there present, Are worse than devils.

Alon. I cannot too much muse, [ing Such shapes, such gestures, and such sounds, express (Although they want the use of tongue) a kind Of excellent dumb discourse.

Pro. [Aside.] Praise in departing.

Frn. They vanish'd strangely.

Sé. No matter, since They have left their viands behind, for we have stow- arms.

Will'ye please you taste of what is here?

Alon. Not I.

Gon. Faith, sir, you need not fear. When we were boys,
THE TEMPEST.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—Before Prospero’s Cell.

Enter Prospero, Ferdinand, and Miranda.

Pro. If I have too austerely punish’d you, Your compensation makes amends; for I have given you here a thread ¹ of mine own life, Or that for which I live: whom once again I tender to thy hand. All thy vexations Were but my trials of thy love, and thou hast strangely stood the test: here, adore Heaven, I ratify this my rich gift! O Ferdinand! Do not smile at me that I boast her off; For then shall find she will outstrip all praise, And make it halt behind her.

Fer. I do believe it, Against an oracle.

Pro. Then, as my gift, and thine own acquisition Worthily purchased, take my daughter: but If thou dost break her virgin knot before All sanctimonious ceremonies may, With full and holy rite, be minister’d, No sweet assumption shall the heavens let fall To make this contract grow; but barren hate, Sour-eyed disdain, and discord, shall bestrew The union of your bed with weeds so loathly, That you shall hate it both: therefore, take heed, As Hymen’s lamps shall light you.

Fer. As I hope For quiet days, fair issue, and long life, With such love as ‘tis now, the muriest den, The most opportune place, the strongest suggestion Our worser genius can, shall never melt Mine-honour into lust, to take away The edge of that day’s celebration, When I shall think, or Phoebus’ steeds are founder’d, Or night keep chain’d below.

Pro. Fairly spoke.

Sit then and talk with her; she is thine own.— What, Ariel! my industrious servant Ariel!

Enter Ariel.

Ari. What would my potent master? here I am.

Pro. Thou and thy meaner follows your last service Did worthily perform, and I must use you In such another trick. Go, bring the raddle, O’er whom I give thee power, here, to this place: Incite them to quick motion; for I must Bestow upon the eyes of this young couple Some vanity of mine art: it is my promise, And they expect it from me.

Ari. Presently?

Pro. Ay, with a twinkle.

Ari. Before you can say, “Come,” and “go,” And breathe twice; and cry, “so so,” Each one, tripping on his toe, Will be here with mop and mow. Do you love me, master? no?

Till Hymen's torch be lighted; but in vain:
Marry, his union is return'd again;
Her wassaph-headed son has broke his arrows,
Swears he will shoot no more, but play with sparrows,
And be a boy right out.

Cer.

Highest queen of state,
Great Juno comes: I know her by her gait.

Enter Juno.

Juno. How does my bounteous sister? Go with me
To bless this twin, that they may prosperous be,
And honour'd in their issue.

Juno. Honour, riches, marriage, blessing,
Long continuance, and increasing,
Hourly joys be still upon you!
Juno sings her blessings on you.¹
Earth's increase, joyns plenty,
Barns, and garner's never empty;
Vines, with clustering branches growing;
Plants, with goodly burden bowing;
Flow'rs come to you, at the first,
In the very end of harvest!
Scarcity and want shall shun you;
Ceres' blessing so is on you.

Fer. This is a most majestic vision, and Harmonious charmingly. May I be bold
To see'k these spirits?—

P. o. Spirits, which by mine art
I have from their confines call'd to enact
My present fancies.

Fer. Let me live here ever:
So rare a wonder'd father, and a wife,²
Makes this place Paradise.

Juno and Ceres whisper, and send Inna on employment.

Pro. Sweet now, silence!
Juno and Ceres whisper seriously;
There's something else to do. Hush, and be mute,
Or else our spell is marr'd.

Iris. You nymphs, call'd Naiads, of the winding brooks,
With your sedge² crowns, and ever harmless looks,
Leave your crisp channels, and on this green land
Answer your summons: Juno does command.
Come, temperate nymphs, and help to celebarate
A contract of true love: be not too late.

Enter certain nymphs.

You sun-burn'd Nicklemen, of August weary,
Come hither from the furrow, and be merry.
Make holy-day: your eye-straw hats put on,
And these fresh nymphs encounter every one
In country footing.

Enter certain Reapers, properly habited: they join with the Nymphs in a graceful dance; towards the end whereof Pros. starts suddenly, and speaks: after which, to a strange, hollow, and confused noise, they heavily vanish.

Pro. [Aside.] I had forgot that foul conspiracy
Of the beast Caliban, and his confederates,
Against my life: the minute of their plot
Is almost come.—[To the Spirits.] Well done.—
Avoid:—no more.

Fer. This is strange: your father's in some passion
That works him strongly.

Iris. Never till this day,
Saw I him touch'd with anger so distemper'd.

Pros. You do look, my son, in a mov'd sort,
As if you were dismay'd: be cheerful, sir.
Our revels now are ended. These our actors

As I foretold you, were all spirits, and
Are melted into air, into thin air.
And, like the harmless fabric of this vision,
The cloud-capped towers, the gorgeous palaces
The solemn temples, the great globe itself,
Yes, all which it inherit, shall dissolve,
And, like this insubstantial pageant faded,
Leave not a rack² behind. We are such stuff
As dreams are made on, and our little life
Is rounded with a sleep.—Sir, I am vex'd:
Bear with my weakness; my old brain is troubled:
Be not disturb'd with my infirmity.
If you be pleas'd to retire into my cell,
And there repos'd: a turn or two I'll walk,
To still my beating mind.

Juno. We wish your peace. [Exeunt.

Pro. Come with a thought!—I thank thee.—Ariel, Come!

Enter Ariel.

Ari. Thy thoughts I cleave to. What's thy pleasure?

Pro. Spirit. We must prepare to meet with Caliban.

Ari. Ay, my commander: when I presented Ceres,
I thought to have told thee of it; but I fear'd
Lest I might anger thee.

Pro. Say again, where didst thou leave these varlets?
Ari. I told you, sir, they were red-hot with drinking:
So full of valour, that they smote the air
For breathing in their faces; beat the ground
For kissing of their feet, yet always bending
Towards their project. Then I beat my tabor,
At which, like unback'd colts, they prick'd their ears,
Advanc'd their eye-lids, lifted up their noses,
As they smell music: so I charm'd their ears,
That, calf-like, they their lowing follow'd, through Tooth'd briers, sharp furze, prickling gorse, and thorns
Which enter'd their frail skins:¹ at last I left them
The filthy mantled pool beyond your cell,
There dancing up to the chins, that the foul lake
Overstunk their feet.

Pro. This was well done, my bird.

Ari. Thy shape invisible retain thou still:
The trumpery in my house, go, bring it hither,
For stale' to catch these thieves.

Ari. I go, I go. [Exit.

Pro. A devil, a born devil, on whose nature
Nurture never can stick; on whom my pains,
Humbly taken, all, all lost, quite lost;
And as with age his body uglier grows,
So his mind canker'd. I will plague them all.

Re-enter Ariel, laden with glistening apparel, &c.
Even to roasting.—Come, hang them on this line.
Ariel hangs them on the line, and with Prospero remains unseen.

Enter Caliban, Stephano, and Trinculo, all went.

Cal. Pray you, [read softly, that the blind mole may not Hear a foot fall: we now are near his cell.

Step. Monster, your fairy, which, you say, is a harmless fairy, has done little better than played the Jack² with us.

Trin. Monster, I do smell all horse-piss, at which my nose is in great indignation.

Step. So is mine. Do you hear, monster? If I should take a displeasure against you; look you,—

Trin. Thou wert but a lost monster.

Cal. Good my Lord, give me thy favour still.

Pros. Be patient, for the price I'll bring thee to ¹ in f. e. the remainder of the song is given to Ceres. ² Spring: in f. e. ³ wise: in f. e. ⁴ sedge'd: in f. e. ⁵ a coyred, from shak ⁶ dam: in f. e. ⁷ A decoy. ⁸ f. e. have only the direction, Prospro and Ariel remain unseen. ⁹ Jack o' lantern.

THE TEMPEST.

ACT V.

Shall hood-winkle this mischance: therefore, speak softly; All's husb'd as midnight yet.

Trin. Ay, but to lose our bottles in the pool,— Ste. There is not only disgrace and dishonour in that, monster, but an infinite loss.

Trin. That's more to me than my wetting: yet this is your harmless fairy, monster.

Ste. I will fetch off my bottle, though I be o'er ears for my labour.

Cal. Prythee, my king, be quiet. Seat thou here? This is the mouth o' the cell: no noise, and enter: Do that good mischief, which may make this island Thine own for ever, and I, thy Caliban, For ay thy foot-lover.

Ste. Give me thy hand. I do begin to have bloody thoughts.

Trin. O king Stephano! O peer! O worthy Stephano! look, what a wardrobe here is for thee! [Seeing the apparel.

Cal. Let it alone, thou fool: it is but trash.

Trin. O, ho, monster! we know what belongs to a friar's cell:—O, king Stephano!

Ste. Put off that gown, Trinculo: by this hand, I'll have that gown.

Trin. Thy grace shall have it.

Cal. The dropsy drown this fool: what do you mean, To doath thus on such luggage? Let 't alone, And do the murder first: if he awake, From toe to crown he'll fill our skins with pinches; Make us strange stuff.

Ste. Be ye quiet, monster.—Mistress line, is not this my jerkin? Now is the jerkin under the line: now, jerkin, you are like to lose your hair, and prove a bald jerkin.

Trin. Do, do: we steal by line and level, and 'tis like your grace.

Ste. I thank thee for that jest; here's a garment for't: writ shall not go unrewarded, while I am king of this country. "Steal by line and level," is an excellent pass of pate; there's another garment for 't.

Trin. Monster, come; put some time upon you fingers, and away with the rest.

Cal. I will have none on't: we shall lose our time, And all be turn'd to barnacles, or toapes With foreheads villainous low.

Ste. Monster, lay to your fingers: help to bear this away where my hoghead of wine is, or I'll turn you out of my kingdom. Go to; carry this.

Trin. And this.

Ste. Ay, and this.

[An noise of hunters heard. Enter divers Spirits, in shape of hounds, and hunt them about; Prospero and Ariel setting them on.]

Pro. Hey, Mountain, hey!

Ari. Silver! there it goes, Silver!

Pro. Fury, Fury, there, Tyrant, there! hark, hark!

[Cal., Srx., and Twm. are driven out.]

Go, charge my goblins that they grind their joints With dry convulsions; shorten up their sinews With aged cramps, and more pinch-spotted make them, Than pard, or cat o' mountain. [Cries and roaring.

Ari. Hark! they roar.

Pro. Let them be hunted soundly. At this hour Lie at my mercy all mine enemies:

[Exit.]

Shortly shall all my labours end, and thou Shalt have the air at freedom: for a little,

Follow, and do me service.

[Exeunt.]

ACT V.

SCENE I.—Before the Cell of Prospero.

Enter Prospero in his magic robes; and Ariel.

Pro. Now does my project gather to a head: My charms crack not, my spirits obey, and time Goes upright with his carriage. How's the day?

Ari. On the sixth hour; at which time, my lord, You said our work should cease.

Pro. I did say so, When first I rais'd the tempest. Say, my spirit, How fares the king and 's followers?

Ari. Confid'n together

In the same fashion as you gave in charge; Just as you left them: all prisoners, sir, In the line'grove which weather-fends your cell; They cannot budge till you release. The king, His brother, and yours, abide all three distracted, And the remainder mourning over them, Brim-full of sorrow, and dismay; but chiefly Him that you term'd, sir, the good old lord, Gonzalo: His tears run down his beard, like winter's drops From eaves of reeds. Your charm so strongly works them, That if you now beheld them, your affections Would become tender.

Pro. Dost thou think so, spirit?

Ari. Mine would, sir, were I human.

Pro. And mine shall.

Hast thou, which art but air, a touch, a feeling Of their afflictions, and shall not myself; One of their kind, that relish all as sharply, Passion as they, be kindlier mov'd than thou art?

Tho' with their high wrongs I am struck to the quick, Yet, with my nobler reason, gainst my fury Do I take part. The rarer action is In virtue, than in vengeance: they being penitent, The sole drift of my purpose doth extend Not a frown farther. Go; release them, Ariel.

My charms I'll break, their senses I'll restore, And they shall be themselves.

Ari. I'll fetch them, sir. [Exit.]

Pro. Ye elves of hills, brooks, standing lakes, and groves;

And ye, that on the sands with printless foot

Do chase the ebbing Neptune, and do fly him,

When he comes back; you demy-puppets, that

By moonshine do the green-ward ringlet's make,

Whereof the ewe not bites; and you, whose pastime

Is to make midnight mushrooms; that rejoice

To hear the solemn curlew; by whose aid

[Weak masters though ye be] I have be-dim'd

The noontide sun, call'd forth the mutinous winds, And twixt the green sea and the axm'd vault

Set roaring war: to the dread rattling thunder

Have I given fire, and rifted Jove's stout oak

With his own bolt: the strong-bas'd promontory

Have I made shake; and by the spurs pluck'd up

The pines and cedar: graves, at my command,

Have waked their sleepers; ope'd, and let them forth

By my so potent art. But this rough magic

I here abjure; and, when I have requir'd
Some heavenly music, (which even now I do)
To work mine end upon their senses, that
This airy charm is for, I'll break my staff,
Bury it certain fathoms in the earth,
And, deeper than did ever plummet sound,
I'll drown my book. [Solemn music.
Re-enter Ariel; after him Alonso, with a frantic gesture, attended by Gonzalo; Sebastian and Antonio in like manner, attended by Adrian and Francisco: they will enter the circle which Prospero had made, and there stand charmed; which Prospero observing, speaks.

A solemn air, and the best comforter
To an unsettled fancy, cure thy brains,
New无所 use, boil'd within thy skull! There stand,
For you are spell-stopp'd.—

Noble Gonzalo, honourable man,
Mine eyes, even sociable to the flow3 of thine,
Fall fellowly drops.—The charm dissolves space;
And as the morning star upon the night,
Melting the darkness, so their rising senses
Begin to chase the ignorant fumes that mantle
Their clearer reason.—O good Gonzalo!
My true preserver, and a loyal servant.
To him thou follow'st, I will pay thy graces
Home, both in word and deed.—Most cruelly
Dost thou, Alonso, use me and my daughter:
Thy brother was a furtherer in the act—
Thou't pinch'd for't now, Sebastian.—Flesh and blood,
You brother mine, that entertain'd ambition
Expell'd remorse and nature; who, with Sebastian, (Whose inward pinches therefore are most strong)
Would here have kill'd your king; I do forgive thee, Innatural though thou art.—Their understanding
B-gins to swell, and the approaching tide
Will shortly fill the reasonable shores,
That now lie foul and muddy. Not one of them,
That yet looks on me, e'er would know me.—Ariel,
Fetch me the hat and rapier in my cell; [Exit Ariel.
I will dis-case me, and myself present,
As I was sometime Milan.—Quickly, spirit;
Thou shalt ere long be free.
Ariel re-enters singing, and helps to attire Prospero.

Ari. Where the bee sucks, there suck I;
In a cowslip's bell I lie:
There I couch. When owls do cry,
On the bat's back I do fly,
After summer, merrily,
Merrily, merrily, shall I live now,
Under the blossom that hangs on the bough.

Pro. Why, that's my dainty Ariel! I shall miss thee;
But yet thou shalt have freedom.—so, so, so,—
To the king's ship, invisible as thou art:
There shall thou find the mariners asleep
Under the hatches; the master, and the boatswain,
Bent awake, enforce them to this place,
And presently, I pr'ythee,
Ari. I drink the air before me, and return
Or 'er your pulse twice beat. [Exit Ariel.

Gon. All torment, trouble, wonder, and amazement
Inhabit here; some heavenly power guide us
Of this fearful country!

Pro. [Attired as Duke.] Behold, sir king,
The wronged duke of Milan, Prospero.
For more assurance that a living prince
Does now speak to thee, I embrace thy body;
And to thee, and thy company, I bid
A hearty welcome.

Alo. Who's thou best he, or no,
Or some enchanted devil! to abuse me,
As late I have been, I not know: thy pulse
Beats as of flesh and blood; and, since I saw thee,
Th' affliction of my mind amends, with which,
I fear a madness held me. This must crave
(An if this be at all) a most strange story.
Thy dukedom I resign; and do entreat
Thou pardon me thy wrongs.—But how should Prospero
Be living, and be here?

Pro. First, noble friend,
Let me embrace thine age, whose honour cannot
Be measur'd, or confin'd.

Gon. Whether this be,
Or be not, I'll not swear.

Pro. You do yet taste
Some subtleties o' the isle, that will not let you Believe things certain.—Welcome, my friends all.—
But you, my brace of lords, were I so mind'd, [Aside to Sarr. and Any.]
I here could pluck his highness' frozen upon you,
And justify you traitors: at this time
I will tell no tales.

Sarr. [Aside.] The devil speaks in him.

Pro. No.

For you, most wicked air, whom to call brother
Would even infect my mouth, I do forgive
Thy rankest faults; all of them; and require
My dukedom of thee, which, perforce, I know
Thou must restore.

Alo. If thou bestest Prospero,
Give us particulars of thy preservation:
How thou hast met us here, who three hours since
Were 'twixt upon this shore; where I have lost (How sharp the point of this remembrance is!) My dear son Ferdinand.

Pro. I am wo' for' t, sir.

Alo. Irreparable is the loss, and patience
Says it is past her cure.

Pro. I rather think,
You have not sought her help; of whose soft grace,
For the like loss I have her sovereign aid,
And rest myself content.

Alo. You the like loss?

Pro. As great to me, as late; and, supportable
To make the dear loss, have I means much weaker
Than you may call to comfort you, for I
Have lost my daughter.

Alo. A daughter?
O heavens! that they were living both in Naples,
The king and queen there! that they were, I wish
Myself were muddled in that oozy bed
Where my son lies. When did you lose your daughter?

Pro. In this last tempest. I perceive, these lords
At this encounter do so much admire,
That they devour their reason, and scarce think
Their eyes do offices of truth, their words
Are natural breath; but, howsoever you have Been justly from your senses, know for certain,
That I am Prospero, and that very duke
Which was thrust forth of Milan; who most strangely
Upon this shore, where you were 'wreck'd, was landed,
To be the lord on't. No more yet of this;
For 'tis a chronicle of day by day,
Not a relation for a breakfast, nor Bedding this first meeting. Welcome, sir;—
This cell's my court: here have I few attendants,
And subjects none abroad: pray you, look in.
My dukedom since you have given me again,
I will require you with as good a thing;
At least, bring forth a wonder, to content ye
As much as me my dukedom.
Prospero draws a curtain, and discovers Ferdinand and Miranda playing at chess.
Mira. Sweet lord, you play me false.
Fer. No, my dearest love,
I would not for the world.
Mira. Yes, for a score of kingdoms you should wrange,
And I would call it fair play.
Alon. If this prove
A vision of the island, one dear son
Shall I twice lose.
Seb. A most high miracle!
Fer. Though the seas threaten they are merciful:
I have cured them without cause. [Kneels to Alon.
Alon. Now, all the blessings
Of a good father compass thee about!
Arise, and say how thou cam'st here.
Mira. O, wonder!
How many goodly creatures are there here!
How beauteous mankind is! O, brave new world,
That has such people in't!
Pro. 'Tis new to thee.
Alon. What is this maid, with whom thou wast at play?
Your old acquaintance cannot be three hours:
Is she the goddess that hath sever'd us,
And brought us thus together?
Fer. Sir, she is mortal;
But, by immortal providence, she's mine:
I chose her, when I could not ask my father
For his advice, nor thought I had one. She
Is daughter to this famous duke of Milan,
Of whom so often I have heard renown,
But never saw before; of whom I have Received a second life, and second father
This lady makes him to me.
Alon. I am hers.
But O! how oddly will it sound, that I
Must ask my child forgiveness.
Pro. There, sir, stop:
Let us not burden our remembrances
With a heaviness that's gone.
I have inly wept,
Or should have spoke ere this. Look down, you gods,
And on this couple drop a blessed crown,
For it is you that have chald'd forth the way,
Which brought us hither!
Alon. I say, Amen, Gonzalo.
Gon. Was Milan thrust from Milan, that his issue
Should become kings of Naples? O! rejoice
Beyond a common joy, and set it down
With gold on lasting pillars. In one voyage
Did Claribell her husband find at Tunis;
And Ferdinand, her brother, found a wife,
Where he himself was lost; Prospero his dukedom,
In a poor isle; and all of us, ourselves,
When no man was his own.
Alon. Give me your hands: [To Fer. and Mira.
Let grief and sorrow still embrace his heart,
That doth not wish you joy!
Gon. Be it so: Amen.
Re-enter Ariel, with the Master and Boatswain amazely following.
O look, sir! look, sir! here are more of us,
I prophesied, if a gallows were on land,
This fellow could not drown.—Now, blasphemy,
That swear'st grace o'erboard, not an oath on shore?
Hast thou no mouth by land? What is the news?
Boats. The best news is, that we have safely found
Our king, and company: the next, our ship,
Which but three glasses since we gave out split,
Is tight, and yare, and bravely rigg'd, as when
We first put out to sea.
[Aside. Sir, all this service
Have I done since I went.
Pro. My trick'sy spirit! [Aside
Alon. These are not natural events; they strengthen
From strange to stranger.—Say, how came you hither?
Boats. If I did think, sir, I were well awake,
I'd strive to tell you. We were dead of sleep,
And (how we know not) all clapp'd under hatches,
Where, but even now, with strange and several noises
Of roaring, shriking, howling, jingling chains,
And more diversity of sounds, all horrible,
We were awak'd; straightway, at liberty:
Where we, in all her trim, freshly beheld
Our royal, good, and gallant ship; our master
Capering to eye her: on a trice, so please you,
Even in a dream, were we divided from them,
And were brought moping hither.
Ari. Was't well done?
Pro. Bravely, my diligence! Thou shalt
Aside be free.
Alon. This is as strange a maze as e'er men trod;
And there is in this business more than nature
Was ever conduct of: some oracle
Must rectify our knowledge.
Pro. Sir, my liege,
Do not infest your mind with beating on
The strangeness of this business: at pick'd leisure,
Which shall be shortly, single I'll resolve you
(Which to you shall seem probable) of every
These happen'd accidents; till when, be cheerful,
And think of each thing well. —Come hither, spirit
[Aside
Set Caliban and his companions free;
Untie the spell. [Ex. Ariel.] How fares my gracious sir?
There are yet missing of your company
Some few odd lads, that you remember not.
Re-enter Ariel, driving in Caliban, Stephano, and Gonzalo in their stolen apparel.
St. Every man shift for all the rest, and let no man care for himself, for all is but fortune. —Coragio bully-monster, coragio!
Tri. If these be true spies which I wear in my head, here's a goodly sight.
Cal. O Setebos! these be brave spirits, indeed.
How fine my master is! I am afraid
He will chastise me.
Seb. Ha, ha!
What things are these, my lord Antonio?
Will money buy them?
Ant. Very like: one of them
Is a plain fish, and, no doubt, marketable.
Pro. Mark but the badges of these men, my lords.
Then say, if they be true. —This mis-shapen knave,
His mother was a witch; and one so strong
That could control the moon, make flows and ebbs,
And deal in her command with all her power.
These three have robb'd me; and this demi-devil
(Four's a bastard one) had plotted with them
To take my life; two of these fellows you Must know, and own; this thing of darkness I Acknowledgment mine.
Cal. I shall be pinch'd to death.
Alon. Is not this Stephano, my drunken butler?

Seth. He is drunk now: where had he wine?

Alon. And Trinculo is reeling ripe: where should they Find this grand liquor that hath gilded 'em?—

How canst thou in this pickle?

Trin. I have been in such a pickle, since I saw you last, that, I fear me, will never out of my bones: I shall not fear fly-blowing.

Seth. Why, how now, Stephano!

Ste. O! touch me not: I am not Stephano, but a cramp.

Pro. You’d be king of the isle, sirrah?

Ste. I should have been a sore one then.

Alon. This is as strange a thing as e’er I look’d on.

[Pointing to Caliban.]

Pro. He is as disproportion’d in his manners,

As in his shape.—Go, sirrah, to my cell;

Take with you your companions: as you look

To have my pardon, trim it handsomely.

Cal. Ay, that I will; and I’ll be wise hereafter,

And seek for grace. What a thrice-double ass

Was I, to take this drunkard for a god,

And worship this dull fool?

Pro. Go to; away!

Alon. Hence, and bestow your luggage where you found it.

Seth. Or stole it, rather. [Ex. Cal., Ste., and Trin.

Pro. Sir, I invite your highness, and your train,

To my poor cell, where you shall take your rest

For this one night; which, part of it, I’ll waste

With such discourse, as, I not doubt, shall make it

Go quick away; the story of my life,

And the particular accidents gone by,

Since I came to this isle; and in the morn,

I’ll bring you to your ship, and so to Naples,

Where I have hope to see the nuptial

Of these our dear-beloved solemniz’d;

And thence retire me to my Milan, where

Every third thought shall be my grave.

Alon. To hear the story of your life, which must Take the ear strangely.

Pro. I’ll deliver all;

And promise you calm seas, suspicious gales,

And sail, so expeditious, that shall catch

Your royal fleet far off.—My Ariel;—chick,—

That is thy charge: then, to the elements;

Be free, and fare thou well!—Please you draw near.

---

EPILOGUE.

Spoken by Prospero.

Now my charms are all o’erthrown,

And what strength I have’s mine own;

Which is most faint: now, ’tis true,

I must be here confin’d by you,

Or sent to Naples. Let me not,

Since I have my dukedom got,

And pardon’d the deceived, dwell

In this bare island, by your spell;

But release me from my bands,

With the help of your good hands.

Gentle breath of yours my sails

Must fill, or else my project fails,

Which was to please. Now I want

Spirits to enforce, art to enchant;

And my ending is despair,

Unless I be relieved by prayer;

Which pierces so, that it assails

Mercy itself, and frees all faults.

As you from crimes would pardon’d be,

Let your indulgence set me free.

SCENE: sometimes in Verona; sometimes in Milan, and on the fronts of Mantua.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—An open place in Verona.

Enter Valentine and Proteus.

Val. Cease to persuade, my loving Proteus:
Home-keeping youth have ever homely wits.
Wor't not, affection chains thy tender days
To the sweet glances of thy honour'd love,
I rather would entreat thy company
To see the wonders of the world abroad,
Than, living dully sluggardiz'd at home,
Wear out thy youth with shapeless idleness.
But since thou lov'st, love still, and thrive therein,
Even as I would, when I to love begin.

Pro. Wilt thou be gone? Sweet Valentine, adieu.
Think on thy Proteus, when thou happy seest
Some rare note-worth' object in thy travel:
With me partaker in thy happiness,
When thou dost meet good hap; and in thy danger,
If ever danger do environ thee,
Commend thy grievance to my holy prayers,
For I will be thy beadle's-man,① Valentine.

Pro. Upon some book I love, I'll pray for thee.

Val. That's on some shadowy story of deep love,
How young Leander cross'd the Hellespont.

Pro. That's a deep story of a deeper love,
For he was more than over shoes in love.

Val. 'Tis true; but② you are over boots in love,
And yet you never swam the Hellespont.

Pro. Over the boots? nay, give me not the boots.③

Val. No, I will not, for it boots thee not.

Pro. What?④

Val. To be in love where scorn is bought with groans;
Coy looks, with heart-sore sighs; one fading moment's mirth,
With twenty watchful, weary, tedious nights:
If haply won, perhaps, a hapless gain;
If lost, why then a grievous labour won:

However, but a folly bought with wit,
Or else a wit by folly vanquished.

Pro. So, by your circumstance you call me fool.

Val. So, by your circumstance, I fear you'll prove
Pro. 'Tis love you cavil at: I am not love.

Val. Love is your master; for he masters you;
And he that is so yoked by a fool,
Methinks, should not be chronicled for wise.

Pro. Yet writers say, as in the sweetest bud
The eating canker dwells, so eating love
Inhabit's in the finest wits of all.

Val. And writers say, as the most forward bud
Is eaten by the canker ere it blow,
Even so by love the young and tender wit
Is turn'd to folly; blasting in the bud,
Losting his verdure even in the prime,
And all the fair effects of future hopes.

But wherefore waste I time to counsel thee,
That art a votary to fond desire?

Once more adieu. My father at the road
Expects my coming, there to see me shipp'd.

Pro. And thatheer will I bring thee, Valentine.

Val. Sweet Proteus, no; now let us take our leave,
To Milan let me hear from thee by letters,
Of thy success in love, and what news else
Belideth here in absence of thy friend,
And I likewise will visit thee with mine.

Pro. All happiness bechance to thee in Milan.

Val. As much to you at home; and so, farewell. [Exit.

Pro. He after honour hunts, I after love:
He leaves his friends to dignify them more;
I leave myself, my friends, and all for love.

Thou, Julia, thou hast metamorphos'd me;
Made me neglect my studies, lose my time,
War with good counsel, set the world at nought,
Made wit with musing week, heart sick with thought

Enter Speed.

Speed. Sir Proteus, save you. Saw you my master?⑤

① for: in f. e. ② One who prays for another: the word is derived from the dropping off a bead in a rosary, at each prayer recited.
③ for: in f. e. ④ Supposed by Knight to refer to the instrument of torture, the boot by which the sufferer's leg was crushed by wedges driven between it and the boot in which it was placed. Collier says it is a proverbial expression, signifying "don't make a laughing-stock of me."
Scene II.

The Two Gentlemen of Verona.

Pro. But now he parted hence to embark for Milan.
Speed. Twenty to one, then, he is ship'd already,
    And I have play'd the sheep in losing him.
Pro. Indeed a sheep doth very often stray,
    As if the shepherd were awhile away.
Speed. You conclude, that my master is a shepherd,
    Then, and I a sheep?
Pro. I do.
Speed. Why then, my horns are his horns, whether
I wake or sleep.
Pro. A silly answer, and sitting well a sheep.
Speed. This proves me still a sheep.
Pro. True, and thy master a shepherd.
Speed. Nay, that I can deny by a circumstance.
Pro. It shall go hard, but I'll prove it by another.
Speed. The shepherd seeks the sheep, and not the sheep the shepherd; but I seek my master, and my master seeks not me: therefore, I am no sheep.
Pro. The sheep for fodder follow the shepherd, the shepherd for food follows not the sheep; thou for wages followest thy master, thy master for wages follows not thee: therefore, thou art a sheep.
Speed. Such another proof will make me cry "baa."
Pro. But, dost thou hear? gavest thou thy letter to Julia?
Speed. Ay, sir: I, a lost mutton, gave your letter to her, a laced mutton; and she, a laced mutton, gave me a lost mutton, nothing for my labour.
Pro. Here's but a small pasture for such store of muttons. Speed. If the ground be overcharged, you were best stick her.
Pro. Nay, in that you are a strait, 'twere best pound you.
Speed. Nay, sir, less than a pound shall serve me for carrying your letter.
Pro. You mistake: I mean the pound, the pinfold.
Speed. From a pound to a pin? fold it over and over,
    'Tis too little for carrying a letter to your lover.
Pro. But what said she? did she nod?
    [Speed nods.]
Speed. You mistake, sir: I say she did nod, and you ask me, if she did nod? and I say I.
Pro. And that set together, is noddy.
Speed. Now you have taken the pains to set it together, take it for your pains.
Pro. No, no; you shall have it for bearing the letter.
Speed. Well, I perceive I must be fair to bear with you.
Pro. Why, sir, how do you bear with me?
Speed. Marry, sir, the letter very orderly; having nothing but the word noddy for my pains.
Pro. Beshrivest me, but you have a quick wit.
Speed. And yet it cannot overtake your slow purse.
Pro. Come, come; open the matter in brief: what said she?
Speed. Open your purse, that the money, and the matter, may be both at once deliver'd.
Pro. Well, sir, here is for your pains. What said the she?
    [Giving him money.]
Speed. Truly, sir, I think you 'll hardly win her.
Pro. Why? Couldst thou perceive so much from her?
Speed. Sir, I could perceive nothing at all from her better;
    No, not so much as a ducat for delivering your letter;
    And being so hard to me that brought to her your mind,
    I hear she 'll prove as hard to you in telling you her mind.

Give her no token but stones, for she 's as hard as steel.
Pro. What! said she nothing?
Speed. No, not so much as—"Take this for thy pains."
To testify your bounty, I thank you, you have testern'd me; in requital whereof, henceforth carry your letters yourself. And so, sir, I'll commend you to my master.
    [Exit.
Pro. Go, go, be gone, to save your ship from wreck,
    Which cannot perish, having thee aboard,
    Being destin'd to a drier death on shore,—
    I must go send some better messenger:
I fear my Julia would not deign my lines,
    Receiving them from such a worthless post.
    [Exit.

Scene II.—The Same. Julia's Garden.

Enter Julia and Lucetta.

Jul. But say, Lucetta, now we are alone,
Wouldst thou then, counsel me to fall in love?
Luc. Ay, madam; so you stumble not unheedfully.
Jul. Of all the fair resort of gentlemen,
That every day with parole encounter me,
In thy opinion which is worthiest love?
Luc. Please you, repeat their names, I'll show my mind,
According to my shallow simple skill.
Jul. What think'st thou of the fair Sir Eglamour?
Luc. As of a knight well-spoken, neat and fine;
    But, were I you, he never should be mine.
Jul. What think'st thou of the rich Mercutio?
Luc. Well, of his wealth; but of himself, so, so.
Jul. What think'st thou of the gentle Proteus?
Luc. Lord, lord! to see what folly reigns in us!
Jul. How now? what means this passion at his name?
Luc. Pardon, dear madam: 'tis a passing shame,
    That I, unworthy body as I am,
    Should censure thus a loving gentleman.
Jul. Why not on Proteus, as of all the rest?
Luc. Then thus,—of many good I think him best.
Jul. Your reason?
Luc. I have no other but a woman's reason:
    I think him so, because I think him so.
Jul. And wouldst thou have me cast my love on him?
Luc. Ay, if you thought your love not cast away.
Jul. Why, he, of all the rest, hath never mov'd me.
Luc. Yet he, of all the rest, I think, best loves ye.
Jul. His little speaking shows his love but small.
Luc. Fire that's closest keeps burns most of all.
Jul. They do not love, that do not show their love.
Luc. O! they love least, that let men know their love.
Jul. I would I knew his mind.
Luc. Peruse this paper, madam.
    [Gives a letter.
Luc. That the contents will show.
Jul. Say, say, who gave it thee?
Luc. Sir Valentine's page; and sent, I think, from Proteus.
He would have given it you, but I, being alone,
Did in your name receive it: pardon the fault, I pray.
Jul. Now, by my modesty, a goodly broker!
Dare you presume to harbour wanton lines?
To whisper and conspire against my youth?
Now, trust me, 'tis an office of great worth,
And you an officer fit for the place.
There, take the paper: see it be return'd,
    [Gives it back.
Or else return no more into my sight.
Luc. To plead for love deserves more fee than hate.
Jul. Will you be gone?
THE TWO GENTLEMEN OF VERONA.

ACT I.

Luc. That you may ruminate. [Exit.

Jul. And yet, I would I had o’erlook’d the letter.

It were a shame to call her back again,

And pray her to a fault for which I chid her.

What fool is she, that knows I am a maid,

And would not force the letter to my view,

Since maid, in modesty, say, ’No,’ to that

Which they would have the proficer construe, “Ay.”

Fie, fie! how wayward is this foolish love,

That like a testy babe will scratch the nurse,

And presently, all humbled, kiss the rod.

How churlishly I chill Lucetta hence,

When willingly I would have had her here:

How angrily I taught my brow to frown,

When inward joy enforce’d my heart to smile.

My penance is to call Lucetta back,

And ask remission for my folly past.—

What ho! Lucetta!

Re-enter LUCETTA.

Luc. What would your ladyship?

Jul. Is it near dinner-time?

Luc. I would, it were;

That you might kill your stomach on your meat,

And not upon your maid.

[Drop the letter, and take it up again.

Jul. What is’t that you took up so gingerly?

Luc. Nothing.

Jul. Why didst thou stoop, then?

To take a paper up

That I let fall.

And is that paper nothing?

Luc. Nothing concerning me.

Jul. Then let it lie for those that it concerns.

Luc. Madam, it will not lie where it concerns,

Unless it have a false interpreter.

Jul. Some love of yours hath writ to you in rhyme.

Luc. That I might sing it, madam, to a tune,

Give me a note: your ladyship can set.

Jul. As little by such toys as may be possible.

Best sing it to the tune of “Light o’ love.”

Luc. It is too heavy for so light a tune.

Jul. Heavy? belike, it hath some burden then.

Luc. Ay; and melodious were it, would you sing it.

Jul. And why not you?

Luc. I cannot reach so high.

Jul. Let’s see your song.—[Snatching the letter.

How now, minion!

Luc. Keep tune there still, so you will sing it out:

And yet, methinks, I do not like this tune.

Jul. You do not?

Luc. No, madam; it is too sharp.

And mar the concord with too harsh a descent.

There wanteth a mean’st to fill your song.

Jul. The mean is drown’d with your unruly base.

Luc. Indeed I bid the base’s for Proteus.

Jul. This babble shall not henceforth trouble me.

Here is a coil with protestation—

[Tears the letter, and throws it down.

Go; get you gone, and let the papers lie:

You would be fingering them to anger me. [better

Luc. She makes it strange, but she would be pleas’d

To be so anger’d with another letter. [Exit.

Jul. Nay, would I were so anger’d with the same!

O hateful lands! to tear such loving words:

Injurious wasps, to feed on such sweet honey,

And kill the bees that yield it with your stings!

I’ll kiss each several paper for amends.

Look, here is write—“kind Julii;”—unkind Julii!

As in revenge of thy ingratitude,

I throw thy name against the bruising stones.

Trampling contemptuously on thy disdain.

And here is write—“love-wounded Proteus.”—

Poor wounded name! my bosom, as a bed,

Shall lodge thee, till thou would be thoroughly heal’d;

And thus I search it with a sovereign kiss.

But twice, or thrice, was Proteus written down.

Be calm, good wind, blow not a word away,

Till I have found each letter in the letter,

Except mine own name; that some whirlwind bear

Unto a ragged, fearful, hanging rock,

And throw it thence into the raging seas.

Lo! here in one line is his name twice writ,—

“Poor forlorn Proteus; passionate Proteus

To the sweet Julii;”—that I’ll tear away;

And yet I will not, with so prettily

He couples it to his complaining name.

Thus will I fold them one upon another:

Now kiss, embrace, contend, do what you will.

Re-enter LUCETTA.

Luc. Madam,

Dinner is ready, and your father stays.

Jul. Well, let us go.

Luc. What! shall these papers lie like tell-tales here?

Jul. If you respect them, best to take them up.

Luc. Nay, I was taken up for laying them down;

Yet here they shall not lie for catching cold.

Jul. I see, you have a month’s mind unto them.

Luc. Ay, madam, you may see what sights you think; [13

I see things too, although you judge I wink.

Jul. Come, come; will I please you go? [Exit.

SCENE III.—The same. A Room in ANTONIO’s House.

Enter ANTONIO and PANTHINO.

Ant. Tell me, Panthino, what sad talk was that,

Wherewith my brother held you in the cloister?

Pant. ‘T was of his nephew Proteus, your son.

Ant. Why, what of him?

Pant. He wonder’d, that your lordship’s

Would suffer him to spend his youth at home,

While other men, of slender reputation,

Put forth their sons to seek preferment out:

Some to the wars, to try their fortune there;

Some, to discover islands far away;

Some, to the studious universities.

For any, or for all these exercises,

He said, that Proteus, your son, was meet,

And did request me to importune you

To let him spend his time no more at home,

Which to him would be a great impeachement to his age,

In having known no travel in his youth.

Ant. Nor need’st thou much importune me to that Whereon this month I have been hammering.

I have consider’d well his loss of time,

And how he cannot be a perfect man,

Not being tried and tutor’d in the world:

Experience is by industry achiev’d,

And perfected by the swift course of time.

Then, tell me, whither were I best to send him?

Pant. I think, your lordship is not ignorant

How his companion, youthful Valentine,
SCENE I. THE TWO GENTLEMEN OF VERONA.

Attends the emperor in his royal court.

Ant. I know it well.

Post. 'T were good, I think, your lordship sent him this letter.

There shall he practise tilts and tournaments,
Hear sweet discourse, converse with noblemen,
And be in eye of every exercise,
Worthy his youth, and nobleness of birth.

Ant. I like thy counsel: well hast thou advis'd;
And, that thou may'st perceive how well I like it,
The execution of it shall make known.

Even with the speediest expedition
I will dispatch him to the emperor's court.

Post. To-morrow, may it please you, Don Alphonso,
With other gentlemen of good esteem,
Are journeying to salute the emperor,
And to commend their service to his will.

Ant. Good company; with them shall Proteus go:
And, in good time,—now will we break with him.

Easter Proteus, not seeing his Father.

Pro. Sweet love! sweet lines! sweet life!
Here is her hand, the agent of her heart.

[Pressing a letter.

Here is her oath for love, her honour's pawn.

O! that our fathers would applaud our loves,
And seal our happiness with their consents!
O heavenly Julia!

Ant. How now! what letter are you reading there?

Pro. May it please your lordship, 'tis a word or two
Of commendations sent from Valentine, [Putting it up.

Deliver'd by a friend that came from him.

Ant. Send me the letter: let me see what news.

Pro. There is no news, my lord; but that he writes
How happily he lives, how well belov'd,
And daily graced by the emperor;

Wishing me with him, partner of his fortune.

Ant. And how stand you affected to his wish?

Pro. As one relying on your lordship's will,
And not depending on his friendly wish.

Ant. My will is something sorted with his wish.

Muso not that I thus suddenly proceed,
For what I will, I will, and there an end.
I am resolv'd, that thou shalt spend some time
With Valenti' in the emperor's court:
What maintenance he from his friends receives,
Like exhibition thou shalt have from me.
To-morrow be in readiness to go:

Excuse it not, for I am peremptory.

Pro. My lord, I cannot be so soon provided:

Please you, deliberate a day or two.

Ant. Look, what thou want'st shall be sent after thee:
No more of stay; to-morrow thou must go.—

Come on, Panthino: you shall be employ'd
To hasten on his expedition.

[Exeunt Antonio and Panthino.

Pro. Thus have I shunn'd the fire for fear of burning;
And drench'd me in the sea, where I am drown'd.
I fear'd to show my father Julia's letter,
Lost he should take exceptions to my love;
And, with the vantage of mine own excuse,
Hath he excepted most against my love.

O! how this spring of love resembleth
The uncertain glory of an April day,
Which now shows all the beauty of the sun,
And by and by a cloud takes all away.

Re-enter Panthino.

Ant. Sir Proteus, your father calls for you:

He is in haste; therefore I pray you, go.

Pro. Why, this it is: my heart accords thereto,
And yet a thousand times it answers no.

[Exeunt.
Val. What means your ladyship? do you not like it?
Sil. Yes, yes: the lines are very quaintly writ,
But since unwillingly, take them again.
Nay, take them. [Giving it back
Val. Madam, they are for you.
Sil. Ay, ay; you writ them, sir, at my request,
But I will none of them: they are for you.
I would have had them writ more movingly.
Val. Please you, I'll write your ladyship another.
Sil. And, when it's writ, for my sake read it over
And if it please you, so; if not, why, so.
Sil. If it please me, madam; what then?
Sil. Why, if it please you, take it for your labour;
And so good-morrow, servant. [Exit.
Speed. O jest! unseen, inscrutable, invisible,
As a nose on a man's face, or a weathercock on a steeple.
My master sues to her, and she hath taught her suitor,
He being her pupil, to become her tutor.
O excellent device! was there ever heard a better,
That my master, being scribe, to himself should write the letter?
Val. How now, sir! what, are you reasoning with yourself?
Speed. Nay, I was ryming: 't is you that have the reason.
Val. To do what?
Speed. To be a spokesman from madam Silvia.
Val. To whom?
Speed. To yourself. Why, she wos you by a figure.
Val. What figure?
Speed. By a letter, I should say.
Val. Why, she hath not writ to me?
Speed. What need she, when she hath made you write to yourself? Why, do you not perceive the jest?
Val. No, believe me.
Speed. No believing you, indeed, sir: but did you perceive her earnest?
Val. She gave me none, except an angry word.
Speed. Why, she hath given you a letter.
Val. That's the letter I writ to her friend.
Speed. And that letter hath she deliver'd, and there an end.
Val. I would it were no worse!
Speed. I'll warrant you, 't is as well:
For often have you writ to her, and she, in modesty,
Or else for want of idle time, could not again reply;
Or fearing else some messenger, that might her mind discover,
Her self hath taught her love himself to writ unto her lover.—
All this I speak in print, for in print I found it—
Why muse you, sir? 't is dinner time.
Val. I have dined.
Speed. Ay, but hearken, sir: though the carneleon love can feed on the sir, I am one that am nourish'd by my virtualls, and would fain have meat. O! be not like your mistress: be moved, be moved. [Exeunt.
SCENE II.—Verona. A Room in Julia's House.
Enter Proteus and Julia.
Pro. Have patience, gentle Julia.
Jul. I must, where is no remedy.
Pro. When possibly I can, I will return.
Jul. If you turn not, you will return the sooner.
Keep this remembrance for thy Julia's sake.1
Pro. Why then, we'll make exchange: here, take you this. [Exchange rings.
Jul. And seal the bargain with a holy kiss.

SCENE IV. — THE TWO GENTLEMEN OF VERONA.

Pro. Here is my hand for my true constancy; And when that hour o'er-slipes me in the day, Wherein I sigh not, Julia, for thy sake, The next ensuing hour some foul mischance Torment me for love's forgetfulness. My father stays my coming; answer not. The tide is now : nay, not thy tide of tears; That tide will stay me longer than I should. [Exit JULIA. Julia, farewell. — What! gone without a word? Ay, so true love should do: it cannot speak; For truth hath better deeds, than words, to grace it.

Enter PANTHINO.

Pant. Sir Proteus, you are stay'd for.

Pro. Go; I come, I come. —

Alas! this parting strikes poor lovers dumb. [Exeunt.

SCENE III. — The Same. A Street.

Enter LAUNCE. leading his Dog.

Launce. Nay, 'twill be this hour ere I have done weeping: all the kind of the Launceans have this very fault. I have received my proportion, like the prodigious son, and am going with sir Proteus to the imperial court. I think Crab, my dog, be the sorest-natured dog that lives: my mother weeping, my father weeping, my sister crying, our maid howling, our cat wailing, our handmaid and all our house in a great perplexity, yet did not this cruel-hearted kur dog one tear. He is a stone, a very pebble-stone, and has no more pity in him than a dog; a Jew would have wept to have seen our parting: why, my grandsir having no eyes, look you, wept herself blind at my parting. Nay, I'll show you the manner of it. This shoe is my father; —so, this left shoe is my father:—no, no, this left shoe is my mother:—nay, that cannot be so, neither:—yes, it is so, it is so; it hath the worse sole. This shoe, with the hole in it, is my mother, and this my father. A vengeance on 't! there 'is: now, sir, this staff is my sister; for, look you, she is as white as a lily, and as small as a wand: this hat is Nan, our maid: I am the dog:—no, the dog is himself, and I am the dog.—Oh! the dog is me, and I am myself: ay, so, so. Now come I to my father; "Father, your blessing!" now should not the shoe speak a word for weeping: now should I have my father; well, he weeps on. Now come I to my mother. (Oh, that she could speak now!) like a wild woman:—well, I kiss her; why there 'is; here's my mother's breath, up and down. Now come I to my sister; mark the moon she makes: now, the dog all this while sheds not a tear, nor speaks a word, but see how I lay the dust with my tears.

Enter PANTHINO.

Pant. Launce, away, away, aboard: thy master is ship'd, and thou art to post after with ears. What's the matter? why weepst thou, man? Away, ass; you'll lose the tide, if you tarry any longer.

Launce. It is no matter if the tide were lost; for it is the unkindest tide that ever any man tided.

Pant. What's the unkindest tide?

Launce. Why, he that's tided here; Crab, my dog.

Pant. Tut, man, I mean thou 'tis lost the flood; and, losing the flood, lose thy voyage; and, in losing thy voyage, lose thy master; and, in losing thy master, lose thy service; and, in losing thy service,—Why doest thou e'en smile? Yes, my faith.

Launce. For fear thou shouldst lose thy tongue.

Pant. Where should I lose my tongue?

Launce. In thy tale.

Pant. In thy tale?

Launce. Lose the tide, and the voyage, and the master, and the service, and the tide. Why, man, if the river were dry, I am able to fill it with my tears; if the wind were down, I could drive the boat with my sighs.

Pant. Come; come, away, man: I was sent to call thee.

Launce. Sir, call me what thou dar'st.

Pant. Wilt thou go?

Launce. Well, I will go. [Exeunt.

Enter VALENTINE, SILVIA, THURIO, and SPEED.

Sil. Servant.

Val. Mistress.

Speed. Master, sir Thurio frowns on you.

Val. Ay, boy, it's for love.

Speed. Not of you.

Val. Of my mistress, then.

Speed. 'T were good you knock'd him.

Sil. Servant, you are sad.

Val. Indeed, madam, I seem so.

Th. Seem you that you are not?

Val. Haply, I do.

Th. So do counterfeits.

Val. So do you.

Th. What seem I that I am not?

Val. Wise.

Th. What instance of the contrary?

Val. Your folly.

Th. And how quote⁴ you my folly?

Val. I quote it in your jerkin.

Th. My jerkin is a doublet.

Val. Well, then, 't will⁵ double your folly.

Th. How?

Sil. What angry, sir Thurio? do you change colour?

Val. Give him leave, madam: he is a kind of camleone.

Th. That hath more mind to feed on your blood, than live in your air.

Val. You have said, sir.

Th. Ay, sir, and done too, for this time.

Val. I know it well, sir: you always end ere you begin.

Sil. A fine volley of words, gentlemen, and quickly shot off.

Val. 'T is indeed, madam; we thank the giver.

Sil. Who is that, servant?

Val. Yourself, sweet lady; for you gave the fire.

Sir Thurio borrows his wit from your ladyship's looks, and spends what he borrows kindly in your company.

Th. Sir, if you spend word for word with me, I shall make your wit bankrupt.

Val. I know it well, sir: you have an exchequer of words, and, I think, no other treasure to give your followers; for it appears by their bare liveries, that they live by your bare words.

Sil. No more, gentlemen, no more. Here comes my father.

Enter the DUKE.

Duke. Now, daughter Silvia, you are hard beset.

Sir Valentine, your father's in good health: What say you to a letter from your friends Of much good news?

Val. My lord, I will be thankful To any happy messenger from thence.

Duke. Know you Don Antonio, your countryman?

Val. Ay, my good lord; I know the gentleman To be of wealth⁶ and worthy estimation, And not without desert so well reputed.
Duke. Hath he not a son?

Val. Ay, my good lord; a son, that well deserves
The honour and regard of such a father.

Duke. You know him well?

Val. I knew him, as myself; for from our infancy
We have conversed, and spent our hours together:
And though myself have been an idle truant,
Omitting the sweet benefit of time
To clothe mine age with angel-like perfection,
Yet hath sir Proteus, for that’s his name,
Made use and fair advantage of his days:
His years but young, but his experience old;
His head unshorn’d, but his judgment ripe;
And in a word, (for far behind his worth
Come all the praises that I now bestow)
He is complete in feature, and in mind,
With all good grace to grace a gentleman.

Duke. Be shrivell me, sir, but, if he make this good,
He is as worthy for an empress’ love.

As meet to be an emperor’s counsellor.
Well, sir; this gentleman is come to me
With commendation from great potentates;
And here he means to spend his time a while.
I think, ’tis an unwelcome news to you.

Val. Should I have wish’d a thing, it had been he.

Duke. Welcome him then, according to his worth.

Silvia. I speak to you; and you, sir Thurio:—
For Valentine. I need not ‘cite him to it.
I’ll send him hither to you presently.

[Exit Duke.

Val. This is the gentleman, I told your ladyship,
Had come along with me, but that his mistress
Did hold his eyes lock’d in her crystal looks.
Sil. Bolique, that now she hath enfranchis’d them,
Upon some other pawn for fealty.

Val. Nay, sure, I think, she holds them prisoners still.

Sil. Nay, then he should be blind; and, being blind,
How could he see his way to seek you out?

Val. Why, lady, love hath twenty pair of eyes.

Thy. They say, that love hath not an eye at all.

Val. To see such lovers, Thurio, as yourself:

Upon a homely object love can wink.

Enter Proteus.

Sil. Have done, have done. Here comes the gentleman.

[Exit Thurio.

Val. Welcome, dear Proteus!—Mistress, I beseech you, Confirm his welcome with some special favour.
Sil. His worth is warrant for his welcome hither,
If this be he you often wish’d to hear from.

Val. Mistress, it is. Sweet lady, entertain him to be my fellow-servant to your ladyship.

Sil. Too low a mistress for so high a servant.

Pro. Not so, sweet lady; but too mean a servant
To have a look of such a worthy mistress.

Val. Leave off discourse of disability.—

Sweet lady, entertain him for your servant.

Pro. My duty will I boast of, nothing else.

Sil. And duty yet did never want his meed.

Servant, you are welcome to a worthless mistress.

Pro. I’ll die on him that says so, but yourself.

Sil. That you are welcome?

Pro. That you are worthless.

[Re-enter Thurio.

Thu. Madam, my lord, your father, would speak with you.

Sil. I wait upon his pleasure: come, sir Thurio,
Go with me.—Once more, new servant, welcome:
I’ll leave you to confer of house-affairs;

When you have done, we look to hear from you.

Pro. We’ll both attend upon your ladyship.

[Exeunt Silvia, Thurio, and Speed.

Val. Now, tell me, how do all from whence you came?

Pro. Your friends are well, and have them much commended.

Val. And how do yours?

Pro. I left them all in health.

Val. How does your lady, and how thrives your love?

Pro. My tales of love were wont to weary you:
I know, you joy not in a love-discourse.

Val. Ay, Proteus, but that life is alter’d now;
I have done penance for contemning love;
Whose high imperious thoughts have punish’d me
With bitter fasts, and penitential groans,
With nightly tears, and daily heart-sore sighs;
For, in revenge of my contempt of love,
Love hath chas’d sleep from my enthralled eyes,
And made them watchers of mine own heart’s sorrow.

O, gentle Proteus! love’s a mighty lord,
And hath so humbled me, as, I confess,
There is no woe to his correction.
Nor, to his service, no such joy on earth!
Now, I do disguise, except it be of love;
Now can I break my fast, dine, sup, and sleep,
Upon the very naked name of love.

Pro. Enough; I read your fortune in your eye.

Was this the idol that you worship so?

Val. Even she; and is she not a heavenly saint?

Pro. No, but she is an earthly paragon.

Val. Call her divine.

Pro. I will not flatter her.

Val. Oh flatter me, for love delights in praisers.

Pro. What I was sick you gave me bitter pills,
And I must minister the like to you.

Val. Then speak the truth by her: if not divino,
Yet let her be a principality,
Sovereign to all the creatures on the earth.

Pro. Except my mistress.

Val. Sweet, except not any,
Except thou wilt except against my love.

Pro. Have I not reason to prefer mine own?

Val. And I will help thee to prefer her, too:
She shall be dignified with this high honour,—
To bear my lady’s train, lest the base earth
Should from her vesture chance to steal a kiss,
And, of so great a favour growing proud,
Disdain to root the summer-smelling flower,
And make rough winter everlasting.

Pro. Why, Valentine, what braggardism is this?

Val. Pardon me, Proteus: all I can, is nothing
To her, whose worth makes other worthies nothing.
She is alone.

Pro. Then, let her alone.

Val. Not for the world. Why, man, she is mine own;
And I as rich in having such a jewel,
As twenty seas, if all their sand were pearl,
The water nectar, and the rocks pure gold.
For give me, that I do not dream on thee,
Because thou seest me dote upon my love.
My foolish rival, that her father likes
Only for his possessions are so huge,
Is gone with her along, and I must after,
For love, thou know’st, is full of jealousy.

Pro. But she loves you?

Val. Ay, and we are betroth’d; nay, more, was marriage hour,
With all the cunning manner of our flight.

Determin’d of: how I must climb her window,
The ladder made of cords, and all the means.
Sc. VI.

THE TWO GENTLEMEN OF VERONA.

Plotting, and 'gread on for my happiness.
Good Proteus, go with me to my chamber,
In these affairs to aid me with thy counsel.

Pro. Go on before; I shall enquire you forth.
I must unto the road, to disembark
Some necessaries that I needs must use,
And then I'll presently attend on you.
Fed. Will you make haste?

Pro. I will.

[Exit Valentine.

Even as one heat another heat expels,
Or as one nail by strength drives out another,
So the remembrance of my former love
Is by a newer object quite forgotten.
Is it mine own, or Valentine's praise,
Her true perfection, or my false transgression,
That makes me, reasonless, to reason thus?
She's fair, and so is Julia that I love—
That I did love, for now my love is th' other,
Which, like a waxen image 'gainst a fire,
Bears no impression of the thing it was.
Methinks, my zeal to Valentine is cold,
And that I love him not, as I was wont
:0; but I love his lady too much;
And that's the reason I love him so little.
How shall I dote on her with more advice,
That thus without advice begin to love her?
'Tis but her picture I have yet beheld,
And that hath dazzled so my reason's light;
But when I look on her perfection,
There is no reason but I shall be blind.
If I can check my varying love, I will;
If not, to compass her I'll use my skill.

[Exit.

Scene V.—The Same. A Street.

Enter Speed and Launce.

Speed. Launce! by mine honesty, welcome to Milan.
Launce. Forswear not thyself, sweet youth, for I am not welcome. I reckon this always—that a man is never undone, till he be hang'd; nor never welcome to a place, till some certain shot be paid, and the hostess my welcome.

Speed. Come on, you mad-cap, I'll to the alehouse with you presently; where for one shot of five pence thou shalt have five thousand welcomes. But, sirrah, how did thy master part with madam Julia?

Launce. Marry, after they closed in earnest, they parted very fairly in jest.

Speed. But shall she marry him?

Launce. No.

Speed. How then? Shall he marry her?

Launce. No, neither.

Speed. What, are they broken?

Launce. No, they are both as whole as a fish.

Speed. Why them, how stands the matter with them?

Launce. Marry, thus: when it stands well with him, he stands well with her.

Speed. What an ass art thou? I understand thee not.

Launce. What a block art thou, that thou canst not
My stuff understands me.

Speed. What thou say'st?

Launce. Ay, and what I do too: look thee, I'll but bea, and my stuff understands me.

Speed. It stands under thee, indeed.

Launce. Why, stand-under and under-stand is all one.

Speed. But tell me true, will 't be a match?

Launce. By my dog, if he say, ay, it will; if he say, so, it will; if he shake his tail, and say nothing, it will.

Speed. The conclusion is, then, that it will.

Launce. Thou shalt never gain such a secret from me, but by a parable.

Speed. 'Tis well that I get it so. But, Launce, how say'st thou, that my master is become a notable lover?

Launce. I never knew him otherwise.

Speed. Than how?

Launce. A notable lubber, as thou reportest him to be.

Speed. Why, thou whoreson ass, thou mistak'st me.

Launce. Why, fool, I meant not thee; I meant thy master.

Speed. I tell thee, my master is become a hot lover.

Launce. Why, I tell thee, I care not though he burn himself in love, if thou wilt go with me to the alehouse: if not, thou art an Hebrew, a Jew, and not worth the name of a Christian.

Speed. Why?

Launce. Because thou hast not so much charity in thee, as to go to the ale with a Christian. Wilt thou go?

Speed. At thy service.

[Exeunt.

Scene VI.—The Same. An Apartment in the Palace.

Enter Proteus.

Pro. To leave my Julia, shall I be forsworn?
To love fair Silvia, shall I be forsworn?
To wrong my friend, shall I be much forsworn?
And even that power, which gave me first my oath,
Provokest me to this threefold perjury:
Love bad me swear, and love bids me forswear,
O sweet-suggesting love! if I have'sinn'd,
Teach me, thy tempted subject, to excuse it.
At first I did adore a twinkling star,
But now I worship a celestial sun.
Unheedful vows may heedfully be broken,
And he who wants wit, that wants resolved will
To learn his wit's exchange the bad for better.
Fie, fie, unreverend tongue! to call her bad,
Whose sovereignty so oft thou hast prefer'red
With twenty thousand soul-confirming oaths.
I cannot leave to love, and yet I do;
But there I leave to love, where I should love.
Julia I lose, and Valentine I lose:
If I keep them, I must lose myself;
If I lose them, they must and I, by their loss,
For Valentine myself; for Julia, Silvia.
I to myself am dearer than a friend,
For love is still most precious to itself;
And Silvia, (witness heaven that made her fair!)
Shows Julia but a swarthy Ethiop.
I will forget that Julia is alive,
Remembering that my love to her is dead;
And Valentine I'll hold an enemy,
Aiming at Silvia, as a sweeter friend.
I cannot now prove constant to myself
Without some treachery used to Valentine.
This night, he meanest with a corded ladder
To climb celestial Silvia's chamber window;
Myself in counsel, his competitor.
Now, presently I'll give her father notice
Of their disguising, and pretended flight;
Who, all enrag'd, will banish Valentine,
For Thurio, he intends, shall wed his daughter.
But, Valentine he gone, I'll quickly cross
By some sly trick blunt Thurio's dull proceeding.
Love, lend me wings to make my purpose swift,
As thou hast lent me wit to plot this drift!

[Exeunt.
SCENE VII.—Verona. A Room in Julia's House.

Enter JULIA and LUCETTA.

Jul. Counsel, Lucetta; gentle girl, assist me:
And, s'en in kind love, I do conjure thee,
Who art the table wherein all my thoughts
Are visibly character'd and engrav'd,
To lesson me; and tell me some good mean,
How, with my honour, I may undertake
A journey to my loving Proteus.

Luc. Also! the way is wearisome and long.

Jul. A trusty, devoted pilgrim in a weary
To measure kingdoms with his feeble steps,
Much less shall she, that hath love's wings to fly;
And when the flight is made to one so dear,
Of such divine perfection, as sir Proteus.

Luc. Better forbear, till Proteus make return.

Jul. O! know'st thou not, his looks are my soul's food?
Pity the dearth that I have pined in,
By longing for that food so long a time.
Didst thou not know the inky touch of love,
Thou wouldst as soon go kindle fire with snow,
As seek to quench the fire of love with words.

Luc. I do not seek to quench your love's hot fire,
But qualify the fire's extreme rage,
Lest it should burn above the bounds of reason.

Jul. The more thou damnest it up, the more it burns.
The current, that with gentle murmurs glides,
Thou know'st, being stopp'd, impatiently doth rage;
But, when his fair course is not hindered,
He makes sweet music with the enameld stones,
Giving a gentle kiss to every sedge
He overtaketh in his pilgrimage,
And so by many winding nooks he strays
With willing sport to the wide' ocean.

Then, let me go, and hinder not my course.
I'll be as patient as a gentle stream,
And make a pastime of each weary step,
Till the last step have brought me to my love;
And where I'll rest, as, she much turmoil,
A blessed soul doth in Elysium.

Luc. But in what habit will you go along?

Jul. Not like a woman, for I would prevent
The loose encounters of lascivious men.
Gentle Lucetta, fit me with such weeds
As may beseech some well-reputed page.

Luc. Why, then your ladyship must cut your hair.

Jul. No, girl; I'll knit it up in silken strings,
With twenty odd-conesited true-love knots
To be fantastic, may become a youth
Of greater time than I shall show to be.

Luc. What fashion, madam, shall I make your breeches?

Jul. That fits as well, as—"tell me, good my lord,
What compass will you wear your farthingale?"
Why, even what fashion thou best lik'st, Lucetta.

Luc. You must needs have them with a codpiece, madam.

Jul. Out, out, Lucetta! that will be ill-favour'd.

Luc. A round hose, madam, now's not worth a pin.
Unless you have a codpiece to stick pins on.

Jul. Lucetta, as thou lov'st me, let me have
What thou think'st meet, and is most mannerly.
But tell me, wench, how will the world repute me
For undertaking so unstaied a journey?

Luc. I fear me, it will make me scandaliz'd.

Luc. If you think so, then stay at home, and go not.

Jul. Nay, that I will not.

Luc. Then never dream on infamy, but go.
If Proteus like your journey, when you come,
No matter who's to displease'd, when you are gone.
I fear me, he will scarce be pleased withal.

Jul. That is the least, Lucetta, of my fear.
A thousand oaths, an ocean of his tears,
And instances as infinite of love,
Warrant me welcome to my Proteus.

Luc. All these are servants to deceitful men.

Jul. Base men, that use them to so base effect;
But truer stars did govern Proteus' birth;
His words are bonds, his oaths are oracles;
His love sincere, his thoughts immaculate;
His tears, pure messengers sent from his heart;
His heart as far from fraud, as heaven from earth.

Luc. Pray heaven, he prove so, when you come to him!

Jul. Now, as thou lov'st me, do him not that wrong,
To bear a hard opinion of his truth;
Only deserve my love by loving him,
And presently go, with me to my chamber,
To take a note of what I stand in need of,
To furnish me upon my loving journey.
All that is mine I leave at thy dispose,
My goods, my lands, my reputation;
Only, in lieu thereof, dispatch me hence.
Come; answer not, but to it presently:
I am impatient of my tarryance.

[Exeunt.

ACT III.

Enter DUKE, THURIO, and PROTEUS.

Duke. Sir Thurio, give us leave, I pray, a while:
We have some secrets to confer about.—Erst Thurio.
Now, tell me, Proteus, what's your will with me?

Pro. My gracious lord, that which I would discover,
The law of friendship bids me to conceal;
But, when I call to mind your gracious favours
Done to me, undeserving as I am,
My duty pricks me on to utter that,
Which else no worldly good should draw from me.
Know, worthy Prince, sir Valentine, my friend,
This night intends to steal away your daughter:

Myself am one made privy to the plot.
I know you have determin'd to bestow her
On Thurio, whom your gentle daughter hates;
And should she thus be sol'n away from you,
It would be much vexation to your age.
Thus, for my duty's sake, I rather chose
To cross my friend in his intended drift,
Than, by concealing it, heap on your head
A pack of sorrows, which would press you down,
Being unprevent'd, to your timeless grave.

Duke. Proteus, I thank thee for thine honest care,
Which to requite, command me while I live.
This love of theirs myself have often seen,
Haply, when they have judged me fast asleep,
And oftentimes have purpos'd to forbid
Scene I.

THE TWO GENTLEMEN OF VERONA.

29

Sir Valentine her company, and my court;
But, fearing lest my jealous aim might err,
And so unworthyly disgrace the man,
(A rashness that I ever yet have shunn'd)
I gave him gentle looks; thereby to find
That which thyself hast now disclos'd to me.
And, through the fear of her, the more fear of this,
Knowing that tender youth is soon suggested,
I nightly lodge her in an upper tower,
The key whereof myself have ever kept;
And thence she cannot be convey'd away.

Pro. Know, noble lord, they have devise'd a mean
How he her chamber-window will ascend,
And with a corded ladder fetch her down
For which the youthful lover now is gone,
And this way comes he with it presently,
Where, if it please you, you may intercept him.
But, good my lord, do it so cunningly,
That my discovery be not aimed at;
For love of you, not hate unto my friend,
Hath made me publisher of this pretence.

Duke. Upon mine honour, he shall never know
That I had any light from thee of this.

Pro. Adieu, my lord: sir Valentine is coming.[Exit.

Enter Valentine, in his cloak.

Duke. Sir Valentine, whither away so fast?

Val. Please it your grace, there is a messenger
That stays to bear my letters to my friends,
And I am going to deliver them.

Duke. Be they of much import?

Val. The tenor of them doth but signify
My health, and happy being at your court.

Duke. Nay, then no matter: stay with me awhile.
I am to break with thee of some affairs
That touch me near, wherein thou must be secret.
It is unknown to thee, that I have sought
To match my friend, sir Thurio, to my daughter.

Val. I know it well, my lord; and, sure, the match
Were rich and honourable: besides, the gentleman
Is full of virtue, bounty, worth, and qualities
Behaving such a wife as your fair daughter.

Cannot your grace win her fancy to him?

Duke. No, trust me: she is peevish, sullen, froward,
Foul, disobedient, stubborn, lacking duty;
Neither regarding that she is my child,
Nor caring for her father.

Val. And may I say to thee, this pride of hers
Upon advice hath drawn my love from her;
And where I thought the remnant of mine age
Should have been cherish'd by her child-like duty,
How an full resolv'd to take a wife,
And turn her out to who will take her in.

Duke. For me and my possessions she esteem's not.
Val. What would your grace have me to do in this?

Duke. There is a lady in Milan's here,
When I affect; but she is nice, and coy,
And sought esteem'd my aged eloquence:

V. therefore, would I have thee to my tutor,
For long agoe I have forgot to court;
Besides, the fashion of the time is chang'd
Now, and which way, I may bestow myself,
To be regard'd in her sun-bright eye.

Val. Win her with gifts, if she respect not words.

Duke. True jewels often, in their silent kind,
Merve them not, no: do hear her soul's mind.

Val. But she did scorn a present that I sent her.

Duke. A woman sometime scornt what best contenteth her.

This direction is not in f. a.
Thank me for this, more than for all the favours
Which, all too much, I have bestowed on thee:
But if thou linger in my territories
Longer than swiftest expedition
Will give thee time to leave our royal court,
By heaven, my wrath shall far exceed the love
I ever bore my daughter, or thyself.
Begone! I will not hear thy vain excuse;
But, as thou lov'st thy life, make speed from hence.

[Exit Duke.]

Val. And why not death, rather than living torment?
To die is to be banished from myself,
And Silvia is myself: banish'd from her,
Is self from self; a deadly banishment.
What light is light, if Silvia be not seen?
What joy is joy, if Silvia be not by?
Unless it be, to think that she is by,
And feed upon the shadow of perfection.
Except I be by Silvia in the night,
There is no music in the nightingale;
Unless I look on Silvia in the day,
There is no day for me to look upon.
She is my essence; and I leave to be,
If I be not by her fair influence
Foster'd, illumined, cherish'd, kept alive.
I fly not death, to fly his deadly doom:
Tarry I here, I but attend on death;
But fly I hence, I fly away from life.

Enter Proteus and Launce.

Pro. Run, boy; run, run, and seek him out.

Launc. So-ho! so-ho!

Pro. What seest thou?

Launc. Him we go to find: there's not a hair on 's head, but 'tis a Valentine.

Pro. Valentine?

Val. No.

Pro. Who then? his spirit?

Val. Neither.

Pro. What then?

Val. Nothing.

Launc. Can nothing speak? master, shall I strike?

Pro. Whom wouldst thou strike?

Launc. Nothing.

Pro. Villain, forbear.

Launc. Why, sir, I'll strike nothing: I pray you,— Pro. Sirrah, I say, forbear.—Friend Valentine, a word.

Val. My ears are stopp'd, and cannot hear good news,
So much of bad already hath possess'd them.

Pro. Then in dumb silence will I bury mine,
For they are harsh, untuneable, and bad.

Val. Is Silvia dead?

Pro. No, Valentine.

Val. No Valentine, indeed, for sacred Silvia!—
Hath she forsworn me?

Pro. No, Valentine.

Val. No Valentine, if Silvia have forsworn me!—
What is your news?

Launc. Sir, there is a proclamation that you are banish'd.

Pro. That thou art banish'd: O! that is the news,
From hence, from Silvia, and from me, thy friend.

Val. O! I have fed upon this woe already,
And now excess of it will make me surfeit.

Doth Silvia know that I am banish'd?

Pro. Ay, ay; and she hath offer'd to the doom,
(Which, unrever'd, stands in effectual force)
A sea of melting pearl, which some call tears:
Those at her father's churlish feet she tender'd,
With them, upon her knees, her humble self;

Wringing her hands, whose whiteness so became them,
As if but now they waxed pale for woe:
But neither bended knees, pure hands held up,
Sad sighs, deep groans, nor silver-shedding tears,
Could penetrate her uncompassionate sire,
But Valentine, if he be ta'en, must die.
Besides, her intercession chaf'd him so,
When she for thy repeal was suppliant,
That to close prison he command'd her,
With many bitter threats of 'biding there.

Val. Not more; unless the next word that thou speak'st
Have some malignant power upon my life:
If so, I pray thee, breathe it in my ear,
As ending anthem of my endless doleour.

Pro. Cease to lament for that thou canst not help,
And study help for that which thou lamentest.
Time is the nurse and breeder of all good.
Here if thou stay, thou canst not see thy love;
Besides, thy staying will abridge thy life.
Hope is a lover's staff; walk hence with that,
And manage it against despairing thoughts.
Thy letters may be here, though thou art hence;
Which, being writ to me, shall be deliver'd
Even in the milk-white bosom of thy love.
The time now serves not to expostulate:
Come, I'll convey thee through the city-gate,
And, ere I part with thee, confer at large
Of all that may concern thy love affairs.
As thou lovest Silvia, though not for thyself,
Regard thy danger, and along with me.

Val. I pray thee, Launce, an if thou seest my boy,
Bid him make haste, and meet me at the north-gate.

Val. O my dear Silvia! hapless Valentine!

[Exit Valentine and Proteus and Launce.

Launc. I am but a fool, look you, and yet I hav the wit to think, my master is a kind of a knave; bu that's all one, if he be but one knave. He lives at now, that knows me to be in love: yet I am in love but a team of horse shall not pluck that from me, at who 'tis I love; and yet 'tis a woman: but who woman, I will not tell myself; and yet 'tis a ma maid; yet 'tis not a maid, for she hath had gossips yet 'tis a maid, for she is her master's maid, and serv for wages. She hath more qualities than a wate spaniel, which is much in a bare Christian. Here the cat-log [pulling out a paper] of her condition Imprison'd, 'She can fetch and carry.' Why, a hor can do no more: nay, a horse cannot fetch, but onl carry; therefore, is she better than a jade. I'en
'She can milk;' look you, a sweet virtue in a ma with clean hands.

Enter Speed.

Speed. How now, signior Launce? what news wi your master's ship?

Launc. With my master's ship? why, it is at sea
Speed. Well, your old vice still; mistake the word
What news, then, in your paper?

Launc. The blackest news that ever thou heard's Speed. Why, man, how black?

Launc. Why, as black as ink.

Speed. Let me read them.

Launc. Fie on thee, jolthead! thou canst not rea Speed. Thou liest, I can.

Launc. I will try thee. Tell me this: who beg

Speed. Marry, the son of my grandfather.

Launc. O, illiterate loiterer! it was the son of th grandmother. This proves that thou canst not read
Scene II.

The Two Gentlemen of Verona.

Speed. Come, fool, come: try me in thy paper.
Laurence. There, and saint Nicholas be thy speed!
Speed. Improvis. "She can milk."
Laurence. Ay, that she can.
Speed. Item. "She brews good ale."
Laurence. And thereof comes the proverb,—Blessing of thy heart, you brew good ale.
Speed. Item. "She can sew."
Laurence. That's as much as to say, Can she so?
Speed. Item. "She can knit."
Laurence. What need a man care for a stock with a wrench, when she can knit him a stock?
Speed. Item. "She can wash and scour."
Laurence. A special virtue; for then she need not be wash'd and scour'd.
Speed. Item. "She can spin." —
Laurence. Then may I set the world on wheels, when she can spin for her living.
Speed. Item. "She hath many nameless virtues."
Laurence. That's as much as to say, bastard virtues; that, indeed, know not their fathers, and therefore have no names.

Speed. Here follow her vices.
Laurence. Close at the heels of her virtues.
Speed. Item. "She is not to be kissed fasting, in respect of her breath."
Laurence. Well, that fault may be mended with a breakfast. Read on.
Speed. Item. "She hath a sweet mouth."
Laurence. That makes amends for her sour breath.
Speed. Item. "She doth talk in her sleep."
Laurence. It's no matter for that, so she slip not in her talk.
Speed. Item. "She is slow in words."
Laurence. O villain! that set this down among her virtues! To be slow in words is a woman's only virtue: I pray thee, out with 't, and place it for her chief virtue.

Speed. Item. "She is proud."
Laurence. Out with that too: it was Eve's legacy, and cannot be taken from her.
Speed. Item. "She hath no teeth."
Laurence. I care not for that neither, because I love erusts.

Speed. Item. "She is curst."
Laurence. Well; the best is, she hath no teeth to bite.
Speed. Item. "She will often praise her liquor."
Laurence. If her liquor be good, she shall: if she will not, I will; for good things should be praised.
Speed. Item. "She is too liberal."
Laurence. Of her tongue she cannot, for that's writ down she is slow of: of her purse she shall not, for that I will keep sharp: now, of another thing she may, and that cannot I help. Well, proceed.

Speed. Item. "She hath more hair than wit, and more faults than hairs, and more wealth than faults."
Laurence. Stop there; I'll have her: she was mine, and not mine, twice or thrice in that last article. Rehearse that once more.

Speed. Item. "She hath more hair than wit."
Laurence. More hair than wit,—it may be; I'll prove it: over the cover of the salt hides the salt, and therefore it is more than the salt: the hair, that covers the wit, is more than the wit, for the greater hides the less.

What's next?

Speed. "And more faults than hairs."
Laurence. That's monstrous: O, that were out!

Speed. "And more wealth than faults."
Laurence. Why, that word makes the faults gracious.

Well, I'll have her; and if it be a match, as nothing is impossible,—

Speed. What then?
Laurence. Why, then will I tell thee,—that thy master stays for thee at the north-gate.

Speed. For me?
Laurence. For thee? ay; who art thou? he hath stay'd for a better man than thee.

Speed. And must I go to him?
Laurence. Thou must run to him, for thou hast stay'd so long, that going will scarce serve the turn.

Speed. Why didst not tell me sooner? pox of your love-letters!

[Exit, running.]
Laurence. Now will he be swing'd for reading my letter. An unmannish slave, that will thrust himself into secrets—I'll alter, to rejoice in the boy's correction.

[Exit.]

Scene II.—The Same. An Apartment in the Duke's Palace.

Enter Duke and Thurio.

Duke. Sir Thurio, fear not but that she will love you, now Valentine is banish'd from her sight.

Thu. Since his exile she hath despis'd me most;
Forsworn my company, and rail'd at me,
That I am desperate of obtaining her.

Duke. This weak impress of love is as a figure
Trenched in ice, which with an hour's heat
Dissolves to water, and doth lose his form.
A little time will melt her frozen thoughts,
And worthless Valentine shall be forgot.—

Enter Proteus.

How now, sir Proteus! Is your countryman,
According to our proclamation, gone?

Pro. Gone, my good lord.

Duke. My daughter takes his going grievously.

Pro. A little time, my lord, will kill that grief.

Duke. So I believe; but Thurio thinks not so.
Proteus, the good conceit I hold of thee,
(For thou hast shown sure sign of good desert)
Makes me the better to confer with thee.

Pro. Longer than I prove loyal to your grace,
Let me not live to look upon your grace.

Duke. Thou know'st how willingly I would effect
The match between sir Thurio and my daughter.

Pro. I do, my lord.

Duke. And also, I think, thou art not ignorant
How she opposes her against my will.

Pro. She did, my lord, when Valentine was here.

Duke. Ay, and perversely she perseverance so.

What might we do to make the girl forget
The love of Valentine, and love sir Thurio?

Pro. The best way is, to slander Valentine
With falsehood, cowardice, and poor descent;
Three things that women highly hold in hate.

Duke. Ay, but she'll think that it is spoke in hate.

Pro. Ay, if his enemy deliver it:
Therefore, it must, with circumstance, be spoken
By one whom she esteemeth as his friend.

Duke. Then, you must undertake to slander him.

Pro. And that, my lord, I shall be loth to do:
'T is an ill office for a gentleman,
Especially, against his very friend.

Duke. Where your good word cannot advantage him,
Your slander never can damage him:
Therefore, the office is indifferent,
Being entreated to it by your friend.

Pro. You have prevail'd, my lord. If I can do it,
By aught that I can speak in his dispraise,
She shall not long continue love to him.
But say, this wean'd her love from Valentine,
It follows not that she will love Sir Thurio.

Thu. Therefore, as you unwind her love from him,
Lest it should ravel and be good to none,
You must provide to bottom it on me;
Which must be done, by praising me as much
As you in worth dispraise sir Valentine.

Duke. And, Proteus, we dare trust you in this kind.
Because we know, on Valentine's report,
You are already love's firm votary,
And cannot soon revolt, and change your mind.
Upon this warrant shall you have access
Where you with Silvia may confer at large;
For she is lumpish, heavy, melancholy,
And for your friend's sake will be glad of you,
When you may temper her, by your persuasion,
To hate young Valentine, and love my friend.

Pro. As much as I can do I will effect.

But you, sir Thurio, are not sharp enough;
You must lay time to tangle her desires
By wanton sonnets, whose composed rhymes
Should be full fraught with serviceable vows.

Duke. Ay, much is the force of heaven-bred poesy.

Pro. Say, that upon the altar of her beauty
You sacrifice your tears, your sighs, your heart
Write, till your ink be dry, and with your tears
Moist it again; and frame some feeling line,
That may discover strict integrity:
For Orpheus' lute was strung with poets' sinews,
Whose golden touch could soften steel and stones,
Make tigers tame, and huge leviathans
For sake unsound deeps to dance on sands.
After your dire lamenting elegies,
Visit by night your lady's chamber window
With some sweet consort: to their instruments
Tune a deploring dump; the night's dead silence
Will well become such sweet complaining grievance.
This, or else nothing, will inherit her.

Duke. This discipline shows thou hast been in love

Thu. And thy advice this night I 'll put in practice
Therefore, sweet Proteus, my direction-giver,
Let us into the city presently,
To sort some gentlemen well-skill'd in music.
I have a sonnet that will serve the turn
To give the onset to thy good advice.

Duke. About it, gentlemen.

Pro. We 'll wait upon your grace till after supper,
And afterward determine our proceedings.

Duke. Even now about it: I will pardon you. [Exeunt.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—A Forest, between Milan and Verona.

Enter certain Outlaws.

1 Out. Fellow, stand fast: I see a passenger.

2 Out. If there be ten, shrink not, but down with 'em.

Enter VALENTINE and SPEED.

3 Out. Stand, sir, and throw us that you have about you;
If not, we 'll make you sit, and rife you.

Speed. Sir, we are undone. These are the villains
That all the travellers do fear so much.

Val. My friends,—

1 Out. That's not so, sir: we are your enemies.

2 Out. Peace! we 'll hear him.

3 Out. Ay, by my beard, will we; for he is a proper man.

Val. Then know, that I have little wealth to lose.

A man I am cross'd with adversity:
My riches are these poor habiliments,
Of which if you should here disfurnish me,
You take the sum and substance that I have.

2 Out. Whither travel you?

Val. To Verona.

1 Out. Whence came you?

Val. From Milan.

3 Out. Have you long sojourn'd there?

Val. Some sixteen months; and longer might have stay'd.

If crooked fortune had not thwarted me.

2 Out. What! were you banish'd thence?

Val. I was.

2 Out. For what offence?

Val. For that which now torments me to rehearse.
I kill'd a man, whose death I much repent;
But yet I slew him manfully, in fight,
Without false vantage, or base treachery.

1 Out. Why, ever repent it, if it were done so.
But were you banish'd for so small a fault?

Val. I was, and held me glad of such a doom.

1 Out. Have you the tongues?

Val. My youthful travel therein made me happy,
Or else I had been often miserable.

3 Out. By the bare scalp of Robin Hood's fat friar,
This fellow were a king for our wild faction.

1 Out. We 'll have him. Sirs, a word.

Speed. Master, be one of them:
It is an honourable kind of thievishness.

Val. Peace, villain!

2 Out. Tell us this: have you any thing to take to?

Val. Nothing, but my fortune.

3 Out. Know then, that some of us are gentlemen,
Such as the fury of ungovern'd youth
Thrust from the company of awful men:
Myself was from Verona banish'd,
For practising to steal away a lady,
An heir, and near allied unto the duke.

2 Out. And I from Mantua, for a gentleman,
Who, in my mood, I stabb'd unto the heart.

1 Out. And I, for such like petty crimes as these.

But to the purpose: for we cite our faults,
That they may hold exec'd our lawless lives:
And, partly, seeing you are beautify'd
With godly shape; and by your own report
A linguist, and a man of such perfection,
As we do in our quality much want—

3 Out. Indeed, because you are a banish'd man,
Therefore, above the rest, we parley to you.
Are you content to be our general?
To make a virtue of necessity,
And live, as we do, in this wilderness?

[consort]

3 Out. What sayst thou? wilt thou be of our Say, ay, and be the captain of us all.
We 'll do thee homage, and be rul'd by thee,
Love thee as our commander, and our king.

1 Out. But if thou scorn our courtesy, thou diest.

2 Out. Thou shalt not live to brag what we have offer'd.
SCENE II.—Milan. The Court of the Palace.

Enter Proteus.

Pro. Already have I been false to Valentine,
And now I must be as unjust to Thurio.
Under the colour of commanding him,
I have access my own love to prefer;
But Silvia is too fair, too true, too holy,
To be corrupted with my worthless gifts.
When I protest true loyalty to her,
She twits me with my falsehood to my friend;
When to her beauty I commend my vows,
She bids me think how I have sworn;
I break faith with Julia whom I lov’d:
And notwithstanding all her sudden quips,
The least whereof would quell a lover’s hope,
Yet, spaniel-like, the more she spurns my love,
The more it grows, and fawneth on her still.
But here comes Thurio. Now must we to her window,
And give some evening music to her ear.

Enter Tuńoro and Musicians.

Tun. How now, sir Proteus! are you crept before us?
Pro. Ay, gentle Thurio; for, you know, that love
Will creep in secret where it cannot go.
Thur. Ay; but I hope, sir, that you love not here.
Pro. Sir, but I do; or else I would be hence.
Thur. Whom? Silvia?
Pro. Ay, Silvia,—for your sake.
Thur. I thank you for your own. Now, gentlemen,
Let’s tune, and to it lustily awhile.

Enter Host and Julia (in boy’s clothes), behind.

Host. Now, my young guest; methinks you’re ally-cably: I pray you, why is it?
Jul. Marry, mine host, because I cannot be merry.
Host. Come, we’ll have you merry. I’ll bring you where you shall hear music, and see the gentlemen that you ask’d for.
Jul. But shall I hear him speak?
Host. Ay, that you shall.
Jul. That will be music.

[Music plays.]

Host. Hark! Hark!
Jul. Is he among these?
Host. Ay; but peace! let’s hear ‘em.

SONG.

Who is Silvia? what is she,
That all our swains commend her?
Holy, fair, and wise as she;
The heaven such grace did lend her,
That she might admir’d be.

Is she kind, as she is fair,
For beauty lives with kindness?
Love doth to her eyes repair,
To help him of his blindness;
And, being help’d, inhabit there.

Then to Silvia let us sing,
That Silvia is excellent;
She excels each mortal thing;
Upon the dull world bringing:
To her let us garlands bring.

Host. How now! are you sadder than you were before? How do you, man? the music likes you not.
Jul. You mistake: the musician likes me not.
Host. Why, my pretty youth?
Jul. He plays false, father.
Host. How? out of tune on the strings?
Jul. Not so; but yet so false, that he grieves my very heart-strings.

Host. You have a quick ear.
Jul. Ay; I would I were deaf! it makes me have a slow heart.
Host. I perceive, you delight not in music.
Jul. Not a whit, when it jars so. [Music plays again.*
Host. Hark! what fine change is in the music.
Jul. Ay, that change is the spite.
Host. You would not have them always play but one thing?
Jul. I would always have one play but one thing.
But, Host, doth this sir Proteus, that we talk on,
Often resort unto this gentlewoman?
Host. I tell you what Launce, his man, told me, he lov’d her out of all nick.
Jul Where is Launce?
Host. Gone to seek his dog; which, to-morrow, by his master’s command, he must carry for a present to his lady.

Pro. Sir Thurio, fear you not: I will so plead,
That you shall say my cunning drift excels.

Thur. Where meet we?

Pro. At St. Gregory’s well.

Thur. Farewell. [Exeunt Thurio and Musicians. Enter Silvia above, at her window.

Pro. Madam, good even to your ladyship.
Sil. I thank you for your music, gentlemen.

Who is that, that spake?
Pro. One, lady, if you knew his pure heart’s truth,
You would quickly learn to know him by his voice.
Sil. Sir Proteus, as I take it.
Pro. Sir Proteus, gentle lady, and your servant.
Sil. What is your will?

Pro. That I may compass yours.
Sil. You have your wish: my will is even this,
That presently you hie you home to bed.
Thou subtle, perjured, false, disloyal man!
Think’st thou, I am so shallow, so conceited,
To be seduced by thy flattery,
That hast deceiv’d so many with thy vows?
Return, return, and make thy love amends.
For me, by this pale queen of night I swear,
I am so far from granting thy request,
That I despise thee for thy wrongful suit,
And by and by intend to chide myself,
Even for this time I spend in talking to thee.

Pro. I grant, sweet love, that I did love a lady;
But she is dead.

Jul. [Aside.] T were false, if I should speak it;
For, I am sure, she is not buried.
Sil. Say, that she be; yet Valentine, thy friend,
Survives, to whom thyself art witness
I am betroth’d; and art thou not ashamed?
To wrong him with thy importunity?
Pro. I likewise hear, that Valentine is dead.
Sil. And so, suppose, am I; for in his grave,
Assure thyself, my love is buried.
Pro. Sweet lady, let me rakes it from the earth.
Sil. Go to thy lady’s grave, and call her themes;
Or, at the least, in her sepulchre thinke.

Jul. [Aside.] He heard not that.
Pro. Madam, if your heart be so obdurate,
Vouchsafe me yet your picture for my love,
The picture that is hanging in your chamber:
To that I’ll speak, to that I’ll sigh and weep;
For, since the substance of thyself is
Else devoted, I am but a shadow,
And to your shadow will I make true love.

Jul. [Aside.] If ’t were a substance, you would, sure,
Deceive it, and make it but a shadow, as I am.

Sil. I am very loth to be your idol, sir;
But, since your falsehood, ’t shall become you well
To worship shadows, and adore false shapes,
Send to me in the morning, and I’ll send it.
And so, good rest.

Pro. As wretches have o’er night,
That wait for execution in the morn.
[Exit Proteus and Silvia.

Egl. This is the hour that madam Silvia
Entreated me to call, and know her mind.
There’s some great matter she’d employ me in.—
Madam, madam!

Sil. Enter Silvia above, at her window.

Egl. Who calls?

Sil. Your servant, and your friend;
One that attends your ladyship’s command.

Egl. As many, worthy lady, to yourself.
According to your ladyship’s impose, I am thus early come, to know what service
It is your pleasure to command me in.

Sil. O Egamour, thou art a gentleman,
Think not I flatter, for I swear I do not,
Valiant, wise, remorseful, well accomplisht.
Thou art not ignorant what dear good will
I bear unto the banish’d Valentine;
Nor how my father would enforce me marry
Vain Thurio, whom my very soul abhors.
Thyself hast lov’d; and I have heard thee say,
No grief did ever come so near thy heart,
As when thy lady and thy true love died,
Upon whose grave thou vow’dst pure chastity.

Sil. Egamour, I would to Valentine,
To Mantua, where, I hear, he makes abode;
And, for the ways are dangerous to pass,
I do desire thy worthy company,
Upon whose faith and honour I repose.
Urge not my father’s anger, Egamour,
But think upon my grief, a lady’s grief;
And on the justice of my flying hence,
To keep me from a most unholy match,
Which heaven and fortune still record with plagues.
I do desire thee, even from a heart
As full of sorrow as the sea of sands,
To bear me company, and go with me:
If not, to hide what I have said to thee,
That I may venture to depart alone.

Egl. Madam, I pity much your grievances,
And the most true affections that you bear;*
Scene IV
THE TWO GENTLEMEN OF VERONA.

Pro. What! didst thou offer her this curl from me?
Launce. Ay, sir: the other squirrel was stolen from me by a hangman's boy in the market-place; and then I offered her my own, who is a dog as big as ten of yours, and therefore the gift the greater.
Pro. Go; get thee hence, and find my dog again, or never return again into my sight.
Away, I say! Stayest thou to vex me here?
A slave that still an end turns me to shame. [Exit Launce.

Sebastian, I have entertained thee,
Partly, that I have need of such a youth,
That can with some discretion do my business,
For I'm so trusting to yond foolish lowd;
But chiefly, for thy face, and thy behaviour,
Which (if my augury deceive me not) witness good bringing up, fortune, and truth:
Therefore, know thou, for this I entertain thee.
Go presently, and take this ring with thee:
Deliver it to madam Silvia.
She lov'd me well, deliver'd it to me.
Jul. It seems, you lov'd not her, to leave her token.
She's dead, belike?
Pro. Not so: I think, she lives.
Jul. Alas!
Pro. Why dost thou cry alas?
Jul. I cannot choose but pity her.
Pro. Wherefore shouldst thou pity her?
Jul. Because, methinks, that she lov'd you as well
As you do love your lady Silvia.
She dreams on him, that has forgot her love;
Yet dotes on her, that cares not for your love.
To pity, love should be so contrary;
I think 'tis thinking it makes me very alas!
Pro. Well, give to her that ring, and therewithal
This letter:—that's her chamber.—Tell my lady
I dam the promise for her heavenly picture.
For your message done, his home unto my chamber,
Where thou shalt find me sad and solitary. [Exit.
Jul. How many women would do such a message?
Alas, poor Proteus! thou hast entertain'd
A Mex to be the shepherd of thy lambs,
A poor fool! why do I pity him,
That with his very heart despiseth me?
Because he loves her, he despiseth me;
Because I love him, I must pity him.
This ring I gave him when he parted from me,
To send him to remember my good will,
And now am I (unhappy messenger!)
Teased for that which I would not obtain;
To carry that which I would have refused;
To praise his faith which I would have disgrac'd;
As my master's true confirmed love,
But cannot be true servant to my master,
I take I prove false traitor to myself.
If will I woo for him; but yet so coldly,
As heaven knows, I would not have him speed.
[Enter Silvia. attended.

SILVIA. good day. I pray you, be my mean
To bring me where to speak with madam Silvia.
Jul. What would you with her, if that I be she?
Pro. If you be she, I do entreat your patience
To hear me speak the message I am sent on.
Jul. From whom?
Pro. From my master, sir Proteus, madam.
Jul. Sir! he sends you for a picture.
Pro. Ay, madam.
Sil. Emma, bring my picture there. [A Picture brought.
Jul. Take you my master this: tell him from me,
And yet the painter flatter'd her a little,
Unless I flatter with myself too much.
Her hair is auburn, mine is perfect yellow:
If that be all the difference in his love,
I'll get me such a colour'd periwig.
Her eyes are green as grass, and so are mine:
Ay, but her forehead's low, and mine's as high.
What should it be, that he respects in her,
But I can make respective in myself,
If this fond love were not a blinded god?

And now it is about the very hour,
That Silvia at friar Patrick's cell should meet me.
She will not; for lovers break not hours,
Unless it be to come before their time,
So much they spur their expedition.

Enter SIlVIA.

See, where she comes.—Lady, a happy evening.
Sil. Amen. Go on, good Egglamour.
Out at the postern by the abbey-wall.
I fear, I am attended by some spie.
Egl. Fear not: the forest is not three leagues off;
If we recover that, we are sure enough. [Exit.

SCENE II.—The Same. A Room in the Duke's Palace.

Enter THURIO, PROTeUS, and JULIA.

Thu. Sir Proteus, what says Silvia to my suit?
Pro. O, sir! I find her milder than she was;
And yet she takes exceptions at your person.
Thu. What? that my leg is too long?
Pro. No, that it is too little.
Thu. I'll wear a boot to make it somewhat rounder.
Jul. But love will not be spurr'd to what it loathes.

Aside.

Thu. What says she to my face?
Pro. She says it is a fair one.
Thu. Nay, then the wanton lies: my face is black.
Pro. But pears are fair, and the old saying is,
Black men are pears in beauteous ladies' eyes.
Jul. 'Tis true, such pears as put out ladies' eyes;
For I had rather wink than look on them. [Aside.

Thu. How likes she my discourse?
Pro. Ill, when you talk of war.
Thu. But well, when I discourse of love and peace?
Jul. But better, indeed, when you hold your peace.

Aside.

Thu. What says she to my valour?
Pro. O, sir! she makes no doubt of that.
Jul. She needs not, when she knows it cowardice.

Aside.

Thu. What says she to my birth?
Pro. That you are well deriv'd.
Jul. True; from a gentleman to a fool. [Aside.
Thu. Considers she my large possessions?
Pro. O! ay, and pities them.
Thu. Wherefore?
Jul. That such an ass should owe them. [Aside.
Pro. That they are out by lease
Jul. Here comes the duke.

Enter Duke, angrily.

Duke. How now, sir Proteus! how now, Thurio!
Which of you saw sir Egglamour of late?
Thu. Not I.
Pro. Nor I.
Duke. Saw you my daughter?
Pro. Neither.
Duke. Why, then
She's fled unto that peasant Valentine,
And Egglamour is in her company.
'T is true; for friar Lawrence met them both,
As he in penance wander'd through the forest:
Him he knew well; and guess'd that it was she,
But, being mask'd, he was not sure of her:
Besides, she did intend confession
At Patrick's cell this even, and there she was not.
These likelihoods confirm her flight from hence:
Therefore, I pray you, stand not to discourse,
But mount you presently; and meet with me
Upon the rising of the mountain-foot,
That leads towards Mantua, whither they are fled.
Dispatch, sweet gentlemen, and follow me. [Exit in haste.

Thu. Why, this it is to be a peevish girl,
That flies her fortune when it follows her.
I'll after, more to be reveng'd on Egglamour,
Than for the love of reckless Silvia. [Exit.
Pro. And I will follow, more for Silvia's love,
Than hate of Egglamour that goes with her. [Exit.
Jul. And I will follow, more to cross that love,
Than hate for Silvia that is gone for love. [Exit.

SCENE III.—The Forest.

Enter Silvia, and Outlaws.

1 Out. Come, come; be patient, we must bring you to our captain. [Drawing her in.

Sil. A thousand more mischieances than this one
Have learn'd me how to brook this patiently.
2 Out. Come, bring her away.

Sil. 1 Out. Where is the gentleman that was with her?
3 Out. Being nimble-footed, he hath outrun us;
But Moysey, and Valerius, follow him.
Go thou with her to the west end of the wood;
There is our captain. We'll follow him that's fled: The thicket is beset; he cannot escape.
1 Out. Come, I must bring you to our captain's cave
Fear not; he bears an honourable mind,
And will not use a woman lawlessly.

Sil. O Valentine! this I endure for thee. [Exit.

SCENE IV.—Another Part of the Forest.

Enter Valentine.

Val. How use doth breed a habit in a man!
These shadowy, desert, unfrequented woods,
THE TWO GENTLEMEN OF VERONA. 87

better brooch than flourishing people towns.
Here can I sit alone, unseen of any.
And to the nightingale's complaining notes
Tune my distresses, and record my woes.
O! thou that dost inhabit in my breast,
Leave not the mansion so long tenantless,
Lost, growing ruinous, the building fall,
And leave no memory of what it was!
Repair me with thy presence, Silvia!
Thou gentle nymph, cherish thy forlorn swain!—
What balloing, and what stir, is this to-day? [Shouts.]
These my make their wrackmate, they sell their law,
Have some unhappy passenger in chase.
They love me well; yet I have much to do,
To keep them from uncivil outrages.
Withdraw thee, Valentine: who's this comes here?
[Withdraws.]

Enter Proteus, Silvia, and Julia.

Pro. Madam, this service having done for you,
(Though you respect not, as I am sure you do,) To have a heart, I will rescue you from him.
That would have forced your heart, and your love, 9
Voussease me, for my meed, but one fair look. 7
A smaller boon than this I cannot beg,
And less than this, I am sure, you cannot give.
Val. How like a dream is this, I see and hear! 10
Love, lend me patience to forbear awhile.
[Aside.]
Sil. O, miserable! unhappy that I am!
Pro. Unhappy were you, madam, ere I came;
But by my coming I have made you happy.
Sil. By thy approach thou mak'st me most unhappy.
Jul. And me, when he approacheth to your presence.
[Aside.]
Sil. Had I been seized by a hungry lion,
I would have been a breakfast to the beast,
Rather than have false Proteus rescue me.
0. heaven! be judge, how I love Valentine,
Whose life's as tender to me as my soul;
And full as much (for more there cannot be)
To detest false, perjur'd Proteus:
Incredibly you have given me no more.
Pro. What dangerous action, stood it next to death,
Would not undergo for one calm look.
0. 'tis the curse in love, and still approv'd. 8
When women cannot love where they're belov'd.
Sil. When Proteus cannot love where he's belov'd.
Read over Julia's heart, thy first best love,
For whose dear sake thou didst then rend thy faith
Into a thousand oaths; and all those oaths
Descended into perjury to love me.
Thou hast no faith left now, unless thou 'st dead two,
And that's far worse than none: better have none,
Than plural faith, which is too much by one.
The counterfeit to thy true friend!
Pro. In love
Who respects friend?
Sil. All men but Proteus.
Pro. Nay, if the gentle spirit of moving words
Can no way change you to a milder form,
I will you like a soldier, at arm's end,
And love you 'gainst the nature of love: force you.
Sil. O heaven!
Pro. I'll force thee yield to my desire.
Val. [Coming forward.] Ruffian, let go that rude uncivil touch;
Thou friend of an ill fashion!
Pro. Valentine!
Val. Thou common friend, that's without faith or (For such is a friend now) treacherous man!
Thou hast beguil'd my hopes: nought but mine eye
Could have persuaded me. Now darest I to say,
I have one friend alive, thou would'st disprove me.
Who should be trusted now, when one's right hand
Is perjur'd to the bosom? Proteus,
I am sorry I must never trust thee more,
But count the world a stranger for thy sake.
The private wound is deep'st. O time accurst!
'Mongst all my foes a friend should be the worst!
Pro. My shame and desperate guilt at once 10
Concern me:
Forgive me, Valentine. If hearty sorrow
Be a sufficient ransom for offence,
I tender 't here: I do as truly suffer,
As e'er I did commit.
Val. Then, I am paid;
And once again I do receive thee honest.
Who by repentance is not satisfied,
Is nor of heaven, nor earth; for these are pleas'd:
By ponency th' Eternal's wrath I appeas'd.
And, that my love may appear plain and free,
All that was mine in Silvia I give thee.
Jul. O me unhappy!
Pro. Look to the boy.
Val. Why, boy! why, wag! how now! what's the matter! look up; speak.
Jul. O good sir! my master charg'd me to deliver a ring to madam Silvia, which, out of my neglect, was never done.
Pro. Where is that ring, boy?
Jul. Here 'tis: this is it. [Gives a ring.]
Pro. How! let me see.
Jul. This is the ring I gave to Julia.
Jul. O! cry you mercy, sir; I have mistook:
This is the ring you sent to Silvia. [Shoos another ring.]
Pro. But, how came' st thou by this ring?
At my depart I gave this unto Julia.
Jul. And Julia herself did give it me;
And Julia herself hath brought it hither.
Jul. Behold her that gave aim to all thy oaths,
And entertain'd them deeply in her heart:
How oft hast thou with perjury cleft the root!
O Proteus! let this habit make thee blush:
Be thou saham'd, that I have took upon me
Such an immodest raiment; if shame live
In a disguise of love.
It is the lesser blot, modesty finds,
Women to change their shapes, than men their minds.
Pro. Than men their minds: 't is true. O heaven!
were man
But constant, he were perfect: that one error
Fills him with faults; makes him run through all the Inconstancy falls off, ere it begins.
What is in Silvia's face, but I may spy
More fresh in Julia's, with a constant eye?
Val. Come, come, a hand from either.
Let me be blest to make this happy close:
'T were pity two such friends should be long foes.
Pro. Bear witness, heaven, I have my wish for ever.
Jul. And I mine.
Enter Outlaws, with Duke and Thaddio.
Out. A prize! a prize! a prize!
Val. Forbear: forbear, I say: it is my lord the duke.—
Your grace is welcome to a man disgrac'd,
Banished Valentine.
Duke. Sir Valentine!
Thou. Yonder is Silvia; and Silvia's mine.
Val. Thurius, give back, or else embrace thy death.

Come not within the measure of my wrath:
Do not name Silvia thine; if once again,
Milano shall not hold thee. Here she stands:
Take but possession of her with a touch.
I dare thee but to breathe upon my love.
Thou. Sir Valentine, I care not for her, I,
I hold him but a fool, that will endanger
His body for a girl that loves him not:
I claim her not, and therefore she is thine.

Duke. The more degenerate and base art thou,
To make such means for her as thou hast done,
And leave her on such slight conditions.
Now, by the honour of my ancestry,
I do applaud thy spirit, Valentine,
And think thee worthy of an empress' love.
Know then, I here forget all former griefs,
Cancel all grudge, repeal thee home again,
Plead a new state in thy unrival'd merit,
To which I thus subscribe.—Sir Valentine,
Thou art a gentleman, and well deriv'd:
Take thou thy Silvia, for thou hast deserve'd her.

Val. I thank your grace; the gift hath made me happy.

I now beseech you, for your daughter's sake,
To grant one boon that I shall ask of you.

Duke. I grant it for thine own, whate'er it be.

Val. These banish'd men, that I have kept withal,
Are men endued with worthy qualities:
Forgive them what they have committed here,
And let them be recall'd from their exile.
They are reformed, civil, full of good,
And fit for great employment, worthy lord.

Duke. Thou hast prevail'd; I pardon them, and thee
Dispose of them, as thou know'st their deserts.
Come; let us go: we will conclude all jars
With triumphs, mirth, and rare solemnity.

Val. And as we walk along, I dare be bold
With our discourse to make your grace to smile.

What think you of this stripling's page, my lord?

Duke. I think the boy hath grace in him: he blushes.

Val. I warrant you, my lord, more grace than boy.

Duke. What mean you by that saying, Valentine?

Val. Please you, I'll tell you as we pass along,
That you will wonder what hath fortune
Come, Proteus; 'tis your penance, but to hear
The story of your love's discoverer:

Our day of marriage shall be yours no less;
One feast, one house, one mutual happiness.

[Exeunt.

SCENE, Windsor; and the Parts adjacent.

ACT I.

Enter Justice Shallow, Slender, and Sir Hugh Evans.

Shal. Sir Hugh, persuade me not; I will make a
Sir-chamber matter of it: if he were twenty Sir
Falstaff, he shall not abuse Robert Shallow, esquire.

See. In the county of Gloster, justice of peace, and arms.

Slad. Ay, cousin Slender, and cust-alarum.

See. Ay, and ratolorum too; and a gentleman born, master parson; who writes himself armigerous; in any bill warrant, quittance, or obligation, armigerous.

Shal. Ay, that I do; and have done any time these three hundred years.

See. All his successors, gone before him, have done it; and all his ancestors, that come after him, may: they can give the dozen white lucers in their coat.

Shal. It is an old coat.

See. The dozen white loupes do become an old coat well: it agrees well, passant: it is a familiar beast to man and signifies love.

Shal. The luce is the fresh fish; the salt fish is an old coat.

See. I may quarter, coz?

Shal. You may, by marrying.

See. It is marrying, indeed, if he quarter it.

Shal. Not a whit.

See. Yes, per-lady: if he has a quarter of your coat, there is but three skies for yourself, in my simple conceptions. But that is all one: if sir John Falstaff have promised disparagements unto you, I am of the church, and will be glad to do my benevolence, to make alone-ments and compromises between you.

Shal. The council shall hear it: it is a riot.

See. It is not meet the council hear a riot; there is no fear of Got in a riot. The council, look you, shall desire to hear the fear of Got, and not to hear a riot; like your virements in that.

1 A title by which the clergy were ordinarily addressed. * The old name for a pike—an allusion to the coat of arms of the Lawre

Page. Who's there? [Above, at the window.

See. Here is Got's pleasing, and your friend, and justice Shallow; and here young master Slender, that, peradventure, shall tell you another tale, if matters grow to your likings.
Enter Page.

Page. I am glad to see your worship's well. I thank you for your venison, master Shallow.

Shal. Master Page, I am glad to see you: much good do it your good heart. I wished your venison better; it was ill kill'd.—How doth good mistress Page?—And I thank you always with your heart, is your heart.

Page. Sir, I thank you.

Shal. Sir, I thank you; by yea and no, I do.

Page. I am glad to see you, good master Shandler.

Shal. How does your fallow greyhound, sir? I heard say, he was outrun on Courtold's.

Page. It could not be judge'd, sir.

Shal. You'll not confess, you'll not confess.

Shal. That he will not; 'tis your fault, 'tis your fault.—'Tis a good dog.

Page. A curs, sir.

Shal. Sir, he's a good dog, and a fair dog; can there be more said? he is good, and fair. Is sir John Falstaff here?

Page. Sir, he is within; and I would I could do a good office between you.

Eva. It is spoke as a Christians ought to speak.

Shal. He hath wrong'd me, master Page.

Page. Sir, he doth in some sort confess it.

Shal. If it be confess'd, it is not redress'd: is not that so, master Page? He hath wrong'd me; indeed, he hath,—at a word, he hath,—believe me:—Robert Shallow, esquire, saith he is wrong'd.

Page. Here comes sir John.

Enter Sir John Falstaff, Bardolph, Nym, and Pistol.

Fal. Now, master Shallow; you'll complain of me to the king?

Shal. Knight, you have beaten my men, killed my deer, and broke open my lodge.

Fal. But not kiss'd your keeper's daughter.

Shal. Tut, a pin! this shall be answer'd.

Fal. I will answer it straight.—I have answer'd all this.—That is now answered.

Shal. The council shall know this.

Fal. 'T were better for you, if it were known in counsel; you'll be laugh'd at.

Eva. Pauca verba, sir John; good words.

Fal. Good words? good cabbages.—Slender, I broke your heart; what matter have you against me?

Slen. Master, sir, I have matter in my head about you; and against your coney-catching rascals, Bardolph, Nym, and Pistol. They carried me to the tavern, and made me drink, and afterwards picked my pocket.

Bard. You Banbury cheese.

Slen. Ay, it is no matter.

Pist. How now, Mephostophilus?

Slen. Ay, it is no matter.

Nym. Slice, I say! pauca, pauca; slice that's my humour.

Shal. Where's Simple, my man?—can you tell, cousin?

Eva. Peace! I pray you. Now let us understand: there's three umpires in this matter, as I understand; that is,—master Page, fidelitie, master Page; and there is myself, fidelitie, myself; and the three party is, lastly and finally, host of the Carter.

Page. We three, to hear it, and end it between them.

Eva. Fery goot: I will make a prief of it in my note-book; and we will afterwards 'ork upon the cause, with as great discreetly as we can.

Fal. Pistol!

Pist. He hears with ears.

Eva. The tevill and his tam! what phrase is this? "He hears with ear?" Why, it is affections.

Fal. Pistol, did you pick master Slender's purse?

Slen. Ay, by these gloves, did he, (or I would I might never come in mine own great chamber again else) of seven groats in mill-sixpences, and two Edward shovell-boards, that cost me two shilling and two pence a-piece of Yed Miller, by these gloves.

Fal. Is this true, Pistol?

Eva. No; it is false, if it is a pick-purse.

Pist. Ha, thou mountain-foreigner!—Sir John and master mine, I combat challenge of this latten bilbo:4 Word of denial in thy labras' here; Word of denial; froth and scum, thou liest.

Slen. By these gloves, then 't was he.

Nym. Be advised, sir, and pass good humours. I will say, "merry trap," with you, if you run the nuthook's humour on me; that is the very note of it.

Fal. By this hat, then he in the red face had it; for though I cannot remember what I did when you made me drunk, yet I am not altogether an ass.

Pist. What say you, Scarlet and John?9

Bard. Why, sir, for my part, I say, the gentleman had drunk himself out of his five sentences.

Eva. It is his five senses: fie, what the ignorance is! Bard. And being fap,10 sir, was, as they say, cashier'd; and so conclusions pass'd the carri'res.11

Slen. Ay, you speak in Latin then too; but 't is no matter. I'll ne'er be drunk whilst I live again, but in honest, civil, godly company, for this trick: if I be drunk, I'll be drunk with those that have the fear of God, and not with drunken knaves.

Eva. So get 'judge me, that is a virtuous mind.

Fal. You hear all these matters denied, gentlemen; you hear it.

Enter Anne Page with wine; and Mistress Ford and Mistress Page.

Page. Nay, daughter, carry the wine in; we'll drink within.

Anne. [Exit Anne Page.]

Fal. Mistress Ford, by my troth, you are very well met: by your leave, good mistress. [Kissing her Page.]

Page. Wife, bid these gentlemen welcome.—Come we have a hot venison paste to dinner: come, gentle men, I hope we shall drink down all unkindness.

[Exeunt all but Shallow, Slender, and Evans.]

Slen. I had rather than forty shillings, I had a book of songs and sonnets here.—

Enter Simple.

Page. How now, Simple! Where have you been? I must wait on myself, must I? You have not the book of riddles about you, have you?

Sim. Book of riddles! why, did you not lend it to Alice Shortcake upon allhallowmas last, a furthnight afore Michaelmas?

Sc. Come, cos; come, cos; we stay for you. A wait with you, cos; marry, this cos: there is, as were, a tender, a kind of tender, made afar off by sir
Humphrey: do you understand me?
Sen. Ay, sir, you shall find me reasonable: if it be so, I shall do that is reason.
Sc. Nay, but understand me.
Sen. So do I, sir.
Exe. Give ear to his motions, master Slender. I will explain the matter to you, if you be capacity of it.
Sen. Nay, I will do as my cousin Shallow says. I pray you, pension me; he's a justice of peace in his country, simple though I stand here.
Exe. But that is not the question: the question is concerning your marriage.
Sc. Ay, there's the point, sir.
Exe. Marry, in it, the very point of it; to mistress
Anne Page.
Sen. Why, if it be so, I will marry her upon any reasonable demands.
Exe. But can you affection the 'oman? Let us determine to know that of your mouth, or of your lips; for there philosophers hold, that the lips are parcel of the mouth: therefore, precisely, can you carry your good will to the maid?
Sc. Cousin Abraham Slender, can you love
her?
Sen. I hope, sir, I will do, as it shall become one that would do reason.
Sen. Nay, God's lords and his ladies, you must speak possible, if you can carry her your desires into her.
Sc. That you must. Will you, upon good dowry, marry her?
Sen. I will do a greater thing than that, upon your request, cousin, in any reason.
Sen. Nay, conceive me, conceive me, sweet cos: what do I, is to please you, cos. Can you love the maid?
Sen. I will marry her, sir, at your request; but if there be no great love in the beginning, yet here is never decrease it upon better acquaintance, when we are married, and have more occasion to know one another.
I hope, upon familiarity will grow more contempt;
but if you say, 'marry her,' I will marry her; that I am freely dissolved, and disdaintly.
Exe. It is a fery discretion answer; save, the fault in the 'ort disdaintly: the 'ort is, according to our casser, resolutely. His meaning is good.
Sc. Ay, I think my cousin meant well.
Sen. Ay, or else I would I might be hanged, la.
Re-enter Anne Page.
Sc. Here comes fair mistress Anne. —Would I were young, for your sake, mistress Anne!
Anne. The dinner is on the table; my father desires your worship's company.
Sc. I will wait on him, fair mistress Anne.
Exe. Oli's pleased will! I will not be absence at the dinner. [Exeunt SHALLOW and EVANS.
Anne. Will 't please your worship to come in, sir?
Sen. No, I thank you, forsooth, heartily; I am very well.
Anne. The dinner attends you, sir.
Sen. I am not a-hungry, I thank you, forsooth. —Go, worth, for all you are my man, go, wait upon my cousin. [Exeunt. [Exit SIMPLE.] A justic peace sometime may be beholding to his friend for a man. —I keep but three men and a boy yet, till my mother be dead; but Anne. I may not go in without your worship: they will not sit, till you come.

Sen. I' faith, I'll eat nothing; I thank you as much as though I did.
Anne. I pray you, sir, walk in.
Sen. I had rather walk here, I thank you. I bruised my shin the other day with playing at sword and dagger with a master of fence, (three venneys for a dish of stewed prunes) and, by my troth, I cannot abide the smell of hot meat since. Why do your dogs bark so?
be there bears in the town? [Dogs bark.*
Anne. I trust, they are, sir; I heard them talked of.
Sen. I love the sport well; but I shall as soon quarter at it as any man in England. You are afraid, if you see the bear loose, are you not?
Anne. Ay, indeed, sir.
Sen. That's meat and drink to me, now: I have seen Sackerson's loose, twenty times, and have taken him by the chain; but, I warrant you, the women have so cried and shriek'd at it, that it pass'd: but women, indeed, cannot abide 'em; they are very ill-favoured thoung things.
Re-enter Page.
Page. Come, gentle master Slender, come; we stay
for you.
Sen. I' ll eat nothing, I thank you, sir.
Page. By cock and yre, you shall not choose, sir.
Come, come.
Sen. Nay; pray you, lead the way.
Page. Come on, sir.
Sen. Mistress Anne, yourself shall go first.
Anne. Not I, sir; pray you, keep on.
Sen. Truly, I will not go first: truly, la, I will not do you that wrong.
Anne. I pray you, sir.
Sen. I' ll rather be unmannish, than troublesome.
You do yourself wrong, indeed, la.
[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The Same.

Enter Sir Hugh Evans and Simple.

Exe. Go your ways, and ask of doctor Caius' house, which is the way; and there dwells one mistress Quickly, which is in the manner of his nurse, or his dry nurse, or his cook, or his laundry, his washer, and his wringer.

Sim. Well, sir.
Exe. Nay, it is better yet. —Give her this letter; for it is a 'oman that altogether's acquaintance with mistress Anne Page: and the letter is, to desire and require her to solicit your master's desires to mistress Anne Page: I pray you, be gone. I will make an end of my dinner: there's pippins and cheese to come.
[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—A Room in the Garter Inn.

Enter Falstaff, Host, Bardolph, Nym, Pistol, and Robin.

Fal. Mine host of the Garter!
Host. What says my bully-rook*? Speak scholarily, and wisely.

Fal. Truly, mine host, I must turn away some of my followers.
Host. Discard, bully Hercules; cashier: let them wag; trot, trot.
Fal. I sit a ten pounds a-week.
Host. Thou'rt an emperor, Caesar, Kezar, and Pheazar. I will entertain Bardolph: he shall draw, he shall tap: said I well, bully Hector?
Fal. Do so, good mine host.

* expression.  * A sharper.
Host. I have spoke; let him follow.—Let me see thee froth, and time: I am at a word; follow. [Exit Host.
Fal. Bardolph, follow him. Tapaster a tradesman: an old cloak makes a new jerkin; a withered servingman, a fresh tapster. Go; adieu.
Bard. It is a life that I have desired. I will thrive.
[Exit Bardolph.
Pic. O base Gorbionsch! what wilt thou the spigot wield? Ynm. He was yet drunk; is not the humour conceived? His mind is not heroic, and there’s the humour of it.
Fal. I am glad I am so acquit of this tinder-box: his thefts were too open; his fleshing was like an unskilful singer, he kept not time.
Nym. The good humour is to steal at a minim’s rest. Pic. Convey the wise it call. Steel? foal! a foal for the phrase!
Fal. Well, sirs, I am almost out at heels.
Pic. Why then, let kibes ensue.
Fal. There is no remedy; I must coney-catch, I must shift.
Pic. Young ravens must have food.
Fal. Which of you know Ford of this town?
Pic. I ken the wight: he is of substance good.
Fal. My honest lads, I will tell you what I am about.
Pic. Two yards, and more.
Fal. No quips now, Pistol. Indeed I am in the waist two yards about; but I am now about no waste: I am about thrift. Briefly, I do mean to make love to Ford’s wife: I spy entertainment in her; she discourses, she craves, she gives the leer of invitation: I can construe the action of her familiar style; and the hardest voice of her behaviour, to be English rightily, is, “I am Sir John Falstaff’s.”
Pic. He hath studied her will, and translated her will; out of honesty into English.
Nym. The anchor is deep: will that humour pass?
Fal. Now, the report goes, she has all the rule of her husband’s purse; he hath a legion of angels.
Pic. As many devils entertain, and “To her, boy,” say I.
Nym. The humour rises; it is good: humour me the angels.
Fal. I have writ me here a letter to her; and here another to Page’s wife, who even now gave me good eyes too, examin’d my parts with most judicious criteria: at times, the view gild my foot, sometimes my portly belly.
Pic. Then did the sun on dunghill shine.
Nym. I thank thee for that humour.
Fal. Oh! she did so course o’er my exterior with such a greedy intention, that the appetite of her eye did seem to search me up like a burning glass. Here’s another letter to her: she bears the purse too; she is a region in Guiana, all gold and beauty. I will be chaster to them both, and they shall be exequiours to me: they shall be my East and West Indies, and I will trade to them both. Go, bear thou this letter to mistress Page; and thou this to mistress Ford. We will thrive, lads, we will thrive.
Pic. Shall I sir Pandarus of Troy become, And by my side wear steel? then, Lucifer take all! Nym. I will run no base humour: here, take the humour-letter. I will keep the ‘haviour of reputation.
Fal. Hold, sitrah, [to Robin,] bear you these letters tightly:
Sail like my pinacces to these golden shores.— Rogues, hence! avanti! vanish like billstone, go; Trudge, pod away o’ the hood; seek shelter, pack! Falstaff will learn the humour of the age, French thrift, you rogues: myself, and skirted page. [Exeunt Falstaff and Rosalind.
Pic. Let vultures grips thy guts! for gourd, at fullam holds, And high and low beguile the rich and poor. Testor I’ll have in pouch, when thou shalt lack, Base Phrygian Turk. [veng Nym. I have operations, which be humours of n Pic. Wilt thou revenge? Nym. By wellkin, and her stars. Pic. With wit, or steel? Nym. With both the humours, I: I will discuss the humour of this love to Page. Pic. And I to Ford shall eke unfold, How Falstaff, varlet vile, His dove will prove, his gold will hold, And his soft couch defile.
Nym. My humour shall not cool: I will incom Page to deal with poison; I will possess him wit yellowness, for the revol of mine is dangerous: this is my true humour.
Pic. Thou art the Mars of malcontents: I secon thee: troop on.
[Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—A Room in Dr. Caius’s House. Enter Mrs. Quickly, Simple, and John Rugby.
Quick. What, John Rugby!—I pray thee, go to th caseament, and see if thou can see my master, maste doctor Caius, coming: if he do, i’ faith, and find any body in the house, here will be an old abusing of God’s patience, and the king’s English.
Rug. I’ll go watch.
[Exeunt Rugby
Quick. Go; and we’ll have a posset for ’t soon night, in faith, at the latter end of a sea-coal fire.—A honest, willing, kind fellow, as ever servant shall come in house withal; and, I warrant you, no tell-tale, no no breed-bate! his worst fault is, that he is given to prayer; he is something peevish that way, but no body but has his fault; but let that pass. Peter Sim ple, you say your name is?
Sim. Ay, for fault of a better.
Quick. And how pleased is Master Slender’s your master?
Sim. Ay, forsooth. Quick. Does he not wear a great round beard, like a Glover’s paring-knife? Sim. No, forsooth: he hath but a little wee face with a little yellow beard; a Cain-coloured beard.
Quick. A softly-sprighted man, is he not?
Sim. Ay, forsooth; but he is as tall! a man of his hands, as any is between this and his head: he hath fought with a warmer.
Quick. How say you?—O! I should remember him does he not hold up his head, as it were, and strut is his gait?
Sim. Yes, indeed, does he.
Quick. Well, heaven send Anne Page no worse fortune! Tell master parson Evans, I will do what I can for your master: Anne is a good gril, and I wish—
Re-enter Rugby, running.
Rug. Out, alas! here comes my master.
Quick. We shall all be shent. Run in here, good youth; I go into this closet. [Shuts Simple in the door.] He will not stay long.—What, John Rugby! John, what, John, I say!—Go, John, go inquire for my master; [Exit Rugby.] I doubt, he be not well, that he comes not home:—"and down, and down, adown-e!" &c.

[Sings.]

Enter Doctor Caius.

Caius. Vat is you sing? I do not like dese toys. Pray you, go and vetch me in my closet un boister-red; a box, a green-box; do intend vat I speak? a green-box.

Quick. Ay, forsworn; I'll fetch it you. [Aside.] I am glad he went not in himself: if he had found the young man, he would have been horn-mad.

Caius. Fe, fe, fe, fe! ma foi, il fait ford chaud. Je m'en vais à la cour,—la grande affaire.

Quick. Is it this, sir? [Aside.] Caius. Oui; mette le au mon pocket; dépêche, quickly.

Rug. 'Tis ready, sir, here in the porch. Caius. By my trot, I tarry too long.—Od's me! Quoi j'oublié? dere is some simples in my closet, dat I vill not for the chamber I shall leave behind. [Going to it.] Quel [Aside.] Ah me! he'll find the young man there, and be maz.

Caius. O diable, diable! vat is in my closet?—Vilain! larvon! [Dragging Simple out.] Rugby, my rapier! Quick. Good master, be content. Caius. Verefore shall I be content-a?

Quick. The young man is an honest man.

Caius. Vat shall the honest man do in my closet? Ter is no honest man dat shall come in my closet.

[Exit,] Caius. I beseech you, be not so phlegmatic. Hear me; the truth of it: he came of an errand to me from parson Hogg.

Caius. Well.

Sim. Ay, forsworn, to desire her to—

Quick. Peace, I pray you.

Caius. Peace-a your tongue!—Speak-a your tale. Sim. To desire this honest gentlewoman, your maid, to speak a good word to mistress Anne Page for my master, in the way of marriage.

Quick. This is all, indeed, la; but I'll ne'er put my hand in the fire, and need not.

Caius. Sir Hugh send-a you?—Rugby, baiilles me some paper; tarry you a little-a while. [Writes.] Quick. I am glad he is so quiet: if he had been thoroughly moved, you should have heard him so loud, and we melancholy. But notwithstanding, man, I'll do you what I may: let me see what you can: and the very yea and tab is, the French doctor, my master,—I may call him my master, look you, for I keep his house; and I wait, wring, brew, bake, secur, dress meat and drink, make the beds, and do all myself.

Sim. 'Tis a great charge, to come under one body's head.

Quick. Are you avis'd o' that? you shall find it a great charge: and to be up early and down late,—but notwithstanding, to tell you in your ear, (I would have no words of it) my master himself is in love with mistress Anne Page: but notwithstanding that, I know Anne's mind; that's neither here nor there.

Caius. You jack'nape, give-a dis letter to Sir Hugh By gar, it is a challenge: I will cut his hair in de park; and I vill teach a scurvy jack'nape priest to meddle or make.—You may be gone; it is not good you tarry here:—by gar, I vill cut all his two stones; by gar, he shall not have a stone to brow at his dog.

[Exit Simple.]

Quick. Alas! he speaks but for his friend.

Caius. It is no matter-a for dat:—do not you tell-a me, dat I shall have Anne Page for myself?—By gar, I will kill de Jack priest; and I have appointed mine Host of de Jarretières to measure our weapon.—By gar, I will myself have Anne Page.

Quick. Sir, the maid loves you, and all shall be well. We must give folks leave to prate: what, the good year!

Caius. Rugby, come to the court vit me.—By gar, if I have not Anne Page, I shall turn your head out of my door. Follow my heels, Rugby.

[Enter Caius and Rugby.]

Quick. You shall have an fool's-head of your own. No, I know Anne's mind for that: never a woman in Windsor knows more of Anne's mind than I do, nor can do more than I do with her. I thank heaven.

[Enter Fenton.]

Fent. How now, good woman! how dost thou?

Quick. The better, that it pleases your good worship to ask.

Fent. What news? how does pretty mistress Anne?

Quick. In truth, sir, and she is pretty, and honest, and gentle; and one that is your friend, I can tell you that by the way; I praise heaven for it.

Fent. Shall I do any good, think'st thou? Shall I not lose my suit?

Quick. Troth, sir, all is in his hands above; but notwithstanding, master Fenton, I'll be sworn on a book, she loves you.—Have not your worship a wart above your eye?

Fent. Yes, marry, have I; what of that?

Quick. Well, thereby hangs a tale.—Good faith, it is such another Nan;—but, I detest, an honest maid as ever broke bread,—we had an hour's talk of that wart. I shall never laugh but in that maid's company;—but, indeed, she is given too much to alchol and musing. But for you—well, go to.

Fent. Well, I shall see her to-day. Hold, there's money for thee; let me have thy voice in my behalf: if thou seest her before me, commend me—

Quick. Will I! i' faith, that I will; and I will tell your worship more of the wart, the next time we have confidence, and of other woes.

Fent. Well, farewell; I am in great haste now. [Exit.

Quick. Farewell to your worship.—Truly, an honest gentleman; but Anne loves him not, for I know Anne's mind as well as another does.—Out upon 't! what have I forgot?
ACT II.

SCENE I.—Before PAGE'S House.

Enter Mistress Page, with a Letter.

Mrs. Page. What! have I soaped love-letters in the holy-day time of my beauty, and am I now a subject for them? Let me see. [Reads.]

"Ask me no reason why I love you; for though love use reason for his physician,1 he admits him not for his counsellor. You are not young, no more am I: go to then, there's sympathy. You are merry, so am I; ha! ha! then, there's more sympathy: you love sack, and so do I; would you desire better sympathy? Let it suffice thee, mistress Page, (at the least, if the love of soldier can suffice) that I love thee. I will not say, pity me. It is not a soldier-like phrase; but I say, love me. By me,

Thine own true knight,

By day or night,
Or any kind of light,
With all his might,
For thee to fight. [John Falstaff."

What a Herod of Jewry is this!—O wicked, wicked, world!—one that is well nigh worn to pieces with age, to show himself a young gallant! What an unweighed behaviour hath this Flemish drunkard picked (with the devil's name) out of my conversation, that he dares in this manner assay me? Why, he hath not been thrice in my company—What should I say to him?—I was then frugal of my mirth:—heaven forgive me!—Why, I'll exhibit a bill in the parliament for the putting down of fat men. How shall I be revenged on him! for revenged I will be, as sure as his guts are made of puddings.

Enter Mistress Ford.

Mrs. Ford. Mistress Page! I trust me, I was going to your house.

Mrs. Page. Nay, trust me, I was coming to you. You look very ill.

Mrs. Ford. Nay, I'll ne'er believe that: I have to show to the contrary.

Mrs. Page. Faith, but you do, in my mind.

Mrs. Ford. Well, I do then; yet, I say, I could show you to the contrary. O, mistress Page! give me some counsel.

Mrs. Page. What's the matter, woman?

Mrs. Ford. O woman! if it were not for some trifling respect, I could come to such honour.

Mrs. Page. Hang the trifles, woman; take the honour. What is it?—dispense with trifles;—what is it?

Mrs. Ford. If I would but go to hell for an eternal moment or so, I could be knighted.

Mrs. Page. What?—thou liest.—Sir Alice Ford!—These knights will hack;2 and so, thou shouldst not alter the article of thy gentility.

Mrs. Ford. We burn day-light;—here, read, read; [giving a letter]—perceive how I might be knighted. [Mrs. Page reads]—I shall think the worse of fat men, as long as I have an eye to make difference of men's liking: and yet he would not swear, praised women's modesty, and gave such orderly and well-behaved report to all uncomeliness, that I would have sworn his disposition would have gone to the truth of his words; but they do no more adhere and keep place together, than the hundredth psalm to the tune of "Green Sleeves." What tempest, I trod, threw this whale, with so many tons of oil in his belly, ashore at Windsor? How shall I be revenged on him? I think, the best way were to entertain him with hope, till the wicked fire of lust have melted him in his own grease.—Did you ever hear the like?

Mrs. Page. Letter for letter, but that the name of Page and Ford differs!—To thy great comfort in this mystery of ill opinions, here's the twin-brother of thy letter: but let thine inherit first; for, I protest, mine never shall. I warrant, he hath a thousand of these letters, writ with blank space for different names, (sure more) and these are of the second edition. He will print them, out of doubt; for he cares not what he puts into the press, when he would put us two: I had rather be a giantess, and lie under mount Pelion. Well, I will find you twenty lascivious turtles, ere one chaste man.

Mrs. Ford. Why, this is the very same; the very hand, the very words. What doth he think of us?

Mrs. Page. Nay, I know not: it makes me almost ready to wrangle with mine own honesty. I'll entertain myself like one that I am not acquainted withal; for, sure, unless he know some stain in me, that I know not myself, he would never have bored me in this fury.

Mrs. Ford. Boarding call you it? I'll be sure to keep him above deck.

Mrs. Page. So will I: if he come under my hatches, I'll never to sea again. Let's be revenged on him: let's appoint him a meeting; give him a show of comfort in his suit, and lead him on with a fine-baited delay, till he hath pawned his horses to mine Host of the Garder.

Mrs. Ford. Nay, I will consent to act any villany against him, that may not wholly the chariness of our honesty. O, that my husband saw this letter! it would give eternal food to his jealousy.

Mrs. Page. Why, look, where he comes; and my good man too; he's as far from jealousy, as I am from giving him cause; and that, I hope, is an unmeasurable distance.

Mrs. Ford. You are the happier woman.

Mrs. Page. Let's consult together against this greedy knight. Come hither. [They retire to the garden.]

Ford. Well, I hope, it be not so.

Pist. Hope is a curtail dog in some affairs;

Sir John affects thy wife.

Ford. Why, sir, my wife is not young.

Pist. He wooed both high and low, both rich and poor.

Both young and old, one with another. Ford,

He loves the gally-mawtry: Ford, perpend.

Ford. Love my wife?

Pist. With liver burning hot: prevent, or go thou,

Like sir Acteon he, with Ring-wood at thy heels.

O odious is the name.

Ford. What name, sir?

Pist. The horn, I say. Farewell:

Take heed; have open eye, for thieves do foot by night.

Take heed, ere summer comes, or cuckoo birds do sing.

Away, sir corporal Nym.

Nym. Believe it, Page; he speaks sense. [Exit Pist Ford. I will be patient: I will find out this.

Nym. And this is true; [to Page.] I like not the humour of lying. He hath wronged me in some honours: I should have borne the humoured letter to her, but I have a sword, and it shall bite upon my necessity. He loves your wife; there's the short and the long. My name is corporal Nym: I speak, and I swoth 'tis true:—my name is Nym, and Falstaff loves your wife.—Adieu. I love not the humour of bread and cheese. Adieu. [Exeunt Nym.

Page. The humour of it, quoth 'a! here's a fellow fights English out of his wits.
Ford. I will seek out Falstaff.
Page. I never heard such a drawing-affecting rogue.
Ford. If I do find it, well. Page. I will not believe such a Caiusian, though the prince of the town commended him for a true man.
Ford. 'T was a good sensible fellow: well.
Page. How now, Meg?
Mrs. Page. Whither go you, George?—Hark you.
Mrs. Ford. How now, sweet Frank! why art thou melancholy? Ford. I am melancholy! I am not melancholy.—Get you home, go.
Mrs. Ford. 'Faith, thou hast some crotchets in thy head now.—Will you go, mistress Page?
Mrs. Page. Have with you.—You'll come to dinner, Groom. [Aside to Mrs. Ford.] Look, who comes under master Page: she shall be our messenger to this paely night.
[Enter Mrs. Quickly.
Mrs. Ford. Trust me, I thought on her: she'll fit it.
Mrs. Page. You are come to see my daughter Anne?
Quick. Ay, forsooth; and, I pray, does how good mistress Anne?
Mrs. Page. Go in with us, and see: we have an hour's talk with you.
[Exeunt Mrs. Page, Mrs. Ford, and Mrs. Quickly.
Page. How now, master Ford?
Ford. You heard what this knave told me, did you?
Page. Yes, and you heard what the other told me.
Ford. Do you think there is truth in them?
Page. Hang 'em, slaves; I do not think the knight would offer it: but these that accuse him, in his intent of the laws, are a yoke of his discobedient men;
what he does, now they are out of service.
Ford. Were they his men?
Page. Marry, were they.
Ford. I like it never the better for that.——Does he stay the Garter?
Page. Ay, marry, does he. If he should intend this usage towards my wife, I would turn her loose to him; and what he gets more of——than sharp words, but lies on my head.
Ford. I do not misdoubt my wife, but I would be not to turn them together. A man may be too converse; I would have nothing lie on my head. I cannot be thus satisfied.
Page. Look, where my ranting Host of the Garter comes. There is either liquor in his pate, or money in his purse, when he looks so merrily.—How now, my lady host?
[Enter Host.
Host. How now, bully- rook! thou'rt a gentleman.
Cavalier-justice, I say...
[Enter Shalow.
Shal. I follow, mine host, I follow.——Good even, and worthy, good master Page. Master Page, will you go with us? we have sport in hand.
THE MERRY WIVES OF WINDSOR.

ACT II.

lurch; and yet you, you rogue, will ensnare your cage,
your cat-a-mountain looks, your red-lattice' phrases, and your bolts, tangles, and garrets, under the shelter of your honour! You will not do it, you?

Pist. I do relent: what wouldst thou more of man?

Enter ROBIN.

Rob. Sir, here's a woman would speak with you.

Fal. Let her approach.

Enter MISTRESS QUICKLY.

Quick. Give your worship good-morrow.

Fal. Good-morrow, good wife.

Quick. Nor so, and please your worship.

Fal. Good maid, then.

Quick. I' ll be sworn; as my mother was, the first hour I was born.

Fal. I do believe the swearer. What with me?

Quick. Shall I vouchsafe your worship a word or two?

Fal. Two thousand, fair woman; and I'll vouchsafe thee the hearing.

Quick. There is one mistress Ford, sir:—I pray, come a little nearer this ways.—I myself dwell with mister Ford's lady.

Fal. Well, on: mistress Ford, you say,

Quick. Your worship says very true;—I pray your worship, come a little nearer this ways.

Fal. I warrant thee, nobody hears:—mine own people, mine own people.

Quick. Are they so? Heaven bless them, and make them his servants!

Fal. Who? mistress Ford;—what of her?

Quick. Why sir, she's a good creature. Lord, lord!
your worship's a wanton: well, heaven forgive you,
and all of us, I pray!

Fal. mistress Ford;—come, mistress Ford.

Quick. Marry, this is the short and the long of it.
You have brought her into such a canaries, as 'tis wonderful: the best courtier of them all, when the court-lay at Windsor, could never have brought her to such a canary; yet there has been knights, and lords, and gentlemen, with their coaches; I warrant you, coach after coach, letter after letter, gift after gift; smelling so sweetly, all musk, and so rushing, I warrant you, in silk and gold; and in such alligator terms; and in such wine and sugar of the best, and the fairest, that would have won any woman's heart, and, I warrant you, you could never get an eye-wink of her:—I had myself twenty angels given me of a morning; but I defy all angels, (in any such sort, as they say,) but in the way of honesty!—and, I warrant you, they could never get her so much as sip on a cup with the proudest of them all: and yet there has been earls, nay, which is more, pensioners; but, I warrant you, all is one with her.

Fal. But what says she to me? be brief, my good she Mercur.

Quick. Marry, she hath received your letter, for the which she thanks you a thousand times; and she gives you to reify, that her husband will be absence from his house between ten and eleven.

Fal. Ten and eleven.

Quick. Ay, forsooth; and then you may come and see the picture, she says, what you wot of: master Ford, her husband, will be from home. Alas! the sweet woman leads an ill life with him: he's a very jealousy man; she leads a very frampōdë life with him, good heart.

Fal. Ten and eleven.—Woman, commend me to her;
I will not fail.

Quick. Why, you say well. But I have another messenger to your worship: mistress Page hath her honey commendations to you too;—and let me tell you in your ear, she's as furtive a civil modest wife, and one (I tell you) that will not miss you morning nor evening prayer, as any is in Windsor, whose be the other: and she bade me tell your worship, that her husband is seldom from home, but she hopes there will come a time. I never knew a woman so dote upon a man: surely, I think you have charms, la;—yes, in both.

Fal. Not I, I assure thee: setting the attraction of my good parts aside, I have no other charms.

Quick. Blessing on your heart for 't!

Fal. But I pray thee, tell me this: has Ford's wife, and Page's wife, acquainted each other how they love me?
Quick. That were a jest, indeed!—they have not so little grace, I hope:—that were a trick, indeed! But mistress Page would desire you to send her your little page, of all loves: her husband has a marvellous infection to the little page; and, truly, master Page is an honest man. Never a wife in Windsor leads a better life than she does: do what she will, say what she will, take all, pay all, go to bed when she list, rise when she list, all is as she will; and truly, she deserves it, for if there be a kind woman in Windsor, she is one.
You must send her your page; no remedy.

Fal. Why, I will.

Quick. Nay, but do so, then: and, look you, he may come and go between you both; and, in any case, have a newa word, that you may know one another's mind, and the boy never need to understand anything for 't is not good that children should know any wickedness; old folks, you know, have discretion, as they say and know the world.

Fal. Fare thee well: commend me to them both.
There's my purse: I am yet thy debtor.—Boy, go along with this woman.—This news distracts me.

[Exeunt Mrs. QUICKLY and ROBIN.

Pist. This punk is one of Cupid's carriers.
Clap on more sails; pursue, up with your fights.
Give fire! She is my prize, or ocean whelm them all!

[Exit Pistol.

Fal. Say'st thou so, old Jack? go thy ways; I'll make more of thy old body than I have done.
Will they yet look after thee? Will thou, after the expense of so much money, be now a gainer? Good body, I thank thee: let them say, 'tis grossly done; so it be fairly done, no matter.

Enter BARDOLPH.

Bard. Sir John, there's one master Brook below would fain speak with you, and be acquainted with you; and hath sent your worship a morning's draught of sack.

Fal. Brook, is his name?

Bard. Ay, sir.

Fal. Call him in; [Exit BARDOLPH.] Such Brooks are welcome to me, that o'erflow such liquor. Ah!
have a mistress Ford and mistress Page, have I encompassed you? go to; via;

Re-enter BARDOLPH, with Ford disguised.

Ford. Bless you, sir.

Fal. And you, sir: would you speak with me?

Ford. I make bold, to press with so little preparation upon you.

Fal. You're welcome. What's your will?—Give us leave, drawer.

[Exit BARDOLPH.

1 Alt. house. 2 Mr. Drury suggests bear-baiting. 3 given me this morning: in f. e. 4 Elizabeth's bed of pensioners were a source of excitement for some excited Dame Quickly's admiration. They were also men of fortune. 5 Taverns—By all means.
6 Watchward. 7 Convent of some kind put up to protect the men in an engagement. 8 It was a common custom to bestow presents of wine in Shakespeare's day.
Ford. Sir, I am a gentleman that have spent much: my name is Brook.

Fald. Good master Brook, I desire more acquaintance of you, for I am acquainted with your name and person.

Ford. Good sir John, I sue for yours: not to charge you, for I must let you understand, I think myself in better plight for a lender than you are; the which hath something embolden'd me to this unseasoned intrusion, for, they say, if money go before, all ways do lie open.

Fald. Money is a good soldier, sir, and will on. Ford. Truth, and I have a bag of money here troubles me: if you will help to bear it sir John, take half or all, for easing me of the carriage.

Fald. Sir, I know not how I may deserve to be your porter.

Ford. I will tell you, sir, if you will give me the baring.

Fald. Speak, good master Brook: I shall be glad to be your servant.

Ford. Sir, I hear you are a scholar,—I will be brief with you,—and you have been a man long known to me: though I had never so good means, as desire, to make acquaintance with you. I shall discover no thing to you, wherein I must very much lay open mine own imperfection; but, good sir John, as you have one eye upon my follies, as you hear them unfolded, turn another into the register of your own, that I may pass with a reproof the easier, sith you yourself know, how easy it is to be such an offender.

Fald. Very well; sir; proceed.

Ford. There is a gentlewoman in this town, her husband's name is Ford.

Fald. Well, sir.

Ford. I have long loved her, and, I protest to you, bestowed much on her; followed her with a doating assiduity; engrossed opportunities to meet her; feed'd every slight occasion, that could butiggardly give me sight of her: not only bought many presents to give her, but have given largely to many, to know what she would have given. Briefly, I have pursued her, as I have pursued me, which hath been on the wing of all occasions: but whatsoever I have merited, either in my mind, or in my means, meed, I am sure, I have received none, unless experience be a jewel; that I have purchased at an infinite rate, and that hath taught me to say this:

Loves like a shadow flies, when substance love pursues; Pursuing that flies, and flying what pursues.

Fald. Have you received no promise of satisfaction at her hands?

Ford. Never.

Fald. Have you importuned her to such a purpose? Ford. Never.

Fald. Of what quality was your love then? Ford. Like a fair house, built upon another man's ground: so that I have lost my edifice, by mistaking the place where I erected it.

Fald. To what purpose have you unfolded this to me?

Ford. When I have told you that, I have told you all. Some say, that though she appear honest to me, in other places she enlargeth her mirth so far, that she is shrewd construction made of her. Now, sir John, here is the heart of my purpose: you are a gentleman of excellent breeding, admirable discourse, of past sanctitude, authentic in your place and person, learnedly allowed for your many war-like, court-like, learned preparations.

Fald. O, sir!
my ambling gilding, than my wife with herself: then she plots, then she ruminates, then she devises; and what they think in their hearts they may effect, they will break their hearts but they will effect. Heaven be praised for my jealousy!—Eleven o'clock the hour: I will prevent this detect my wife, be revenged on Falstaff, and laugh at Page. I will about it: better three hours too soon, than a minute too late. Fie, fie! cuckold! cuckold! cuckold! cuckold! [Exit.]

SCENE III.—Windsor Park.

Enter CAIUS and RUGBY.

Caius. Jack Rugby!

Rug. Sir.

Caius. Vats is de clock, Jack?

Rug. 'Tis past the hour, sir, that sir Hugh promised to meet.

Caius. By gar, he has save his soul, dat he is no come: he has pray his Pible vell, dat he is no come. By gar, Jack Rugby, he is dead already, if he be come. Rug. He is wise, sir; he knew your worship would kill him, if he came.

Caius. By gar, de herring is no dead, so as I will kill him. Take your rapier, Jack; I will tell you how I will kill him.

Rug. Forbear; here's company.

Enter Host, SHALLOW, SLENDER, and Page.

Host. Bless thee, bully doctor.

Shal. Save you, master doctor Caius.

Page. Now, good master doctor.

Slen. Give you good-morrow, sir.

Caius. Vat be all you, one, two, tree, four, come for?

Host. To see thee fight; to see thee fain, to see thee traverse, to see thee here, to see thee there; to see thee pass thy ptrino, thy stook, thy reverse, thy distance, thy montant. Is he dead, my Ethiopian? is he dead, my Francia? ha! bully! What says my Esequilapius? my Galen? my heart of older? ha! is he dead, bully-stale? is he dead?

Caius. By gar, he is de coward Jack priest of the world; he is not show his face.

Host. Thou art a Castilian-king-Urinal: a Hector of Greece, my boy.

Caius. I pray you, bear witness that me have stay six or seven, two, tree hours for him, and he is no come.

Shal. He is the wiser man, master doctor: he is a curer of souls, and you a curer of bodies; if you should fight, you go against the hair of your professions. Is it not true, master Page?

Page. Master Shallow, you have yourself been a great fighter, though now a man of peace.

Shal. Bodykins, master Page, though I now be old, and of the peace, if I see a sword out, my finger itches to make one. Though we are justices, and doctors, and churchmen, master Page, we have some salt of our youth in us: we are the sons of women, master Page. Page. 'Tis true, master Shallow.

Shal. It will be found so, master Page.—Master doctor Caius, I am come to fetch you home. I am sworn of the peace: you have showed yourself a wise physician, and sir Hugh hath shown himself a wise and patient churchman. You must go with me, master doctor.

Host. Pardon, guest-justice.—A word, Monsieur Mock-water.

Caius. Mock-water! vat is dat?

Host. Mock-water, in our English tongue, is valour, bully.

Caius. By gar, then, I have as much mock-water as de Englishman.—Scoury jack-dog priest! by gar, me will cut his ear.

Host. He will clapper-claw thee tightly, bully.

Caius. Clapper-de-claw! vat is dat?

Host. That is, he will make thee amends.

Caius. By gar, me do look, he shall clapper-de-claw me: for, by gar, me will have it.

Host. And I will provoke him to't, or let him wag.

Caius. Me tank you for dat.

Host. And moreover, bully,—But first, master guest, and master Page, and eke cavaliiero Slender, go you through the town to Froomgre. [Aside to them. Page. Sir Hugh is there, is he?

Host. He is there: see what humour he is in, and I will bring the doctor about by the fields. Will it do well?

Shal. We will do it.

[Exeunt PAGE, SHALLOW, and SLENDER.

Caius. By gar, me will kill de priest, for he speak for a jack-an-ape to Anne Page.

Host. Let him die. Sheathe thy impatience; throw cold water on thy choler. Go about the fields with me through Froomgre; I will bring thee where mistress Anne Page is, at a farm-house a feasting, and thou shall woo her. Curds and cream, I said I well?

Caius. By gar, me tank you for dat: by gar, I love you; and I shall procure-a you de good guest, de earl, de knight, de lords, de gentlemen, my patients.

Host. For the which I will be thy adversary toward Anne Page: said I well?

Caius. By gar, 'tis good; vell said.

Host. Let us wag then.

Caius. Come at my heels, Jack Rugby.

[Exeunt.]

ACT III.

SCENE I.—A Field near Froomgre.

Enter SIR HUGH EVANS, WITH a book, and SIMPLE.

Eva. I pray you now, good muster Slender's serving-man, and friend Simple by your name, which way have you looked for master Caius, that calls himself Doctor of Physick?

Sim. Marry, sir, the pit-way, the park-way, old Windsor way, and every way, but the way way.

Eva. I most solemnly desire you, you will also look that way.

Sim. I will, sir. [Retiring.

Eva. Plee my soul, how full of choler am I, and trembling of mind!—I shall be glad, if he have de-ceived me.—Heir melancholies I am!—I will knog his brains about his knave's costward, when I have good opportunities for the 'ork:—plees my soul!

[Sings.]
SCENE II.

THE MERRY WIVES OF WINDSOR.

To shallow rivers, to whose falls,
Melodious birds sing madrigals;
There will we make our beds of roses,
And a thousand fragrant posies.

To shallow—
Mercy on me! I have a great disposition to cry. [Sings.

Melodious birds sing madrigals;
When as I sat in Paphos,

And a thousand yarrow posies.

To shallow—
Sim. [Coming forward.] Yonder he is coming, this way, sir Hugh.

Esa. He's welcome. [Sings.

To shallow rivers, to whose falls—
Heaven prosper the right!—What weapons is he?

Sim. No weapons, sir. There comes my master, master Shallow, and another gentleman, from Faggmore, over the stile, this way.

Esa. Pray you, give me my gown; or else keep it in your arms.

Enter PAGE, SHALLOW, and SLENDER.

Skal. How now, master parson! Good-morrow, good sir Hugh. Keep a gammeret from the dice, and a good student from his book, and it is wonderful.

Ses. Ah, sweet Anne Page!

Page. Save you, good sir Hugh.

Esa. Pleece you from his mercy sake, all of you.

Skal. What! the sword and the word? do you study them both, master parson?

Page. And youthful still, in your doublet and hose, this raw rhematism day?

Esa. There is reasons and causes for it.

Page. We are come to you to do a good office, master parson.

Esa. Fery well: what is it?

Page. Yonder is a most reverend gentleman, who, being having received wrong by some person, is at me odds with his own gravity and patience that ever you saw.

Skal. I have lived fourscore years, and upward, I never heard a man of his place, gravity, and learning, so wide of his own respect.

Esa. What is he?

Page. I think you know him; master doctor Caius, the renowned French physician.

Esa. God's will, and his passion of my heart! I had as lief you would tell me a mess of porridge.

Page. Why? Era. He has no more knowledge in Hibberocates and Gains—and he is a knave besides; a cowardly knave, as you would desires to be acquainted withal.

Page. I warrant you, he's the man should fight with him.

Ses. O, sweet Anne Page!

Skal. It appears so, by his weapons.—Keep them under;—here comes doctor Caius.

Enter Host, Caius, and Ruasy.

Page. Nay, good master parson, keep in your weapon.

Skal. So do you, good master doctor.

Host. Disarm them, and let them question: let them keep their limbs whole, and back our English.

Caius. I pray you, let-a me speak a word vyt ur: verercy vilt you not meet ru me?

Esa. Pray you, use your patience: in good time.

Caius. By gar, you are coward, de Jack dog, John epe.

Esa. Pray you, let us not be laughing-stogs to other men's humours; I desire you in friendship, and I will one way or other make you amend.—I will knog your urinals about your knife's cogscob for missing your meetings and appointments.

Caius. Diable!—Jack Rugby,—mine Host de Jarrettier, have I not stay for him, to kill him? have I not, at de place I did appoint?

Esa. As I am a Christian soul, now, look you, this is the place appointed. I'll be judgment by mine Host of the Garter.

Caius. Ay, dat is very good: excellent.

Host. Peace, I say! hear mine Host of the Garter. Am I politic? am I subtle? am I Machiavel? Shall I lose my doctor? no; he gives me the potions, and the motions. Shall I lose my parson? my priest? my sir Hugh? no; he gives me the proverbs and the no-verbs.—Give me thy hands, celestial and terrestrial, &c.—Boys of art, I have deceived you both; I have directed you to wrong places: your hearts are mighty, your skins are whole, and let burnt sack be the issue.

—Come, lay their swords to pawn.—Follow me, lad of peace; follow, follow, follow.

Skal. Trust me, a mad host.—Follow, gentlemen, follow.

Ses. O, sweet Anne Page!

[Exeunt SHALLOW, SLENDER, PAGE, and Host.

Caius. Ha! do I perceive dat! have you make-a de sort of us? ha, ha!

Esa. This is well, he has made us his vulturing-stog.—I desire you, that we may be friends, and let us knog our prains together to be revenge on this same scall!, scurrly, cogging companion, the Host of the Garter.

Caius. By gar, vit all my heart. He promise to bring me vere is Anne Page: by gar, he deceive me too.

Esa. Well, I will smite his noddes.—Pray you, follow.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—A Street in Windsor.

Enter MISTRESS PAGE and ROBIN.

Mrs. Page. Nay, keep your way, little gallant: you were wont to be a follower, but now you are a leader. Whether had you rather, lead mine eyes, or eye your master’s heels?

Rob. I had rather, forsooth, go before you like a man, than follow him like a dwarf.

Mrs. Page. O! you are a flattering boy: now, I see, you will be a courtier.

Enter FORD.

Ford. Well met, mistress Page. Whither go you?

Mrs. Page. Truly, sir, to see your wife: is she at home?

Ford. Ay; and as idle as she may hang together, for want of your company. I think, if your husbands were dead, you two would marry.

Mrs. Page. Be sure of that,—two other husbands.

Ford. Where had you this pretty weather-cock?

Mrs. Page. I cannot tell what the dickens his name is my husband had him of.—What do you call your knight’s name, sirrah?

Rob. Sir John Falstaff.

Ford. Sir John Falstaff!

Mrs. Page. He, he; I can never hit on’s name—There is such a league between my good man and him!

Is your wife at home indeed?

Ford. Indeed, she is.

Mrs. Page. By your leave, sir: I am sick, till I see her.

1 A quotation from Marlowe’s “Passionate Pilgrim.” 2 Not in f. o. 3 A line from the old version of Ps. 137. 4 Not in f. o. 5 The mess have: hands celestial, so: Malvas altered it to “Give me thy hand terrestrial, so: give me thy hand celestial, so” — Scalb-head.
Ford. Hath Page any brains! hath he any eyes! hath he any thinking? Sure, they sleep; he hath no use of them. Why, this boy will carry a letter twenty miles, as easy as a cannon will shoot point-blank twelve score. He pieces-out his wife’s inclination; he gives her folly motion, and advantage: and now she’s going to my wife, and Falstaff’s boy with her. A man may hear this shower sing in the wind,—and Falstaff’s boy with her!—Good plots!—they are laid; and our revolted wives share damnation together. Well; I will take him, then torture my wife, pluck the borrowed veil of modesty from the so-seeming mistress Page, divulge Page himself for a secure and wiltful Acton; and to these violent proceedings all my neighbours shall cry sim'. [Clock strikes ten.] The clock gives me my cue, and my assurance bids me search; there I shall find Falstaff. I shall be rather praised for this, than mocked; for it is as positive as the earth is firm, that Falstaff is there: I will go.

Enter PAGE, SHALLOW, SLENDER, HOST, SIR HUGH EVANS, CAIUS, and RUGBY.

Ford. Trust me, a good knot. I have good cheer at home, and I pray you all go with me.

Shal. I must excuse myself, master Ford.

Slen. And so must I, sir: we have appointed to dine with mistress Anne, and I would not break with her for more money than I’ll speak of.

Shal. We have lingered about a match between Anne Page and my cousin Slander, and this day we shall have our answer.

Slen. I hope, I have your good will, father Page.

Page. You have, master Slander; I stand wholly for you:—but my wife, master doctor, is for you altogether.

Caius. Ay, by gar; and de maid is love-a: me: my nurh-a Quickly tell me so mushi.

Host. What say you to young master Fenton? he capers, he dances, he has eyes of youth, he writes verses; he speaks holiday, he smells April and May: he will carry 1, he will carry 2; 'tis in his buttons; he will carry 3.

Page. Not by my consent, I promise you. The gentleman is of no having: he kept company with the wild Prince and Pons; he is of too high a region; he knows too much. No, he shall not knit a knot in his fortunes with the finger of my substance: if he take her, let him take her simply: the wealth I have waits on my consent, and my consent goes not that way.

Ford. I beseech you, heartily, some of you go home with me to dinner: besides your cheer, you shall have sport; I will show you a monster.—Master doctor, you shall go:—so shall you, master Page:—and you, sir Hugh.

Shal. Well, fare you well.—We shall have the freer wooing at master Page’s.

[Exit Shallow and Slander.

Caius. Go home, John Rugby; I come anon.

[Exit Rugby.

Host. Farewell, my hearts. I will to my honest knight Falstaff, and drink canary with him. [Exit Host.

Ford. [Aside.] I think, I shall drink in pipe-wine first with him; I’ll make him dance. Will you go, gentle? All. Have with you, to see this monster. [Exit.

SCENE III.—A Room in Ford’s House.

[Enter Mrs. Ford and Mrs. Page.

Mrs. Page. Come, come, come.

Mrs. Ford. Here, set it down.

Mrs. Page. Give your men the charge: we must be brief.

Mrs. Ford. Marry, as I told you before, John, and Robert, be ready here hard by in the brew-house; and when I suddenly call you, come forth, and (without any pause, or staggering) take this basket on your shoulders: that done, trudge with it in all haste, and carry it among the whistlest in Datchet mead, and there empty it in the muddy ditch close by the Thames side.

Mrs. Page. You will do it?

Mrs. Ford. I have told them over and over; they lack no direction. Be gone, and come when you are called.

[Exit SERVANTS.

Mrs. Page. Here comes little Robin.

Enter Robin.

Mrs. Ford. How now, my eyes-musket? what news with you?

Rob. My master, sir John, is come in at your back-door, mistress Ford, and requests your company.

Mrs. Page. You little Jack-a-lent!, have you been true to us?

Rob. Ay, I’ll be sworn: my master knows not of your being here; and hath threatened to me into everlasting liberty, if I tell you of it, for he swears he’ll turn me away.

Mrs. Page. Thou’rt a good boy; this secrecy of thine shall be a tailor to thee, and shall make thee a new doublet and hose.—I’ll go hide me.

Mrs. Ford. Do so.—Go tell thy master, I am alone. Mistress Page, remember you your cue. [Exit Robin.

Mrs. Page. I warrant thee: if I do not act it, hit me.

[Exit Mrs. Page.

Mrs. Ford. Go to, then: we’ll use this unwholesome humidity, this gross watery pummion;—we’ll teach him to know turtledoves from jays.

Enter FALSTAFF.

Fal. Have I caught thee, my heavenly jewel? 2 Why, now let me die, for I have lived long enough: this is the period of my ambition. O this blessed hour! Mrs. Ford. O, sweet sir John!

Fal. Mistress Ford, I cannot cog, I cannot prate, mistress Ford. Now shall I sin in my wish: I would thy husband were dead, I’ll speak it before the best lord, I would make thee my lady.

Mrs. Ford. I your lady, sir John? alas, I should be a pitiful lady.

Fal. Let the court of France show me such another. I see how thine eye would emulate the diamond: thou hast the right arched beauty of the brow, that becomes the ship-tire, the tire-vivalent, or any tire of Venetian admittance.

Mrs. Ford. A plain kerchief, sir John: my brows become nothing else; nor that well neither.

Fal. By the Lord, thou art a tyrant to say so: thou wouldst make an absolute curier; and the firm fixture of thy foot would give an excellent motion to thy gait in a semi-circled farthingale. I see what thou wilt, if fortune thy foe were not, 4 nature thy friend: come, thou canst not hide it.

Mrs. Ford. Believe me, there’s no such thing in me.

Fal. What made me love thee? let that persuade thee, there’s something extraordinary in thee. Come: I cannot cog, and say thou hast this and that, like a master from the Italian muschetto. a little hawk. 5 A Jack, or, puppet thrown at as a mark, in Lent. 6 A line from Sidney’s Astrea and Stella. 7 If fortune were not thy foe.
many of these limping haw-thorn buds, that come like women in men's apparel, and smell like Bucklersbury in simple-time: I cannot; but I love thee, none but thee, and thou deservest it.

Mrs. Ford. Do not betray me, sir. I fear, you love mistress Page.

Fal. Thou might'st as well say, I love to walk by the Counter-gate, which is as hateful to me as the reek of a lime-kin.

Mrs. Ford. Well, heaven knows how I love you; and you shall one day find it.

Fal. Keep in that mind; I'll deserve it.

Mrs. Ford. Nay, I must tell you, so you do, or else I could not be in that mind.

Rob. [Within.] Mistress Ford! mistress Ford! here's mistress Page at the door, swearing, and blowing, and looking wildly, and would needs speak with you presently.

Fal. She shall not see me. I will ensnose me behind the arras.

Mrs. Ford. Pray you, do so: she's a very tattling woman.—[FALSTAFF hides himself.]

Enter Mistress Page and Robin.

Mrs. Page. O mistress Ford! what have you done?

Mrs. Ford. Why, alas! what's the matter?

Mrs. Page. Your husband's coming hither, woman, with all the officers in Windsor, to search for a gentleman, that he says, is here now in the house, by your consent, to take an ill advantage of his absence. You are undone.

Mrs. Ford. 'Tis not so, I hope.

Mrs. Page. Pray heaven it be not so, that you have such a man here; but 'tis most certain your husband's coming, with half Windsor at his heels, to search for such a one; I come before to tell you. If you know yourself clear, why I am glad of it; but if you have a friend here, convey, convey him out. Be not amazed; call all your senses to you: defend your reputation, or bid farewell to your good life ever.

Mrs. Ford. What shall I do?—There is a gentleman, my dear friend; and I fear not mine own shame, so much as his peril: I had rather a thousand pounds he were out of the house.

Mrs. Ford. For shame! never stand "you had rather," and "you had rather:" your husband's here at hand: bethink you of some conveyance: in the house you cannot hide him. —O, how have you deceived me! —Look, here is a basket: if he be of any reasonable stature, he may creep in here; and throw foul linen upon him, as if it were going to bucking: or, if it is whiting-time, send him by your two men to Datchet mead.

Mrs. Ford. He's too big to go in there. What shall I do?

Re-enter Falstaff.

Fal. Let me see it, let me see it! O, let me see it! I'll stay, I'll stay.—Follow your friend's counsel.—"I'll stay."
Ford. Ay, ay; I must bear it.

Eva. If there be any body in the house, and in the chambers, and in the coffers, and in the presser, heaven forgive my sins at the day of judgment.

Caius. By gar, nor I too: dere is no bodies.

Page. Fie, fie, master Ford! are you not ashamed?

What spirit, what devil suggests this imagination? I would not have your distemper in this kind for the wealth of Windsor Castle.

Ford. 'Tis my fault, master Page: I suffer for it. Eva. You suffer for a pad conscience: your wife is as honest, I wot, as I will desires among five thousand, and five hundred too.

Caius. By gar, I see 'tis an honest woman.

Ford. Well; I promised you a dinner.—Come, come, walk in the park: I pray you, pardon me; I will hereafter make known to you, why I have done this.—Come, wife;—come, mistress Page: I pray you pardon me; pray heartily, pardon me.

Page. Let's go in, gentlemen; but trust me, we'll mock him. I do invite you to-morrow morning to my house to breakfast; after, we'll a birding together: I have a fine hawk for the bush. Shall it be so?

Ford. Any thing.

Eva. If there is one, I shall make two in the company.

Caius. If there be one or two, I shall make-a de turdy.

Ford. Pray you go, master Page.

Eva. I pray you now, remembrance to-morrow on the lousy knave, mine Host.

Caius. Dat is good; by gar, vit all my heart.

Ford. A lousy knave! to have his gibes, and his mockeries.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—A Room in Page's House.

Enter Fenton and Anne Page.

Fent. I see, I cannot get thy father's love; Therefore, no more turn me to him, sweet Nan.

Anne. Alas! how then?

Fent. Why, thou must be thyself.

He doth object, I am too great of birth.
And that my state being gall'd with my expense,
I seek to heal it only by his wealth.
Beside these, other bars he lays before me,—
My riots past, my wild societies;
And tells me, 'tis a thing impossible
I should love thee, but as a property.

Anne. May be, he tells you true.

Fent. No, heaven so speed me in my time to come! Albiet, I will confess, thy father's wealth
Was the first motive that I woo'd thee, Anne:
Yet, wooing thee, I found thee of more value
Than stumps in gold, or sums in sealed bags;
And 'tis the very riches of thyself
That now I aim at.

Anne. Gentle master Fenton, let seek my father's love; still seek it, sir:
If opportunity and humblist suit
Cannot attain it, why then,—Hark yon hither.

[They talk apart.]

Enter Shallow, Slender, and Mrs. Quickly.

Skal. Break their talk, mistress Quickly, my vausman shall speak for himself.

Slen. I'll make a shaft or a bolt on 't. 'Slid, 'tis but venturing.

Skal. Bo dism'nd'y.

Slen. No, she shall not dism' me: I care not for that,—but that I am afoard.

Quick. Hark ye; master Slender would speak a word with you.

* Not in f. e.

Anne. I come to him.—This is my father's choice.

O, what a world of vile ill-favour'd faults
Looks handsome in three hundred pounds a year!

Quick. And how does good master Fenton? Pray you, a word with you.

Skal. She's coming; to her, coz. O boy! thou hast a father.

Slen. I had a father, mistress Anne: my uncle can tell you good jests of him.—Pray you, uncle, tell mistress Anne the jest, how my father stole two geese out of a pen, good uncle.

Skal. Mistress Anne, my cousin loves you.

Slen. Ay, that I do; as well as I love any women in Gloucestershire.

Skal. He will maintain you like a gentlewoman.

Slen. Ay, that I will, come cut and long-tail, under the degree of a 'quire.

Skal. He will make you a hundred and fifty pounds jointure.

Anne. Good master Shallow, let him woo for himself.

Skal. Marry, I thank you for it; I thank you for that good comfort. She calls you, coz: I'll leave you.

[Stands back.]

Anne. Now, master Slender.

Slen. Now, good mistress Anne.

Anne. What is your will?

Slen. My will? o'd's heartings! that's a pretty jest, indeed. I ne'er made my will yet, I thank heaven; I am not such a sickly creature, I give heaven praise.

Anne. I mean, master Slender, what would you with me?

Slen. Truly, for mine own part, I would little or nothing with you. Your father, and my uncle, have made motions: if it be my luck, so; if not, happy man be his dole. They can tell you how things go, better than I can: you may ask your father; here he comes.

Enter Page and Mistress Page.

Page. Now, master Slender!—Love him, daughter Anne.—Why, how now! what does master Fenton here?

You wrong me, sir, thus still to haunt my house; I told you, sir, my daughter is disposer'd of.

Fent. Nay, master Page, be not impatient.

Mrs. Page. Good master Fenton, come not to my child.

Page. She is no match for you.

Fent. Sir, will you hear me?

Page. No, good master Fenton.—Come, master Shallow;—come, son Slender;—in.—

Knowing my mind, you wrong me, master Fenton.

[Exeunt Page, Shallow, and Slender.]

Quick. Speak to mistress Page.

Fent. Good mistress Page, for that I love your daughter
In such a righteous fashion as I do,
Perforce, against all checks, rebukes, and manners,
I must advance the colours of my love,
And not retire: let me have your good will.

Anne. Good mother, do not marry me to yond' fool?

Mrs. Page. I mean it not; I seek you a better husband.

Quick. That's my master, master doctor.

Anne. Alas! I had rather be set quick i' the earth,
And bow'd to death with turnips.

Mrs. Page. Come, trouble not yourself. Good master Fenton,
I will not be your friend, nor enemy:
My daughter will I question how she loves you, And as I find her, so am I affected.
’Till then, farewell, sir: she must needs go in; Her father will be angry. [Exit Mrs. Page and Anne.
Fro. Farewell, gentle mistress.—Farewell, Nan.
Quick. This is my doing, now.—Nay, said I, will you cast away your child on a fool, and a physician? Look on, master Fenton.—This is my doing.
Ferd. I thank thee; and I pray thee, once to-night Give my sweet Nan this ring. There’s for thy pains. [Exit.
Quick. Now, heaven send thee good fortune! A kind heart he bath: a woman would run through fire and water for such a kind heart. But yet I would my master had mistress Anne; or I would master Slender had her; or, in sooth, I would master Fenton had her. I will do what I can for them all three, for so I have promised, and I’ll be as good as my word; but specially for master Fenton. Well, I must of another errand to sir John Falstaff from my two mistresses: what a beast am I to slack it. [Exit.

SCENE V.—A Room in the Garter Inn.

Enter Falstaff and Bardolph.

Fal. Go fetch me a quart of sack; put a toast in’t. [Exit Bardolph.] Have I lived to be carried in a basket, like a barrow of butcher’s offal, and to be thrown in the Thames? Well, if I be served such another trick, I’ll have my brains taken out, and buttered, and give them to a dog for a new year’s gift. The rogue alighted me into the river with as little remorse as if they would have drown’d a blind bitch’s puppies, fifteen ’t the litter; and you may know by my size, that I have a kind of alacrity in sinking: if the bottom were as deep as hell, I should down. I had been drowned, but that the shore was shelvy and shallow; a death that I abhor, for the water swells a man, and what a thing should I have been, when I had been swallowed! I should have been a mountain of mummy.

Re-enter Bardolph, with the wine.

Bard. Here’s your mistress Quickly, sir, to speak with you.

Fal. Come, let me pour in some sack to the Thames water; for my belly’s as cold, as if I had swallowed snow-balls for pills to cool the reins. Call her in.

Bard. Come in, sir.

Enter Mrs. Quickly.

Quick. By your leave.—I cry you mercy: give your worship good-norrow.

Fal. Take away these chalices. Go, brew me a pot of sack finely.

Bard. With eggs, sir?

Fal. Simple of itself; I’ll no pullet-sperm in my brewage.—[Exit Bardolph.]—How now?

Quick. In mercy, sir, I come to your worship from mistress Ford.

Fal. Mistress Ford! I have had ford enough: I was thrown into the ford: I have my belly full of ford.

Quick. Alas the day! good heart, that was not her fault: she does so take on with her men; they mistook their erection.

Fal. So did I mine, to build upon a foolish woman’s promises.

Quick. Weal, she laments, sir, for it, that it would sour your heart to see it. Her husband goes this morning a birding: she desires you once more to come to her between eight and nine. I must carry her word quickly: she’ll make you amends, I warrant you.

Fal. Well, I will visit her: tell her so; and bid her think, what a man is: let her consider his frailty, and then judge of my merit.

Quick. I will tell her.

Fal. Do so. Between nine and ten, say I must then. Quick. Eight and nine, sir.

Fal. Well, be gone: I will not miss her.

Quick. Peace be with you, sir. [Exit.

Fal. I marvel, I hear not of master Brook: he sent me word to stay within. I like his money well. O! here he comes.

Enter Ford.

Ford. Bless you, sir.

Fal. Now, master Brook; you come to know what hath passed between me and Ford’s wife?

Ford. That, indeed, sir John, is my business.

Fal. Master Brook, I will not lie to you. I was at her house the hour she appointed me.

Ford. And sped you, sir?

Fal. Very ill-favouredly, master Brook.

Ford. How so, sir? Did she change her determination?

Fal. No, master Brook; but the peaking cornuto her husband, master Brook, dwelling in a continual larum of jealousy, comes me in the instant of our encounter, after we had embraced, kissed, protested, and, as it were, spoke the prologue of our comedy; and at his heels a rabble of his companions, thither provoked and instigated by his distemper, and, forsooth, to search his house for his wife’s love.

Ford. What! while you were there?

Fal. While I was there.

Ford. And did he search for you, and could not find you?

Fal. You shall hear. As good luck would have it, comes in one mistress Page; gives intelligence of Ford’s approach; and by her invention, and Ford’s wife’s distraction, they conveyed me into a buck-basket.

Ford. A buck-basket!

Fal. By the Lord, a buck-basket; rammed me in with foul shirts and smocks, socks, foul stockings, and greasy napkins; that, master Brook, there was the rankest compound of villainous smell, that ever offended nostril.

Ford. And how long lay you there?

Fal. Nay, you shall hear, master Brook, what I have suffered, to bring this woman to evil for your good. Being thus crammed in the basket, a couple of Ford’s knaves, his hinds, were called forth by their mistress to carry me in the name of foul clothes to Datchet lane: there they were on their shoulders; met the jealous knave, their master, in the door, who asked them once or twice what they had in their basket. I quaked for fear, lest the lunatic knave would have searched it; but fate, ordaining he should be a cuckold, held his hand. Well; on went he for a search, and away went I for foul clothes. But mark the sequel, master Brook: I suffered the pangs of three several deaths: first, an intolerable fright, to be detected with a jealous rotten bell-wether: next, to be compassed, like a good bilbo, in the circumference of a peck, hilt to point, heel to head: and then, to be stopped in, like a strong distillation, with stinking clothes that fretted in their own grease: think of that,—a man of my kidney,—think of that; that am as subject to heat, as butter; a man of continual dissolution and thaw: it was a miracle, to escape suffocation. And in the height of this bath, when I was more than half stewed in grease, like a Dutch dish, to be thrown into the Thames, and cooled, in that sur se, like a horse shoe; think of that,—hissing hot,—think of that, master Brook.

Ford. In good sadness, sir, I am sorry that for my sake you have suffered all this. My suit, then, is desperate; you’ll undertake her no more?
SCENE I.—The Street.

Enter Mrs. Page, Mrs. Quickly, and William.

Mrs. Page. Is he at master Ford's already, think'st thou?

Quick. Sure he is, by this: or will be presently; but truly, he is very courageous mad about his throwing into the water. Mistress Ford desires you to come suddenly.

Mrs. Page. I'll be with her by and by: I'll but bring my young man here to school. Look, where his master comes; 'tis a playing day. I see.

Enter Sir Huon Evans.

How now, sir Hugh! no school to-day?

Eva. No; master Slender is got the boys leave to play.

Quick. Blessing of his heart!

Mrs. Page. Sir Hugh, my husband says, my son profits nothing in the world at his book: I pray you, ask him some questions in his accidence.

Eva. Come hither, William: hold up your head; come.

Mrs. Page. Come on, sirrah: hold up your head: answer your master; be not afraid.

Eva. William, how many numbers is in nouns?

Will. Two.

Quick. Truly, I thought there had been one number more, because they say, od's nouns.

Eva. Peace your tattlings!—What is fair, William?

Will. Fisher.

Quick. Pole-cats! there are fairer things than pole-cats, sure.

Eva. You are a very simplicity Ioman: I pray you, peace.—What is lapis, William?

Will. A stone.

Eva. And what is a stone, William?

Will. A pebble.

Eva. No, it is lapis: I pray you remember in your prain.

Will. Lapis.

Eva. That is good, William. What is he, William, that dose lend articles?

Will. Articles are borrowed of the pronoun; and be thus declined, Singulariter, nominativo, hic, hac, hoc. Eva. Nominativo, hig, hog, hog;—pray you, mark: genitivo, hypus. Well, what is your accusative case?

Will. Accusativo, hine.

Eva. I pray you, have your remembrance, child; accusativo, king, hang, hog.

Quick. Hang hog is Latin for bacon, I warrant you.

ACT IV.

Eva. Leave your prabbles, 'oman.—What is the fociave case, William?

Will. O-locativo, O.

Eva. Remember, William; fociave is, caret.

Quick. And that's a good root.

Eva. 'Oman, forbear.

Mrs. Page. Peace!

Eva. What is your genitave case plural, William?

Will. Genitave case?

Eva. Ay.

Will. Genitave, horum, harum, horum.

Quick. Vengeance of Jenny's case; fie on her!—Never name her child, if she be a whore.

Eva. For shame, 'oman!

Quick. You do ill to teach the child such words.—He teaches him to hick and to hack, which they will do fast enough of themselves; and to call horum,—fie upon you!

Eva. 'Oman, art thou lunatic? hast thou no understandings for thy cases, and the numbers and the genders? Thou art as foolish Christian creatures as I would desires.

Mrs. Page. Pr'ythee hold thy peace.

Eva. Show me now, William, some declensions of your pronouns.

Will. Forsooth, I have forgot.

Eva. It is qui, qua, quod; if you forget your qui, your qua, and your quod, you must be preeches*; Go your ways, and play; go.

Mrs. Page. He is a better scholar than I thought he was.

Eva. He is a good sprag* memory. Farewell, mistress Page.

Mrs. Page. Adieu, good sir Hugh. [Exit Sir Huon.] Get you home, boy.—Come, we stay too long.

SCENE II.—A Room in Ford's House.

Enter Falstaff and Mrs. Ford.

Ful. Mistress Ford, your sorrow hath eaten up my suffrrance. I see, you are obsequious in your love, and I profess requital to a hair's breadth: not only, Mrs. Ford, in the simple office of love, but in all the accoutrement, complement, and ceremony of it. But are you sure of your husband now?

Mrs. Ford. He's a birthing, sweet sir John.

Mrs. Page. [Within.] What hoa! gossip Ford! what hoa!

Mrs. Ford. Step into the chamber, sir John. [Exit Falstaff]
Enter Mrs. Page.

Mrs. Page. How now, sweetheart! who's at home besides yourself?

Mrs. Ford. Why, none but mine own people.

Mrs. Page. Indeed?

Mrs. Ford. No, certainly.—[Aside] Speak louder.

Mrs. Page. Truly, I am so glad you have nobody here.

Mrs. Ford. Why?

Mrs. Page. Why, woman, your husband is in his old house: he so takes on yonder with my husband; so rails against all married mankind; so curses all Eve's daughters, of what complexion soever; and so butts himself on the forehead, crying, "Peer-out, Peer-out!" that any madness I ever yet beheld seemed but tame-ness, civility, and patience, to this distemper he is in now. I am glad the fat knight is not here.

Mrs. Ford. Why, does he talk of him?

Mrs. Page. Of none but him; and sworn, he was carried out, the last time he searched for him, in a basket; protests to his husband he is now here, and hath drawn him and the rest of their company from their sport, to make another experiment of his suspicion. But I am glad the knight is not here; now he shall see his own folly.

Mrs. Ford. How near is he, mistress Page?

Mrs. Page. Hard by; at street end: he will be here anon.

Mrs. Ford. I am undone! the knight is here.

Mrs. Page. Why, then you are utterly shamed, and he's but a dead man. What a woman are you!—Away with him, away with him: better shame, than murder.

Mrs. Ford. Which way should he go? how should I bestow him? Shall I put him into the basket again?

Mrs. Page. Indeed, master Ford, this is not well; indeed.

Mrs. Ford. How might we disguise him?

Mrs. Page. Alas the day! I know not. There is so woman's gown big enough for him; otherwise, he might put on a hat, a muffler, and a kerchief, and so escape.

Mrs. Ford. What shall I do?—I'll creep up into the chimney.

Mrs. Ford. There they always use to discharge their biting-pieces. Creep into the kiln-hole.

Mrs. Page. Where is it?

Mrs. Ford. He will seek there, on my word. Neither press, coffer, chest, trunk, well, vault, but he hath an abstract for the remembrance of such places, and goes to them by his note; there is no hiding you in the house.

Mrs. Ford. I'll go out, then.

Mrs. Page. If you go out in your own semblance, you die, sir John. Unless you go out disguised,—

Mrs. Ford. How might we disguise him?

Mrs. Page. Alas the day! I know not. There is so woman's gown big enough for him; otherwise, he might put on a hat, a muffler, and a kerchief, and so escape.

Mrs. Ford. Good hearts, devise something: any extremity, rather than a mischief.

Mrs. Page. My maid's sultan, the fat woman of Brentford, has a gown above.

Mrs. Ford. On my word it will serve him; she's as big as he is: and there's her thrum'd hat, and her muffler too.—Run up, sir John.

Mrs. Ford. Go, go, sweet sir John: mistress Page and I will look some linen for your head.

Mrs. Page. Quick, quick: we'll come dress you straight: put on the gown the while. [Exit Falstaff.]

Mrs. Ford. I would my husband would meet him in this shape: he cannot abide the old woman of Brentford; he swears, she's a witch; forbade her my house, and hath threatened to beat her.

Mrs. Page. Heaven guide him to thy husband's cudgel, and the devil guide his cudgel afterwards!

Mrs. Ford. But is my husband coming?

Mrs. Page. Ay, in good sadness, is he; and talks of the basket too, however he hath had intelligence.

Mrs. Ford. We'll try that: for I'll appoint my men to carry the basket again, to meet him at the door with it, as they did last time.

Mrs. Page. Nay, but he'll be here presently: let's go dress him like the witch of Brentford.

Mrs. Ford. I'll first direct my men, what they shall do with the basket. Go up, I'll bring linen for him straight.

Mrs. Page. Hang him, dishonest varlet! we cannot amuse him enough.

We'll leave a proof, by that which we will do, Wives may be merry, and yet honest too: We do not act, that often jest and laugh; 'Tis old but true, "Still swine eat all the daff." [Exit.]

Re-enter Mrs. Ford, with two Servants.

Mrs. Ford. Go, sirs, take the basket again on your shoulders: your master is hard at door; if he bid you set it down, obey him. Quickly; despatch. [Exit.

1 Serv. Come, come, take it up.
2 Serv. Pray heaven, it be not full of knight again.
1 Serv. I hope not: I had as lief bear so much lead.

Enter Ford, Page, Shallow, Caius, and Sir Hugh Evans.

Ford. Ay, but if it prove true, master Page, have you any way then to unfool me again?—Set down the basket, villains.—Somebody call my wife.—Youth in a basket!—O you panderly rascals! there's a knot, a ging, a pack, a conspiracy against me: now shall the devil be shamed.—What, wife, I say? Come, come forth: behold what honest clothes you send forth to bleaching.

Page. Why, this passes! Master Ford, you are not to go loose any longer; you must be pinioned.

Evans. Why, this is lunatics: this is mad as a mad dog.

Skal. Indeed, master Ford, this is not well; indeed.

Enter Mrs. Ford.

Ford. So say I too, sir.—Come hither, mistress Ford; mistress Ford, the honest woman, the modest wife, the virtuous creature, that hath the jealous foil to her husband.—I suspect without cause, mistrees, do I?

Mrs. Ford. Heaven be my witness, you do, if you suspect me in any dishonesty.

Ford. Well said, braven-face; hold it out.—Come forth, sirrah. [Pulls the Clothes out, and throws them all over the stage.

Page. This passes!

Mrs. Ford. Are you not ashamed? let the clothes alone.

Ford. I shall find you anon.

Evans. 'Tis unreasonable. Will you take up your wife's clothes? Come away.

Ford. Empty the basket, I say.

Mrs. Ford. Why, man, why,—

Ford. Master Page, as I am a man, there was one conveyed out of my house yesterday in this basket—why may not he be there again? In my house I am sure he is: my intelligence is true; my jealousy is reasonable.—Pluck me out all the linen.

Mrs. Ford. If you find a man there, he shall die a flea's death. [All Clothes thrown out.]

Page. Here's no man.

Shall. By my fidelity, this is not well, master Ford; this wrongs you.

Evans. Master Ford, you must pr'y, and not follow the imaginations of your own heart: this is jealosies.

Ford. Well, he's not here I seek him.

Page. No, nor no where else out in your brain.

Ford. Help to search my house this one time: if I find not what I seek, show no colour for my extremity, let me for ever be your table-sport; let them say of me, "As jealous as Ford, that searched a hollow walnut for his wife's lemon." Satisfy me once more; once more search with me.

Mrs. Ford. What ha' you! mistress Page! come you, and the old woman, down; my husband will come into the chamber.

Ford. Old woman! What old woman's that?

Mrs. Ford. Why, it is my maid's aunt of Brentford.

Ford. A witch, a queen, an old oozening queen? Have I not forbid her my house? She comes of errands, does she? We are simple men; we do not know what's brought to pass under the profession of fortune-telling. She works by charms, by spells, by the figure, and such daubery as this is; beyond our element: we know nothing.—Come down, you witch, you hog you; come down I say.

Mrs. Ford. Nay, good, sweet husband.—Good gentlemen, let him not strike the old woman.

Enter Falstaff in Women's Clothes, led by Mrs. Page.

Mrs. Ford. Page. Come, mother Prat; come, give me your hand.

Ford. I'll prat her.—Out of my door, you witch! [beats him] you rag, you baggage, you poolecut, you ronyon! out! out! I'll conjure you, I'll fortune-tell you.

Mrs. Ford. Page. Are you not ashamed! I think, you have killed the poor woman.

Mrs. Ford. Nay, he will do it.—'T is a goodly credit for you.

Ford. Hang her, witch!

Evans. By yea and nay, I think, the 'oman is a witch indeed; I like not when a 'oman has a great peard; I spy a great peard under her mufler.

Ford. Will you follow, gentlemen? I beseech you, follow: see but the issue of my jealousy. If I cry out thus upon no trail, never trust me when I open again.

Mrs. Ford. Page. Trust me, he beat him most pitifully.

Mrs. Ford. Nay, by the mass, that he did not; he beat him most unpitifully, methought.

Mrs. Page. I'll have the cudgel hallowed, and hung on the altar; it hath done meritorious service.

Mrs. Ford. What think you? May we, with the warrant of womanhood, and the witness of a good conscience, pursue him with any farther revenge?

Mrs. Page. The spirit of wantonness, is, sure, scared out of him: if the devil have him not in feé simple, with fine and recovery, he will never, I think, in the way of waste, attempt us again.

Mrs. Ford. Shall we tell our husbands how we have served him?

Mrs. Page. Yes, by all means; if it be but to scrape the figures out of your husband's brains. If they can find in their hearts the poor unvirtuous fat knight shall be any farther afflicted, we two will still be the ministers.

Mrs. Ford. I'll warrant, they'll have him publicly shamed, and, methinks, there would be no period to the jest. Should he not be publicly shamed?

Mrs. Page. Come, to the forge with it, then shape it: I would not have things cool.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—A Room in the Garter Inn.

Enter Host and Bardolph.

Bardolph. Sir, the Gormans desire to have three of your horses: the duke himself will be to-morrow at court and they are going to meet him.

Host. What duke should that be, comes so secretly? I hear not of him in the court. Let me speak with the gentlemen; they speak English?

Bardolph. Ay, sir; I'll call them to you.

Host. They shall have my horses, but I'll make them pay; I'll sauce them: they have had my house a week at command; I have turned away my other guests: they must come off*; I'll saucen them. Come.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—A Room in Ford's House.

Enter Page, Ford, Mrs. Page, Mrs. Ford, and Sir Hugh Evans.

Evans. 'T is one of the pest discretions of a 'oman as ever I did look upon.

Page. And did he send you both these letters at an instant?

Mrs. Ford. Within a quarter of an hour.

Ford. Pardon me, wife. Henceforth do what thou wilt; I rather will suspect the sun with cold, Than thee with wantonness; now doth thy honour stand, in him that was of late a heretic, As firm as faith.

Page. 'T is well, 't is well; no more. Be not as extreme in submission, As in offence; But let our plot go forward: let our wives Yet once again, to make us public sport, Appoint a meeting with this old fat fellow, Where we may take him, and disgrace him for it.

Ford. There is no better way than that they spoke of.

Page. How? to send him word they'll meet him in the park at midnight? fie, fie! he'll never come.

Evans. You see, he has been thrown into the rivers, and has been grievously peaten, as an old 'oman; me thinks, there should be terrors in him, that he should not come; methinks, his flesh is punished, he shall have no desires.

Page. So think I too.

Mrs. Ford. Devise but how you'll use him when he comes, And let us two devise to bring him thither.

Mrs. Page. There is an old tale goes, that Herne the hunter, Sometimes a keeper here in Windsor forest, Doth all the winter time, at still midnight, Walk round about an oak, with great ragg'd horns; And there he blasts the trees, and takes* the cattle; And makes milch-kine yield blood, and shakes a chain In a most hideous and dreadful manner. You have heard of such a spirit; and well you know, The superstitious idle-headed eel Received, and did deliver to our age, This tale of Herne the hunter for a truth.

* Not in fo. * Lover; also used for mistress. * Pr. rogue, for serv't. * come down. * say; in f. a * possessions.
Scene V.—A Room in the Garder Inn.

Enter Host and Simple.

Host. What wouldst thou have, boor? what, thick-skinned? speak, breathe, discuss; brief, short, quick, snap,

Fra. Irregular.

B. To-pinch.

1. in f. e. 2 or in f. e. 3 Not in f. e.

Sim. Marry, sir, I come to speak with sir John Falstaff from master Slender.

Host. There's his chamber, his house, his castle, his standing-bed, and tuckele-bed: 'tis painted about with the story of the prodigal, fresh and new. Go, knock and call; he'll speak like an Anthropophaginian unto thee: knock, I say.

Sim. There's an old woman, a fat woman, gone up into his chamber: I'll be so bold as stay, sir, till she come down; I come to speak with her, indeed.

Host. Ha! a fat woman? the knight may be robbed: I'll call.—Bully knight! Bully sir John! speak from thy lungs military; art thou there? it is thine host, thine Ephesian, calls.

Ful. [Above.] How now, mine host?

Host. Here's a Bohemian Tartar, the coming down of thy fat woman. Let her descend, bully, let her descend: my chambers are honourable; fie! privacy! fie!

Enter Falstaff.

Ful. There was, mine host, an old fat woman even now with me, but she's gone.

Sim. Pray you, sir, was't not the wise woman of Brentford?

Ful. Ay, marry, was it, muscle-shell: what would you with her?

Sim. My master, sir, my master Slender, sent to her, seeing her go through the streets, to know, sir, whether one Nym, sir, that beguiled him of a chain, had the chain, or no.

Ful. I spake with the old woman about it.

Sim. And what says she, I pray, sir?

Ful. Marry, she says, that the very same man that beguiled master Slender of his chain, cozened him of it.

Sim. I would I could have spoken with the woman herself: I had other things to have spoken with her, too, from him.

Ful. What are they? let us know.

Host. Ay, come; quick.

Ful. You may not conceal them, sir.

Host. Conceal them, and thou diest.

Sim. Why, sir, they were nothing but about mistress Anne Page; to know, if it were my master's fortune to have her, or no.

Ful. 'Tis, 'tis his fortune.

Sim. What, sir?

Ful. To have her,—or no. Go; say, the woman told me so.

Sim. May I be bold to say so, sir?

Ful. Ay, sir, tike, who more bold?

Sim. I thank your worship. I shall make my master glad with these tidings. [Exit Simple.

Host. Thou art clerkly, thou art clerkly, sir John. Was there a wise woman with thee?

Ful. Ay, that there was, mine host; ohe, that hath taught me more wit than ever I learned before in my life: and I paid nothing for it neither, but was paid for my learning.

Enter Bardolph.

Bard. Out, alas, sir! cozenage; mere cozenage! Host. Where be my horses? speak well of them, varietto.

Bard. Run away with by the cozeners; for so soon as I came beyond Eton, they threw me off from behind one of them in a slough of mire; and set spurs, and away, like three German devils, three Doctor Faustuses.

Host. They are gone but to meet the duke, villain. Do not say, they be fled; Germans are honest men.
Enter Sir Hugh Evans.

Ev. Where is mine host?

Host. What is the matter, sir?

Ev. Have a care of your entertainments: there is a friend of mine come to town tells me, there is three cousin germands, that has cozened all the hostes of Readings, of Maidenhead, of Colebrook, of horses and money. I tell you for good will, look you: you are wise, and full of gibes and vilizing-stoogs, and 'tis not convenient you should be cozened. Fare you well. [Exit.]

Enter Doctor Caius.

Caius. Vere is mine Host de Jarrettire?

Host. Here, master doctor, in perplexity, and doubtful dilemma.

Caius. I cannot tell vat is dat; but it is tell-a me, dat you make grand preparation for a duke de Jarmany: by my troth, dere is no duke, dat de court is know to come. I tell you for good vill: adieu.

Host. Hue and cry, villain! go.—Assist me, knight; I am undone.—Fly, run, hue and cry, villain! I am undone!

[Exeunt Host and BARDOLPH.

Fal. I would all the world might be cozened, for I have been cozened and beaten too. If it should come to the ear of the court how I have been transformed, and how my transformation hath been washed and cudgelled, they would melt me out of my fat, drop by drop, and liquor fishermen's boots with me: I warrant, they would whip me with their fine wits, till I were as crestfallen as a dried pear. I never prospered since I forswore myself at primero. Well, if my mind were but long enough, I would pray and repent.

Enter Mistress Quickly.

Now, whence come you?

Quick. From the two parties, forsooth.

Fal. The devil take one party, and his dam the other, and so they shall be both bestowed. I have suffered more for their sakes, more, than the villainous inconstancy of man's disposition is able to bear.

Quick. And have not they suffered? Yes, I warrant; specially one of them: mistress Ford, good heart, is beaten black and blue, that you cannot see a white spot about her.

Fal. What tell'st thou me of black and blue? I was beaten myself into all the colours of the rainbow; and I was like to be apprehended for the witch of Brentford; but that my admirable dexterity of wit, my counterfeiting the action of an old woman, deliver'd me, the knave constable had set me i' the stocks, i' the common stocks, for a witch.

Quick. Sir, let me speak with you in your chamber; you shall hear how things go, and, I warrant, to your content. Here is a letter will say somewhat. Good hearts! what ado here is to bring you together. Sure, one of you does not serve heaven well, that you are so crossed.

Fal. Come up into my chamber. [Exeunt.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—A Room in the Garter Inn.

Enter Falstaff and Mrs. Quickly.

Fal. Pr'ythee, no more prattling;—go:—I'll hold.

SCENE VI.—Another Room in the Garter Inn.

Enter Fenton and Host.

Host. Master Fenton, talk not to me; my mind is heavy; I will give over all.

Fent. Yet hear me speak. Assist me in my purpose, And, as I am a gentleman, I'll give thee A hundred pound in gold more than thy loss. Host. I will hear you, master Fenton; and I will, at the least, keep your counsel.

Fent. From time to time I have acquainted you With the dear love I bear to fair Anne Page; Who, mutually, hath answer'd my affection (So far forth as herself might be her chooser) Even to my wish. I have a letter from her Of such contents as you will wonder at; The mirth whereof so larded with my matter, That neither, singly, can be manifested, Without the show of both:—wherein fat Falstaff Hath a great scene: the image of the jest

[Showing the Letter]

I'll show you here at large. Hark, good mine Host: To-night at Herne's oak, just 'twixt twelve and one, Must my sweet Nan present the fairy queen; The purpose why, is here; in which disguise, While other jests are something rank on foot, Her father hath commanded her to slip Away with Slender, and with him at Eton Immediately to marry: she hath consented. Now, sir, Her mother, even strong against that match, And firm for Dr. Caius, hath appointed That he shall likewise shuffle her away, While other sports are tasking of their minds, And at the deannery, where a priest attends, Straight marry her: to this her mother's plot She, seemingly obedient, likewise hath Made promise to the doctor.—Now, thus it rests: Her father means she shall be all in white; And in that habit, when Slender sees his time To take her by the hand, and bid her go, She shall go with him:—her mother hath intended, The better to denote her to the doctor, (For they must all be mask'd and vizarded) That quaint in green she shall be loose enrobe'd, With ribands pendant, flaring 'bout her head; And when the doctor spies his vantage ripe, To pinch her by the hand, and on that token The maid hath given consent to go with him. Host. Which means she to deceive? father or mother?

Fent. Both, my good host, to go along with me: And here it rests,—that you'll procure the vicar To stay for me at church 'twixt twelve and one, And in the lawful name of marrying, To give our hearts united ceremony. Host. Well, husband your device: I'll to the vicar Bring you the maid, you shall not lack a priest. Fent. So shall I evermore be bound to thee: Besides, I'll make a present recompense. [Exeunt]
Quick. I’ll provide you a chain, and I’ll do what I can to get you a pair of horns.

Fal. Away, I say; time wears; hold up your head, and mimic.

[Exit Mrs. Quickly.]

Enter Ford.

How now, master Brook! Master Brook, the matter will be known to-night or never. Be you in the Park about midnight, at Herne’s oak, and you shall see wonders.

Ford. Went you not to her yesterday, sir, as you told me you had appointed?

Fal. I went to her, master Brook, as you see, like a poor old man; but I came from her, master Brook, like a poor old woman. That same knave, Ford her husband, hath the finest mad devil of jealousy in him, master Brook, that ever governed fancy. I will tell you—He boat me grievously, in the shape of a woman; for, in the shape of a man, master Brook, I fear not Goliah with a weaver’s beam, because I know also, i.e. is a shuttle. I am in haste: go along with me; I’ll tell you all, master Brook. Since I plucked geese, played at draughts, and whipped top, I knew not what it was to be beaten, till lately. Follow me: I’ll tell you strange things of this knave Ford, on whom to-night I will be revenged, and I will deliver his wife into your hand.—Follow. Strange things in hand, master Brook: follow.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—Windsor Park.

Enter Page, Shallow, and Selden.

Page. Come, come: we’ll couch i’ th’ castle-ditch, till we see the light of our fairies.—Remember, son Selden, my daughter.

Selden. Ay, forsooth; I have spoke with her, and we have a say-word, how to know one another. I come to her in white, and cry “mum!” she cries, “budget,” and by that we know one another.

Skal. That’s good too; but what needs either your “mum,” or her “budget?” the white will decipher her well enough.—It hath struck ten o’clock.

Page. The night is dark; light and spirits will become it well. Heaven prosper our sport! No man means evil but the devil, and we shall know him by his horns. Let’s away; follow me.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—The Street in Windsor.

Enter Mrs. Page, Mrs. Ford, and Dr. Caius.

Mrs. Page. Master Doctor, my daughter is in green: when you see your time, take her by the hand, and away with her to the deanery, and dispatch it quickly. Go before into the park: we two must go together.

Caius. I know vat I have to do. Adieu.

Mrs. Page. Fare you well, sir. [Exit Caius.] My husband will not rejoice so much at the abuse of Falstaff, as he will chafe at the doctor’s marrying my daughter: but it is no matter; better a little chiding, than a great deal of heart-break.

Mrs. Ford. Where is Nan now, and her troop of fairies? and the Welch devil, Evans?"

Mrs. Page. They are all couched in a pit hard by Herne’s oak, with the obscured lights; which, at the very instant of Falstaff’s and our meeting, they will at once display to the night.

Mrs. Ford. That cannot choose but amaze him.

Mrs. Page. If he be not amazed, he will be mocked; if he be amazed, he will every way be mocked.

Mrs. Ford. We’ll betray him finely.

Mrs. Page. Against such lowdsters, and their leechery,

Those that betray them do no treachery.

Mrs. Ford. The hour draws on: to the oak, to the oak!

[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—Windsor Park.

Enter Sir Hugh Evans, and Fairies.

Evans. Trib, trib, fairies: come; and remember your parts. Be bold, I pray you; follow me into the pit, and when I give the watch-ords, do as I bid you. Come, come; trib, trib.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE V.—Another Part of the Park.

Enter Falstaff, disguised, with a Buck’s Head on.

Fal. The Windsor bell hath struck twelve; the minute draws on. Now, the hot-blooded gods assist me!—remember, Jove, thou wast a bull for thy Europa; love set on thy horns.—O powerful love! that, in some respects, makes a beast a man, in some other, a man a beast.—You were also, Jupiter, a swan, for the love of Leda: O, omnipotent love! how near the crown to the common place!—A fault done first in the form of a beast;—O Jove, a beastly fault! and then another fault in the semblance of a fowl: think on’t, Jove; a foul fault. When gods have hot backs, what shall poor men do? For me, I am here a Windsor stag; and the fattenet, I think, i.e. the forest: send me a cool rut-time, Jove, or who can blame me to piss my tallow? Who comes here? my doe?

Enter Mrs. Ford and Mrs. Page.

Mrs. Ford. Sir John? art thou there, my deer? my male deer?

Fal. My doe with the black scut?—Let the sky rain potatoes; let it thunder to the tune of “Green Sleeves;” hail kissing-comfits, and snow eringoes; let there come a tempest of provocation, I will shelter me here.

[Embracing her.]

Mrs. Ford. Mistress Page is come with me, sweet-heart.

Fal. Divide me like a bribe-buck; each a haunch: I will keep my sides to myself, my shoulders for the fellow of this walk, and my horns I bequeath to my husbands. Am I, a woodman? ha! Speake I like Herne the hunter?—Why, now is Cupid a child of conscience; he makes restitution. As I am a true spirit, welcome.

[Noise within.]

Mrs. Page. Alas! what noise?

Mrs. Ford. Heaven forgive our sins!

Fal. What should this be?

Mrs. Page. Away, away!

Mrs. Page. I. [They run off.]

Fal. I think, the devil will not have me damned, lest the oil that is in me should set hell on fire; he would never else cross me thus.

Enter Sir Hugh Evans, like a Satyr; Mrs. Quickly, and Pistoll; Anne Page, as the Fairy Queen, attended by her brother and others, dressed like fairies, with wazon tapets on their heads.

Queen. Fairies, black, grey, green, and white, You moonshine revellers, and shades of night, You orphan-heirs of fixed destiny, Attend your office, and your quality, Crier Hohobin, make the fairy gossop. Past. Elses, list your names: silence, you airy toys! Cricket, to Windsor chimneys when thoust leap, Where fires thou find’st unask’d, and hearths unswept, There pinch the maid’s as blue as bilberry: Our radiant queen hates sluts, and sluttury.

Fal. They are fairies; he, that speaks to them, shall die:

[To himself.]

1 Walk (musingly.)  Hugh : in f. e.  Buck sent for a bride.  shall thou leap.  Not in f. e.
I’ll wink and couch. No man their works must play.

[Lies down upon his face.

Eva. Where’s Bess?—Go you, and where you find a mad;
That, ere she sleep, has thrice her prayers said,
Rouse 1 up the organs of her fancy;
Sleep she as sound as careless infancy;
But those that 2 sleep, and think not on their sins,
Pinch them, arms, legs, backs, shoulders, sides, and shins.

Queen. About, about! Search Windsor castle, elves, within and out:
Strew good luck, 0, on every sacred room,
That it may stand till the perpetual doom,
In state as wholesome, as in state it is fit;
Worthy the owner, and the owner it.
The several chairs of order look you sore
With juice of balm, and every precious flower:
Each fair instalment, coat, and several crest,
With loyal blazon, ever more be blest.
And nightly, meadow-fairies, look you sing,
Like to the Garter’s compass, in a ring:
Th’ expresse that it bears, green let it be,
More fertile-free than all the field to see;
And, Honi soit qui mal y pense, write,
In emerald tufts, flowers purple, blue, and white;
Like sapphire, pearl, and rich embroidery,
Buckled below fair knighthood’s bending knee:
Fairies, use flowers for their charactery.
Away! I dispense! but, till it’s one o’clock,
Our dance of customs, round about the oak
Of Herne the hunter, let us not forget.

Eva. Look hand in hand; yourselves in order set;
And twenty glow-worms shall our lanterns be,
To guide our measure round about the tree.
But, stay! I smell a man of middle earth.

Fal. Heavens defend me from that Welsh fairy, lest
He transform me to a piece of cheese!

Pist. Vile worm, thou wast o’erlook’d 4 even in thy birth.

Queen. With trial-fire touch me his finger-end:
If he be chaste, the flame will baak descend,
And turn him to no pain; but if he start,
It is the flesh of a corrupted heart.

Pist. A trial I come.

Eva. Come, will this wood take fire?

[Fal. They burn him with their taper.

Fal. Oh, oh, oh!

Queen. Corruption, corrupt, and tainted in desire!
About him, fairies, sing a scornful rhyme;
And, as you trip, still pinch him to your time.

SONG, by one.

Fie on sinful fantasy!
Fie on lust and luxury!
Last is but a bloody fire,
Kindled with unchaste desire.
Fed in heart; whose flames aspire,
As thoughts do blow them higher and higher.

Crook’d.
Pinch him, fairies, mutually;
Pinch him for his villainy;
Pinch him, and burn him, and turn him about;
Till candles, and star-light, and moon-shine be out.

During this song, the fairies pinch Falstaff: Doctor Caius comes one way, and steals away a fairy in green;
Slender another way, and takes off a fairy in white;
and Fenton comes, and steals away Anne Page.
A noise of hunting is made within.
All the fairies run away.

Falstaff pulls off his buck’s head, and rises.

Enter Page, Ford, Mrs. Page, and Mrs. Ford. They lay hold of him.

Page. Nay, do not fly: I think, we have match’d you now.

Will none but Herne the hunter serve your turn?

Mrs. Page. I pray you come; hold up the jest no higher.

Now, good Sir John, how like you Windsor wives?

FORD. Nay, sir, who’s a cuckold now!—Master Brook, Falstaff’s a knave, a cuckoldly knave; here are his horns, master Brook; and, master Brook, he hath enjoyed nothing of Ford’s but his buck-basket, his eudgel, and twenty pounds of money, which must be paid to master Brook: his horses are arrested for it, master Brook.

Mrs. Ford. Sir John, we have had ill-luck; we could never meet. I will never take you for my love again, but I will always count you my deer.

Fal. I do begin to perceive, that I am made am ass.
Ford. Ay, and an ox too; both the proofs are extant.

Fal. And these are not fairies! I was three or four times in the thought, they were not fairies; and yet the guiltiness of my mind, the sudden surprise of my powers, drove the grossness of the folly into a received belief; in despite of the teeth of all rhyme and reason, that they were fairies. See now, how wit may be made a Jack-a-lent, when ’t is upon ill employment!

Eva. Sir John Falstaff, serve Got, and leave your desires, and fairies will not pine you.

Ford. Well said, fairy Hugh.

Eva. And leave you your jealousies too, I pray you.

Ford. I will never mistrust my wife again, till thou art able to woo her in good English.

Fal. Have I laid my brain in the sun, and dried it, that it wants matter to prevent so gross o’er-reaching as this? Am I ridden with a Welch goat too? shall I have a coxcomb of frize? ’Tis time I were choked with a piece of toasted cheese.

Eva. Sceese is not good to giveputer: your pelly is all putter.

Fal. Sceese and putter! have I lived to stand at the taunt of one that makes fritters of English? This is enough to be the decay of lust, and late-walking, through the realm.

Mrs. Page. Why, Sir John, do you think, though we would have thrust virtue out of our hearts by the head and shoulders, and have given ourselves without scruple to hell, that ever the devil could have made you our delight?

Ford. What, a hog-pudding? a bag of flax?

Mrs. Page. A puff’d man?

Page. Old, oold, withered, and of intolerable entrails!

Ford. And one that is as slanderous as Satan?

Page. And as poor as Job?

Ford. And as wicked as his wife?

Eva. And given to fornicators, and to taverns, and sack, and wine, and meathgins, and to drinkings, and sweatings, and starings, pribbles and prabbles?

Fal. Well, I am your theme: you have the start of me; I am dejected; I am not able to answer the Welch flannel. Ignorance itself is a plummet o’er me. use me as you will.

Ford. Marry, sir, we’ll bring you to Windsor, to one master Brook, that you have ooened of money, to whom you should have been a pander: over and above

1 rise: in f. e. 2 as: in f. e. 3 Not in f. e. 4 Bewitched 5 Malone adds, from the quarto: — Eva. It is right, indeed, he is full of

...
that you have suffered, I think, to repay that money will be a biting affliction.1

Page. Yet be cheerful, knight: thou shalt eat a pos-et to-night at my house; where I will desire thee to laugh at my wife, that now laughs at thee. Tell her, master Slender hath married her daughter.

Mrs. Page. Doctors doubt that: if Anne Page be my daughter, she is, by this, doctor Caius’ wife. [Aside.

Enter Slender, crying.

Slac. Whoo, ho! ho! father Page!
Page. Son, how now! how now, son! have you despached?

Slac. Despatched!—I’ll make the best in Gloucetershire know on’t; would I were hanged, la, else.

Page. Of what, son?

Slac. I came yonder at Eton to marry mistress Anne Page, and she’s a great lubberly boy: if it had not been i’ the church, I would have swung him, or he should have swung me. If I did not think it had been Anne Page, would I might never stir, and ’tis a post-master’s boy.

Page. Upon my life, then, you took the wrong.

Slac. What need you tell me that? I think so, when I took a boy for a girl: if I had been married him, for all he was in woman’s apparel, I would not have had him.

Page. Why, this is your own folly. Did not I tell you how you should know my daughter by her garments?

Slac. I went to her in white, and cried “mum,” and she cried “budget,” as Anne and I had appointed;
and yet it was not Anne, but a post-master’s boy.

Mrs. Page. Good George, be not angry: I knew of your purpose; turned my daughter into green; and, indeed, she is now with the doctor at the deanery, and there married.

Enter Doctor Caius.

Caius. Vere is mistress Page? By gar, I am cozened; I ha’ married un garson, a boy; un poiser, by pr. a boy: it is not Anne Page; by gar, I am cozened.

Mrs. Page. Why, did you take her in green?

1 The quarto here have—

Mrs. Ford. Nay, husband, let that go to make amends:

Farewell that am and so we’ll all be friends.

Ford. Well, here ’s my hand: all ’s forgiven at last.

Ful. It hath cost me well: I have been well pinched and wash’d.

Ford. This is strange. Who hath got the right Anne?

Page. My heart misgives me. Here comes master
Fenton.

Enter Fenton and Anne Page.

How now, master Fenton! [They kneel.

Anne. Pardon, good father! good my mother, pardon.

Page. Now, mistress; how chance you went not with master Slender?

Mrs. Page. Why went you not with master doctor,
maid?

Fent. You do amaze her: hear the truth of it.
You would have married her most shamefully,
Where there was no proportion held in love.
The truth is, she and I, long since contracted,
Are now so sure, that nothing can dissolve us.
The offence is holy that she hath committed;
And this deceit loses the name of craft,
Of disobedience, or undutious guile.2
Since therein she doth evitate and shun
A thousand irreligious cursed hours,
Which forced marriage would have brought upon her.

Ford. Stand not amas’d: here is no remedy.—
In love, the heavens themselves do guide the state:

Money buys lands, and wives are sold by fate.

Ful. I am glad, though you have ta’en a special stand to strike at me, that your arrow hath glanced.

Page. Well, what remedy? Fenton, heaven give thee joy.

What cannot be sechow’d must be embrac’d.

Ful. When night-dogs run, all sorts of deer are chas’d.

Mrs. Page. Well, I will muse no farther.—Master
Fenton,

Heaven give you many, many merry days.—
Good husband, let us every one so home,
And laugh this sport o’er by a country fire;
Sir John and all.

Ford. Let it be so.—Sir John,
To master Brook you yet shall hold your word;
For he, to-night, shall lie with mistress Ford. [Exeunt.

SCENE, Vienna.

ACT I.

_Duke, Escalus, Lords, and Attendants._

_Enter Duke, Escalus, Lords, and Attendants._

_Duke._ Escalus!

_Escal._ My lord.

_Duke._ Of government the properties to unfold,
Would seem in me 't affect speech and discourse;
Since I am apt to know, that your own science
Exceeds, in that, the limits of all advice
My strength can give you: then, no more remains,
But add* to your sufficiency your worth,*
And let them work. The nature of our people,
Our city's institutions, and the terms
For common justice, ye² are as pregnant in
As art and practice hath enriched any
That we remember. There is our commission,

_Giving it.*

From which we would not have you warp.—Call hither,
I say, bid come before us Angelo.—_Exit an Attendant._

What figure of us think you he will bear?
For, you must know, we have with special soul
Elected him our absence to supply,
Lent him our terror, drest him with our love,
And given his deputation all the organs
Of our own power. What think you of it?

_Escal._ If any in Vienna be cf worth
To undergo such ample grace and honour,
It is lord Angelo.

_Enter Angelo._

_Look, where he comes._

_Ang._ Always obedient to your grace's will,
I come to know your pleasure.

_Duke._ Angelo,

_There is a kind of character in thy life,
That to th' observer, doth thy history
Fully unfold. Thyself and thy belongings
Are not thine own so proper, as to waste
Thyself upon thy virtues, them on thee.

* not : in f. e ² that : un f. e ³ as your worth is able : in f. e ⁴ Not in f. e. ⁵ interest. ⁶ Not in f. e.
I'll privately away: I love the people,
But do not like to stage me to their eyes.
Though it do well, I do not relish well
Their loud applause, and over vehement,
Nor do I think the man of safe discretion,
That does affect it. Once more, fare you well.

Ang. The heavens give safety to your purposes!
Exeunt. Lead forth, and bring you back in happiness.

Doz. I thank you. Fare you well. [Exit.
Exeunt. I shall desire you, sir, to give me leave
To have free speech with you; and it concerns me
To look into the bottom of my place:
A power I have, but of what strength and nature
I am not yet instructed.

Ang. 'Tis so with me. Let us withdraw together,
And we may soon our satisfaction have Touching that point.
Exeunt. I'll wait upon your honour. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—A Street.

Enter Lucio and two Gentlemen.

Lucio. If the duke, with the other dukes, come not in procession with the king of Hungary, why then, all the dukes fall upon the king.

1 Gent. Heaven grant us its peace, but not the king of Hungary's.

2 Gent. Amen.

Lucio. Thou conclu'st like the sanctimonious pirate, that went to sea with the ten commandments, but scraped one out of the table.

2 Gent. Thou shalt not steal?

Lucio. Ay, that he razed.

1 Gent. Why? 'Twas a commandment to command the captain and all the rest from their functions: they put forth to steal. There's not a soldier of us all, that, the thanksgiving before meat, doth relish the petition well that prays for peace.

2 Gent. I never heard any soldier dislike it.

Lucio. I believe thee; for, I think, thou never wast where grace was said.

1 Gent. No? a dozen times at least.

1 Gent. What, in metre?

Lucio. In any proportion, or in any language.

1 Gent. I think, or in any religion.

Lucio. Ay: why not? Grace is grace, despite of all excess: as for example; thou thyself art a wicked rascal, despite of all grace.

1 Gent. Well, there went but a pair of shears be ween us.

Lucio. I grant; as there may between the lists and the velvet: thou art the list.

1 Gent. And thou the velvet? thou art good velvet:
when a three-piled piece, I warrant thee. I had as began a list of an English kersey, as be pil'd, as thou pil'd, for a French velvet. Do I speak feelingly?

Lucio. I thing thou dost; and, indeed, with most painful feeling of thy speech: I will, out of thine own observation, learn to begin thy health; but, whilst I foresteer to drink after thee.

1 Gent. I think, I have done myself wrong, have I not?

1 Gent. Yea, that thou hast, whether thou art wasted, or free.

Lucio. Behold, behold, where madam Mitigation vows,

I Gent. I have purchased as many diseases under her roof, as come to—

1: Do remove the interrogation (?) giving way an emphatic sense only. 2: A quibble upon dolours. 3: Not in f. e.
SCENE III.—The Same.

Enter Provost, Claudio, and Officers. 1

Claud. Fellow, why dost thou show me thus to th' world?

Bear me to prison, where I am committed.

Prov. I do it not in evil disposition,
But from lord Angelo by special charge.

Claud. Thus can the demi-god, authority,
Make us pay down for our offence by weight.—
The words of heaven;—on whom it will, it will;
On whom it will not, so: yet still 'tis just.

Enter Lucio and two Gentlemen. 2

Lucio. Why, how now, Claudio? whose comes this restraint?

Claud. From too much liberty, my Lucio, liberty:
As surfeit is the father of much fast,
So every scape by the immoderate use
Turns to restraint. Our natures do pursue,
Like rats that rav'n down their proper bane,
A thirsty evil, and when we drink, we die.

Lucio. If I could speak so wisely under an arrest, I would yield for certain of my creditors. And yet, to say the truth, I had as lief have the forfeiture of freedom, as the morality of imprisonment.—What's thy offence, Claudio?

Claud. What but to speak of would offend again.

Lucio. What is it? murder?

Claud. No.

Lucio. Lechery?

Claud. Call it so.

Prov. Away, sir! you must go.

Lucio. One word, good friend.—Lucio, a word with you.

[takes him aside.

Lucio. A hundred, if they'll do you any good.—Is lechery so look'd after?

Claud. Thus stands it with me:—Upon a true contract,
I got possession of Julietta's bed:
You know the lady; she is fast my wife,
Save that we do the pronunciation 3 lack
Of outward order: this we came not to,
Only for procuration 4 of a dowry.
Remaining in the coffers of her friends,
From whom we thought it meet to hide our love,
Till time had made them for us. But it chances,
The stealth of our most mutual entertainment
With character too gross is writ on Juliet.

Lucio. With child, perhaps?

Claud. Unhappily, even so.

And the new deputy now for the duke,—
Whether it be the fault and glimpse of newness,
Or whether that the body public be
A horse whereon the governor doth ride,
Who, newly in the seat, that it may know
He can command, lets it straight feel the spur;
Whether the tyranny be in his place,
Or in his eminence that fills it up,
I stagger in;—but this new governor
Awakes me all the enrolled penalties,
Which have, like unsecur'd armour, hung by the wall,
So long, that nineteen zodiacs have gone round,
And none of them been worn; and, for a name,
Now puts the drowsey and neglected act
Freshly on me:—'tis surely for a nae.

Claud. I warrant it is; and thy head stands so tickle on thy shoulders, that a milk-maid, if she be i love, may sigh it off. Send after the duke, and appo him.

Claud. I have done so, but he's not to be found.

I pry'thee, Lucio, do me this kind service.

This day my sister should the cloister enter,

And there receive her approbation:

Acquaint her with the danger of my state;

Implore her, in my voice, that she make friends
To the strict deputy; bid herself essay him:

I have great hope in that; for in her youth

There is a prone and speechless dialect,

Such as moves men: beside, she hath prosperous art,

When she will play with reason and discourse,
And she can well persuade.

Lucio. I pray, she may: as well for the encouragement of the like, which else would stand under grievou imposition, as for the enjoying of thy life, who I wou be sorry should be thus foolishly lost at a game of tuck
' tac: I'll to her.

Claud. I thank you, good friend Lucio.

Lucio. Within two hours.

Claud. Come, officer; away! 3

SCENE IV.—A Monastery.

Enter Duke, and Friar Thomas.

Duke. No, holy father; throw away that thought:

Believe not that the dribbling datt of love

Can pierce a complete bosom. Why I desire thee

To give me secret harbour hath a purpose

More grave and wrinkled, than the aims and ends

Of burning youth.

Fri. May your grace speak of it?

Duke. My holy sir, none better knows than you

How I have ever lov'd the life remov'd;

And held in idle price to haunt assemblies,

Where youth, and cost, and witless bravery keeps.

I have deliver'd to lord Angelo

(A man of stricture, and firm abstinence)

My absolute power and place here in Vienna,

And he suppose me travel'd to Poland;

For so I have strov'd it in the common ear,

And so it is receiv'd. Now, pious sir,

You will demand of me, why I do this?

Fri. Gladly, my lord.

Duke. We have strict statutes, and most biting law
(The needful bits and curbs to head-stong steeds a)
Which for this fourteen years we have let sleep;

Even like an o'er-grown lion in a cave,

That goes not out to prey: now, as fond fathers,

Having bound up the threatening twigs of birch

Only to stick it in their children's sight;

For terror, not to use, in time the rod a 16

More mock'd than feared; so our most just decrees,

Dead to infliction, to themselves are dead,

And liberty plucks justice by the nose;

The baby beats the nurse, and quite atwartz

Goes all decorum.

Fri. It rested in your grace

To unloose this tied-up justice, when you pleas'd;

And it in you more dreadful would have seem'd,

Than in lord Angelo.

Duke. I fear, too dreadful:

Sith 't was my fault to give the people scope,
'T would be my tyranny to strike and gall them

For what I bid them do: for we bid this be done,
When evil deeds have their permissive pass,
And do not punishment. Therefore, indeed, my father,
I have cause to apprehend the office,
Who may, in th' ambush of my name, strike home,
And yet my nature never in the sight,
To draw on slander. And to behold his sway,
I will, as 'twere a brother of your order,
Visit both prince and people: therefore, I pr'ythee,
Supply me with the habit, and instruct me
How I may formally in person bear me
Like a true friar. More reasons for this action,
Are our more least; you will render you;
Only this one:—Lord Angelo is precise;
Smarts at a guard with envy; scarce confesses
That his blood flows, or that his appetite
Is more to bread than stone: hence shall we see,
If perforce change purpose, what our seemers be. [Exit.

SCENE V.—A Nunnery.

Enter Isabella and Francisca.

Isab. And have you nuns no farther privileges?
Frac. As far as those large enclosures,
Isab. Yes, truly: I speak not as desiring more,
But rather wishing a more strict restraint
Upon the sisterhood, the votaries of saint Clare.
Lucio. [Within.] Ho! Peace be in this place!
Isab. Who's that which calls?
Frac. It is a man's voice. Gentle Isabella,
Turn you the key, and know his business of him:
You may, I may not; you are yet unaworn.
When you have vowed, you must not speak with men,
But in the presence of the prioresse:
Then, if you speak, you must not show your face;
Or, if you show your face, you must not speak.

[Lucio calls.

He calls again: I pray you, answer him.

[Exeunt Francisca.

Isab. Peace and prosperity! Who is't that calls?

Enter Lucio.

Lucio. Hal! virgin, if you be, as those cheek-roses
Pretend you are no less, can you so stead me,
As bring me to the sight of Isabella,
She, if this place, and this fair sister,
So unhappy brother Claudio?
Isab. Why her unhappy brother! let me ask,
The rather, for I now must make you know
I am that Isabella, and his sister.
Lucio. Gentle and fair, your brother kindly greets you.

Set to be wearsy with you, he's in prison.
Isab. Woe me! for what?
Lucio. For that, which, if myself might be his judge,
Be should receive his punishment in thanks.
Isab. So hath got his friend with child.
Isab. Sir, make me not so scorn'd, sir.
Lucio. 'Tis true. I would not, though 'tis my fa-

Isab. You do blaspheme the good in mocking me.
Lucio. Do not believe it. Fowness and truth, 'tis thus:
Your brother and his lover have embraced:
As those that feed grow full; as blossoming time,
That from the seeding the bare fallow brings
To teeming foison. even so her plenteous womb
Expresseth his full tillth and husbandry.
Isab. Some one with child by him?—My cousin Juliet?
Lucio. Is she your cousin?
Isab. Adoptedly; as school-maids change their names
By vain though apt, affection.
Lucio. She it is.
Isab. O! let him marry her.
Lucio. This is the point.

The duke, who's very strangely gone from hence,
Bore many gentlemen, myself being one,
In hand and hope of action; but we do learn,
By those that know the very nerves of state,
His givings out were of an infinite distance
From his true-mean'd design. Upon his place,
And with full line of his authority,
Governor: lord Angelo; a man whose blood
Is very snow-broth; one who never feels
The wanton stings and motions of the sense,
But doth rebate and blunt his natural edge
With profits of the mind, study and fast.
He (to give fear to use and liberty,
Which have for long run by the hideous law,
As mice by lions,) hath picked out an act,
Under whose heavy sense your brother's life
Falls into forfeit: he arrests him on it,
And follows close the rigor of the statute,
To make him an example. All hope is gone,
Unless you have the grace by your fair prayer
To soften Angelo; and that's my pith
Of business 'twixt you and your poor brother.
Isab. Doth he so seek his life?
Lucio. Hath censur'd him
Already; and, as I hear, the provost hath
A warrant for his execution.
Isab. Alas! want poor ability's in me
To do him good?
Lucio. Essay the power you have.
Isab. My power, alas! I doubt.
Lucio. Our doubts are traitors,
And make us lose the good we oft might win,
By fearing to attempt. Go to lord Angelo,
And let him learn to know, when maidens sue,
Men give like gods; but when they weep and kneel,
All their petitions are as freely theirs
As they themselves would owe them.
Isab. I'll see what I can do.
Lucio. But speedily.
Isab. I will about it straight,
No longer staying but to give the mother
Notice of my affair. I humbly thank you:
Commend me to my brother; soon at night
I'll send him certain word of my success.
Lucio. I take your leave of you.
Isab. Good sir, adieu. [Exit.
ACT II.

SCENE I.—A Hall in Angelo’s House.

Enter Angelo, Escalus, a Justice, Officers, and other Attendants.

Ang. We must not make a scare-crow of the law, Setting it up to fear the birds of prey, And let it keep one shape, till custom make it Their perch, and not their terror.

Escal. Ay, but yet Let us be seen, and rather cut a little, Than fall, 1 and bruis’d to death. Alas! this gentleman, Whom I would save, had a most noble father, Let but your honour know, (Whom I believe to be most strait in virtue,) That, in the working of your own affections, Had time coher’d with place, or place with wishing, Or that the resolute acting of your blood Could have attain’d th’ effect of your own purpose: Whether you had not, sometime in your life, Er’d in this point, which now you censure him, And pull’d the law upon you.

Ang. ’Tis one thing to be tempted, Escalus, Another thing to fall. I do not deny, The jury, passing on a prisoner’s life, May in the sworn twelve have a thief or two Guiльтier than him they try; what’s open made to justice, That justice seizes: what know the laws, That thieves do pass on thieves? ’Tis very pregnant, The jewel that we find, we stoop and take it, Because we see it: but what we do not see We dread upon, and never think of it. You may not so extenuate his offence, For I have had such faultes: but rather tell me, When I, that censure him, do so offend, Let mine own judgment pattern out my death, And nothing come in partial. Sir, he must die.

Escal. Be it as your wisdom will.

Ang. Where is the provost?

Enter Provost.

Prov. Here, if it like your honour.

Ang. See that Claudio Has not been cut by nine to-morrow morning. Bring him his confessor, let him be prepar’d, For that’s the utmost of his pilgrimage. [Exit Provost.

Escal. Well, heaven forgive him, and forgive us all! Some rise by sin, and some by virtue fall: Some run from breaks 2 of ice, and answer none, And some condemned for a fault alone.

Enter Elbow, Frott, Clown, Officers, &c.

Elbow. Come, bring them away. If these be good people in a common-wealth, that do nothing but use their abuses in common houses, I know no law: bring them away.

Ang. How now, sir? What’s your name, and what’s the matter?

Elbow. If it please your honour, I am the poor duke’s constable, and my name is Elbow: I do not lean upon justice, sir; and do bring in here before your good honour two notorious benefactors.

Ang. Benefactors! Well; what benefactors are they! Are they not benefactors?

Elbow. If it please your honour, I know not well what they are; but precise villains they are, that I am sure of, and void of all profession in the world that good Christians ought to have.

1 fall. 2 brakes altered to breaks by Stevens. Dyce would read brakes (instruments of torture) of vice.
Scene L.

Measure for Measure.

1. Exeunt. All-hallowed eve.

Cl. Why, very well; I hope here be truths. He, sir, sitting, as I say, in a lower chair, sir — it was in the bunch of grapes, where, indeed, you have a delight to sit here, have you not?

Froth. I have so; because it is an open room, and good for windows.

Cl. Why, very well, then: I hope here be truths.

Ang. This will last out all a night in Russia. When nights are longest there, I'll take my leave, and leave you to the hearing of the cause, hoping I'll find good cause to whip them all.

Exe. I think no less. Good morrow to your lordship.

Now, sir, come on: what was done to Elbow's wife, once more?

Cl. Once, sir? there was nothing done to her once.

Elb. I beseech you, sir, ask him what this man did to my wife.

Cl. I beseech your honour, ask me.

Exe. Well, sir, what did this gentleman to her?

Cl. I beseech you, sir, look in this gentleman's face.

—Good master Froth, look upon his honour; 'tis for a good purpose. Dost your honour mark his face?

Exe. Ay, sir, very well.

Cl. Nay, I beseech you, mark it well.

Exe. Well, I do so.

Cl. Dost your honour see any harm in his face?

Exe. Why, no.

Cl. I'll be supposed upon a book, his face is the worst thing about him. Good, then; if his face be the worst thing about him, how could master Froth do the necessaries of his wife any harm? I would know that of your honour.

Exe. He's in the right. Constable, what say you to't?

Elb. First, an it like you, the house is a respected home: next, this is a respected fellow, and his mistress is a respected woman.

Cl. By this hand, sir, his wife is a more respected person than any of us all.

Elb. Varlet, thou lies: thou lies, wicked varlet. The time is yet to come that she was ever respected with man, woman, or child.

Cl. Sir, she was respected with him before he married her.

Exe. Which is the wiser here? Justice, or Injustice—is this true?

Elb. O thou caitiff! O thou varlet! O thou wicked Hannibal! I respected her before I was married to her—if ever I was respected with her, or she with me, let not your worship think me the poor duc's. —Prove this, thou wicked Hannibal, or I'll have an action of battery on thee.

Exe. If he took you a box on the ear, you might have your action of slander too.

Elb. Marry, I thank your good worship for it. What is your worship's pleasure I shall do with this wicked caitiff.

Exe. Truly, officer, because he hath some offences that thou wouldst discover if thou couldst, let me eradicate in his courses till thou know'st what he is.

Elb. Marry, I thank your worship for it. — Thou worstish, thou wicked varlet now, what's come upon thee? Doth it continue; now, thou varlet, thou art contended.

Exe. Where were you born, friend?

Froth. Here in Vienna, sir.

1 name: in i.e. 2 Altered by Malone to "should." 3 bay: in f o 4 the: in i.e.
Lab. I am a woeful suitor to your honour, Please but your honour hear me.

Ang. ... Well, what's your suit? Lab. There is a vice that most I do abhor, And most desire should meet the blow of justice, For which I would not plead, but that I must; For which I must not plead, but that I am At war 'twixt will, and will not.

Ang. ... Well; the matter? Lab. I have a brother is condemn'd to die: I do beseech you, let it be his fault, And not my brother.

Prov. [Aside.] Heaven give thee moving graces. Ang. Condemn the fault, and not the actor of it? Why, every fault's condemn'd ere it be done. Mine were the very cipher of a function, To find the faults, whose fine stands in record, And let go by the actor.

Lab. ... O just, but severe law! I had a brother thet.—Heaven keep your honour! [Going.

Lucio. [To Isab.] Give 't not o'er so: to him again, entreat him; Kneel down before him, hang upon his gown; You are too cold: if you should need a pin, You could not with more tame a tongue desire it. To him, I say.

Isab. Must he needs die?

Ang. ... Maiden, no remedy. Isab. Yes; I do think that you might pardon him, And neither heaven, nor man, grieve at the mercy.

Ang. ... I will not do 't. But can you, if you would? Isab. ... Look; what I will not, that I cannot do. Isab. But might you do 't, and do the world no wrong?

If so your heart were touched with that remorse As mine is to him?

Ang. ... He's sentenced: 't is too late. Lucio. [To Isab.] Thou art too cold. Isab. Too late? why, no; 1, that do speak a word, May call it back again: We'll believe this, No ceremony that to great ones longs, Not the king's crown, nor the deputed sword, The marshal's truncheon, nor the judge's robes, Become them with one half so good a grace As mercy does. If he had been as you, and you as he, You would have slit like him; but he, like you, Would not have been so stern.

Ang. ... Pray you, begone. Isab. I would to heaven I had your potency, And you were Isabella! should it then be thus? No; I would tell what 't were to be a judge And what a prisoner.

Lucio. [Aside.] Ay, touch him; there's the vein.

Ang. Your brother is a forfeit of the law, And you but waste your words.

Isab. ... Alas! alas!

Why, all the souls that were were forfeit once; And he that might the vantage best have took, Found out the remedy. How would you be, If he, which is the God's of judgment, should But judge you as you are? O, think on that, And mercy then will breathe within your lips, Like man new made!

Ang. ... Be you content, fair maid
It is the law, not I, condemns your brother:
Were he my kinsman, brother, or my son,
It should be thus with him: he must die to-morrow.
Isab. To-morrow? O, 'tis that's sudden! Spare him, spare him!
He's not prepar'd for death. Even for our kitchens
We kill the fowl of season: shall we serve heaven
With less respect than we do minister
To our gross selves? Good, good my lord, bethink you?
Who is it that hath died for this offence?
There's many have committed it.
Lucio. [Aside.] Ay, well said.
Ang. The law hath not been dead, though it hath slept:
These many had not dar'd to do that evil,
If the first one that did th' edict infringe,
Had answered for his deed: now, 'tis awake;
Take note of what is done, and, like a prophet,
Looks in a glass, that shows what future evils
Ether new, or by remissness new-conceiv'd,
And so in progress to be hatch'd and born,
Are now to have no successive degrees,
But ere they live to end.
Isab. Yet show some pity.
Ang. I show it most of all, when I show justice;
For then I pity those I do not know,
Whose dismiss'd offence would after gall,
And do him right, that answering one foul wrong,
Lives not to act another. Be satisfied.
Your brother dies to-morrow: be content.
Isab. So you must be the first that gives this sentence,
And be that suffer. O! it is excellent
To have a giant's strength; but tyrannous
To use it like a giant.
Lucio. [Aside.] That's well said.
Isab. Could great men thunder,
As love himself does, Jove would ne'er be quiet,
For every pelting, petty officer
Would use his heaven for thunder;
Nothing but thunder. Merciful heaven!
Now rather with thy sharp and sulphurous bolt
Yet at the unwedgeable and guarled oak,
Than the soft myrtle; but man, proud man!
Rest in a little brief authority,
Mind ignorant of what he's most assur'd,
Ha, grace essence, like an angry ape,
Rays such fantastic tricks before high heaven,
As make the angels weep; who, with our spleens,
Would all themselves laugh mortal.
Lucio. [To Isab.] O, to him, to him, wench! He will relent:
He's coming; I perceive 't.
Prov. [Aside.] Pray heaven, she win him!
Isab. You cannot weigh our brother with yourself:
Great men may jest with saints: 'tis wit in them,
But in the less foul profanation.
Lucio. [To Isab.] Thou 'rt in the right, girl: more o' that.
Isab. That in the captain's but a choleric word,
Which in the soldier is flat blasphemy.
Lucio. [Aside.] Art advised o' that? more on't.
Ang. Why do you put these sayings upon me?
Isab. Because authority, though it err like others,
En't yet a kind of medicine in itself,
But skims the vice o' the top. Go to your boon;
Knock there, and ask your heart, what it doth know
Isab's like my brother's fault: if it confes
A natural guiltiness, such as is his,

Let it not sound a thought upon your tongue
Against my brother's life.
Ang. [Aside.] She speaks, and 'tis
Such sense, that my sense breeds with it. [To her.]
Fare you well.
Isab. Gentle my lord, turn back
Ang. I will bethink me.—Come again to-morrow.
Isab. Hark, how I'll bribe you. Good my lord, turn back.
Ang. How! bribe me?
Isab. Ay, with such gifts, that heaven shall share
Lucio. [Aside.] You had marr'd all else.
Isab. Not with fond circles' of the tested gold,
Or stones, whose value is in the sun,
As fancy values them; but with true prayers,
That shall be up at heaven, and enter there
Ere sun-rise: prayers from preserved souls,
From fasting maids, whose minds are dedicate
To nothing temporal.
Ang. Well; come to me to-morrow.
Lucio. [To Isab.] Go to; 'tis well: away!
Ang. [Aside.] Amen.
For I am that way going to temptation,
Where prayers cross.
Isab. At what hour to-morrow
Shall I attend your lordship?
Ang. At any time 'fore noon.
Isab. Save your honour!
[Exeunt Lucio, Isabella, and Provost.
Ang. From thee; even from thy virtue!—
What's this? what's this? Is this her fault or mine?
The tempter, or the tempted, who sins most? Ha!
No not she, nor doth she tempt; but it is I,
That lying by the violer in the sun,
Do, as the carrion does, not as the flower,
Corrupt with virtuous season. Can it be,
That modesty may more betray our sense
Than woman's lightness? Having waste ground enough,
Shall we desire to raze the sanctuary,
And pitch our offals' there? O, fie, fie, fie!
What dost thou, or what art thou, Angelo?
Dost thou desire her fouly for those things
That make her good? O, let her brother live!
Thieves for their robbery have authority,
When judges steal themselves. What! do I love her,
That I desire to hear her speak again,
And feast upon her eyes? What is 't I dream on?
O cunning enemy, that, to catch a saint,
With saints dost bait thy hook! Most dangerous
Is that temptation, that doth goad us on
To sin in loving virtue. Never could the strumpet,
With all her double vigour, art and nature,
Once air my temper; but this virtuous maid
Subdues me quite.—Even from youth till now,
When men were fond, I smil'd, and wonder'd how.

SCENE III.—A Room in a Prison.

Enter Duke, as a Friar, and Provost.
Duke. Hail to you, provost; so I think you are.
Prov. I am the provost. What's your will, good friar?
Duke. Bound by my charity, and my bless'd order,
I come to visit the afflicted spirits
Here in the prison: do me the common right
To let me see them, and to make me know
The nature of their crimes, that I may minister
To them accordingly.

1Kat in f.o. 2f.o.: here. Knight reads—where. 3shetaks: in f.o. 4Not in f.o. 5evils: in f.o.
Pro. I would do more than that, if more were needful. Enter Juliet.

Look; here comes one: a gentlewoman of mine, Who, falling in the flames* of her own youth, Hath blister'd her report. She is with child, And he that got it, sentenced—a young man More fit to do another such offence, Than die for this.

Duke. When must he die?

Pro. As I do think, to-morrow.—

[To Juliet.] I have provided for you: stay a while, And you shall be conducted.

Duke. Repent you, fair one, of the sin you carry?

Juliet. I do, and bear the shame most patiently.

Duke. I'll teach you how you shall arraign your conscience, And try your penitence, if it be sound, Or hollowly put on.

Juliet. I'll gladly learn.

Duke. Love you the man that wrong'd you?

Juliet. Yes, as I love the woman that wrong'd him.

Duke. So then, it seems, your most offensive act Was mutually committed?

Juliet. Mutually.

Duke. Then was your sin of heavier kind than his.

Juliet. I do confess it, and repent it, father.

Duke. 'Tis meet so, daughter: but least* you do repent,
As that the sin hath brought you to this shame;
Which sorrow is always toward ourselves, not heaven,
Showing, we would not serve* heaven, as we love it,
But as we stand in fear.

Juliet. As it is an evil,
And take the shame with joy.

Duke. There rest.

Your partner, as I hear, must die to-morrow, And I am going with instruction to him.

Grace go with you! Benedictus!

Juliet. Must die to morrow! O, injurious love, That repents me a life, whose very comfort Is still a dying horror!

Pro. 'Tis pity of him. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—A Room in Angelo's House.

Enter Angelo.

Ang. When I would pray and think, I think and pray
To several subjects: heaven hath my empty words, Whilst my intention, hearing not my tongue, Anchors on Isabel: heaven in my mouth, As if I did but chew his name, And in my heart the strong and swelling evil
Of my conception. The state, wherein I studied, Is like a good thing, being often read,
Grown sour and tedious; yea, my gravity, Wherein (let me hear me) I take pride,
Could I, with boot, change for an idle plume,
Which the air beats for vain. O place! O form!
How often dost thou with thy case, thy habit,
Wrench awe from fools, and tie the wiser souls
To thy false seeming! Blood, thou art blood:
Let's write good angel on the devil's horn,
'Tis not the devil's crest. Enter Servant.

How now! who's there?

Serv. One Isabel, a sister, Desires access to you.

Ang. Teach her the way. [Exit Serv.
Proclaim an imbell’d beauty ten times louder
Than beauty could displayed.—But mark me:
To be received plain, I’ll speak more gross.
Your brother is to die.

Isab. So.

Ang. And his offence is so, as it appears
Accountant to the law upon that pain.

Isab. True.

Ang. Admit no other way to save his life,
(As I subscribe not that, nor any other,
But in the force of question) that you, his sister,
Finding yourself desir’d of such a person,
Whose credit with the judge, or own great place,
Could fetch your brother from the manacles
Of the all-binding law; and that there were
No earthly mean to save him, but that either
You must lay down the treasures of your body
To this suppos’d, or else to let him suffer,
What would you do?

Isab. As much for my poor brother, as myself:
That is, were I under the terms of death,
Th’ impression of keen whips I’d wear as rubies,
And strip myself to death, as to a bed,
That long as I’ve been sick for, ere I’d yield
My body up to shame.

Ang. Then must
Your brother die.

Isab. And ‘t were the cheaper way.
Better it were, a brother died at once,
Than that a sister, by redeeming him,
Should die for ever.

Ang. Were you not, then, as cruel as the sentence
That you have slander’d so? I
And Igno’rance in reasons, and free pardon,
Are of two houses: lawful mercy is Nothing akin to soul redemption.

Ang. You seem’d of late to make the law a tyrant;
And rather prov’d the siding of your brother
A meritoriness, than a vice.

Isab. O, pardon me, my lord! it oft falls out,
To have what we would have, we speak not what we mean.
One something do excuse the thing I hate,
For his advantage that I dearly love.

Ang. We are all frail.

Isab. Else let my brother die,
If not a feedory, but only he,
Ore, and succeed this weakness.

Ang. Nay, women are frail too.

Isab. Ay, as the glasses where they view themselves,
Which are as easy broke as they make forms.

Women!—Help heaven! men their creation mar
In prating by them. Nay, call us ten times frail,
For we are soft as our complexes are,
And credulous to false prints.

Ang. I think it well;
And from this testimonry of your own sex,
Since, I suppose, we are made to be no stronger,
Than faults may shake our frames, let me be bold:
I do arrest your words. Be that you are,
That is, a woman; if you be more, you’re none;
If you be one, (as you are well express’d
By all external warrants,) show it now,
By putting on the destitute livery.

Isab. I have no tongue but one: gentle my lord,
Let me entreat you speak the former language.

Ang. Plainly, conceive I love you.

Isab. My brother did love Juliet; and you tell me,
That he shall die for it.

Ang. He shall not, Isabel, if you give me love.

Isab. I know, your virtue hath a licence in’t,
Which seems a little fouler than it is,
To pluck on others.

Ang. Believe me, on mine honour,
My words express my purpose.

Isab. Ha! little honour to be much believe’d,
And most pernicious purpose!—Seeming, seeming!—
I will proclaim thee, Angelo; look for ’t;
Sign me a present pardon for my brother,
Or with an outstretch’d throat I’ll tell the world
About what man thou art.

Ang. Who will believe thee, Isabel?
My unsoul’d name, the austereness of my life,
May vouch against you, and my place i’ the state
Will so your accusation overweigh,
That you shall stiffe in your own report,
And smell of calumny. I have begun,
And now I give my sensual race the rein:
Fit thy consent to my sharp appetite;
Lay by all nicety, and prolixious blushes,
That banish what they sue for; redeem thy brother
By yielding up thy body to my will,
Or else he must not only die the death,
But thy unkindness shall his death draw out
To lingering sufferance. Answer me to-morrow,
Or, by the affection that now guides me most,
I’ll prove a tyrant to him. As for you,
Say what you can, my false o’erweighs your true.

[Exit.

Isab. To whom should I complain? Did I tell this,
Who would believe me? O perilous mouths!—
That bear in them one and the self-same tongue,
Either of condemnation or approbation,
Bidding the law make court’sey to their will,
Houking both right and wrong to th’ appetite,
To follow as it draws. I’ll to my brother:
Though he hath fallen by prompture of the blood,
Yet hath he in him such a mind of honour,
That had he twenty heads to tender down
On twenty bloody blocks, he’d yield them up,
Before his sister should her body stope
To such abhor’d pollution.
Then, Isabel, live chaste, and, brother, die:
More than our brother is our chastity.
I’ll tell him yet of Angelo’s request,
And fit his mind to death, for his soul’s rest.

[Exit.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—A Room in the Prison.

Enter Duke, as a Friar, Claudio, and Provost.

Duke. So then, you hope of pardon from lord Angelo?

Isab. A Friar, in f. a. 2 Isab. In f. a. 2 Knight: thy. The old copies: by. The word in the text was taken from a copy of th Claud. The miserable have
No other medicine, but only hope.

Duke. Be absolute for death; either death, or life,
Shall thereby be the sweeter. Reason thus with life:—
If I do lose thee, I do lose a thing
That none but fools would keep: a breath thou art,
Servile to all the skye influences,
That do this habitation, where thou keep'st,
Hourly afflict. Merely, thou art death's fool;
For him thou labour'st by thy flight to shun,
And yet run'st toward him still: thou art not noble;
For all th' accommodations that thou bear'st,
Are pur'd by baseness: thou art not so meanst valiant;
For thou dost fear the soft and tender fork
Of a poor worm: thy best of rest is sleep,
And that thou oft provok'st, yet grossly fear'st
Thy death, which is no more. Thou art not thyself;
For thou exist'st on many a thousand grains
That issue out of dust: happy thou art not;
For what thou hast not, still thou strive'st to get,
And what thou hast forget'st. Thou art not certain;
For thy complexion shifts to strange effects,
After the moon: if thou art rich, thou art poor;
For, like an ass, whose back with ingots bows,
Thou bear'st thy heavy riches but a journey,
And death unloads thee: friend hast thou none;
For thine own bowels, which do call thee sire,
The mere effusion of thy proper loins,
Do curse the gout, serpigo, and the rheum,
For ending thee no sooner: thou hast ngr youth, nor age,
But, as it were, an after-dinner's sleep,
Dreaming on both; for all thy boasted youth
Becomes as aged, and doth beg the alms.
Of palseid eld: and when thou art old and rich,
Thou hast neither heat, affection, limb, nor beauty,
To make thy riches pleasant. What's 'tis in this,
That bears the name of life? Yet in this life
Lie hid more thousand deaths, yet death we fear,
That makes these odds all even.

Claud.
I humbly thank you.
To sue to live. I find, I seek to die,
And, seeking death, find life: let it come on.

Isab. [Without.] What, ho! Peace here; grace and good company! [Enter ISABELLA.]

Duke. Dear sir, ere long I'll visit you again.

Isab. My business is a word or two with Claudio.

Prov. And very welcome. 'Look, signior; here's your sister.

Duke. Provost, a word with you.

Prov. As many as you please.

Duke. Bring me to hear them speak, where I may be concealed. [Exit DUKE and PROVOST.

Claud. Now, sister, what's the comfort?

Isab. Why, as all

Comforts are; most good, most good, indeed.
Lord Angelo, having affairs to heaven,
Intends you for his swart ambassador,
Where you shall be an everlasting lieger.:
Therefore, your best appointment make with speed:
To-morrow you set on.

Claud. Is there no remedy?

Isab. None, but such remedy as to save a head
To cleave a heart in twain.

Claud. But is there any?

Isab. Yes, brother, you may live:
There is a devilish mercy in the judge,
If you'll implore it, that will free your life,
But suffer you till death.

Claud. Perpetual duration?

Isab. Ay, just; perpetual duration: a restraint,
Though all the world's vastity you had,
To a determin'd scope.

Claud. But in what nature?

Isab. In such a one as, you consenting to it,
Would bark your honour from that trunk you bear,
And leave you naked.

Claud. Let me know the point.

Isab. O! I do fear thee, Claudio; and I quake,
Lest thou a feverous life wouldst entertain,
And six or seven winters more respect,
Than a perpetual honour. Dar'st thou die?
The sense of death is most in apprehension,
And the poor beetle, that we tread upon,
In corporal sufferance finds a pang as great
As when a giant dies.

Claud. Why give you me this shame?
Think you I can a resolution fetch
From flowery tenderness? If I must die,
I will encounter darkness as a bride,
And hug it in mine arms.

Isab. There spake my brother: there my father's grave
Did utter forth a voice. Yes, thou must die:
Thou art too noble to deserve a life
In base performances. This outward-sainted deputy,
Whose settled visage and deliberate word
Nips youth if' the head, and follies doth ennuev
As falcon doth the fowl, is yet a devil;
His filth within being cast, he would appear
A pond as deep as hell.

Claud. The priestly* Angelo.

Isab. O, 'tis the cunning livery of hell,
The damned'st body to invest and cover
In priestly garb. Dost thou think, Claudio,
If I would yield him my virginity,
Thou might'st be freed?

Claud. O, heavens! it cannot be.

Isab. Yes, he would give 't thee from this rank offence,
So to offend him still. This night's the time
That I should do what I abhor to name,
Or else thou diest to-morrow.

Claud. Thou shalt not do't.

Isab. O! were it but my life,
I'd throw it down for your deliverance
As frankly as a pin.

Claud. Thanks, dear Isabel.

Isab. Be ready, Claudio, for your death to-morrow.

Claud. Yes. Has he affections in him,
That thus can make him bite the law by the nose,
When he would force it? Sure, it is no sin;
Or of the deadly seven it is the least.

Isab. Which is the least?

Claud. If it were damnable, he being so wise,
Why would he for the momentary trick
Be perdurably fin'd?—O Isabel!

Isab. What says my brother?

Claud. Death is a fearful thing.

Isab. And shamed life a hateful.

Claud. Ay, but to die, and go we know not where;
To lie in cold obstructions, and to rot;
This sensible warm motion to become
A kneaded clot; and the delighted* spirit
To bathe in fiery floods, or to reside
In thrilling region of thick-ribbed ice:
To be imprison'd in the viewless winds,
And blown with restless violence round about

* f. e.: privity; Knight: pensive. * f. e.: guards. * Knight
The pendent world; or to be worse than worst Of those that lawless and uncertain thoughts
Imagine bowling! — it is too horrible.
The weiriest and most loathed worldly life,
That age, ake, penury, and imprisonment
Can lay on nature, is a paradise
To what we fear of death.

Isab. Alas! alas!
Claus. Sweet sister, let me live.
What sin you do to save a brother's life,
Nature disperses with the deed so far,
'Tis but a virtue.

Isab. O, you beast!
0 faithless coward! O, dishonest wretch!
Wilt thou be made a man out of my vice?
I'll not a kind of incest to take life
From thine own sister's shame? What should I think?
Heaven shield, my mother play'sd my father fair,
For such a warped slip of wilderness
Never issu'd from his blood. Take my defiance:
De; periah! might but my bending down
Bevee thee from thy fate, it should proceed.
I'll pray a thousand prayers for thy death,
No word to save thee.

Claus. Nay, hear me, Isabell.

Isab. O, fie, fie, fie!
This sin's not accidental, but a trade.
Mercy to thee would prove itself a bawd:
'Tis best thou die quiet.

[Going]

Claus. Re-enter Duke.

Duke. Vouchsafe a word, young sister; but one word.

Isab. What is your will?

Duke. Might you dispense with your leisure, I would by and by some speech with you: the satisfaction would require, is likewise your own benefit.

Isab. I have no superfluous leisure: my stay must be stolen out of other affairs; but I will attend you a while.

Duke. [To Claudio.] Son, I have overheard what has passed between you and your sister. Angelo had erred the purpose to corrupt her; only he hath made an essay of her virtue, to pracitse his judgment with the disposition of natures. She, having the truth of bless in her, hath made him that gracious denial which he is most glad to receive: I am confessor to Angelo, and I know this to be true: therefore, prepare yourself to death. Do not satisfy your resolution with hopes that are fallible; to-morrow you must die.
Go to your knees, and make ready.

Claus. Let me see my sister pardon. I am so out of love with life, that I will sue to be rid of it.

Proser. a word with you.

Proser. What is your will, father?

Duke. That now you are come, you will be gone.
leave me awhile with the maid: my mind promises with my habit no loss shall touch her by my company.

Proser. In good time.

Proser. The hand that hath made you fair hath made you too good; the goodness that is chief in beauty makes beauty brief in goodness; but grace, being the soul of your complexion, shall keep the body of it ever fair.
The assault, that Angelo hath made to you, fortune hath convey'd to my understanding; and, but that truly hath examples for his failing, I should wonder at Angelo. How will you do to content this substitute, and to save your brother?

Isab. I am now going to resolve him. I had rather my brother die by the law, than my son should be unlawfully born. But O, how much is the good duke deceived in Angelo! If ever he return, and I can speak to him, I will open my lips in vain, or discover his government.

Duke. That shall not be much amiss: yet, as the matter now stands, he will avoid your accusation: he made trial of you only.—Therefore, fasten your ear on my advisings: to the love I have in doing good a remedy presents itself. I do make myself believe, that you may most uprightly do a poor wronged lady a merited benefit, redeem your brother from the angry law, do no stain to your own gracious person, and much please the absent duke, if, peradventure, he shall ever return to have hearing of this business.

Isab. Let me hear you speak farther. I have spirit to do anything that appears not foul in the truth of my spirit.

Duke. Virtue is bold, and goodness never fearful.
Have you not heard speak of Mariana, the sister of Frederick, the great soldier who miscarried at sea?

Isab. I have heard of the lady, and good words went with her name.

Duke. Her should this Angelo have married: he was affianced to her by oath, and the nuptial appointed between which time of the contract, and limit of the solemnity, her brother Frederick was wrecked at sea, having in that periah'd vessel the dowry of his sister.
But mark how heavily this befit to the poor gentlewoman: there she lost a noble and renowned brother, in his love toward her ever most kind and natural;
with him the portion and sinew of her fortune, her marriage-dowry; with both, her comate's husband, this well-seeming Angelo.

Isab. Can this be so? Did Angelo so leave her?

Duke. Left her in her tears, and dried not one of them with his comfort; swallowed his vows whole, pretending in her discoveries of dishonour: in few, bestowed her on her own lamentation, which she yet wears for his sake, and he, as marble to her tears, is washed with them, but relents not.

Isab. What a merit were it in death to take this poor maid from the world! What corruption in this life, that it will let this man live!—But how out of this can she avail?

Duke. It is a rupture that you may easily heal; and the cure of it not only saves your brother, but keeps you from dishonour in doing it.

Isab. Show me how, good father.

Duke. This fore-named maid hath yet in her the continuance of her first affection: his unjust unkindness, that in all reason should have quenched her love, hath like an impediment in the current, made it more violent and unruly. Go you to Angelo: answer his requiring with a plausible obedience: agree with his demands to the point; only refer yourself to this advantage,—first, that your stay with him may not be long, that the time may have all shadow and silence in it, and the place answer to convenience. This being granted in course, and now follows all: we shall advise this wronged maid to steady up your appointment, go to your place; if the encounter acknowledge itself hereafter, it may compel him to her recompense; and here by this is your brother saved, your honour untainted, the poor Mariana advantaged, and the corrupt deputy sealed. The maid will frame and make fit for his attempt. If you think well to carry this, as you may, the doubleness of the benefit defends the deceit from reproof. What think you of it?

Isab. The image of it gives me content already, and, I trust, it will grow to a most prosperous perfection.

Duke. It lies much in your holding up. Haste you speedily to Angelo: if for this night he entreat you to his bed, give him promise of satisfaction. I will presently to St. Luke's; there, at the moated grange, resides this objected Marianna: at that place call upon me, and dispatch with Angelo, that it may be quickly. I thank you for this comfort. Fare you well, good father. [Exeunt.

SCENE II. — The Street before the Prison.

Enter Duke, as a Friar; to him Elbow, Clown and Officers.

Elb. Nay, if there be no remedy for it, but that you will needs buy and sell men and women like beasts, we shall have all the world drink brown and white bastard!

Duke. O, heavens! what stuff is here?

Clo. 'Twas never merry world, since of two usances, the merriest was put down, and the worser allow'd by order of law a fur'ren'd gown to keep him warm; and fur'ren'd with fox and lamb-skins too, to signify that craft, being richer than innocence, stands for the facing.

Elb. Come your way, sir.—Bless you, good father friar.

Duke. And you, good brother father. What offence hath this man made you, sir?

Elb. Marry, sir, he hath offended the law: and, sir, we take him to be a thief too, sir; for we have found upon him, sir, a strange pick-lock, which we have sent to the deputy.

Duke. Fie, sirrah: a bawd, a wicked bawd!
The evil that thou causest to be done,
That is thy means to live. Do thou but think
What 'tis to cram a maw, or clothe a back,
From such a filthy vice: say to thyself
From their abominable and beastly touches
I drink, I eat, array myself, and live.
Canst thou believe thy living is a life,
So stinkingly depending? Go mend, go mend.

Clo. Indeed, it does stink in some sort, sir; but yet, sir, I would prove —

Duke. Nay, if the devil have given thee proofs for sin,
Thou wilt prove his. Take him to prison, officer:
Correccion and instruction must both work,
Ere this rude beast will profit.

Elb. He must before the deputy, sir; he has given him warning. The deputy cannot abide a whoremaster: if he be a whoremonger, and comes before him, he were as good go a mile on his errand.

Duke. That we were all, as some would seem to be,
From our faults, as faults from seeming, free!

Enter Lucio.

Duc. His neck will come to your waist, a cord, sir.

Clo. I spy comfort: I cry, ball. Here's a gentleman and a friend of mine.

Lucio. How now, noble Pompey! What, at the wheels of Caesar? Art thou in triumph? What, is there none of Pyramus's images, newly made woman, to be be had now, for putting the hand in the pocket and extracting it clutched? What reply? Ha! What say'st thou to this tune, matter, and method? Is't not drown'd 't the last rain? Ha! What say'st thou, truth? Is the world as it was, man? Which is the way? Is it sad, and few words, or how? The trick of it?

1 bastardino, a sweet wine made of raisins. 2 missive: in f. a. 3 trest: in f. a.
Duke. I never heard the absent duke much detected for women: he was not inclined that way.

Lucio. O. sir! you are deceived.

Duke. 'Tis not possible.

Lucio. Who? not the duke? yes, your beggar of Ely, and his use was, to put a ducat in her clack-dish. The duke had eructations in him: he would be drunk to that let me inform you.

Lucio. Sir, I was an inward of his. A shy fellow was the duke; and, I believe, I know the cause of his withdrawing.

Duke. What, I pr’ythee, might be the cause?

Lucio. No.—pardon;—it is a secret must be lock’d within the teeth and the lips; but this I can let you understand,—the greater line of the subject held the duke to wise.

Duke. Wise? why, no question but he was.

Lucio. A very superficial, ignorant, unweighing fellow.

Duke. Either this is envy in you, folly, or mistaking: the very stream of his life, and the business he hath helmed, must, upon a warranted need, give him a better proclamation. Let him be but testimonied in his own bringings forth, and he shall appear to the envious scholar, a statesman, and a soldier. Therefore, you speak unskilfully; or, if your knowledge be more, it is much darken’d in your malice.

Lucio. Sir, I know him, and I love him.

Duke. Love talks with better knowledge, and knowledge with dearer love.

Lucio. Come, sir, I know what I know.

Duke. I can hardly believe that, since you know not what you speak. But, if ever the duke return. (as our prayers are he may;) let me desire you to make your answer before him: if it be honest you have spoke, you have courage to maintain it. I am bound to call upon you; and, I pray you, your name.

Lucio. Sir, my name is Lucio, well known to the duke.

Duke. He shall know you better, sir, if I may live to report you.

Lucio. I fear you not.

Duke. 0! you hope the duke will return no more, as you imagine me too unhurtful an opposite. But, Lucio, I can do you little harm; you ‘ll forswear this now.

Lucio. I’ll be hanged first: thou art deceived in me, sir. But no more of this. Canst thou tell, if Claudio tot-morrow, or no?

Duke. Why should he die, sir?

Lucio. Why? for filling a bottle with a tun-dish. I will, the duke, we talk of, were return’d again: this natural agent will unpeopple the province with conscience: sparrows must not build in his house-eaves, because they are lecherous. The duke yet would have his deeds darkly answer’d; he would never bring men to light; would he were return’d! Marry, this Claudio is condemn’d for untroubling. Farewell, good sir; I pr’ythee, pray for me. The duke, I say to see again, would eat mutton on Fridays. He’s now put in; yet, and I say to thee, he would mouth with beggar, though she smelt brown bread and garlic; so, that I said so. Farewell. [Exit.

Duke. No might nor greatness in mortality can ensure escape: back-wounding cajunny do whiten virtue strikes. What king so strong, can the gall up in the slanderous tongue? who comes here?

[Enter Escalus, Provost, Baued, and Officers.

Escalus. Go away with her to prison!

Baued. Good, my lord, be good to me; your honour is accounted a merciful man: good my lord.

Escalus. Double and triple admonition, and still for it in the same kind? This would make mercy swear, and play the tyrant.

Prov. A bawd of eleven years’ continuance, may it please your honour.

Baued. My lord, this is one Lucio’s information against me. Mistress Kate Keep-down was with child by him in the duke’s time: he promised her marriage; his child is a year and a quarter old, come Philip and Jacob. I have kept it myself, and see how he goes about to abuse me.

Escalus. That fellow is a fellow of much licence: let him be called before us.—Away with her to prison! Go to; no more words. [Exeunt Baued and Officers.

Provost, my brother Angelo will not be alter’d; Claudio must die to-morrow. Let him be furnished with divines, and have all charitable preparation: if my brother wrought by my pity, it should not be so with him.

Prov. So please you, this friar hath been with him, and advised him for the entertainment of death.

Escalus. Good even, good father.

Duke. Bless and goodnight on you.

Escalus. Of whence are you?

Duke. Not of this country, though my chance is now To use it for my time: I am a brother Of gracious order, late come from the See, In special business from his holiness.

Escalus. What news abroad i’ the world?

Duke. None. But that there is so great a fever on goodness, that the dissolution of it must cure it: novelty is only in request; and as it is as dangerous to be aged in any kind of course, as it is virtuous to be constant in any undertaking, there is scarce truth enough alive to make societies secure, but security enough to make fellowships assure’d. Much upon this riddle runs the wisdom of the world. This news is old enough, yet it is every day’s news. I pray you, sir, of what disposition was the duke?

Escalus. One that, above all other strifes, contended especially to know himself.

Duke. What pleasure was he given to?

Escalus. Rather and going to see another merry, than merry at any thing which professed to make him rejoice: a gentleman of all temperance. But leave we him to his events, with a prayer they may prove prosperous, and let me desire to know how you find Claudio prepared. I am made to understand, that you have lent him visitation.

Duke. He professes to have received no sinister measure from his judge, but most willingly humbles himself to the determination of justice; yet had he framed to himself, by the instruction of his frailty, many deceiving promises of life, which I, by my good leisure, have discredited to him, and now is he resolved to die.

Escalus. You have paid the heavens the dus of your function, and the prisoner the very debt of your calling. I have labour’d for the poor gentleman to the extremest shore of my modesty; but my brother justice have I found so severe, that he hath forced me to tell him, he is indeed—justice.

Duke. If his own life answer the strictness of his proceeding, it shall become him well; wherein is he chance to fail, he hath sentenced himself. [well.

Escalus. I am going to visit the prisoner. Fare you
Duke. Peace be with you!

[Exeunt Escalus and Provost.

He, who the sword of heaven will bear,
Should be as holy as severe;
Pattern in himself to know,
Grace to stand, virtue to go;¹
More nor less to others paying,
Than by self offences weighing.
Shame to him, whose cruel striking
Kills for faults of his own liking!
Twice treble shame on Angelo,
To weed my vice, and let his grow!

O, what may man within him hide,
Though angel on the outward side!
How may likeness, made in crimes,
Masking' practice on the times,
Draw with idle spiders' strings
Most pond'rous and substantial things!
Craft against vice I must apply,
With Angelo to-night shall lie
His old brottered, but despised:
So disguise shall, by the disguised,
Pay with falsehood false exacting,
And perform an old contracting.[Exit

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—A Room at the moated Grange.

MARIANA discovered sitting: a Boy singing.

SONG.

Take, O! take those lips away,
That so sweetly were forsworn;
And those eyes, the break of day:
Lights that do mislead the morn:
But my kisses bring again,
Seals of love, but seal'd in vain.²

MARIANA. Break off thy song, and haste thee quick away:

Here comes a man of comfort, whose advice
Hath often still'd my brawling discontent.—

[Exit Boy.

Enter DUKE.

I cry you mercy, sir; and well could wish
You had not found me here so musical:
Let me excuse me, and believe me so,
My mirth it much displeas'd, but please'd my wo.

DUKE. 'Tis good: though music oft hath such a charm,
To make bad good, and good provoke to harm.
I pray you, tell me, hath any body inquired for me here to-day? much upon this time have I promis'd here to meet.

MARIANA. You have not been inquired after: I have sat here all day.

[Exit Isabella.

Duke. I do constantly believe you. The time is come, even now. I shall crave your forbearance a little: may be, I will call upon you anon, for some advantage to yourself.

MARIANA. I am always bound to you.

DUKE. Very well met, and welcome.

What is the news from this good deputy?

ISABELLA. He hath a garden circumvall'd with brick,
Whose western side is with a vineyard back'd;
And to that vineyard is a planted gate,
That makes his opening with this bigger key:
This other doth command a little door,
Which from the vineyard to the garden leads;
There have I made my promise upon the heavy Middle of the night to call upon him.

DUKE. But shall you on your knowledge find this way?

ISABELLA. I have ta'en a due and wary note upon't:²
With whispering and most guilty diligence,
In action all of precept, he did show me
The way twice o'er.

DUKE. Are there no other tokens
Between you 'greed, concerning her observance?

ISABELLA. No, none, but only a repair in the dark;
And that I have possess'd him my most stay
Can be but brief: for I have made him know,
I have an apparent comes with me along;
That stays upon me: whose persuasion is,
I come about my brother.

DUKE. 'T is well borne up.

ISABELLA. I have not yet made known to MARIANA
A word of this.—What, ho! within! come forth

Re-enter MARIANA.

I pray you, be acquainted with this maid:
She comes to do you good.

ISABELLA. Do you persuade yourself that I respect you?
MARIANA. Good friar, I know you do, and have found it.

DUKE. Take then this your companion by the hand,
Who hath a story ready for your ear.
I shall attend your leisure: but make haste;
The vaporous night approaches.

MARIANA. Will 't please you walk aside?

[Exeunt MARIANA and ISABELLA.

DUKE. O place and greatness! millions of false eyes
Are stuck upon thee. Volumes of report
Run with base; false and most contrarious quests
Upon thy doings: thousand escapes of wit
Make thee the father of their idle dreams,
And rack thee in their fancies!

Re-enter MARIANA and ISABELLA.

Welcome! How agreed!

ISABELLA. She 'll take the enterprise upon her, father,
If you advise it.

DUKE. It is not my consent,
But my entreaty too.

ISABELLA. Little have you to say,
When you depart from him, but, soft and low,
"Remember now my brother."

MARIANA. Fear me not.

DUKE. Nor, gentle daughter, fear you not at all.

He is your husband on a pre-contract:
'To bring you thus together, 't is no sin,

³ This song is found in Beaumont and Fletcher's Bloody Brother, Act V., Sc. II., with a second stanza, as follows. It is attributed to Shakespeare in the spurious Ed. of his Poems, printed in 1609.

SCENE II.—A Room in the Prison.

Enter Provoost and Cloven.

Provoost. Come hither, sirrah. Can you cut off a man's head?

Clowdis. If the man be a bachelor, sir, I can; but if he be a married man, he is his wife's head, and I can never cut off a woman's head.

Provoost. Come, sir; leave me your snatches, and yield me a direct answer. To-morrow morning are to die Claudio and Barnardine: here is in our prison a common executioner, who in his office lacks a helper: if you will take it on you to assist him, it shall redeem you from your gyves; if not, you shall have your full time of imprisonment, and your deliverance with an unsnapped whipping, for you have been a notorious bawd.

Provoost. Sir, I have been an unlawful bawd, time out of mind; but yet I will be content to be a lawful hangman. I would be glad to receive some instruction from my fellow partner.

Provoost. What ho, Abhorson! Where's Abhorson, there?

Enter Abhorson.

Abhorson. Do you call, sir?

Provoost. Sirrah, here's a fellow will help you to-morrow in your execution. If you think it meet, compound with him by the year, and let him abide here with you; if not, use him for the present, and dismiss him. He cannot plead his estimation with you: he hath been a bawd.

Abhorson. A bawd, sir? Pio upon him! he will discred our mystery.

Provoost. Go to, sir; you weigh equally: a feather will turn the scale. [Exit.]

Clowdis. Pray, sir, by your good favour, (for, surely, sir, a good favour you have, but that you have a hanging look) do you call, sir, your occupation a mystery?

Abhorson. A mystery.

Clowdis. Painting, sir, I have heard say, is a mystery; and your whores, sir, being members of my occupation, using painting, do prove my occupation a mystery; but what mystery there should be in hanging, if I should be hang'd, I cannot imagine.

Abhorson. Sir, it is a mystery.

Provoost. Sir, it is a mystery.

Clowdis. Do you agree?

Provoost. Sir, I will serve him; for I do find, your hangings are a more penitent trade than your bawdship: he doth never ask forgiveness.

Provoost. You, sirrah. provide your block and your axe to-morrow, four o'clock.

Abhorson. Come on, bawd; I will instruct thee in my trade: follow.

Clowdis. I do desire to learn, sir; and, I hope, if you have occasion to use me for your own turn, you shall find me yare; for, truly, sir, for your kindness I owe you a good turn.

Provoost. Call hither Barnardine and Claudio:

[Exeunt Clowdis and Abhorson.

Provoost. Look, here's the warrant, Claudio, for thy death: 'Tis now dead midnight, and by eight to-morrow Thou must be made immortal. Where's Barnardine?

Claudio. As fast lock'd up in sleep, as guiltless labour,
When it lies starkly in the traveller's bones:
He will not awake.

Provoost. Who can do good on him?

Well, go; prepare yourself. But hark! what noise?

[Knocking within.

Provoost. Heaven give your spirits comfort!—By and by:—

[Exit Claudio.

I hope it is some pardon, or reprieve,
For the most gentle Claudio.—Welcome, father.

Enter Duke.

Duke. The best and wholesome'st spirit of the night Envelop you, good provost! Who call'd here of late?

Provoost. None, since the curfew rung.

Duke. Not Isabel?

Provoost. No.

Duke. There will then, ere 't be long.

Provoost. What comfort is for Claudio?

Duke. There's some in hope.

Provoost. It is a bitter deputy.

Duke. Not so, not so: his life is parallel'd
Even with the stroke and line of his great justice.
He doth with holy abstinence subdue
That in himself, which he spurs on his power.

To qualify in others: were he meal'd with that
Which he corrects, then were he tyrannous;—

[Knocking within.

But this being so, he's just.—Now are they come.—

[Exit Provost.

This is a gentle provost: seldom when
The steeld goaler is the friend of men. [Knocking.

How now? What noise? That spirit possessed with haste,
That wounds the resisting postern with these strokes.

Duke. Have you no countermand for Claudio yet, but he must die to-morrow?

Provoost. None, sir, none.

Duke. As near the dawning, provost, as it is,
You shall hear more ere morning.

Provoost. Happily you something know; yet, I believe, there comes no countermand: no such example have we.

Duke. Besides, upon the very siege of justice,
Lord Angelo hath to the public ear
Prose'd the contrary.

Enter a Messenger.

Provoost. This is his lordship's man.

Duke. And here comes Claudio's pardon.

Provoost. My lord hath sent you this note; [giving a paper and by me this further charge, that you awer not from the smallest article of it, neither in time, manner, or other circumstance. Good morrow, for, as I take it, it is almost day.

Provoost. I shall obey him.

[Exit Messenger.

Duke. This is his pardon; purchas'd by such sin,
For which the pardoner himself is in:
Hence hath offensive his quick celerity,
When it is born in high authority.

Knight gives this speech to the Provost, and the next to the Duke.
When vice makes mercy, mercy’s so extended,
That for the fault’s love is th’ offender friend. —
Now, sir, what news?

Prov. I told you: Lord Angelo, belike thinking me re mise in mine office, awakens me with this unwonted putting on; me thinks strangely, for he hath not used it before.

Duke. Pray you, let’s hear.

Prov. [Reads.]* "Whosoever you may hear to the contrary, let Claudio be executed by four of the clock;
say, in the afternoon, Barnardine. For my better satisfaction, let me have Claudio’s head sent me by five.
Let this be duly performed; with a thought, that more depends on it than we must yet deliver. Thus fail not to do your office, as you will answer it at your peril. —
What say you to this, sir?

Duke. What is that Barnardine, who is to be executed in the afternoon?

Prov. A Bohemian born; but here nursed up and bred: one that is a prisoner nine years old.

Duke. How came it, that the absent Duke had not either deliver’d him to his liberty, or executed him? I have heard, it was over his manner to do so.

Prov. His friends still wrought reprieves for him:
and, indeed, his fact, till now in the government of Lord Angelo, came not to an undoubted proof.

Duke. It is now apparent?

Prov. Most manifest, and not denied by himself.

Duke. Hath he borne himself penitently in prison?

How seems he to be touch’d?

Prov. A man that apprehends death no more dreadfully but as a drunken sleep; careless, reckless, and fearless of what’s past, present, or to come: insensible of mortality, and desperately mortal.

Duke. He wants advice.

Prov. He will hear none. He hath evermore had the liberty of the prison: give him leave to escape hence, he would not: drunk many times a day, if not many days entirely drunk. We have oft awaked him, as to carry him to execution, and show’d him
a seeming warrant for it: it hath not moved him at all.

Duke. More of him anon. There is written in your brow, provost, honesty and constancy: if I read it not truly, my ancient skill beguiles me; but in the boldness of my cunning I will lay myself in hazard.

Claudio, whom here you have warrant to execute, is no greater forfeit to the law, than Angelo who hath sentenced him. To make you understand this in a manifested effect, I crave but four days’ respite, for the which you are to do me both a present and a dangerous courtesy.

Prov. Pray, sir, in what?

Duke. In the delaying death.

Prov. Alack! how may I do it, in a commodity of brown paper and old ginger, nine-score and seventeen pounds, of which he made five mark ready money: marry, then, ginger was not much request, for the old women were all dead. Then here there one Mr. Caper, at the suit of master Thre-pile the mercer, for some suits of peach-coloured satin, which now peaches him a beggar. Then have we here young Dicy, and young Mr. Deep-vow, and Mr.
Copper-spur, and Mr. Starve-lackey, the rapier at dagger-man, and young Drop-heir that kill’d Luke Pudding, and Mr. Forthright the tilter, and brave M.
Shoe-tie the great traveller, and wild Half-can th stab’d Potts, and, I think, forty more, all great doe in our trade, and are now in* for the Lord’s sake.4

Enter ABHORSHIR.5

Abhor. Sirrah, bring Barnardine hither.

Clo. Mr. Barnardine! you must rise and be hang’d
Mr. Barnardine.

Abhor. What, ho, Barnardine!

Barnar. [Within.] A pox o’ your threats! W’l makes that noise there? What are you?

Clo. Your friends, sir; the hangman. You mu be so good, sir, to rise and be put to death.

Barnar. [Within.] Away, you rogue, away! I am sleepy.

Abhor Tell him, he must awake, and that quickly to

Clo. Pray, master Barnardine, awake till you a executed, and sleep afterwards.

* It was a custom of usurers to compel borrowers to take part of the sum advanced to them in goods, often of little real value. 1

2 imprisoned debtors used to beg from the jail windows, "for the Lord’s sake."
Ahbror. Go in to him, and fetch him out.
Clo. He is coming, sir; he is coming: I hear his straw rustle.
Enter Barnardine.
Ahbror. Is the axe upon the block, sirrah?
Clo. Very ready, sir.
Barnar. How now, Ahborson? what’s the news with Ahbor. Truly, sir, I would desire you to clap into your prayer; for, look you, the warrant’s come.
Barnar. You rogue, I have been drinking all night:
I am not fit for it.
Clo. O! hanged the better, sir; for he that drinks all night, and is hang’d before in the morning, may sleep the sooner all the next day.

Enter Duke.
Ahbor. Look you, sir; here comes your ghostly father. Do we jest now, think you?
Duke. Sir, induced by my charity, and hearing how hauls you are to depart. I am come to advise you, comfort you, and pray with you.
Barnar. Friar, not I: I have been drinking hard all night, and I will have more time to prepare me, or they shall beat out my brains with billets. I will not consent to die this day, that’s certain.
Duke. O, sir, you must; and therefore, I beseech
you,
Look forward on the journey you shall go.
Barnar. I swear, I will not die to-day for any man’s persuasion.
Duke. But hear me,— Barnar. Not a word: if you have anything to say to me, come to my ward; for then he will not to-day.
[Exit.

Enter Provost.
Duke. Unfit to live, or die. O, grovelling beast!—
After him, fellows: bring him to the block.
[Exeunt Ahborson and Clown.
Prov. Now, sir, how do you find the prisoner?
Duke. A creature unprepar’d, unmeet for death;
And to transport him in the mind he is,
Were damnable.
Prov. Here in the prison, father,
There died this morning of a cruel fever
one Ragozine, a most notorious pirate,
A man of Claudio’s years: his beard and head,
Ja’d of his colour. What if we do omit
This reprobat, till he were well inclin’d,
And satisfy the deputy with the visage
Of Ragozine, more like to Claudio?
Duke. O, ’t is an accident that heaven provides!
De’patch it presently: the hour draws on Prex’d by Angelo. See, this be done,
And sent according to command, whereas I
Persuade this rude wretch willingly to die.
Prov. This shall be done good father, presently.
But Barnardine must die this afternoon;
And how shall we continue Claudio,
To save me from the danger that might come,
If he were known alive?
Duke. Let this be done.—Put them in secret holds,
Both Barnardine and Claudio;
Erst twice the sun hath made his journal greeting
To wonder’d generation, you shall find
Your safety manifest.
Prov. I am your free dependant.
Duke. Quick, despatch, and send the head to Angelo.
[Exit Provost.
Now will I write letters to Angelo,
(‘Tis the provost, he shall bear them) whose contents
Shall witness to him, I am near at home,
And that by great injunctions I am bound
To enter publicly: him I’ll desire
To meet me at the consecrated fount,
A league below the city; and from thence,
By cold gradation and well balanced form,
We shall proceed with Angelo.

Re-Enter Provost.
Prov. Here is the head; I’ll carry it myself.
Duke. Convenient is it. Make a swift return,
For I would commune with you of such things,
That want no car but yours.
Prov. I’ll make all speed.
Isab. [Within.] Peace, ho, be here!
Duke. The tongue of Isabel.—Sho come to know,
If yet her brother’s pardon be come hither;
But I will keep her ignorant of her good,
To make her heavenly comforts of despair,
When it is least expected.
Isabella.
Isab. Ho! by your leave.
Duke. Good morning to you, fair and gracious daughter.
Isab. The better given me by so holy a man.
Hath yet the deputy sent my brother’s pardon?
Duke. He ha’th releas’d him, Isabel, from the world
His head is off and sent to Angelo.
Isab. Nay, but it is not so.
Duke. It is no other.
Isab. Show your wisdom, daughter, in your close patience.
Isab. O! I will to him, and pluck out his eyes.
Duke. You shall not be admitted to his sight.
Isab. Unhappy Claudio! Wretched Isabel!
Perjurious’ world! Most damned Angelo!
Duke. This not hurts him, nor profits you a jot:
Forswear it therefore; give your cause to heaven.
Mark what I say to you,’ which you shall find
By every syllable a faithful verity.
One of our convent, and his confessor,
Gives me this instance. Already he hath carried
Notice to Escalus and Angelo,
Who do prepare to meet him at the gates,
There to give up their power. If you can, pace your wisdom
In that good path that I would wish it go
And you shall have your bosom on this’ this wretch,
Grace of the duke, revenges to your heart,
And general honour.
Isab. I am directed by you.
Duke. This letter, then, to friar Peter give:
’Tis that he sent me of the duke’s return:
Say, by this token, I desire his company
At Mariana’s house to-night. Her cause, and yours
I’ll perfect him withal, and he shall bring you
Before the duke; and to the head of Angelo
Accuse him home, and home. For my poor self,
I am confined’d by a sacred vow,
And shall be absent. Werd you with this letter.
Command these fretting waters from your eyes
With a light heart: trust not my holy order,
If I pervert your course.—Who’s here?

Enter Lucio.
Lucio.
Friar, where is the provost?
Duke. Not within, sir.
MEASURE FOR MEASURE.

Lucio. O, pretty Isabella! I am pale at mine heart, to see thine eyes so red: thou must be patient. I am faint to dine and sup with water and bran; I dare not for my head fill my belly: one fruitful meal would set me to 't. But, they say, the duke will be here tomorrow. By my troth, Isabel, I loved thy brother; if the old fantastical duke of dark corners had been at home, he had lived. [Exit ISABELLA.

Duke. Sir, the duke is marvellous little beholding to your reports; but the best is, he lives not in them.

Lucio. Friar, thou knowest not the duke so well as I do: he's a better woodman than thou takest him for.

Duke. Well, you'll answer this one day. Fare ye well. [GoING.

Lucio. Nay, tarry; I'll go along with thee. I can tell thee pretty tales of the duke.

Duke. You have told me too many of him already, sir, if they be true; if not true, none were enough.

Lucio. I was once before him for getting a wench with child.

Duke. Did you such a thing?

Lucio. Yes: married, did I; but I was fain to forswear it: they would else have married me to the rotten medlar.

Duke. Sir, your company is fairer than honest. Rest you well. [GoING.

Lucio. By my troth, I'll go with thee to the lane's end. If bawdy talk offend you, we'll have very little of it. Nay, friar, I am a kind of burl; I shall stick.

[Exit.

SCENE IV.—A Room in Angelo's House.

Enter Angelo and Escalus.

Escal. Every letter he hath writ hath disvouch'd other.

Ang. In most uneven and distracted manner. His actions show much like to madness: pray heaven His wisdom be not tainted! And why meet him at the gates, and re-deliver Our authorities there?

Escal. I guess not.

Ang. And why should we Proclaim it an hour before his entering, That if any crave redress of injustice, They should exhibit their petitions In the street? Escal. He shows his reason for that: to have a despasion of complaints, and to deliver us from devices hereafter, Which shall then have no power to stand against us.

Ang. Well; I beseech you, let it be proclaimed: Betimes i' the morn, I'll call you at your house. Give notice of such men of sort and suit, As are to meet him.

[Exit.

Escal. Good night. This deed unshapes me quite, makes me unpregnant,

[Exit.

SCENE V.—Fields without the Town.

Enter Duke, in his own habit, and Friar Peter.

Duke. These letters at fit time deliver me. [Giving them.

The provost knows our purpose, and our plot. The matter being afoot, keep your instruction, And hold you ever to our special drift, Though sometimes you do blemish this from that to this, As cause doth minister. Go, call at Flavius' house, And tell him where I stay: give the like notion Unto Valentius, Rowland, and to Crassus, And bid them bring the trumpets to the gate; But send me Flavius first.

F. Peter. It shall be speeded well. [Exit Peter. Enter VARRIUS.

Duke. I thank thee, Varrius; thou hast made good haste. Come, we will walk: there's other of our friends Will greet us here anon, my gentle Varrius. [Exit.

SCENE VI.—Street near the City Gate.

Enter Isabella and MARIANA.

Isab. To speak so indirectly, I am lost: I would say the truth; but to accuse him so, That is your part; yet I'm advis'd to do it, He says, to 'vailful purpose.

Mori. Be rul'd by him.

Isab. Besides, he tells me, that if peradventure He speak against me on the adverse side, I should not think it strange; for 'tis a physic, That's bitter to sweet end.

Mori. I would, friar Peter—

Isab. O, peace! the friar is come. [Enter Friar Peter.

F. Peter. Come; I have found you out a stand most fit, Where you may have such vantage on the duke, He shall not pass you. Twice have the trumpets sounded: The poultries and gravest citizens Have bent the gates, and very near upon The duke is entering: therefore hence, away. [Exit

ACT V.

SCENE I.—A public place near the City Gate.

MARIANA, (wond'ring) ISABELLA and PETER, at a distance.

Enter at several doors, DUKE, VARRIUS, Lords; ANGELO, ESCALUS, LUCIO, Provost, Officers and Citizens.

Duke. My very worthy cousin, fairly met,—

1 Knight and other eds. print this and Angelo's former speech in prose.

Our old and faithful friend, we are glad to see you.

Ang. and Escal. Happy return be to your royal grace!

Duke. Many and hearty thankings to you both, We have made inquiry of you; and we hear Such goodness of your justice, that our soul —

Measure for Measure.

Cannot but yield you forth to public thanks,
For many more requital.

Ag. You make my bonds still greater.

Duke. O! your desert speaks loud; and I should Wrong it.

To lock it in the wards of covert, bosom,
When it deserves with characters of brass
A forced residence against the tooth of time,
And rasure of oblivion. Give me your hand,
And let the subject see, to make them know
That outward courtesies would fain proclaim
Favours that keep within.—Come, Escalus;
You must walk by us on our other hand,
And good supporters are you.

Friar Peter and Isabella come forward.

F. Peter. Now is your time. Speak loud, and kneel
Before him.

Isab. Justice, O royal duke! Vail your regard

[Kneeling.]

Upon a wrong’d, I would fain have said, a maid!
A worthy prince! dishonour not your eye
By turning it on any other object,
’I’d have you heard me in my true complaint,
And given me justice, justice, justice, justice!

brief.

Here is lord Angelo shall give you justice:
Deliver yourself to him.

Isab. O, worthy duke! [Rising.] You bid me seek redemption of the devil.

Bear me yourself: for that which I must speak
Must either punish me, not being believ’d,
Or wring redress from you. Hear me, O, hear, me, here!

[Kneeling again.]

Ag. My lord, her wits, I fear me, are not firm:
She hath been a suitor to me for her brother,
Off by course of justice.

Isab. By course of justice! [Rising.]

Ag. And she will speak most bitterly, and strangely.

Isab. Most strangely, yet most truly, will I speak.

That Angelo’s forsworn, is it not strange?

That Angelo’s a murderer, is’t not strange?

That Angelo is an adulterous thief,
A hypocrite, a virgins-violator,
A not strange, and strange?

Duke. Nay, it is ten times strange.

Isab. It is not truer he is Angelo,
Yet this is all as true as it is strange:
Yet it is ten times true; for truth is true
The end of reckoning.

Duke. Away with her.—Poor soul!

Se speaks thus in th’ infirmity of sense.

Isab. O prince, I conjure thee, as thou believ’st
There is another comfort than this world,
That thou neglect me not, with that opinion
That I am touch’d with madness: make not impossible
What which but seems unlike. ’T is not impossible,
For me, the wickedest caitiff on the ground,
For seem as shy, as grave, as just, as absolute,
As Angelo; even so may Angelo,
In all his dressings, characters, titles, forms,
As arch-villain. Believe it, royal prince:
To be less, he’s nothing; but he’s more,
Sad more name for badness.

Duke. By mine honesty,
To be mad, as I believe no other,
Madness hath the oddest frame of sense,
Yet a dependency of thing on thing,
Here I heard in madness.

Isab. O, gracious duke!

Duke. Many that are not mad,
Have, sure, more lack of reason.—What would you say?
Isab. I am the sister of one Claudio,
Condemn’d upon the act of fornication
To lose his head; condemn’d by Angelo.
I, in probation of a sisterhood,
Was sent to by my brother; one Lucio
As then the messenger.—

Lucio. That’s I, an’t like your grace.
I came to her from Claudio, and desir’d her
To try her gracious fortune with lord Angelo,
For her poor brother’s pardon.

Isab. That’s he, indeeed.

Duke. You were not bid to speak.

Lucio. No, my good lord;
Nor wish’d to hold my peace.

Duke. I wish you now, then:
Pray you, take note of it; and when you have
A business for yourself, pray heaven, you then
Be perfect.

Lucio. I warrant your honour.

Duke. The warrant’s for yourself: take heed to it.

Isab. This gentleman told somewhat of my tale.

Lucio. Right.

Duke. It may be right; but you are in the wrong
To speak before your time.—Proceed.

Isab. I went
To this pernicious, caitiff deputy.
That’s somewhat madly spoken.

Isab. Pardon it:
The phrase is to the matter.

Isab. In brief,—to set the needless process by,
How I persuad’d, how I pray’d, and kneel’d,
How he relis’d me, and how I repalis’d,
(For this was of much length) the vile conclusion
I now begin with grief and shame to utter.
He would not, but by gift of my chaste body
To his consumptive intemperate lust,
Release my brother; and, after much debate,
My sisterly remorse confutes mine honour,
And I did yield to him. But the next morrow,
His purpose surfetling, he sends a warrant
For my poor brother’s head.

Duke. This is most likely.

Isab. O, that it were as like, as it is true!

Duke. By heaven, fond wretch! thou know’st not
What thou speak’st,
Or else thou art suborn’d against his honour,
In hateful practice. First, his integrity
Stands without blemish: next, it imports no reason,
That with such vehemency he should pursue
Faults proper to himself: if he had so offended;
He would have weighe’d thy brother by himself;
And not have cut him off. Some one hath set you en:
Confess the truth, and say by whose advice
Thou cam’tst here to complain.

Isab. And is this all?

Then, O! you blessed ministers above,
Keep me in patience; and, with ripe’d time,
Unfold the evil which is here wrapt up
In countenance!—Heaven shield your grace from woe,
As I, thus wrong’d, hence unbeliev’d go!

Duke. I know, you’d faiz be gone.—An officer!
To prison with her.—Shall we thus permit
A blasting and a scandalous breath to fall
On him so near us? This needs must be a practice.
Who knew of your intent, and coming hither?
Isab. One that I would have been, friar Lodowick.
Duke. A ghostly father, belike.—Who knows that Lodowick?
Lucio. My lord, I know him: 'tis a meddling friar:
I do not like the man: had he been lay, my lord,
For certain words he spake against your grace,
In your retirement, I had swing'd him soundly.
Duke. Words against me? This a good friar, belike.
And to set on this wretched woman here
Against our substitute—Let this friar be found.
Lucio. But yesternight, my lord, she and that friar
I saw them at the prison. A saucy friar,
A very scurvy fellow.
F. Peter. Blessed be your royal grace!
I have stood by, my lord, and I have heard
Your royal ear abuse'd. First, hath this woman
Most wrongfully accus'd your substitute,
Who is as free from touch or soil with her,
As from one ungent.
Duke. We did believe no less.
Know you that friar Lodowick, that she speaks of?
F. Peter. I know him for a man divine and holy;
Not scurvy, nor a temporary meddler,
As he's reported by this gentleman;
And, on my truth, a man that never yet
Did, as he vouches, misrepot your grace.
Lucio. My lord, most villainously: believe it.
F. Peter. Well; he in time may come to clear himself;
But at this instant he is sick, my lord,
Of a strange fever. Upon his mere request,
Being come to knowledge that there was complaint
Intended 'gainst lord Angelo, came I hither,
To speak, as from his mouth, what he doth know
Is true, and false; and what he with his oath,
And all probation, will make up full clear;
Whereupon he's convoluted. First, for this woman,
To justify this worthy nobleman,
So vulgarly and personally accus'd,
Her shall you hear disproved to her eyes,
Till she herself confess it.
Duke. Good friar, let's hear it.
'Isabella is carried off guarded; and MARIANA comes forward.
Do you not smile at this, lord Angelo?—
O heaven, the vanity of wretched fools!—
Give us some seats.—Come, cousin Angelo,
In this I'll be impartial*: be you judge.
Of your own cause.—Is this the witness, friar?
First, let her show her face, and after speak.
Mari. Pardon, my lord, I will not show my face,
Until my husband bid me.
Duke. What, are you married?
Mari. No, my lord.
Duke. Are you a maid?
Mari. No, my lord.
Duke. A widow, then?
Mari. Neither, my lord.
Duke. Why, you are nothing then: neither, maid, widow, nor wife.
Lucio. My lord, she may be a punk; for many of them are neither maid, widow, nor wife.
Duke. Silence that fellow: I would, he had some cause
To prattle for himself.

1trust: in f. * For, that is, very partial, a common use of the prefix.
*Summer-house.  Not in f. 6Samez.
Were testimonies against his worth and credit,
That's sealed in approbation—You, lord Escalus,
Sit with my cousin: lend him your kind pains
To find out this same issue, whence 'tis deriv'd.—
Then, to another friar that set them on;
Let him be sent for.

P. Peter. Would he were here, my lord; for he, indeed,
Hath set the women on to this complaint.
Your provost knows the place where he abides,
And he may fetch him.

Ask you, my noble and well-warranted cousin,
When it concerns to hear this matter forth,
Do with your injuries as seems you best,
Is any chastisement: I for a while
Will leave you; but stir not you, till you have well
Determined upon these alderers. [Exit Duke.

Escal. Slander to the state! Away with him to prison.

Ang. What can you vouch against him, signior Lucio?

Is this the man that you did tell us of?

Lucio. 'Tis he, my lord.—Come hither, goodman bald-pate; do you know me?

Duke. I remember you, sir, by the sound of your voice: I met you at the prison in the absence of the duke.

Lucio. O, did you so? And do you remember what you said of the duke?

Duke. Most notably, sir.

Lucio. Do you so, sir? And was the duke a flesh-monger, a fool, and a coward, as you then reported him to be?

Duke. You must, sir, change persons with me, ere you make that my report: you, indeed, spoke so of him: and much more, much worse.

Lucio. O, thou damnable fellow! Did not I pluck thee by the nose, for thy speeches?

Duke. I protest, I love the duke as I love myself.

Ang. Hark how the villain would glaze now, after his treasonable abuses.

Escal. Such a fellow is not to be talk'd with:—Away with him to prison.—Where is the provost?—Away with him to prison. Lay bolts enough upon him, let him speak no more. Away with those giglotts too, and with the other confederate companions.

Duke. Stay, sir; stay a while.

Lucio. Come, sir; come, sir; come, sir; foh! sir.

Why, you bald-pated, lying rascal! you must be hooded, must you? show your knave's visage, with a box to you! show your sheep-biting face, and be hang'd an hour. Will't not off?

[Duke. Thou art the first knave, that e'er made a duke.—[All start and stand.

First, provost, let me hail these gentle three.—
Sneak not away, sir; [To Lucio.] for the friar and you Must have a word anon.—Lay hold on him.

Lucio. This may prove worse than hanging.

Duke. What have you spoke, I pardon; sit you down.

[To Escalus.

We'll borrow place of him:—Sir, by your leave.

To Angelo.

Hast thou or word, or wit, or impudence,
That yet can do these office? If thou hast,
Rely upon it till my tale be heard,
And hold no longer out.
Ang. O, my dear lord! I should be guiltier than my guiltiness, To think I can be undiscernible, When I perceive your grace, like power divine, Hath look'd upon my passe. Then, good prince, No longer session hold upon my shame, But let my trial be mine own confession: Immediate sentence then, and sequent death, Is all the grace I beg.

Duke. Come hither, Mariana.—

Saidest thou s'er contract to this woman? Ang. I was, my lord.

Duke. Go take her hence, and marry her instantly.—

Do you the office, friar; which consummate, Return him here again.—Go with him, provost.

[Exeunt Angelo, Mariana, Peter, and Provost. Escal. My lord, I am more amaz'd at his dishonour, Than at the strangeness of it.

Your friar is now your prince: as I was then Advertising and holy to your business, Not changing heart with habit, I am still Attorney'd at your service.

Isab. O, give me pardon, That I, your vassal, have employ'd and pain'd Your unknown sovereignty!

Duke. You are pardon'd, Isabel: And now, dear maid, be you as free to us. Your brother's death, I know, sits at your heart; And you may marvel, why I overlook'd myself, Labouring to save his life, and would not rather Make rash demonstration of my hidden power, Than let him so be lost. O, most kind maid! It was the swift celerity of his death, Which I did think with slower foot came on, That brain'd my purpose: but all peace be with him! That life is better life, past fearing death, Than that which lives to fear. Make it your comfort, So happy is your brother.

Re-enter Angelo, Mariana, Peter, and Provost. Isab. I do, my lord.

Duke. For this new-married man, approaching here, Whose salt imagination yet hath wrong'd Your well-defended honour, you must pardon For Mariana's sake. But, as he adjudg'd your brother, (Being criminal, in double violation Of sacred chastity, and of promise-breath, Thereon dependent, for your brother's life,) The very mercy of the law cries out Most audible, even from his proper tongue, "An Angelo for Claudio, death for death!" Haste still pays haste, and leisure answers leisure, Like doth quit like, and Measure still for Measure. Then, Angelo, thy fault's thus manifested, Which, though thou woul'st deny, denies thee vantage. We do condemn thee to the very block Where Claudio stoop'd to death, and with like haste,— Away with him. Mar. O, my most gracious lord! I hope you will not mock me with a husband.

Duke. It is your husband mock'd you with a husband. Consenting to the safeguard of your honour, I thought your marriage fit; else imputation, For that he knew you, might reproach your life, And choke your good to come. For his possessions, Although by confiscation they are ours, We will not waste and widow you awhile, To buy you a better husband.

MARI. O, my dear lord, I crave no other, nor no better man.

Duke. Never crave him: we are definitive.

MARI. Gentle my liege,—[Kneeling]

Duke. You do but lose your labour. Away with him to death.—Now, sir, [To Lucio.] to you. Mar. O, my good lord!—Sweet Isabel, take my part: Lend me your knees, and all my life to come, I'll lend you all my life to do you service.

Duke. Against all sense you do importune her: Should she kneel down in mercy of this fact, Her brother's ghost his paved bed would break, And take her hence in horror.

MARI. Isabel, Sweet Isabel, do yet but kneel by me: Hold up your hands, say nothing, I'll speak all. They say, best men are moulded out of faults, And, for the most, become much more the better For being a little bad: so may my husband. O, Isabel! will you not lend a knee? Duke. He dies for Claudio's death.

Isab. Most bounteous sir, [Kneeling] Look, if it please you, on this man condemn'd, As if my brother liv'd: I partly think, A due sincerity govern'd his deeds, Till he did look on me: since it is so, Let him not die. My brother had but justice, In that he did the thing for which he died:

For Angelo, His act did not o'ertake his bad intent; And must be buried but as an intent That perish'd by the way. Thoughts are no subjects

Intents but merely thoughts.

MARI. Merely, my lord.

Duke. Your suit's unprofitable: stand up, I say.—[They rise. I have bethought me of another fault.— Provoost, how came it Claudio was beheaded At an unusual hour?

Prov. It was commanded so.

Duke. Had you a special warrant for the deed? Prov. No, my good lord: it was by private message Duke. For which I do discharge you of your office Give up your keys.

Prov. Pardon me, noble lord: I thought it was a fault, but knew it not, Yet did repent me, after more advice; For testimony whereof, one in the prison, That should by private order else have died, I have reserve'd alive.

Duke. What's he? Prov. His name is Barnardine.

Duke. I would thou had'st done so by Claudio.— Go, fetch him hither: let me look upon him.

[Exit Provoost. Escal. I am sorry, one so learned and so wise As you, lord Angelo, have still appear'd, Should slip so grossly, both in the heat of blood, And lack of temper judgment afterward.

Ang. I am sorry that such sorrow I procure; And so deep sticks it in my penitent heart, That I crave death more willingly than mercy: 'T is my deserving, and I do entreat it.

Re-enter Provoost, Barnardine, Claudio (muffled*), and JULIET.

Duke. Which is that Barnardine?

Prov. This, my lord Duke. There was a friar told me of this man— Sirrah, thou art said to have a stubborn soul,
That apprehends no farther than this world,
And squarst thy life according; Thou'rt condemned;
But for those earthly faults, I quit them all,
And pray thee, take this mercy to provide.
For better times to come.—Friar, advise him:
I leave him to your hand.—What muffled fellow's that?
Prov. This is another prisoner that I saw'd,
That should have died when Claudio lost his head,
As like almost to Claudio as himself. [Unmuffles him.
Duke. If he be like your brother, [To Isabella] for his sake,
Claudio and Isabella embrace.
be pardon'd; and for your lovely sake,
Give me your hand, and say you will be mine,
He is my brother too. But fitter time for that.
By this lord Angelo perceives he's safe:
Methinks, I see a quick'ning in his eye.—
Well, Angelo, your evil quits you well:
Look that you love your wife; her worth, worth yours.—
I find an apt remission in myself,
And yet here's one in place I cannot pardon.—
Yes, sirrah, [To Lucio] that knew me for a fool, a coward,
One all of luxury, an ass, a madman:
Wherein have I so well deserved of you,
That you extol me thus?
Lucio. 'Faith, my lord, I spoke it but according to do't. If you will hang me for it, you may; but I had rather it would please you, I might be whipp'd.
Duke. Whipp'd first, sir, and hang'd after.—
Proclaim it, provost, round about the city,
If say woman 's wrong'd by this lowd fellow,
(As I have heard him swear himself there's one Whom he begot with child,) let her appear,
And he shall marry her: the nuptial finish'd,
Let him be whipp'd and hang'd.
Lucio. I beseech your highness, do not marry me to a whore! Your highness said even now I made you a duke: good my lord, do not recompense me in making me a cuckold.
Duke. Upon mine honour, thou shalt marry her.
Thy slanders I forgive; and therewithal
Remit thy other forfeits.—Take him to prison,
And see our pleasure herein executed.
Lucio. Marrying a punk, my lord, is pressing to death, whipping, and hanging.
Duke. Slander a prince deserves it.—
She, Claudio, that you wrong'd, look you restore.—
Joy to you, Mariana!—love her, Angelo:
I have confesse'd her, and I know her virtue.—
Thanks, good friend Escalus, for thy much goodness!
There's more behind that is more gratulate.
Thanks, provost, for thy care and secrecy;
We shall employ thee in a worthier place.—
Forgive him, Angelo, that brought you home
The head of Ragozine for Claudio's:
Th' offence pardons itself.—Dear Isabel,
I have a motion much imports your good;
Whereeto if you'll a willing ear incline,
What's mine is yours, and what is yours is mine.—
So, bring us to our palace; where we'll show
What's yet behind, that's meet you all should know.
[Curtain drawn.]

SCENE: Ephesus.

ACT I.

Enter SOLINIUS, Duke of Ephesus, ÆGEON, a Merchant of Syracuse, Jailer, Officers, and other Attendants.

ÆGE. Proceed, Solinus, to procure my fall,
And by the doom of death end woes and all.

Duke. Merchant of Syracuse, plead no more.

I am not partial, to infringe our laws
The enmity and discord, which of late
Sprung from the rancorous outrage of your duke
To merchants, our well-dealing countrymen,—
Who, wanting gilders to re-seeem their lives,
Have seal'd his rigorous statutes with their bloods,—
Excludes all pity from our threatening looks.

For, since the mortal and intestine jars
'Twixt thy seditious countrymen and us,
It hath in solemn synods been decreed,
Both by the Syracusians and ourselves,
To admit no traffic to our adverse towns:
Nay, more, if any, born at Ephesus,
Be seen at Syracusan marts and fairs;
Again, if any Syracusan born
Come to the bay of Ephesus, he dies;
His goods confiscate to the duke's dispose,
Unless a thousand marks be levied,
To quit the penalty, and to ransom him.

Thy substance, valued at the highest rate,
Cannot amount unto a hundred marks;
Therefore, by law thou art condemn'd to die.

ÆGE. Yet this my comfort; when your words are done,

My woes end likewise with the evening sun.
Duke. Well, Syracusan: say, in brief, the cause
Why thou departedst from thy native home,
And for what cause thou cam'st to Ephesus.

ÆGE. A heavier task could not have been impos'd,
Than to speak my griefs unspeakable;
Yet, that the world may witness, that my end
Was wrought by fortune, not by vile offence,
I'll utter what my sorrow gives me leave.

In Syracuse was I born; and wed
Unto a woman, happy but for me,
And by me too, had not our hap been bad.
With her I liv’d in joy: our wealth increased,
By prosperous voyages I often made
To Epidamnum: till my factor's death,
And the great care of goods at random left
Drew me from kind embracements of my spouse:
From whom my absence was not six months old,
Before herself (almost at fainting under
The pleasing punishment that women bear)
Had made provision for her following me,
And soon, and safe, arrived where I was.
There had she not been long, but she became
A joyful mother of two goodly sons;
And, which was strange, the one so like the other,
As could not be distinguish'd but by names.
That very hour, and in the self-same inn,
A poor mean woman was deliver'd
Of such a burden, male twins, both alike.
Those, for their parents were exceeding poor,
I bought, and brought up to attend my sons.
My wife, not meanly proud of two such boys,
Made daily motions for our home return:
Unwilling I agreed. Alas, too soon we came aboard
A league from Epidamnum had we sail'd,
Before the always-wind-obeying deep
Gave any tragic instance of our harm:
But longer did we not retain much hope;
For what obscure light the heavens did grant
Did but convey unto our fearful minds
A doubtful warrant of immediate death;
Which, though myself would gently have embrac'd
Yet the incessant weepings of my wife,
Weeping before for what she saw must come,
And piteous plainings of the pretty babes,
That mourn'd for fashion, ignorant what to fear,
Force'd me to seek delays for them and me.
And this it was,—for other means were none.—
The sailors sought for safety by our boat,
SCENE II.

THE COMEDY OF ERRORS.

But though thou art adjudged to the death,
And passed sentence may not be recall'd,
But to our honour's great disparagement,
Yet will I favour thee in what I can:
Therefore, merchant, I'll limit thee this day,
To seek thy hope* by beneficent help.
Try all the friends thou hast in Ephesus;
Beg thou, or borrow, to make up the sum,
And live; if no, then thou art doomed to die.—
Jailer, now* take him to thy custody.
Jail. I will, my lord.

Ege. Hopeless, and helpless, doth Ægeon wend,
But to procrastinate his lifeless end.

[Exeunt]

SCENE II.—A public Place.

Enter ANTIPHOLUS and DRUMIO of Syracuse, and a Merchant.

Mer. Therefore, give out you are of Epidamnum,
Lest that your goods too soon be confiscate.
This very day, a Syracusan merchant
Is apprehended for arrival here;
And, not being able to buy out his life
According to the statute of the town,
Dies are the weary sun set in the west.
There is your money that I had to keep.
Ant. S. Go, bear it to the Centaur, where we host,
And stay there, Drumio, till I come to thee.
Within this hour it will be dinnertime.
Till then, I'll view the manners of the town,
Peruse the traders, gaze upon the buildings,
And then return and sleep within mine inn,
For with long travel I am stiff and weary.
Get thee away.

Dro. S. Many a man would take you at your word,
And go indeed, having so good a mean.

[Exeunt, shaking money-bag.]

Ant. S. A trusty villain, sir; that very oft,
When I am dull with care and melancholy,
Lightens my humour with his merry jests.
What will you walk with me about the town,
And then go to my inn, and dine with me?

Mer. I am invited, sir, to certain merchants,
Of whom I hope to make much benefit;
I crave your pardon. Soon* at five o'clock,
Please you, I'll meet with you upon the mart,
And afterwards consort you till bed-time;
My present business calls me from you now.

Ant. S. Farewell till then. I'll go lose myself,
And wander up and down to view the city.

Mer. Sir, I commend you to your own content.

[Exit.]

Ant. S. He that commends me to mine own content, Commends me to the thing I cannot get.
I to the world am like a drop of water,
That in the ocean seeks another drop;
Who, falling there to find his fellow forth,
Unseen, inquisitive, confounds himself:
So I, to find a mother, and a brother,
In quest of them, unhappy, lose myself.

Enter Drumio of Ephesus.

Here comes the almanack of my true date.—
What now? How chance thou art return'd so soon?

Dro. E. Return'd so soon! rather approach'd too late.

The capon burns, the pig falls from the spit,
The clock hath stricken twelve upon the bell;
My mistress made it one upon my cheek:
She is so hot, because the meat is cold;
The meat is cold, because you come not home;
THE COMEDY OF ERRORS.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—A public Place.

Enter Adriana, wife to Antipholus of Ephesus, and Luciana, her sister.

Adr. Neither my husband, nor the slave return'd,
That in such haste I sent to seek his master?
Sure, Luciana, it is two o'clock.

Luc. Perhaps, some merchant hath invited him,
And from the mart he's somewhere gone to dinner.
Good sister, let us dine, and never fret.
A man is master of his liberty:
Time is his master; and, when they see time,
'Twill go, or come; if so, be patient, sister.

Adr. Why should their liberty than ours be more?

Luc. Because their business still lies out o' door.

Adr. Look, when I serve him so, he takes it ill.

Luc. O! know he is the bride of your will.

Adr. There's none but asses will be bridled so.

Luc. Why, head-strong liberty is lash'd with woe.

There's nothing situate under heaven's eye,
But hath his bound, in earth, in sea, in sky:
The beasts, the fishes, and the winged fowls,
Are their males' subjects, and at their controls.
Men, more divine, the masters of all these,
Lords of the wide world, and wild wat'ry seas,
Indued with intellectual sense and souls,
Of more pre-eminenency than fish and fowls,
Are masters to their females, and their lords:
Then, let your will attend on their accords.

Luc. Spake he so doubly, 'twould not feel by meaning?

You come not home, because you have no stomach;
You have no stomach, having broke your fast;
But we, that know what 'tis to fast and pray,
Are penitent1 for your default to-day.

· Ant. S. Stop in your wind, sirr. Tell me this, I pray;
Where have you left the money that I gave you?

Dro. E. O! sixpence, that I had o' Wednesday last
To pay the saddler for my mistress' crupper.
The saddler had it, sir; I kept it not.

Ant. S. I am not in a sportive humour now.
Tell me, and dally not, where is the money?
We being strangers here, how dar'st thou trust
So great a charge from thine own custody?

Dro. E. I pray you, jest, sir, as you sit at dinner.
I from my mistress come to you in post;
If I return, I shall be post indeed.
For she will score your fault upon my pate.2
Methinks, your maw, like mine, should be your clock,
And strike you home without a messenger.

Ant. S. Come, Dromio, come; these jests are out of season:
Reserve them till a merrier hour than this.
Where is the gold I gave in charge to thee?

Dro. E. To me, sir? why you gave no gold to me.

Ant. S. Come on, sir knave; have done your foolishness,
And tell me how thou hast dispos'd thy charge.

Dro. E. My charge was but to fetch you from the mart.
Home to your house, the Phoenix, sir, to dinner.
My mistrees, and her sister, stay for you.

Ant. S. Now, as I am a Christian, answer me,
In what safe place you have bestow'd my money,
Or I shall break that mercy sconce of yours,
That stands on tricks when I am undisposed.

Where is the thousand marks thou hadst of me?

Dro. E. I have some marks of yours upon my pate;
Some of my mistrees' marks upon my shoulders,
But not a thousand marks between you both.
If I should pay your worship those again,
Perchance, you would not bear them impatiently.

Ant. S. Thy mistrees' marks! what mistrees, slave, hast thou?

Dro. E. Your worship's wife, my mistrees at the Phoenix;
She that doth fast till you come home to dinner.
And prays that you will hie you home to dinner.

Ant. S. What, wilt thou flout me thus unto my face,
Being forbid? There, take you that, sir knave.

Dro. E. What mean you, sir? for God's sake, hold your hands.
Nay, an you will not, sir, I'll take my heels.

[Exit running.3

Ant. S. Upon my life, by some device or other
The villain is o'er-raught4 of all my money.
They say, this town is full of cozenage;
As, nimble jugglers that deceive the eye,
Dark-working sorcerers that change the mind,
Soul-killing witches that deform the body,
Disguised cheats, prating mountebanks,
And many such like libertines of sin:
If it prove so, I will be gone the sooner.
I'll to the Centaur, to go seek this slave:
I greatly fear, my money is not safe.

[Exit.

ADR. This servitude makes you to keep unwed.

Luc. Not this, but troubles of the marriage-bed.

ADR. But, were you wedded, you would bear some away.

Luc. Ere I learn love, I'll practise to obey.

ADR. How if your husband start some other where

Luc. Till he come home again, I would forbear.

ADR. Patience unmoved, no marvel though she pause
They can be meek, that have no other cause.
A wretched soul, bruised with adversity,
We bid be quiet, when we hear it cry;
But were we burden'd with like weight of pain,

[Enter Adriano of Ephesus.

ADR. Say, is your tardy master now at hand?

Dro. E. Nay, he is at two hands with me, and the my two ears can witness.

ADR. Say, didst thou speak with him? Know'st thou his mind?

Dro. E. Ay, ay; he told his mind upon mine ear.

Luc. Behark his hand, I scarce could understand it.

Luc. Spake he so doubly, thou couldst not feel by meaning?

1 Doin' penance. 2 It was a custom to mark the score of a shop on a post. 3 sick; in f.s. 4 Not in f.s. 5 Over-reach'd. 6 allusion to the custom of soliciting the management of the estate of a fool. 7 Doubtfully.
SCENE II.—The Same.

Enter Antipholus of Syracuse.

Ant. S. The gold, I gave to Dromio, is laid up Safe at the Centaur; and the heedful slave Is wander'd forth, in care to seek me out. By computation, and mine host's report, I could not speak with Dromio, since at first I sent him from the mart. See, here he comes.

Enter Dromio of Syracuse.

How now, sir? is your merry humour alter'd? As you love strokes, so jest with me again. You know no Centaur? You receiv'd no gold? Your mistress sent to have me home to dinner? My house was at the Phoenix? Wast thou mad, That thus so madly thou didst answer me?

Dro. S. What answer, sir? when spake I such a word?

Ant. S. Even now, even here, not half an hour since.

Dro. S. I did not see you since you sent me hence, Home to the Centaur, with the gold you gave me.

Ant. S. Villain, thou didst deny the gold's receipt, And told'st me of a mistress, and a dinner; For which, I hope, thou feist'st I was displeas'd.

Dro. S. I am glad to see you in this merry vein. What means this jest? I pray you, master, tell me.

Ant. S. Yea, dost thou jear, and flout me in the teeth? Think'st thou, I jest? Hold, take thou that, and that.

[Beat him.

Dro. S. Hold, sir, for God's sake! now your jest is earnest: Upon what bargain do you give it me?

Ant. S. Because that I familiarly sometimes Do use you for my fool, and chat with you, Your sauciness will jest upon my love, And make a common of my serious hours. When the sun shines lot foolish gnat make sport, But creep in crannies when he hides his beams. If you will jest with me, know my aspect, And fashion your demeanour to my looks. Or I will beat this method in your scone.

Dro. S. Scone, call you it? so you would leave battering, I had rather have it a head: an you use these blows long, I must get a scone for my head, and insconce it too; or else I shall seek my wit in my shoulders. But, I pray, sir, why am I beaten?

Ant. S. Dost thou not know?

Dro. S. Nothing, sir; but that I am beaten. Ant. S. Shall I tell you why?

Dro. S. Ay, sir, and wherefore; for, they say, every why hath a wherefore.

Ant. S. Why, first,—for flouting me; and then, wherefore,—for urging it the second time to me.

Dro. S. Was there ever any man thus beaten out of season, When, in the why, and the wherefore, is neither rhyme nor reason?—

Well, sir, I thank you.

Ant. S. Thank me, sir? for what?

Dro. S. Marry, sir, for this something, that you gave me for nothing.

Ant. S. I'll make you amends next, and give you nothing for something. But say, sir, is it dinner time?

Dro. S. No, sir: I think, the meat that I have.

Ant. S. In good time, sir; what's that?

---
Dro. S. Basting
Ant. S. Well, sir, then 'twill be dry.
Dro. S. If it be, sir, I pray you eat none of it.
Ant. S. Your reason?
Dro. S. Lest it make you cholerick, and purchase me another dry basting.
Ant. S. Well, sir, learn to jest in good time: there's a time was on when there was no fancy but was in all things.
Dro. S. I durst have denied that, before you were so cholerick.
Ant. S. By what rule, sir?
Dro. S. Marry, sir, by a rule as plain as the plain bold pate of father Time himself.
Ant. S. Let's hear it.
Dro. S. There's no time for a man to recover his hair that grows bald by nature.
Ant. S. May he not do it by fine and recovery?
Dro. S. Yes, to pay a fine for a periwig, and recover the lost hair of another man.
Ant. S. Why is Time such a niggard of hair, being, as it is, so plentiful an excrement?
Dro. S. Because it is a blessing that he bestows on beasts; and what he hath so wanted men in hair, he hath given them in wit.
Ant. S. Why, but there's many a man hath more hair than wit.
Dro. S. But a man of those, but he hath the wit to lose his hair.
Ant. S. Why, thou didst conclude hairy men plain dealers, without wit.
Dro. S. The plainer dealer, the sooner lost: yet he loseth it in a kind of jollity.
Ant. S. For what reason?
Dro. S. For two; and 'tis sound ones too.
Ant. S. Nay, not sound, I pray you.
Dro. S. Sure ones then.
Ant. S. Nay, not sure, in a thing falsoing.
Dro. S. Certain ones then.
Ant. S. Name them.
Dro. S. The one, to save the money that he spends in trimming; the other, that at dinner they should not drop in his porridge.
Ant. S. You would all this time have proved, there is no time for all things.
Dro. S. Marry, and did, sir; namely, 'e'en no time to recover hair lost by nature.
Ant. S. But your self was not substantial, why there is no time to recover.
Dro. S. Thus I mend it: Time himself is bald, and therefore, to the world's end, will have bald followers.
Ant. S. I knew, 'twas but a bald conclusion.

But soft! who wafts us yonder?

Enter Adriana and Luciana.

Adr. Ay, ay, Antipholus, look strange, and frown: Some other mistress hath thy sweet aspect, I am not Adriana, nor thy wife.

The night was one of wantonness; when unbourn'd wouldst vow That never words were music to thine ear, That never object pleasing thine eye, That never touch well welcome thy hand, That never neat sweet-savour'd in thy taste, Unless I spake, or look'd on, or touch'd on, or curb'd thy hand. How comes it now, my husband, O! how comes it, That thou art thus estranged from thyself? Thyself I call it, being strange to me, That, unindivisible, incorporate, Am better than thy dear self's better part. Ah, do not tear away thyself from me;

For know, my love, as easy may'st thou fall A drop of water in the breaking gulph, And take unmingled thence that drop again, Without addition or diminishing, As take from me thyself, and not me too. How dearly would it touch thee to the quick, Shouldst thou but hear I were licentious, And that this body, consecrate to thee, By ruffian lust should be contaminat'd! Wouldst thou not spit at me, and spurn at me, And hurl the name of husband in my face, And tear the stain'd skin off my harlot-brow, And from my false hand cut the wedding-ring, And break it with a deep-divorcing vow? I know thou canst; and therefore, see, thou do it. I am possessed with an adulterate blots; My blood is mingled with the crime of lust: For, if we two be one, and thou play false, I do digest the poison of thy flesh, Being strumpeted by thy contagon. Keep then fair league and truce with thy true bed, I live unsta'nd'd, 'tis but undishonourned. Ant. S. Plead you to me, fair dame? I know you not. In Ephesus I am but two hours old, As strange amongst your town, as to your talk; Who, every word by all my wit being scan'd. What wilt in all one word to understand, Luc. Fie, brother: how the world is chang'd with you! When were you wont to use my sister thus? She sent for you by Dromio home to dinner. Ant. S. By Dromio? Dro. S. By me?

Adr. By thee; and this thou didst return from him.

That he did buffet thee, and, in his blows Denied my house for his, me for his wife. Ant. S. Did you converse, sir, with this gentlewoman? What is the course and drift of your compact? Dro. S. I, sir? I never saw her till this time. Ant. S. Villain, thou liest; for even her very words Didst thou deliver to me on the mart.

Dro. S. I never spake with her in all my life. Ant. S. How can she thus then call us by our names, Unless it be by inspiration? Adr. How ill agrees it with your gravity To count me thus grossly with your slave, Abetting him to thwart me in my mood! Be it my wrong, you are from me exempt, But wrong not that wrong with a more contempt. Come, I will fasten on this sleeve of thine; Thou art an elm, my husband, I a vine, Whose weakness, married to thy stronger state, Makes me with thy strength to communicate: If such possess thee from me, it is dross, Usurping ivy, brier, or idle mean; Who, for want of pruning, with intrusion Infect thy sap, and live on thy confusion. Ant. S. To me she speaks; she means' me for her theme!

What, was I married to her in my dream, Or sleep I now, and think I hear all this? What error draws* our eyes and ears amiss? Until I know this sure uncertainty, I'll entertain the proffer'd fallacy.

Luc. Dromio, go bid the servants to spread for dinner. Dro. O, I beseech you, let me: I cross me for a sinner. This is the fairy land: O, spite of spites!

1 tyring: in f.e.; an alteration by Pope, of tyring, in old eds.

THE COMEDY OF ERRORS.

We talk with goblins, owls, and elves and sprites. If we obey them not, this will enue, They'll suck our breath, or pinch us black and blue. Luc. Why prat'st thou to thyself, and answer'st not? Drom, thou Dromio, thou small, thou slug, thou scot I. Drom. I am transformed, master, am I not? Ant. S. I think thou art, in mind, and so am I. Drom. Nay, master, both in mind and in my shape. Ant. S. Thou hast thine own form. Drom. No, I am an ape. Luc. If thou art chang'd to aught, 'tis to an ass. Drom. 'Tis true; she rides me, and I long for grass. I so, I am an ass; else it could never be, But I should know her, as well as she knows me. Adv. Come, come; no longer will I be a fool, To put the finger in my eye and woop.

ACT III.

Dro. E. Maud, Bridget, Marian, Cicely, Gillian, Gin! [Calling. Dro. S. [Within] Mome, mule-horse, capon, ox-comb, idiot, patch! Either get thee from the door, or sit down at the hatch. Dost thou conjure for wenches, that thou call'st for such store, When one is one too many? Go, get thee from the door. Dro. E. What patch is made our porter?—My master stays in the street. Dro. S. Let him walk from whence he came, lest he catch cold on's feet. Ant. E. Who talks within there? No! open the door. Dro. S. Right, sir; I'll tell you when, an you'll tell me wherefore. Ant. E. Wherefore? for my dinner: I have not din'd to-day. Dro. S. Nor to-day here you must not, come again when you may. Ant. E. What art thou that keep'st me out from the house I owe? Dro. S. The porter for this time, sir; and my name is Dromio. Dro. E. O villain! thou hast stolen both mine office and my name: The one ne'er got me credit, the other mickle blame. If thou hast been Dromio to-day in my place, Thou wouldst have chang'd thy face for a name, or thy name for a face. [Luce. [Within] What a coil is there, Dromio: who are those at the gate? Dro. E. Let my master in, Luce. Luce. Faith no; he comes too late; And so tell your master. Dro. E. O Lord, I must laugh: Have at you with a proverb.—Shall I set in my staff? Luce. Have at you with another: that's,—when can you tell? Dro. S. If thy name be called Luce, Luce, thou hast answer'd him well. Ant. E. Do you hear, you minion? you'll let us in, I trow? Luce. I thought to have ask'd you. Dro. S. And you said, no.
Dro. E. So; come, help! well struck; there was blow for blow.

Ant. E. Thou baggage, let me in.

Luc. Can you tell for whose sake?

Dro. E. Master, knock the door hard.

Luc. Let him knock till it ache.

Ant. E. You'll cry for this, minion, if I beat the door down.

Luc. What needs all that, and a pair of stocks in the town?

Adr. [Within.] Who is that at the door, that keeps all this noise?

Dro. S. By my troth, your town is troubled with truly bores.

Ant. E. Are you there, wife? you might have come before.

Adr. Your wife, sir knave? go, get you from the door.

Dro. E. If you went in pain, master, this knave would go sore.

Ang. Here is neither cheer, sir, nor welcome: we would fain have either.

Bal. In debating which was best, we shall part' with neither.

Dro. E. They stand at the door, master: bid them welcome hither.

Ant. E. There is something in the wind, that we cannot get in.

Dro. E. You would say so, master, if your garments were thin.

Your cake here is warm within; you stand here in the cold:

It would make a man mad as a buck to be so bought and sold.1

Ant. E. Go, fetch me something: I'll break ope the gate.

Dro. S. Break any breaking here, and I'll break your knave's pate.

Dro. E. A man may break a word with you, sir, and words are but wind;

Ay, and break it in your face, so he break it not behind.

Dro. S. It seems, thou want'st breaking. Out upon thee, hind!

Dro. E. Here's too much out upon thee! I pray thee, let me in.

Dro. S. Ay, when fellows have no feathers, and fish have no fin.

Ant. E. Well, I'll break in. Go, borrow me a crow.

Dro. E. A crow without feather? master, mean you so?

For a fish without a fin, there's a fowl without a feather.

If a crow help us in, sirrah, we'll pluck a crow together.

Ant. E. Go, get thee gone: fetch me an iron crow.

Bal. Have patience, sir; O let it not be so:

Herein you war against your reputation,

And draw within the compass of suspect

Th' unviolated honour of your wife.

Once this,—Your long experience of her wisdom,

Her sober virtue, years, and modesty,

Plead on her part some cause to you unknown;

And doubt not, sir, but she will well excuse

Why at this time the doors are made against you.

Be rul'd by me: depart in patience,

And let us to the Tiger all to dinner;

And about evening come yourself alone

To know the reason of this strange restraint.

If by strong hand you offer to break in,

Now in the stirring passage of the day,

A vulture comment will be made of it;

And that supposed by the common route,

Against your yet ungalled estimation,

That may with foul intrusion enter in,

And dwell upon your grave when you are dead:

For slander lives upon succession,

For ever housed, where it gets possession.

Ant. E. You have prevail'd: I will depart in quiet,

And, in despite of mirth, mean to be merry.

I know a wench of excellent discourse,

Pretty and witty; wild, and yet too gentle;

There will we dine. This woman that I mean,

My wife (but I protest, without desert),

Hath oftentimes upbraided me withal:

To her will we to dinner.—Get you home,

And fetch the chain; by this, I know, 'tis made.

Bring it, I pray you, to the Porcupine;4

For there's the house. That chain will I bestow

(De it for nothing but to spite my wife)

Upon mine hostess there: Goodman, make haste.

Since mine own doors refuse to entertain me,

I'll knock elsewhere, to see if they'll disdain me.

Ang. I'll meet you at that place, some hour hence.

Ant. E. Do so. This jest shall cost me some expense.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The Same.

Enter Luciana, and Antipholus of Syracuse.

Luc. And may it be that you have quite forgot,

A husband's office? Shall unkind debate4

Even in the spring of love, thy love-springs rot?

Shall love, in building, grow so ruinate?

If you did wed my sister for her wealth,

Then, for her wealth's sake use her with more kindness:

Or, if you like elsewhere, do it by stealth:

Muffle your false love with some show of blindness,

Let not my sister read it in your be.

Be not thy tongue thy own shame's orator:

Look sweet, speak fair, become disloyalty;

Apparel vice like virtue's harbinger:

Bear a fair presence, though your heart be tainted;

Teach sin the carriage of a holy saint;

Be secret-false; what need she be acquainted?

What simple thief bags of his own attain?

'T is double wrong to truant with your bed,

And let her read it in thy looks at board:

Shame hath a bastard fame, well managed;

Ill deeds are doubled with an evil word.

Alas, poor women! make us but believe,

Being compact of credit,5 that you love us,

Though others have the arm, show us the sleeve,

We in your motion turn, and you may move us.

Then, gentle brother, get you in again:

Comfort my sister, cheer her, call her wife.

'T is holy sport to be a little vain,

When the sweet breath of flattery conquers strife.

Ant. S. Sweet mistress, (what your name is else, know not,

Nor by what wonder you do hit of mine,)>

Less in your knowledge, and your grace you show me,

Than our earth's wonder; more than earth divine.

Teach me, dear creature, how to think and speak:

1 Depart. 2 In the same sense as our slang phrase, sold. 3 Once for all let me tell you this. 4 All the old eds. have Porcupine: which Lyres would retain, as a distinct form of the word used by many old writers. 5 i.e. have Antipholous, in place of the last 3 words. 6 Full of credulity.
THE COMEDY OF ERRORS.

Lay open to my earthy gross conceit,
Embro'd in errors feeble, shallow, weak,
The feigned meaning of your words deceit.
Against my soul's pure truth, why labour you
To make it wander in an unknown field?
Are you a god? would you create me new?
Transform me then, and to your power I'll yield.
But if that I am, then well I know,
Your weeping sister is no wife of mine,
Nor to her bed no homage do I owe:
Far more, far more, to you do I incline!
O my dear, sweet mermaid, with thy note,
To drown me in thy sister's flood of tears.
Sad synec, for thyself, and I will dote
Spread o'er the silver waves thy golden hairs,
And as a bed I'll take thee, and there lie;
And, in that glorious supposition, think
He gains by death, that hath such means to die:
Let Love,* being light, be drowned if she sink!
Loc. What! are you mad, that you do reason so?
Ant. S. Not mad, but mated;* how I do not know.
Loc. Why so jealous that springeth from your eye.
Ant. S. For gazing on your beams, fair sun, being by.
Loc. Gaze where you should, and that will clear your sight.
Ant. S. As good to wink, sweet love, as look on night.
Loc. Why call you me love? call my sister so.
Ant. S. Thy sister's sister.
Loc. That's my sister.
Ant. S. No; to thyself, mine own self's better part;
Mine eye's clear eye, my dear heart's dearer heart;
My food, my fortune, and my sweet hope's aim,
My sole earth's heaven, and my heaven's claim.
Loc. All this my sister is, or else should be.
Ant. S. Call thyself sister, sweet, for I am thee.
Thee will I love, and with thee lead my life:
Thee hast no husband yet, nor no wife.
Loc. Give me thy hand.

O, soft! sir! hold you still:
I'll fetch my sister, to get her good-will. [Exit.

Enter Dromio of Syracuse, running.*

Ant. S. Why, how now, Dromio! where run'st thou so fast?

Dro. S. Do you know me, sir? am I Dromio? am I your man? am I myself?
Ant. S. Thou art Dromio, thou art my man, thou art thyself.

Dro. S. I am an ass; I am a woman's man, and besides myself.

Ant. S. What woman's man? and how besides thyself?

Dro. S. Marry, sir, besides myself, I am due to a woman; one that claims me, one that haunts me, one that will have me.

Ant. S. What claim lays she to thee?

Dro. S. Marry, sir, such claim as you would lay to ty hang; and she would have me as a beast; not but I being a beast, she would have me; but that she,
being a very beastly creature, lays claim to me.

Ant. S. What is she?

Dro. S. A very reverend body; ay, such a one as a man may not speak of, without he say, sir-reverence.*
I have but lean luck in the match, and yet she is a wonderful fat marriage.

Ant. S. How does thou mean a fat marriage?

Dro. S. Marry, sir, she's the kitchen-wench, and all grace; and I know not what use to put her to, but may make a lamp of her, and run from her by her own light.
I warrant, her rags, and the tallow in them, will burn a Polar winter: if she lives till doomsday, she'll burn a week longer than the whole world.

Ant. S. What complexion is she of?* Dromio, like my shoe, but her face nothing like so clean kept: for why? she swears; a man may go over shoes in the grime of it.

Ant. S. That's a fault that water will mend.

Dro. S. No, sir; 'tis in grain: Noah's flood could not do it.

Ant. S. What's her name?

Dro. S. Neil, sir; but her name is three quarters, that is an ell; and three quarters will not measure her from hip to hip.

Ant. S. Then she bears some breadth?

Dro. S. No longer from head to foot, than from hip to hip: she is spherical, like a globe, I could find out countries in her.

Ant. S. In what part of her body stands Ireland?

Dro. S. Marry, sir, in her buttocks: I found it out by the bogs.

Ant. S. Where Scotland?

Dro. S. I found it by the barrenness, hard, in the palm of the hand.

Ant. S. Where France?

Dro. S. In her forehead; arm'd and reverted, makning war against her heir. *

Ant. S. Where England?

Dro. S. I look'd for the chalky cliffs, but I could not find no whiteness in them: but I guess, it stood in her chin, by the salt rheum that ran between France and it.

Ant. S. Where Spain?

Dro. S. Faith, I saw it not; but I felt it hot in her breath.

Ant. S. Where Americas, the Indies?

Dro. S. O! sir, upon her nose, all o'er embellished with rubies, carbuncles, sapphires, declining their rich aspect to the hot breath of Spain, who sent whole armadaes of carracks to be ballast at her nose.

Ant. S. Where stood Belgia, the Netherlands?

Dro. S. O! sir, I did not look so low. To conclude, this drudge, or diviner, laid claim to me; call'd me Dromio; swore, I was assured to her: told me what privy marks I had about me, as the mark of my shoulder, the mole in my neck, the great wart on my left arm, that I, amazed, ran from her as a witch: and,
I think, if my breasst had not been made of faith, and my heart of steel, she had transform'd me to a curtail-dog, and made me turn i' the wheel.

Ant. S. Go, tie thee presently post to the road,
And if the wind blow any way from shore,
I will not harbour in this town to-night.
If any bark put forth, come to the mart,
Where I will walk till thou return to me.
If every one knows us, and we know none,
'Tis time, I think, to trudge, pack, and begone.

Dro. S. As from a bear a man would run for life,
So fly I from her that would be my wife. [Exit.

Ant. S. There's none but witches do inhabit here,
And therefore 't is high time that I were hence.
She that doth call me husband, even my soul,
Both for a wife abhor; but her fair sister,
Possessed with such a gentle sovereign grace,

THE COMEDY OF ERRORS.

Of such enchanting presence and discourse,
Hath almost made me traitor to myself:
But, lest myself be guilty of self-wrong,
I'll stop mine ears against the mermaid's song.

Enter Angelo.

Ang. Master Antipholus?
Ant. S. Ay, that's my name.
Ang. I know it well, sir. Lo! here is the chain.
I thought to have ta'en you at the Porcupine;
The chain unfinished made me stay thus long.

Ant. S. What is your will that I shall do with this?
Ang. What please yourself, sir: I have made it for you.
Ant. S. Made it for me, sir? I bespeak it not.

Ang. Not once, nor twice, but twenty times you have Go home with it, and please your wife withal;
And soon at supper-time I'll visit you,
And then receive my money for the chain

Ant. S. I pray you, sir, receive the money now,
For fear you ne'er see chain, nor money, more.

Ang. You are a merry man, sir. Fare you well.

Ant. S. What I should think of this, I cannot tell;
But this I think, there's no man is so vain,
That would refuse so fair an offer'd chain.
I see, a man here needs not live by shifts,
When in the streets he meets such golden gifts.
I'll to the merr, and there for Dromio stay:
If any ship put out, then straight away.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—The Same.

Enter a Merchant, Angelo, and an Officer.

Mer. You know, since Pentecost the sum is due,
And since I have not much importun'd you;
Nor now I had not, but that I am bound
To Persia, and want gilders for my voyage:
Therefore, make present satisfaction,
Or I'll attach you by this officer.

Ang. Even just the sum, that I do owe to you,
Is growing to me by Antipholus;
And, in the instant that I met with you,
He had of me a chain: at five o'clock,
I shall receive the money for the same.
Pleaseth you walk with me down to his house,
I will discharge my bond, and thank you too.

Enter ANTIPOHlus of Ephesus, and Dromio of Ephesus, from the Countess's.

Off. That labour may you save: see where he comes.

Ant. E. While I go to the goldsmith's house, go thou
And buy a rope's end, that will bestow
Among my wife and these, confederates,
For locking me out of my doors by day.—
But soft, I see the goldsmith.—Get thee gone;
Buy thou a rope, and bring it home to me.

Dro. E. I buy a thousand pound a-year? I buy a

Ant. E. A man is well holp up that trusts to you:
I promis'd me your presence, and the chain,
But neither chain, nor goldsmith, came to me.
Belike, you thought our love would last too long,
If it were chain'd together, and therefore came not.

Ang. Saving your merry humour, here's the note
How much your chain weighs to the utmost caract,
The fineness of the gold, and chargeful fashion,
Which doth amount to three odd ducats more
Than I stand debted to this gentleman:
I pray you, see him presently discharge'd,
For he is bound to sea, and stays but for it.

Ant. E. I am not furnish'd with the present money;
Besides, I have some business in the town.
Good signor, take the stranger to my house,
And with you take the chain, and bid my wife
Disburse the sum on the receipt thereof:
Perchance, I will be there as soon as you.

Ang. Then, you will bring the chain to her yourself?
Ant. E. No; bear it with you, lest I come not time enough.

Ang. Well, sir, I will. Have you the chain about you?
Ant. E. An if I have not, sir, I hope you have,
Or else you may return without your money.

Ang. Nay, come, I pray you, sir, give me the chain:
Both wind and tide stay for this gentleman,
And I, to blame, have held him here too long.

Ant. E. Good lord! you use this dainty act,
To excuse your breach of promise to the Porcupine.
I should have chid you for not bringing it,
But, like a shrew, you first begin to braw.

Mer. The hour steals on: I pray you, sir, dispatch.

Ang. You hear, how he importunes me: the chain—
Ant. E. Why, give it to my wife, and fetch your money.

Ang. Come, come; you know, I gave it you even now.
Either send the chain, or send by me some token.

Ant. E. Fie! now you run this humour out of breath.
Come, where's the chain? I pray you, let me see it.

Mer. My business cannot brook this dainty act.
Good sir, say, whe'er you'll answer me, or no?
If not, I'll leave him to the officer.

Ant. E. I answer you! what should I answer you?
Ang. The money that you owe me for the chain.
Ant. E. I owe you none, till I receive the chain.
Ang. You know, I gave it you half an hour since.

Ant. E. You gave me none: you wrong me much to say so.

Ang. You wrong me more, sir, in denying it:
Consider how it stands upon my credit.

Mer. Well, officer, arrest him at my suit.

Off. I do, and charge you in the duke's name to obey me.

Ang. This touches me in reputation.—
Either consent to pay this sum for me,
Or I attach you by this officer.

Ant. E. Consent to pay for that I never had?
Arrest me, foolish fellow, if thou dar'st.

Ang. Here is thy fee: arrest him, officer.—
I would not spare my brother in this case,
If he should scorn me so apparently.

Off. I do arrest you, sir. You hear the suit.

Ant. E. I do obey thee, till I give thee bail.

But, sirrah, you shall buy this sport as dear,
As all the metal in your shop will answer.

Ang. Sir, sir, I shall have law in Ephesus,
To your notorious shame, I give it not.

Enter Dromio of Syracuse.

Dro. S. Master, there is a bark of Epidaurus,
THE COMEDY OF ERRORS.

That stays but till her owner comes aboard,
And then, sir, she bears away. Our frantsage, sir,
I have convey'd abroad, and I have bought
The oil, the tisamentum, and aqua-vite.
The ship is in her trim; the merry wind
Bows fair from land; they stay for nought at all,
But for their owner, master, and yourself.

Ant. E. How now? a madman! Why, thou peevish sheep,
What ship of Epidamnum stays for me?
Dro. S. A ship you sent me to, to hire waftage.
Ant. E. Thou drunken slave, I sent thee for a rope's end;
And told thee to what purpose, and what end.
Dro. S. You sent me for a rope's end as soon.
You sent me to the bay, sir, for a bark.
Ant. E. I will debate this matter at more leisure,
And teach your ears to list me with more heed.
To Adriana, villain, hie thee straight;
Give her this key, and tell her, in the desk
That's cover'd o'er with Turkish tapestry,
There is a purse of ducats: let her send it.
I'll bid them arrest her in the street,
And that shall bail me. Hie thee, slave, be gone.
On, officer, to prison till it come. [Exit Merchant, Angelo, Officer, and Ant. E.
Dro. S. To Adriana? is that where we din'd,
Where Dowesabel did claim me for her husband:
She is too big, I hope, for me to compass.
Tush! I must, although against my will,
For servants must their masters' minds fulfill. [Exit.

SCENE II.—The Same.

Enter ADRIANA and LUCIANA.

Luc. Ah! Luciana, did he tempt thee so?
Mightst thou perceive anything in his eye
That did please in earnest? yea or no?
Look'd he or red, or pale? or sad, or merry?
What observation mad'st thou in this case,
Of his heart's meteor's tilting in his face?
Luc. First he denied you had in him no right.
Luc. He meant, he did me none: the more my spite.
Luc. Then swore he, that he was a stranger here.
Luc. And true he swore, though yet forsworn he were.
Luc. Then pleaded I for you.

Luc. And what said he?
Luc. That love I begg'd for you, he begg'd of me.
Luc. With what persuasion did he tempt thy love?
Luc. With words, that in a honest suit might move,
Fast, he did praise my beauty; then, my speech.

Luc. Didst speak him fair?
Luc. Have patience, I beseech. Luc. I cannot, nor I will not hold me still:
My tongue, though not my heart, shall have his will.
It is deformed, crooked, old, and sere;
I'd, worse bodied, shapeless everywhere;
Venial, gentle, foolish, blunt, unkind,
Sectistical in making, worse in mind.
Luc. Who would be jealous, then, of such a one?

Serv. lest is wai'd when it is gone.

Luc. Ah! but I think him better than I say,
Yet would herein others' eyes were worse.
From her near the lapsing cries away:
My heart prays for Lum, though my tongue do curse.

Enter DROMIO of Syracuse, running.

Dro. S. Here, go: the deck! the purse! swift, now make haste.

Luc. How hast thou lost thy breath?

Dro. S. By running fast.

Luc. Where is thy master, Dromio? is he well?

Dro. S. No, he's in Tartar limbo, worse than hell.
A devil in an everlasting garment hath him falle.
One whose hard heart is button'd up with steel;
Who knows no touch of mercy, cannot feel;
A fiend, a fury; pitiless and rough;
A wolf; nay, worse, a fellow all in buff;
A back-friend, a shoulder-clapper, one that countermands
The passages and alleys, creeks and narrow lands:
A hound that runs counter, and yet draws dry-foot well.

One that, before the judgment, carries poor souls to hell.

Luc. Why, man, what is the matter?

Dro. S. I do not know the matter: he is rested on the case.

Luc. Where is he arrested? tell me, at whose suit.

Dro. S. I know not at whose suit he is arrested well,
But he's in a suit of buff which rested him, that can I tell.
Will you send him, mistress, redemption? the money in his desk?

Luc. Go fetch it, sister.—This I wonder at:

[Exit Luciana.

That he, unknown to me, should be in debt:
Tell me, was he arrested on a band?

Dro. S. Not on a band, but on a stronger thing;
A chain, a chain: do you not hear it ring?

Luc. What, the chain?

Dro. S. No, no, the bell. 'T is time that I were gone:
It was two ere I left him, and now the clock strikes one.

Luc. The hours come back! that did I never hear.

Dro. S. O yes; if any hour meet a serjeant, 'a turns back for very fear.

Luc. As if time were in debt! how fondly dost thou reason!

Dro. S. Time is a very bankrupt, and owes more than he's worth to season.

Luc. Nay, he's a thief too: have you not heard men say,
That time comes stealing on by night and day?
If he be in debt and theft, and a serjeant in the way,
Hath he not reason to turn back any hour in a day?

Re-enter Luciana.

Luc. Go, Dromio: there's the money, bear it straight,
And bring thy master home immediately.

Come, sister; I am press'd down with conceit,
Conceit, my comfort, and my injury.

SCENE III.—The Same.

Enter ANTIPHOLUS of Syracuse, wearing the chain.

Ant. S. There's not a man I meet but doth salute me,
As if I were their well acquainted friend,
And every one doth call me by my name.
Some tender money to me, some invite me;
Some other give me thanks for kindesses;
Some offer me commodities to buy:
Even now a tailor call'd me in his shop,
And show'd me silks that he had bought for me,
And, therewithal, took measure of my body.
Sure, these are but imaginary wiles,
And Lapland sorcerers inhabit here.

Enter Dromio of Syracuse.

Dro. S. Master, here's the gold you sent me for.

What have you got the picture of old Adam new apparel'd?

Ant. S. What gold is this? What Adam dost thou mean?

Dro. S. Not that Adam that kept the paradise, but that Adam that keeps the prison: he that goes in the calf's skin that was kill'd for the prodigal: he that came behind you, sir, like an evil angel, and bid you forsake your liberty.

Ant. S. I understand thee not.

Dro. S. No? why, 'tis a plain case: he that went, like a base-viol, in a case of leather: the man, sir, that, when gentlemen are tired, gives them a fob, and 'rests them: he, sir, that takes pity on decayed men, and gives them suits of duration; he that sets up his rest to do more exploits with his mace, than a morris-pike. 1

Ant. S. What, thou mean'st an officer?

Dro. S. Ay, sir, the sergeant of the band; he that brings any man to answer it, that breaks his band; one that thinks a man always going to bed, and says, "God give you good rest!?"

Ant. S. Well, sir, there rest in your foolery. Is there any ship puts forth to-night? may we be gone?

Dro. S. Why, sir, I brought you word an hour since, that the bark Expedition put forth to-night; and then you hindered by the sergeant to tarry for the holy Delay. Here are the angels that you sent for to deliver you.

Ant. S. The fellow is a distract, and so am I,

And here we wander in illusions.

Some blessed power deliver us from hence!

Enter a Courtzan.

Cour. Well met, well met, master Antipholus.

I see, sir, you have found the goldsmith now.

Is that the chain, you promised to-day?

Ant. S. Satan, avoid! I charge thee, tempt me not!

Dro. S. Master, is this mistress Satan?

Ant. S. It is the devil.

Dro. S. Nay, she is worse, she is the devil's dam; and here she comes in the habit of a light wench: and thereof comes that the wenches say, "God damn me," that's as much as to say, "God make me a light wench." It is written, they appear to men like angels of light: light is an effect of fire, and fire will burn; ergo, light wenches will burn. Come not near her.

Cour. Your man and you are marvellous merry, sir. Will you go with me? we'll mends our dinner here.

Dro. S. Master, if you do expect spoon-meat, bespeak a long spoon.

Ant. S. Why, Dromio?

Dro. S. Marry, he must have a long spoon that must eat with the devil.

Ant. S. Avoid, thou fiend! what tell'st thou me of supping?

Thou art, as you are all, a sorceress:

I conjure thee to leave me, and be gone.

Cour. Give me the ring of mine you had at dinner, Or for my diamond the chain you promised,

And I'll be gone, sir, and not trouble you.

Dro. S. Some devils ask but the parings of sins's nail,

A rush, a hair, a drop of blood, a pin, a nut, a cherry-stone;

But she, more covetous, would have a chain.

Master, be wise: an if you give it her,

The devil will shake her chain, and fright us with it.

Cour. I pray you, sir, my ring, or else the chain.

I hope you do not mean to cheat me so.

Ant. S. Avant, thou witch! Come, Dromio, let us go.

Dro. S. Fly pride, says the peacock: mistresses, that you know.

[Exeunt Ant. and Dro.

Cour. Now, out of doubt, Antipholus is mad,

Else would he never so demean himself.

A ring he hath of mine worth forty ducats,

And for the same he promised me a chain:

Both one and other he denies me now.

The reason that I gather he is mad,

Besides this present instance of his rage,

Is a mad tale he told to-day at dinner

Of his own doors being shut against his entrance.

Belike, his wife, acquainted with his fits,

On purpose shuts the doors against his way.

My way is now, to his home to his house,

And tell his wife, that, being lunatic,

He rush'd into my house, and took perforce

My ring away. This course I fittest choose,

For forty ducats is too much to lose.

[Exeunt.

SCENE IV. —The Same.

Enter Antipholus of Ephesus, and a Jailer.

Ant. E. Fear me not, man; I will not break away:

I'll give thee, ere I leave thee, so much money,

To warrant thee, as I am 'rested for.

My wife is in a wayward mood to-day,

And will not lightly trust the messenger:

That I should be attach'd in Ephesus,

I tell you, 'twill sound harshly in her ears.

Enter Dromio of Ephesus with a rope's end.

Here comes my man: I think he brings the money.—

How now, sir? have you that I sent you for?

Dro. E. Here's that, I warrant you, will pay them all.

Ant. E. But where's the money?

Dro. E. Why, sir, I gave the money for the rope.

Ant. E. Five hundred ducats, villain, for a rope?

Dro. E. I'll serve you, sir; five hundred at the rate.

Ant. E. Then what end did I bid thee hie thee home?

Dro. E. To a rope's end, sir; and to that end am I return'd.

Ant. E. And to that end, sir, I will welcome you.

[Beating him.

Jail. Good sir, be patient.

Dro. E. Nay, 'tis for me to be patient; I am in adversity.

Jail. Good now, hold thy tongue.

Dro. E. Nay, rather persuade him to hold his hands.

Ant. E. Thou whoreson, senseless villain!

Dro. E. I would I were senseless, sir; that I might not feel your blows.

Ant. E. Thou art sensible in nothing but blows, and so is an ass.

Dro. E. I am an ass, indeed: you may prove it by my long ears. I have serv'd him from the hour of my nativity to this instant, and have nothing at his hands for my service, but blows. When I am cold, he heats me with beating; when I am warm, he cools me with beating: I am wak'd with it; when I sleep, raise'd with it, when I sit; driven out of doors with it, when I go from home; welcomed home with it, when I return; nay, I bear it on my shoulders, as a beggar won't her brat; and, I think, when he hath lamed me, I shall beg with it from door to door.

Ant. E. Come, go along: my wife is coming yonder.

Scene IV.
THE COMEDY OF ERRORS.
97

Enter Adriana, Luciana, the Courtesan, and a Schoolmaster called Pinch.

Dro. E. Mistresses, respite finem,1 respect your end: or rather the prophecy, like the parrot, "beware the rope's end."

Ant. E. Wilt thou still talk? [Beats him.

Cour. How say you now? is not your husband mad?

Adr. His incivility confirms no less.—

Good doctor Pinch, you are a conjurer;

Establish him in his true sense again.

And I will please you what you will demand.

Luc. Alas, how fiery and how sharp he looks!

Cour. Mark, how he trembles in his ecstasy!

Pinch. Give me your hand, and let me feel your pulse.

Ant. E. There is my hand, and let it feel your ear.

Pinch. I charge thee, Satan, how'st within this man,

To yield possession to my holy prayers,

And to thy state of darkness hee thee straighten:

Inquire thee by all the saints in heaven.

Ant. E. Peace, doping wizard, peace! I am not mad.

Adr. O, that thou wert not, poor distressed soul!

Ant. E. You minion, you; are these your customers?

Did this companion with the saffron face

Revel and feast it at my house to-day,

While upon me the guilty doors were shut,

And I denied to enter in my house?

Adr. O, husband, God doth know, you din'd at home;

Where 'twould you had remain'd until this time,

Free from these slanders, and this open shame!

Ant. E. Din'd at home? Thou, villain, what say'st thou?

Dro. E. Sir, sooth to say, you did not dine at home.

Ant. E. Were not your doors lock'd up, and I shut out?

Dro. E. Perdy, your doors were lock'd, and you shut out.

Ant. E. And did not she herself revile me there?

Dro. E. Sans fable, she herself revil'd you there.

Ant. E. Did not her kitchen-maid rail, taunt, and scorn me?

Dro. E. Certes, she did; the kitchen-vestal scold'd you.

Ant. E. And did not, in rage depart from thence?

Dro. E. In verity, you did:—my bones bear witness,

That since have felt the rigor2 of his rage.

Ant. E. Is't good to sooth him in these contraries?

Pinch. It is his nature: the fellow finds his vein,

And yielding to him, humours well his frenzy.

Ant. E. Thou hast suborn'd the goldsmith to arrest me.

Adr. Alas, I sent you money to redeem you,

To Dronio here, who came in haste for it.

Dro. E. Money by me! heart and good-will you might;

But surely, master, not a rag of money.

Ant. E. Went'at not thou to her for a purse of ducats?

Adr. He came to me, and I deliver'd it.

Luc. And I am witness with her that she did.

Dro. E. God and the rope-maker now3 bear me witness,

That I was sent for nothing but a rope!

Pinch. Mistresses, both man and master is possessed:

I know it by their pale and deadly looks.

They must be bound, and laid in some dark room.

Ant. E. Say, wherefore didst thou lock me forth that day?

And why dost thou deny the bag of gold?

Dro. E. I did not, gentle husband, lock thee forth.

Dro. E. And, gentle master, I receiv'd no gold;

But I confess, sir, that we were lock'd out.

Adr. Dissembling villain! thou speak'st false in both.

Ant. E. Dissembling harlot! thou art false in all,

And art confederate with a dammed pack

To make a loathsome, abject scorn of me;

But with these nails I'll pluck out those false eyes,

That would behold in me this shamefull sport.

Enter three or four, and bind Antipholus and Dromio.

Adr. O bind him, bind him! let him not come near me.

Pinch. More company!—the fiend is strong within him.

Luc. Ah me! poor man, how pale and wan he looks.

Ant. E. What, will you murder me? Thou jailer, thou,

I am thy prisoner: wilt thou suffer them

To make a rescue?

Jail. Masters, let him go.

He is my prisoner, and you shall not have him.

Pinch. Go, bind this man, for he is frantic too.

Adr. What wilt thou do, thou peevish officer?

Hast thou delight to see a wretched man

Do outrage and displeasure to himself?

Jail. He is my prisoner: if I let him go,

The debt he owes will be requir'd of me.

Adr. I will discharge thee, ere I go from thee.

Bear me forthwith unto his creditor,

And, knowing how the debt grows, I will pay it.

Good master doctor, see him safe convey'd

Home to my house.—O, most unhappy day!

Ant. E. O, most unhappy strumpet!

Dro. E. Master, I am here enter'd in bond for you.

Ant. E. O, out on thee, villain! wherefore dost thou mad me?

Dro. E. Will you be bound for nothing? be mad,

Good master;

Cry, the devil.

Luc. God help, poor souls! how idly do they talk.

Adr. Go bear him hence.—Sister, so you with me.—

[Exeunt Pinch and assistants with Ant. and Dzo.

Say now, whose suit is he arrested at?

Jail. One Angelo, a goldsmith; do you know him?

Adr. I know the man. What is the sum he owes?

Jail. Two hundred ducats.

Adr. Say, how grows it due?

Jail. Due for a chain your husband had of him.

Adr. He did bespeak a chain for me, but had it not.

Cour. When as your husband, all in rage, to-day

Came to my house, and took away my ring,

(The ring I saw upon his finger now)

Straight after did I meet him with a chain.

Adr. It may be so, but I did never see it.—

Come, jailer, bring me where the goldsmith is.

I long to know the truth hereof at large.

Enter Antipholus of Syracuse, with his rapier drawn,

And Dronio of Syracuse.

Luc. God, for thy mercy! they are loose again.

Adr. And come with naked swords. Let's call more help,

To have them bound again.

Jail. Away! they'll kill us.

[Exeunt Adriana, Luciana, and Jailor.

Ant. S. I see, these witches are afraid of swords.

Dro. S. She, that would be your wife, now ran from you.
Ant. S. Come to the Centaur; fetch our stuff from thence:
I long that we were safe and sound aboard.
Dro. S. Faith, stay here this night, they will surely do us no harm; you saw they speak us fair, gave us gold. Methinks they are such a gentle nation, that but for the mountain of mad flesh that lays marriage of me, I could find in my heart to stay here still, and turn witch.

Ant. S. I will not stay to-night for all the town;
Therefore away, to get out stuff aboard. [Exeunt.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—The Same. Before an Abbey.

Enter Merchant and Angelo.

Ang. I am sorry, sir, that I have hinder'd you;
But, I protested, he had the chain of me,
Though most dishonestly he doth deny it.
Mer. How is the man esteem'd here in the city?
Ang. Of very reverend reputation, sir;
Of credit infinite, highly believ'd,
Second to none that lives here in the city:
His word might bear my wealth at any time.
Mer. Speak softly: yonder, as I think, he walks.

Enter Antipholus and Dromio of Syracuse.

Ang. 'Tis so; and that self chain about his neck,
Which he foresaw most monstrously to have.
Good sir, draw near with me, I'll speak to him.—
Signior Antipholus, I wonder much
That you would put me to this shame and trouble;
And not without some scandal to yourself,
With circumstance and oath so to deny
This chain, which now you wear so openly:
Beside the charge, the shame, imprisonment,
You have done wrong to this my honest friend;
Who, but for staying on our controversy,
Had hoisted sail, and put to sea to-day.
This chain, you had of me: can you deny it?
Ant. S. I think, I had: I never did deny it.
Mer. Yes, that you did, sir; and foresaw it too.
Ant. S. Who heard me to deny it, or foresaw it?
Mer. Those ears of mine, thou knowest, did hear thee.

Fie on thee, wretch! 'tis pity that thou liv'st
To walk where any honest men resort.
Ant. S. Thou art a villain to impeach me thus.
'I'll prove mine honour and mine honesty
Against thee presently, if thou dar'st stand.
Mer. I dare, and do defy thee for a villain. [They draw.

Enter Adriana, Luciana, Courtezs, and Others.

Adr. Hold! hurt him not, for God's sake! he is mad.—
Some get within him; take his sword away.
Bind Dromio and too, and bear them to my house.

Dro. S. Run, master, run; for God's sake take a house!
This is some priory:—in, or we are spoil'd.
[Exeunt Antipholus and Dromio to the Abbey.

Enter the Lady Abbess.

Abb. Be quiet, people. Wherefore throng you hither?

Adr. To fetch my poor distracted husband hence.
Let us come in, that we may bind him fast,
And bear him home for his recovery.
Ang. I knew, he was not in his perfect wits.
Mer. I am sorry now, that I did draw on him.
Abb. How long hath this possession held the man?
Adr. Till last week he hath been heavy, sour, sad;
And much different from the man he was;
But, till this afternoon, his passion
No brake into extremity of rage.
Abb. Hath he not lost much wealth by wreck of sea?

Baggage. Close with him. *Not in f. e

A charitable duty of my order;

And yet we must beseech your holiness

Adv. Be quiet, and depart: thou shalt not have him.

Luc. Complain unto the duke of this indignity.

Adv. Come, go: I will fall prostrate at his feet,
And never rise, until my tears and prayers
Have gain'd grace to move his highness.
And make the abbess take me person:
Comes this way to the melancholy vale,
Where the place of death and solemn execution,
Behold the ditches of the abbey here.

Adv. Upon what cause?

Luc. To see a reverend Syracusan merchant,
Who passed into this bay
Against the laws and statutes of this town,
Beheaded publicly for his offence.

Adv. See, where they come: we will behold their death.

Luc. Kneel to the duke before he pass the abbey.

Enter Duke attended; Enter bare-headed; with the Headsman and other Officers.

Duke. Yet once again proclaim it publickly,
If any friend will pay the sum for him,
He shall not die, so much we tender him.

Adv. Justice, most sacred duke, against the abbess!

Duke. She is a virtuous and a reverend lady:
It cannot be, that she hath done the wrong.

Adv. May it please your grace, Antipholus, my husband,
When I made lord of me, and all I had,
At your importunate letters, this ill day
A most outrageous fit of madness took him,
Vast desperately he hurried through the street,
With him his bondsman, all as mad as he Brought displeasure to the citizens.
Bringing in their houses, bearing thence
Keps, jewels, any thing his rage did like.
One did I get him bound, and sent him home,
While I to take order for the wounds I went,
That here and there his fury had committed.
Ass. I wot not by what strange escape,
He broke from those that had the guard of him,
And with his mad attendant and himself,
Each one with trefoul passion, with drawn swords,
Met in again, and, madly bent on us,
Caused us away; till, raising more aid,
We came again to bind them. Then they fled
Into this abbey, whither we pursued them;
And here the abbess shuts the gates on us,
And will not suffer us to fetch him out,
Nor send him forth, that we may bear him hence.
Therefore, most gracious duke, with thy command,
Let him be brought forth, and borne hence for help.

Duke. Long since thy husband serv'd me in my wars,
And to thee engag'd a prince's word,
When thou diest make me master of thy bed,
To do him all the grace and good I could.

Duke. Take some of you, knock at the abbey gate,
And bid the lady abbess come to me.
I will determine this, before I stir.

Enter a Servant.

Serv. Mistress, mistress! shift and save yourself.

My master and his man are both broke loose,
Beaten the maids' a-row,
And bound the doctor,
Whose beard they have sing'd off with brands of fire;
And ever as it blazed they threw on him
Great pails of puddled mire to quench the hair.
My master preaches patience to him, and the while
His man with scissors nicks him like a fool.
And, sure, unless you send some present help,
Between them they will kill the conjurer.

Adv. Peace, fool! thy master and his man are here:
And that is false, thou dost report to us.

Serv. Mistress, upon my life, I tell you true;
I have not breath'd almost, since I did see it.
He cries for you, and vows, if he can take you,
To scourch your face, and to disfigure you. [Cry within.

Hark, hark, I hear him, mistress: fly, be gone.

Duke. Come, stand by me; fear nothing. Guard with halberds!

Adv. Ah me, it is my husband! Witness you,
That he is borne about invisible:
Even now we both are in the abbey here,
And now he's there, past thought of human reason.

Enter Antipholus and Dromio of Ephesus.

Ant E. Justice, most gracious duke! O! grant me justice,
Even for the service that long since I did thee,
When I bestrid thee in the wars and took Deep scars to save thy live; even for the blood
That then I lost for thee, now grant me justice.

Ege. Unless the fear of death doth make me dote,
I see my son Antipholus, and Dromio!

Ant E. Justice, sweet prince, against that woman there!
She whom thou gav'st to me to be my wife,
That hath abused and dishonour'd me,
Even in the strength and height of injury.
Beyond imagination is the wrong,
That she this day hath shamelessly thrown on me.

Duke. Discover how, and thou shalt find me just.

Ant E. This day, great duke, she shut the doors upon

While she with harlots feast'd in my house.

Duke. A grievous fault. Say, woman, didst thou so?

Adv. No, my good lord: myself, he, and my sister,
To-day did dine together. So befall my soul,
As this is false he burdens me withal.

Luc. Ne'er may I look on day, nor sleep on night,
But she tells to your highness simple truth.

Ang. O perjur'd woman! They are both forsworn:
In this the madman justly chargeth them.

Ant E. My liege, I am advised what I say;
Neither disturb'd with the effect of wine,
Nor heady-rash provok'd with raging ire,
Albeit my wrongs might make one wiser mad.
This woman lock'd me out this day from dinner:
That goldsmith there, were he not pack'd with her,
Could witness it, for he was with me then;
Who parted with me to go fetch a chain,
Promising to bring it to the Porcupine,
Where Baltazar and I did dine together.
Our dinner done, and he not coming thither,
I went to seek him: in the street I met him,
And in his company, that gentleman.
There did this perjur'd goldsmith swear me down,
That I this day of him receiv'd the chain,
Which, God he knows, I saw not: for which the
He did arrest me with an officer.

Serv. I did obey, and sent my pleasant home

[Death and sorry; in f. e. 1 Importance. 2 strong; in f. e. 3 One after the other. 4 It was the custom to cut the hair of frocks in

* This word originally meant birthing, and was applied to either sex.
For certain duete: he with none return'd.
Then fairly I bespeak the officer,
To go in person with me to my house.
By the way we met
My wife, her sister, and a rabble more
Of vile confederates: along with them
They brought one Pinch, a hungry, lean-fac'd villain,
A mere anatomy, a mountebank,
A thread-bare juggler, and a fortune-teller,
A needy, hollow-eyed, sharp-looking wretch,
A living dead man. This pernicious slave,
Forsooth, took on him as a conjurer,
And gazing in mine eyes, feeling my pulse,
And with no face. as 't were, out-facing me,
Cries out, I was possess'd. Then, altogether
They tell upon me, bound me, bore me thence,
And in a dark and dankish vault at home
They! left me and my man, both bound together;
Till, gnawing with my teeth my bonds in sunder,
I gain'd my freedom, and immediately
Ran hither to your grace, whom I beseech
To give me ample satisfaction
For these deep shames, and great indignities.

Ang. My lord, in truth, thus far I witness with him,
That he dined not at home, but was lock'd out.

Duke. But had he such a chain of thee, or no?

Ang. He had, my lord; and when he ran in here,
These people saw the chain about his neck.

Mer. Besides, I will be sworn, these ears of mine
Heard you confess you had the chain of him,
After you first foresaw it on the mar,
And, thereupon, I drew my sword on you;
And then you fled into this abbey here,
From whence, I think, you are come by miracle.

Ant. E. I never came within these abbey walls,
Nor ever didst thou draw thy sword on me;
I never saw the chain, so help me heaven;
And this is false you bury me withal.

Duke. Why, what an intricate impecch is this!
I think, you all have drunk of Circe's cup.
If here you bow'd him, here he would have been;
If he were mad, he would not plead so coldly:—
You say, he dined at home; the goldsmith here
Denies that saying—Sirrah, what say you?

Dro. E. Sir, he dined with her, there, at the Porcupine.
Court, his hand, and from my finger snatch'd that ring.

Ant. E. 'Tis true, my liege; this ring I had of her.

Duke. Saw'st thou him enter at the abbey here?

Cour. As sure, my liege, as I see your grace.

Duke. Why, this is strange.—Go call the abbess hither.

I think you are all mated, or stark mad.

[Exit an Attendant.

Æge. Most mighty duke, vouchesafe me speak a word.
Haply, I see a friend will save my life,
And pay the sum that may deliver me.

Æge. Is not your name, sir, called Anthipholus,
And is not that your bondman Dromio?

Dro. E. Within this hour I was his bondman, sir;
But he, I thank him, gnaw'd in two my cords:
Now am I Dromio, and his man, unbound.

Æge. I am sure you both of you remember me.

Dro. E. Ourselves we do remember, sir, by you;
For 'tis we were bound, as you are now.
You are not Pinch's patient, you, sir?

Æge. Why look you strange on me? you know me well.

Ant. E. I never saw you in my life, till now.

*There: in f. e. * Dyre reads, "as," and puts a period after "chain." * crack'd and splitted: in f. e.
Which accidentally are met together.

Antipholus, thou cam'st from Corinth first.

Ant. S. No, sir, not I : I came from Syracuse.

Duke. Stay, stand apart : I know not which is which.

Ant. E. I came from Corinth, my most gracious lord.

Dro. E. And I with him.

Ant. E. Brought to this town by that most famous warrior,

Duke Menaphon, your most renowned uncle.

Adv. Which of you two did dine with me to-day?

Ant. S. I, gentle mistress.

Adv. And are not you my husband?

Ant. E. No; I say nay to that.

Ant. S. And so do I, yet did she call me so;
And this fair gentlewoman, her sister here,
Did call me brother.—What I told you then,
I hope, I shall have leisure to make good,
If this be not a dream I see, and hear.

Adv. That is the chain, sir, which you had of me.

Ant. S. I think it be, sir : I deny it not.

Ant. E. And you, sir, for this chain arrested me.

Adv. I think I did, sir : I deny it not.

Adv. I sent you money, sir, to be your bail,
By Dromio; but I think, he brought it not.

Dro. E. No, none by me.

Ant. S. This purse of ducats I received from you,
And Dromio, my man, did bring them me.
I see, we still did meet each other’s man,
And I was ta’en for him, and he for me,
And thereupon these errors all arose.

Ant. E. These ducats pawn I for my father here.

Duke. It shall not need: thy father hath his life.

Cour. Sir, I must have that diamond from you.

Ant. E. There, take it; and much thanks for my good cheer.

Abb. Renowned duke, vouchsafe to take the pains
To go with us into the abbey here,
And hear at large discoursed all our fortunes;
And all that are assembled in this place,

That by this sympathized one day’s error
Have suffered wrong, go, keep us company,
And we shall make full satisfaction.

Twenty-five years have I been gone in travail
Of you, my son; and at this present hour
My heavy burdens are delivered.—
The duke, my husband, and my children both,
And you the calendars of their nativity,
Go to a gossip’s feast, and go with me:

After so long grief such nativity!

Duke. With all my heart: I’ll gossip at this feast.

[Exeunt Duke, Abbess, Egeon, Courtezan, Merchant, Antino, and Attendants.]}

Dro. S. Master, shall I fetch your stuff from shipboard?

Ant. E. Dromio, what stuff of mine hast thou embarked?

Dro. S. Your goods, that lay at host, sir, in the Centaur.

Ant. S. He speaks to me.—I am your master, Dromio: Come, go with us; we’ll look to that anon.

Embrace thy brother there; rejoice with him.

[Dro. S. and E. and Adv. and Luc.]

Dro. S. There is a fat friend at your master’s house,

That kitchen’d me for you to-day at dinner:
She now shall be my sister, not my wife.

Dro. E. Methinks, you are my glass, and not my brother:
I see by you I am a sweet-faced youth.
Will you walk in to see their gossiping?

Dro. S. Not I, sir; you are my elder.

Dro. E. That’s a question: how shall we try it?

Dro. S. We’ll draw cuts for the senior: till then, lead thou first.

Dro. E. Nay, then thus:
We came into the world, like brother and brother;
And now, let’s go hand in hand, not one before another. [Exeunt.]

SCENE, Messina.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Before Leonato’s House.

Enter Leonato, Hero, Beatrice, and others, with a Gentleman.¹

Leon. I learn in this letter, that Don Pedro of Aragon comes this night to Messina.

Gent.² He is very near by this: he was not three leagues off when I left him.

Leon. How many gentlemen have you lost in this action?

Gent. But few of any sort, and none of name.

Leon. A victory is twice itself, when the achiever brings home full numbers. I find here, that Don Pedro hath bestow’d much honour on a young Florentine, called Claudio.

Gent. Much deserves on his part, and equally remembered by Don Pedro: he hath borne himself beyond the promise of his age, doing in the figure of a lamb the feats of a lion: he hath, indeed, better betted expectation, than you must expect of me to tell you how.

Leon. He hath an uncle, here in Messina, will be very much glad of it.

Gent. I have already delivered him letters, and there appears much joy in him; even so much, that joy could not show itself modest enough without a badge of bitterness.

Leon. Did he break out into tears?

Gent. In great measure.

Leon. A kind overflow of kindness. There are no faces truer than those that are so washed; how much better is it to weep at joy, than to joy at weeping?

Beat. I pray you, is signior Montanto³ returned from the wars, or no?

Gent. I know none of that name, lady: there was none such in the army of any sort.

Leon. What is he that you ask for, niece?

Hero. My cousin means signior Benedick of Padua.

Gent. O! he is returned, and as pleasant as ever he was.

Beat. He set up his bills here in Messina, and challenged Cupid at the flight; and my uncle’s fool, reading the challenge, subscribed for Cupid, and challenged him at the bird-bolt.—I pray you, how many hath he killed and eaten in these wars? But how many hath he killed? for, indeed, I promised to eat all of his killing.

Leon. Faith, niece, you tax signior Benedick too much; but he will be with me, I doubt it not.

Gent. He hath done good service, lady, in these wars.

Beat. You had musty victual, and he hath help to eat it: he is a very valiant trencher-man; he hath an excellent stomach.

Gent. And a good soldier too, lady.

Beat. And a good soldier to a lady; but what is he to a lord?

Gent. A lord to a lord, a man to a man; stuffed⁴ with all honourable virtues.

Beat. It is so, indeed: he is no less than a stuffed man; but for the stuffing.—Well, we are all mortal.

Leon. You must not, sir, mistake my niece. There is a kind of merry war betwixt signior Benedick and her: they never meet, but there’s a skirmish of wit between them.

Beat. Alas! he gets nothing by that. In our last conflict four of his five wits⁵ went halting off, and now is the whole man governed with one; so that if he have wit enough to keep himself warm, let him bear it for a difference between himself and his horse; for it is all the wealth that he hath left to be known a reasonable creature.—Who is his companion now? He hath every month a new sworn brother.

¹ Messenger: in f. e. ² Throughout the Scene: Mss.: in f. e. ³ A term of the fencing-school. ⁴ A long and light-feathered arrow, used for objects at a distance. ⁵ A short and thick arrow, for near shot. ⁶ Stuffed: in f. e. ⁷ Chaucer uses the five wits for the five senses. A similar enumeration, referred to in the text, was made of the intellectual powers. ⁸ In heraldry, a distinction.

Best. You always end with a jade’s trick: I know you of old.

D. Pedro. That is the sum of all.—Leonato, signior Claudio, and signior Benedict,—my dear friend Leonato hath invited you all. I tell him we shall stay here at least a month, and he heartily prays some occasion may detain us longer: I dare swear he is no hypocrite, but prays from his heart.

Leon. If you swear, my lord, you shall not be sworn.—Let me bid you welcome, my lord: being reconciled to the prince your brother, I owe you all duty.

John. I thank you: I am not of many words, but I thank you.

Leon. Please it your grace, lead on?

D. Pedro. Your hand, Leonato: we will go together.

[Exeunt all but Benedick and Claudio.

Claud. Benedick, didst thou note the daughter of signior Leonato?

Bene. I noted her not; but I looked on her.

Claud. Is she not a modest young lady?

Bene. Do you question me, as an honest man should do, for my simple true judgment; or would you have me speak after my custom, as being a professed tyrant to their sex?

Claud. No; I pray thee, speak in sober judgment.

Bene. Why, 1 faith, methinks she’s too low for a high praise, too brown for a fair praise, and too little for a great praise: only this commendation I can afford her; that were she other than she is, she were unhandsome, and being no other but as she is, I do not like her.

Claud. Thou thinkest, I am in sport: I pray thee, tell me truly how thou lik’st her.

Bene. Would you buy her, that you inquire after her?

Claud. Can the world buy such a jewel?

Bene. Yes, and a case to put it into. But speak you this with a sad brow, or do you play the frowning Jack, to tell us Cupid is a good hare-finder, and Vulcan a rare carpenter? Come, in what key shall a man take you, to go in the song?

Claud. In mine eye she is the sweetest lady that ever I looked on.

Bene. I can see yet without spectacles, and I see no such matter; there’s her cousin, an she were not possessed with a fury, excesses her as much in beauty, as the first of May doth the last of December. But I hope, you have no intent to turn husband, have you?

Claud. I would scarce trust myself, though I had sworn the contrary, if Hero would be my wife.

Bene. Is’t come to this, i’ faith? Hath not the world one man, but he will wear his cap with suspicion? Shall I never see a bachelor of threescore again? Go to, i’ faith; an thou wilt needs thrust thy neck into a yoke, wear the print of it, and sigh away Sundays.

Look; Don Pedro is returned to seek you.

Re-enter Don Pedro.

D. Pedro. What secret hath held you here, that you followed not to Leonato’s?

Bene. I would your grace would constrain me to tell.

D. Pedro. I charge thee on thy allegiance.

Bene. You hear, count Claudio: I can be secret as a dumb man, I would have you think so; but on my allegiance, I will make you this, on my allegiance.—He is in love. With whom?—now that is your grace’s part.

—Mark, how short the answer is:—with Hero, Leonato’s short daughter.

Claud. If this were so, so were it uttered.

Bene. Like the old tale, my lord: it is not so, nor 1This phrase is derived, says Knight, from books of credit. 2 Quarrer. 3 The old copies read: you are. 4 Old cop.: This. 5 Join Claud. If my passion change not shortly, God forbid it should be so.

D. Pedro. Amen, if you love her; for the lady is very well worthy.

Claud. You speak this to fetch me in, my lord.

D. Pedro. By my troth, I speak my thought.

Claud. And in faith, my lord, I spoke mine.

Bene. And by my two faiths and troths, my lord, I spoke mine.

Claud. That I love her, I feel.

D. Pedro. That she is worthy, I know.

Bene. That I neither feel how she should be loved, nor know how she should be worthy, is the opinion that fire cannot melt out of me: I will die in it at the stake.

D. Pedro. Thou wast ever an obstinate heretic in the despite of beauty.

Claud. And never could maintain his part, but in the force of his will.

Bene. That a woman conceived me, I thank her: that she brought me up, I likewise give her my humble thanks; but that I will have a recollection in my forehead, or hang my bugle in an invisible baldric, all women shall pardon me. Because I will not do them the wrong to mistrust any, I will do myself the right to trust none; and the fine is, (for the which I may go the finer) I will live a bachelor.

D. Pedro. I shall see thee, ere I die, look pale with love.

Bene. With anger, with sickness, or with hunger, my lord; not with love: prove, that ever I lose more blood with love, than I will get again with drinking, pick out mine eyes with a ballad-maker’s pen, and hang me up at the door of a brothel-house for the sign of blind Cupid.

D. Pedro. Well, if ever thou dost fall from this faith, thou wilt prove a notable argument.

Bene. If I do, hang me in a bottle like a cat, and shoot at me; and he that first hits me, let him be clapped on the shoulder, and called Adam.

D. Pedro. Well, as time shall try:

"In time the savage bull doth bear the yoke."*\n
Bene. The savage bull may, but if ever the sensible Benedick bear it, pluck off the bull’s horns, and set them in my forehead; and let me be vilely painted, and in such great letters as they write, "Here is good horse to hire" let them signify under my sign; — Here you may see Benedick the married man.

Claud. If this should ever happen, thou wouldest be horn-mad.

D. Pedro. Nay, if Cupid have not spent all his quiver in Venice, thou wilt quake for this shortly.

Bene. I look for an earthquake too, then.

D. Pedro. Well, you will temormize with the hours. In the mean time, good signior Benedick, repair to Leonato’s; commend me to him, and tell him, I will not fail him at supper; for, indeed, he hath made great preparation.

Bene. I have almost matter enough in me for such an embassage; and so I commit you —

Claud. To the tuition of God: from my house, if I had it. —

D. Pedro. The sixth of July: your loving friend, Benedick.

Bene. Nay, mock not, mock not. The body of your discourse is sometime guarded* with fragments, and the guards are but slightly based on neither: are you foul old ends* any further, examine your conscience, and so I leave you. [Exit BENEDECK.

Claud. My liege, your highness now may do me good.

D. Pedro. My love is thine to teach: teach it but how,

And thou shalt see how apt it is to learn

Any hard lesson that may do thee good.

Claud. Hath Leonato any son, my lord?

D. Pedro. No child but Hero, she’s his only heir.

Dost thou affect her, Claudio?

Claud. O my lord,

When you went onward on this ended action, I look’d upon her with a soldier’s eye,

That lik’d, but had a rougher task in hand,

Than to drive liking to the name of love;

But now I am return’d, and that war-thoughts

Have left their places vacant, in their rooms

Come thronging soft and delicate desires,

All prompting me how fair young Hero is,

Saying. I lik’d her ere I went to war—

D. Pedro. Thou wilt be like a lover presently,

And tire the hearer with a book of words.

If thou dost love fair Hero, cherish it,

And I will break with her, and with her father,

And thou shalt have her."

"Was’t not to this end,

That thou beganst to twist so fine a story?

Claud. How sweetly do you minister to love,

That know love’s grief by his complexion!

But lest my liking might too sudden seem,

I would have salv’d it with a longer treatise.

D. Pedro. What need the bridge much broader than the flood?

The fairest ground* is the necessity.

Look, what will serve is fit: it is once, thou loves,

And I will fit thee with the remedy.

I know we shall have revelling to-night:

I will assume thy part in some disguise,

And tell fair Hero I am Claudio;

And in her bosom I’ll unclasp my heart,

And take her hearing prisoner with the force,

And strong encounter of my amorous tale:

Then, after, to her father will I break;

And, the conclusion is, she shall be thine.

In practice let us put it presently.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—A Room in LEONATO’S House.

Enter LEONATO and ANTONIO.

Leon. How now, brother? Where is my cousin, your son? Hath he provided this music?

Ant. He is very busy about it. But, brother, I can tell you strange* news that you yet dream not of.

Leon. Are they good?

Ant. As the event stamps them; but they have a good course, they show well outward. The prince and count Claudio, walking in a thick-pleached alley in my orchard, were thus* much overheard by a man of mine: the prince discovered to Claudio that he loved my niece, your daughter, and meant to acknowledge it this night in a dance; and, if he found her accordant he meant to take the present time by the top, and instantly break with you of it.

Leon. Hath the fellow any wit, that told you this?"
MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—A Hall in LEONATO'S House.

Enter LEONATO, ANTONIO, HERO, BEATRICE, and others.

LEO. Was not count John here at supper?

ANT. I saw him not.

BEOAT. How tartly that gentleman looks: I never saw him, but I am heart-burned an hour after.

HERO. He is of a very melancholy disposition.

BEAT. He were an excellent man, that were made in the mid-way between him and Benedick: the one too like an image, and says nothing; and the other too like my lady's eldest son, evermore tartling.

LEO. Then, half signior Benedick's tongue in count John's mouth, and half count John's melancholy in signior Benedick's face,—

BEAT. With a good leg, and a good foot, uncle, and many enough in his purse, such a man would win any woman in the world,—if 'a could get her good will.

LEO. By my troth, niece, thou wilt never get thee a husband, if thou be so shrewd of thy tongue.

[Exeunt.

Ant. In faith, she's too curt.

Beat. Too curt is more than curt: I shall lessen God's sending that way, for it is said, "God sends a cursed cow short horns;" but to a cow too curt he sends none.

Leo. So, by being too curt, God will send you no horses?

Beat. Just, if he send me no husband; for the which blessing, I am at him upon my knees every morning and evening. Lord! I could not endure a husband with a beard on his face: I had rather lie in the woollen.

Leo. You may light on a husband that hath no beard.

Beat. What should I do with him? dress him in my apparel, and make him my waiting gentlewoman? He that hath a beard is more than a youth, and he that hath no beard is less than a man; and he that is more than a youth is not for me; and he that is less than a man I am not for him: therefore, I will even take sixpence in earnest of the bear-port, and lead his apes into hell.
Leon. Well then, go you into hell?
Beau. No; but to the gate; and there will the devil meet me, like an old cuckold, with horns on his head, and say, "Get you to heaven, Beatrice, get you to heaven; here's no place for you maids!" so, deliver I up my ames, and away to Saint Peter for the heavens: he shows me where the bachelors sit, and there live we as merry as the day is long.

Ant. Well, niece, I trust, you will be ruled by your father.

[To Hero]
Beau. Yes, faith; it is my cousin's duty to make courtesy, and say, "Father, as it please you." but yet for all that, cousin, let him be a handsome fellow, or else make another courtesy, and say, "Father, as it please me."

Leon. Well, niece, I hope to see you one day fitted with a husband.

Beau. Not till God make men of some other metal than earth. Would it not grieve a woman to be over-mixed with a piece of valiant dust? to make an account of long life to a clod of wayward marl? No, uncle, I'll none: Adam's sons are my brethren; and truly, I hold it a sin to match in my kindred.

Leon. Daughter, remember what I told you: if the prince do solicit you in that kind, you know your answer.

Beau. The fault will be in the music, cousin, if you be not woor'd in good time: if the prince be too important, tell him, there is measure in every thing, and so dance out the answer: for, hear me, Hero; wooing, wedding, and repenting, is as a Scotch jig, a measure, and a cinque-pace: the first suit is hot and hasty, like a Scotch jig, and full as fantastical: the wedding, mannerly, modest, as a measure, full of state and anciency; and then comes repentance, and with his bad legs falls into the cinque-pace faster and faster, till he sink a-pace into his grave.

Leon. Cousin, you apprehend passing shrewdly.

Beau. I have a good eye, uncle: I can see a church by day-light.

Leon. The revellers are entering, brother. Make good room!

[Enter Don Pedro, Claudio, Benedict, Balthasar; John, Borachio, Margaret, Ursula, and maskers.]

D. Pedro. Lady, will you walk about with your friend?

Hero. So you walk softly, and look sweetly, and say nothing, I am yours for the walk; and, especially, when I walk away.

D. Pedro. With me in your company?

Hero. I may say so, when I please.

D. Pedro. And when please you to say so?

Hero. When I like your favour; for God defend, the lute should be like the case!

D. Pedro. My visor is Philomela's roof; within the house is Jove.*

Hero. Why, then your visor should be thatched.

D. Pedro. Speak low, if you speak love.

[Exeunt Hero and Hero.]

Bene. Well, I would you did like me.

Marg. So would not I, for your own sake; for I have many ill qualities.

Bene. Which is one?

Marg. I say my prayers aloud.

Bene. I love you the better; the hearers may cry Amen.

Marg. God match me with a good dancer!

Bene. Amen.

Marg. And God keep him out of my sight, when the dance is done!—Answer, clerk.

Bene. No more words: the clerk is answered.

Urs. I know you well enough: you are signior Antonio.

Ant. At a word, I am not.

Urs. I know you by the waggling of your head.

Ant. To tell you true, I counterfeit him.

Urs. You could never do him so ill-well, unless you were the very man. Here's his hand dry up and down: you he, you are he.

Ant. At a word, I am not.

Urs. Come, come: do you think I do not know you by your excellent wit? Can virtue hide itself? Go to, mum, you are he: grace will appear, and there's an end.

Beau. Will you not tell me who told you so?

Bene. No, you shall pardon me.

Beau. Nor will you not tell me who you are?

Bene. Not now.

Beau. That I was disdainful, and that I had my good wit out of the "Hundred merry Tales."—Well, this was signior Benedick that said so.

Bene. What's he?

Beau. I am sure, you know him well enough.

Bene. Not I, believe me.

Beau. Did he never make you laugh?

Bene. I pray you, what is he?

Beau. Why, he is the prince's jester: a very dull fool, only his gift is in devising impossible slanders: none but libertines delight in him; and the commendation is not in his wit, but in his villainy, for he both pleases men, and angers them, and then they laugh at him, and beat him. I am sure, he is in the fleet; I would he had boarded me!

Bene. When I know the gentleman, I'll tell him what you say.

Beau. Do, do: he'll but break a comparison or two on me; which, peradventure, not marked, or not laughed at, strikes him into melancholy; and then there's a partridge' wing saved, for the fool will eat no supper that night. [Music within.] We must follow the leaders.

Bene. In every good thing.

Beau. Nay, if they lead to any ill, I will leave them at the next turning.

[Music. Exit. Then, exit all but John, Borachio, and Claudio.

John. Sure, my brother is amorous on Hero, and hath withdrawn her father to break with him about it. The ladies follow her, and but one visor remains.

Bora. And that is Claudio: I know him by his bearing.

John. Are not you signior Benedick?

Claud. You know me well: I am he.

John. Signior, you are very near my brother in his love: he is enamoured on Hero. I pray you, dissuade him from her; she is no equal for his birth: you may do the part of an honest man in it.

Claud. How know you he loves her?

John. I heard him swear his affection.

Bora. So did I; and he swore he would marry her to-night.

John. Come, let us to the banquet.

Claud. Thus answer I in name of Benedick,
But hear these ill news with the ears of Claudio.
'Tis certain so:—the prince woes for himself.

* Important. This word not in f. e. · An allusion to the story of Bacchus and Philomela, in Ovid. * A popular rest-book, of which only a fragment is extant. It was reprinted in 1853, after its discovery.
Friendship is constant in all other things; Save in the office and affairs of love: Therefore, all hearts in love use their own tongues; Let every eye negotiate for itself, And trust no agent, for beauty is a witch, Against whose charms faith melteth into blood. This is an accident of hourly proof, Whose misfortune I mistrusted not. Farewell, then, Hero! Re-enter BENEDETTI.

BEN. Count Claudio?

CLAU. Yes, the same.

BEN. Come, will you go with me?

CLAU. Whither?

BEN. Even to the next willow, about your own business, county. What fashion will you wear the garland of? About your neck, like an usurer’s chain, or under your arm, like a lieutenant’s scarf? You must wear it one way, for the prince hath got your Hero.

CLAU. I wish him joy of her.

BEN. Why, that’s spoken like an honest drayer: so they sell bullcows. But did you think, the prince would have served you thus?

CLAU. I pray you, leave me. [Angrily.]

BEN. Ho! now you strike like the blind man: ’tis the boy that stole your meat, and you’ll beat the post.

CLAU. If it will not be, I’ll leave you. [Exit.

BEN. Alas, poor hurt foul! Now will he creep into edges—but, that my lady Beatrice should know me, and not know me! The prince’s fool!—Ha! it may be, I go under that title, because I am merry. Yet so I am apt to do myself wrong: I am not so reputed: it is the base, though bitter disposition of Beatrice, that puts the world into her person, and so gives me out. Well, I’ll be revenged as I may.

Re-enter Don PEDRO.

D. PED. Now, signior, where’s the count? Did you see him?

BEN. Troth, my lord, I have played the part of lady Fame. I found him here as melancholy as a lodge in a green: I told him, and, I think, I told him true, that your service had got the good will of this young lady; and I offered him my company to a willow tree, either to make him a garland, as being forsaken, or to bad him up a sod, as being worthy to be whipped. D. PED. To be whipped! What’s his fault?

BEN. The flat transgression of a school-boy; who, being overjoy’d with finding a bird’s nest, shows it his companion, and he steals it.

D. PED. Will thou make a trust a transgression? The transgression is in the stealer.

BEN. Yet it had not been amiss. The rod had been made, and the garland too; for the garland he might have worn himself; and the rod he might have bestowed on you, who, as I take it, have stolen his bird’s nest.

D. PED. I will but teach them to sin, and restore them to the owner.

BEN. If their singing answer your saying, by my faith, you say honestly.

D. PED. The lady Beatrice hath a quarrel to you: the godson, that danced with her, told her she is much wrong’d by you.

BEN. O! she misused me past the endurance of a block: an oak, but with one green leaf on it, would have answered her; my very visor began to assume life, and scold with her. She told me, not thinking I had been myself, that I was the prince’s jester; that I was droller than a great thaw;uddling jest upon jest, with such importable conveyance, upon me, that I stood like a man at a mark, with a whole army shooting at me. She spoke poignards, and every word stabs: if her breath were as terrible as her terminations, there were no living near her; she would infect to the north star. I would not marry her though she were endowed with all that Adam had lent him before he transgressed: she would have made Hereules have turned spirit, yes, and have cleft his club to make the fire too. Come, talk not of her; you shall find her the infernal Atis in good apparel. I would to God, some scholar would conjure her; for, certainly, while she is here, a man may live as quiet in hell, as in a sanctuary; and people sin upon purpose, because they would go thither, so, indeed, all disquiet, horror, and perturbation follow her.

Enter CLAUDIO, BEATRICE, HERO, and LEONATO.

D. PED. Look, here she comes.

BEN. Will your grace command me any service to the world’s end? I will go on the slightest errand now to the Antipodes, that you can devise to send me on: I will fetch you a toothpick now from the densest inch of Asia; bring you the length of Prester John’s foot; fetch you a hair of the great Cham’s beard; do you any embassage to the Pigmies, rather than hold three words’ conference with this harpy Have you no employment for me?

D. PED. None, but to desire your good company.

BEN. O God, sir, here’s a dish I love not: I cannot endure my lady Tongue.

[Exit.

D. PED. Come, lady, come; you have lost the heart of signior Benedick.

BEAT. Indeed, my lord, he lent it me awhile; and I gave him use for it, a double heart for his single one: marry, once before he won it of me with false dice, therefore your grace may well say I have lost it.

D. PED. You have put him down, lady; you have put him down.

BEAT. So I would not he should do me, my lord, lest I should prove the mother of fools. I have brought count Claudio, whom you sent me to seek.

D. PED. Why, how now, count? wherefore are you sad?

CLAU. Not sad, my lord.

D. PED. How then? Sick?

CLAU. Neither, my lord.

BEAT. The count is neither sad, nor sick, nor merry, nor well; but civil, count, civil as an orange, and something of a jealous complexion.

D. PED. I faith, lady, I think your blazon to be true; though, I’ll be sworn, if he be so, his conceit is false. Here, Claudio, I have woo’d in thy name, and fair Hero is won; I have broke with her father, and, his good will obtained, name the day of marriage, and God give thee joy!

LEON. Count, take of me my daughter, and with her my fortunes: his grace hath made the match, and all grace say Amen to it!

BEAT. Speak, count, ’tis your cue.

CLAU. Silence is the perfectest herald of joy: I were but little happy, if I could say how much.—Lady, as you are mine, I am yours: I give away myself for you, and dote for your exchange.

BEAT. Speak, cousin; or, if you cannot, stop your mouth with a kiss, and let him not speak neither.

D. PED. In faith, lady, you have a merry heart.

BEAT. Yea, my lord; I thank it, poor fool, it keeps on the windy side of care.—My cousin tells him in his ear, that he is in her heart.

SCENE II.—Another Room in Leonato’s House.

Enter JOHN and BORACHIO.

John. It is so: the count Claudio shall marry the daughter of Leonato.

Bora. Yes, my lord; but I can cross it.

John. Any bar, any cross, any impediment will be medicable to me: I am sick in displeasure to him, and whatsoever comes athwart his affection ranges evenly with mine. How canst thou cross this marriage?

Bora. Not honestly, my lord; but so covertly that no dishonesty shall appear in me.

John. Show me briefly how.

Bora. I think, I told your lordship, a year since, how much I am in the favor of Margaret, the waiting-gentlewoman to Hero.

John. I remember.

Bora. I can, at any unseasonable instant of the night, appoint her to look out at her lady’s chamber-window.

John. What life is in that, to be the death of this marriage?

Bora. The poison of that lies in you to temper. Go you to the prince, your brother: spare not to tell him, that he hath wronged his honour in marrying the renowned Claudio (whose estimation do you mightly hold up) to a contaminated stale, such a one as Hero.

John. What proof shall I make of that?

Bora. Proof enough to misuse the prince, to vex Claudio, to undo Hero, and kill Leonato. Look you for any other issue?

John. Only to desire them I will endeavour any thing.

Bora. Go then; and find me a meet hour to draw Don Pedro and the count Claudio, alone: tell them, that you know that Hero loves me; intend a kind of zeal both to the prince and Claudio, (as in love of your brother’s honour, who hath made this match, and his friend’s reputation, who is thus like to be cozened with the semblance of a maid,) that you have discovered thus. They will scarcely believe this without trial: offer them instances, which shall bear no less likelihood than to see me at her chamber-window; hear me call Margaret Hero; hear Margaret term me Borachio; and bring them to see this the very night before the intended wedding: for in the mean time I will so fashion the matter, that Hero shall be absent, and there shall appear such seeming proofs of Hero’s disloyalty, that jealousy shall be called assurance, and all the preparation overthrown.

John. Grow this to what adverse issue it can, I will put it in practice. Be cunning in the working this, and thy fee is a thousand ducats.

Bora. Be you constant in the accusation, and my cunning shall not shame me.

John. I will presently go learn their day of marriage.

[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Leonato’s Garden.

Enter Benedick, a Boy following.

Bene. Boy!

Boy. Signior.

Bene. In my chamber-window lies a book; bring it thither to me in the orchard.

Boy. I am here already, sir.

Bene. I know that; [Exit Boy.] but I would have thee hence, and here again. I do much wonder, that one man, seeing how much another man is a fool when he dedicates his behaviours to love, will, after he hath laughed at such shallow follies in others, become the Claud. And so she doth, cousin.

Beat. Good lord! for alliance thus goes every one to the world, but I, and I am sun-burned: I may sit in a corner, and cry, hoigh ho! for a husband.

D. Pedro. Lady Beatrice, I will get you one.

Beat. I would rather have one of your father’s getting. Hath your grace ne’er a brother like you? Your father got excellent husbands, if a maid could come by them.

D. Pedro. Will you have me, lady?

Beat. No, my lord, unless I might have another for working-days: your grace is too costly to wear every day.—But, I beseech your grace, pardon me; I was born to speak all mirth, and no matter.

D. Pedro. Your silence most offends me, and to be merry best becomes you; for, out of question, you were born in a merry hour.

Beat. No, sure, my lord, my mother cried; but then there was a star danced, and under that was I born.—Cousins, God give you joy!

Leon. Niece, will you to those things I told you of?

Beat. I cry you mercy, uncle.—By your grace’s poison. [Exit Beatrice.

D. Pedro. By my troth, a pleasant-spirited lady.

Leon. There’s little of the melancholy element in her. my lord: she is never sad, but when she sleeps; and not ever sad then, for I have heard my daughter say, she hath often dreamed of unhappiness, and waked herself with laughing.

D. Pedro. She cannot endure to hear tell of a husband.

Leon. O! by no means, she mocks all her wooers out of suit.

D. Pedro. She was an excellent wife for Benedick.

Leon. O lord! my lord, if they were but a week married, they would talk themselves mad.

D. Pedro. County Claudio, when mean you to go to church?

Claud. To-morrow, my lord. Time goes on crutches, till love have all his rites.

Leon. Not till Monday, my dear son, which is hence a just seven-night; and a time too brief, too, to have all things answer our mind.

D. Pedro. Come, you shake the head at so long a breathing; but, I warrant thee, Claudio, the time shall not go dully by us. I will, in the interim, undertake one of Hercules’ labours, which is, to bring signior Benedick and the lady Beatrice into a mountain of affection, the one with the other. I would fain have it a match; and I doubt not but to fashion it, if you three will but minister such assistance as I shall give you direction.

Leon. My lord, I am for you, though it cost me ten nights’ watching.

Claud. And I, my lord.

D. Pedro. And you too, gentle Hero?

Hero. I will do any modest office, my lord, to help my cousin to a good husband.

D. Pedro. And Benedick is not the unhopefullest husband that I know. Thus far can I praise him: he is of a noble strain, of approved valour, and confirmed honesty. I will teach you how to humour your cousin, till all things fall in love with Benedick,—and I, with your two helps, will so practise on Benedick, that, in despite of his quick wit and his quesy stomach, he shall fall in love with Beatrice. If we can do this, Cupid is no longer an archer: his glory shall be ours, for we are the only love-gods. Go in with me, and I will tell you m’drift.

[Exeunt.
The frauds of men were ever so,
Since summer first was leavy,
Then sigh not so, &c.

D. Pedro. By my troth, a good song.

Balth. And an ill singer, my lord.

D. Pedro. Ha? no, no: faith, thou singest well enough for a shift.

Ben. [Behind.] An he was a dog that should have howled thus, they would have hang'd him; and, I pray God, his bad voice bode no mischief! I had as lief have heard the night-raven, come what plague could have come after it.

D. Pedro. Yes, marry; dost thou hear, Balthazar?

I pray thee, get us some excellent music, for to-morrow night we would have it at the lady Hero's chamber window.

Balth. The best I can, my lord.

D. Pedro. Do so: farewell. [Exeunt BALTHAZAR and MUSICIANS.] Come hither, Leonato: what was it you told me of to-day? that your niece Beatrice was in love with signior Benedick?

Claud. [Aside to Pedro.] O! ay —stalk on, stalk on; the foul sits. [Aloud.] I did never think that lady would have loved any man.

Leon. No, nor I neither: but most wonderful, that she should so dote on signior Benedick, whom she hath in all outward behaviours seemed ever to abhor.

Ben. [Behind.] Is't possible? Sits the wind in that corner?

Leon. By my troth, my lord, I cannot tell what to think of it, but that she loves him with an enragèd affection: it is past the infinite of thought.

D. Pedro. May be, she doth but counterfeit.

Claud. 'Faith, like enough.

Leon. O God! counterfeit! There was never counterfeit of passion came so near the life of passion, as she discovers it.

D. Pedro. Why, what effects of passion shows she? Claud. [Aside.] Bait the hook well: this fish will bite.

Leon. What effects, my lord? She will sit you,you heard your daughter tell you how.

Claud. She did, indeed.

D. Pedro. How, how, I pray you! You amaze me:

I would have thought her spirit had been invincible against all assaults of affection.

Leon. I would have sworn it had, my lord; especially against Benedick.

Ben. [Behind.] I should think this a gull, but that the white-bearded fellow speaks it: knavery cannot, sure, hide himself in such reverence.

Claud. [Aside.] He hath ta'en the infection: hold it up.

D. Pedro. Hath she made her affection known to Benedick?

Leon. No, and swears she never will: that's her torment.

Claud. 'T is true, indeed; so your daughter says

"Shall I," says she, "that have so oft encountered him with scorn, write to him that I love him?"

Leon. This says she, now, when she is beginning to write to him; for she'll be up twenty times a night, and there will she sit in her smock, till she have writ a sheet of paper full." —My daughter tells us all.

Claud. Now you talk of a sheet of paper, I remember a pretty jest your daughter told us of.

Leon. O! —when she had writ it, and was reading it over, she found Benedick and Beatrice between the sheets?

Claud. That.
Leon. O! she tore the letter into a thousand half-pence; nailed herself, that she should be so immodest: to write to one that she knew would flout her — "I measure him," says she, "by my own spirit; for I should flout him, if he write to me; yea, though I love him, I should."

Claud. Then down upon her knees she falls, weeps, sob, beats her heart, tears her hair, prays, cries;— "O sweet Benedick! God give me patience!"

Leon. She doth indeed: my daughter says so; and the east wind hath so much overborne her, that my daughter is sometimes afraid she will do a desperate outrage to herself. It is very true.

D. Pedro. It were good, that Benedick knew of it by some other, if she will not discover it.

Claud. To what end? He would but make a sport of it, and torment the poor lady worse.

D. Pedro. An he should, it were an alms-deed* to hang him. She's an excellent sweet lady, and out of all suspicion she is virtuous.

Claud. And she is exceeding wise.

D. Pedro. In every thing, but in loving Benedick.

Leon. O! my lord, wisdom and blood combating in so tender a body, we have ten proofs to one, that blood hath the victory. I am sorry for her, as I have just cause, being her uncle and her guardian.

D. Pedro. I would, she had bestowed this dotage on me; I would have daff'd* all other respects, and made her half myself. I pray you, tell Benedick of it, and hear what 's will say.

Leon. Were it good, think you?

Claud. Hero thinks surely, she will die, for she says, she will die if he love her not, and she will die ere she make her love known, and she will die if he woo her, rather than she will bate one breath of her accustomed crossness.

D. Pedro. She doth well: if she should make tender of her love, 't is very possible he'll scorn it; for the man, as you know all, hath a contemptible spirit.

Claud. He is a very proper man.

D. Pedro. He hath indeed, a good outward happiness.

Claud. Before God, and in my mind, very wise.

D. Pedro. He doth, indeed, show some sparks that are like wit.

Leon. And I take him to be valiant.

D. Pedro. As Hector, I assure you: and in the managing of quarrels you may say* he is wise; for either he avoids them with great discretion, or undertakes them with a most Christian-like fear.

Leon. If he do fear God, he must necessarily keep peace: if he break the peace, he ought to enter into a quarrel with fear and trembling.

D. Pedro. And so will he do; for the man doth fear God, howsoever it seems not in him by some large jest he will make. Well, I am sorry for your niece. Shall we go seek Benedick, and tell him of her love?

Claud. Never tell him, my lord: let her wear it out with good counsel.

Leon. Nay, that's impossible: she may wear her heart out first.

D. Pedro. Well, we will hear further of it by your daughter: let it cool the while. I love Benedick well, and I could wish he would modestly examine himself, to see how much he is unworthy so good a lady.

Leon. My lord, will you walk? dinner is ready.

Claud. [Aside.] If he do not dote upon her upon this I will never trust my expectation.

D. Pedro. [Aside.] Let there be the same net spread for her: and that must you do daughter, and her gentlewomen carry. The sport will be, when they hold one opinion of another's dotage, and no such matter: that's the scene that I would see, which will be merely a dumb show. Let us send her to call him in to dinner.

[Exeunt Don Pedro, Claudius, and Leonato.

Benv. [Advancing from the Arbor.] This can be no trick: the conference was sadly* borne. — They have the truth of this from Hero. They seem to pity the lady: it seems, her affections have their full bent. — Love me! why, it must be requited. I hear how I am censured: they say I will bear myself proudly, if I perceive the love come from her: they say, too, that she will rather die than give any sign of affection. — I did never think to marry. — I must not seem proud. Happy are they that hear their detractions, and can put them to mending.

They say, the lady is fair; 'tis a truth, I can bear them witness: and virtuous; 'tis so, I cannot reprove it: and wise, but for loving me; by my troth, it is no addition to her wit, nor no great argument of her folly, for I will be horribly in love with her. — I may chance have some odd quirks and remnants of wit broken on me, because I have railed so long against marriage; but doth not the appetite alter? A man loves the meat in his age, that he cannot endure in his youth. Shall quips, and sentences, and these paper bullets of the brain, awe a man from the career of his humour? No; the world must be peopled. When I said I would die a bachelor, I did not think I should live till I was married. — Here comes Beatrice. By this day, she's a fair lady: I do spy some marks of love in her.

Enter Beatrice.

Beat. Against my will, I am sent to bid you come in to dinner.

Benv. Fair Beatrice, I thank you for your pains.

Beat. I took no more pains for those thanks, than you take pains to thank me: if it had been painful, I would not have come.

Benv. You take pleasure, then, in the message! Beat. Yes, just so much as you may take upon a knife's point, and not* choke a daw withal. — You have no stomach, signior: fare you well.

[Exit.]

Benv. Ha! — Against my will I am sent to bid you come in to dinner — there's a double meaning in that. "I took no more pains for those thanks, than you took pains to thank me" — that's as much as to say, any pains that I take for you is as easy as thanks. — If I do not take pity of her, I am a villain: if I do not love her, I am a Jew. I will go get her picture.

[Exit.
in all of her: say, that thou overheard'st us;
And bid her steal into the pleasure bower,
Where honey-suckles, ripen'd by the sun,
Frolic the sun to enter; like favourites,
Yet proud by princes, that advance their pride
Against that power that bred it.—There will she hide
her,
To listen our purpose. This is thy office;
Bear thee well in it, and leave us alone.

Her. I'll make her come, I warrant you, presently. [Exit.

Her. New, Ursula, when Beatrice doth come,
As we do trace this alley up and down,
Our talk must only be of Benedick:
When I do name him, let it be thy part
To praise him more than ever man did merit.
My talk to thee must be how Benedick
Is sick in love with Beatrice: of this matter
I'll little Cupid's crafty arrow made,
That only wounds by hearsay. Now begin:
Enter Beatrice, stealing in behind.
For look where Beatrice, like a lapwing, runs
Close by the ground, to hear our conference.

Her. The pleasant'st angling is to see the fish
Cut with her golden oars the silver stream,
And greedily devour the treacherous bait:
So Agile we for Beatrice; who even now
Is lashed in the woodland coveure.
For you not my part of the dialogue.

Hero. Then go we near her, that her ear lose nothing
Of the false sweet bait that we lay for it.—
No truly, Ursula, she is too disdainful;
Nor, her spirits are as coy and wild
As bagards of the rock.

Her. But are you sure
That Benedick loves Beatrice so entirely?

Her. So says the prince, and my new-trothed lord.

Her. And did they bid you tell her of it, madam?

Hero. They did interreat me to acquaint her of it,
And never to let Beatrice know of it.

Her. Why did you so? Dost not the gentleman desire as full, as fortunate a bed,
As ever Beatrice shall couch upon?

Hero. O God of love! I know, he doth deserve
As much as may be yielded to a man;
But nature never fram'd a woman's heart
To ponder stuff that is Beatrice:
Daring and scorn ride sparkling in her eyes,
Expressing what they look on; and her wit
Shines itself so highly, that to her
No matter else seems weak. She cannot love,
My take no shape nor project of affection,
She so self-endear'd.

Her. Sure, I think so;
Let therefore, certainly, it was no good
She know his love, lest she make sport at it.

Hero. Why, you speak truth. I never yet saw man,

And never gives to truth and virtue that
Which simplicity and merit pahresst.

Urs. Sure, sure, such carping is not commendable.

Hero. No; not to be so odd, and from all fashions
As Beatrice is, cannot be commendable.

But who dare tell her so? If I should speak,
She would mock me into air: O! she would laugh me
Out of myself, press me to death with wit.
Therefore, let Benedick, like cover'd fire,
Consume away in sighs, waste inwardly:
It were a better death than die with mocks,
Which is as bad as die with tickling.

Urs. Yet tell her of it: hear what she will say.

Hero. No; rather I will go to Benedick,
And counsel him to fight against his passion:
And, truly, I'll devise some honest slanders
To stain my cousin with. One doth not know,
How much an ill word may empooison liking.

Urs. O! do not do your cousin such a wrong.
She cannot be so much without true judgment,
(Having so swift and excellent a wit,
As she is priz'd to have) as to refuse
So rare a gentleman as signior Benedick.

Hero. He is the only man of Italy,
Always excepted my dear Claudio.

Urs. I pray you, be not angry with me, madam,
Speaking my fancy: signior Benedick,
For shape, for bearing, argument and value,
Goes foremost in report, through Italy.

Hero. Indeed, he hath an excellent good name.

Urs. His excellence did ear it, ere he had it.—
When are you married, madam?

Hero. Why, in a day;—to-morrow. Come in:
I'll show thee some attires, and have thy counsel,
Which is the best to furnish me to-morrow.

Urs. [Aside.] She's lim'd, I warrant you: we have cought her, madam.

Hero. [Aside.] If it prove so, then loving goes by haps:
Some Cupid kills with arrows, some with traps.

[Exeunt Hero and Ursula.

Beat. [Advancing.] What fire is in mine ears? Can this be true?

Stand I condemn'd for pride and scorn, so much?
Contempt, farewell! and maiden pride, adieu!
No glory lives but in the lack of such.

And, Benedick, love on: I will require thee,
Taming my wild heart, to thy loving hand.
If thou dost love, my kindness shall incite thee
To bind our loves up in a holy band;
For others say thou dost deserve, and I
Believe it better than reportingly.

[Exit.

SCENE II.—A Room in Leonato's House.

Enter Don Pedro, Claudio, Benedick, and Leonato.

D. Pedro. I do but stay till your marriage be consummated, and then go I toward Arragon.

Claudio. I'll bring you thither, my lord, if you will vouchsafe me.

D. Pedro. Nay; that would be as great a soil in the new gloss of your marriage, as to show a child his new coat, and forbid him to wear it. I will only be bold with Benedick for his company; for from the crown of his head to the sole of his foot, he is all mirth: he hath twice or thrice cut Cupid's bow-string, and the little hangman dare not shoot at him. He hath a heart as sound as a bell, and his tongue is the clapper; for what his heart thinks, his tongue speaks.

Benedick. Gallants, I am not as I have been.
Leon. So say I: methinks you are sadder.
Claud. I hope he be in love.
D. Pedro. Hang him, truant! there's no true drop of blood in him, to be truly touch'd with love. If he be sad he wants money.
Bene. I have the tooth-ache.
D. Pedro. Draw it.
Bene. Hang it!
Claud. You must hang it first, and draw it afterwards.
D. Pedro. What! sigh for the tooth-ache!
Leon. Where is but a humour, or a worm?
Bene. Well, every one can master a grief, but he that has it.
Claud. Yet say I, he is in love.
D. Pedro. There is no appearance of fancy in him, unless it be a fancy that he hath to strange disguises; as to be a Dutchman to-day, a Frenchman to-morrow, or in the shape of two countries at once; as a German from the waist downward, all slope, and a Spaniard from the hip upward, no doublets. Unless he have a fancy to this foolery, as it appears he hath, he is no fool for fancy, as you would have it appear he is.
Claud. If he be not in love with some woman, there is no believing old signs: a' brushes his hat o' mornings; what should that bode?
D. Pedro. Hath any man seen him at the barber's?
Claud. No, but the barber's man hath been seen with him, and the old ornament of his cheek hath already stuff'd tennis-balls.
Leon. Indeed, he looks younger than he did, by the loss of a beard.
D. Pedro. Nay, a' rubs himself with civet: can you smell him out by that?
Claud. That's as much as to say, the sweet youth's in love.
D. Pedro. The greatest note of it is his melancholy.
John. And when was he wont to wash his face?
D. Pedro. Yes, or to paint himself? for the which, I hear what they say of him.
Claud. Nay, but his jesting spirit, which is now crept into a lute-string, and now governed by steps.
D. Pedro. Indeed, that tells a heavy tale for him.
Conclude, conclude, he is in love.
Claud. Nay, but I know who loves him.
D. Pedro. That would I know too: I warrant, one that knows him not.
Claud. Yes, and his ill conditions; and in despite of all dies for him.
D. Pedro. She shall be buried with her face upwards.
Bene. Yet is this no charm for the tooth-ache.—Old signior, walk aside with me: I have studied eight or nine wise words to speak to you, which these hobby-horses must not hear.
[Exeunt Benedick and Leonato.
D. Pedro. For my life, to break with him about Beatrice.
Claud. 'Tis even so. Hero and Margaret have by this played their parts with Beatrice, and then the two bears will not bite one another when they meet.
Enter John.
John. My lord and brother, God save you.
D. Pedro. Good dea, brother.
John. If your leisure served, I would speak with you.
D. Pedro. In private?
John. If it please you; yet count Claudio may hear, for what I would speak of concerns him.

D. Pedro. What's the matter?
John. [To Claudio.] Means your lordship to be married to-morrow?
D. Pedro. You know, he does.
John. I know not that, when he knows what I know.
Claud. If there be any impediment, I pray you, discover it.
John. You may think, I love you not: let that appear hereafter, and aim better at me by that I now will manifest. For my brother, I think, he holds you well, and in dearness of heart hath holkp to effect your ensuing marriage; surely, suit ill spent, and labour ill bestowed!
D. Pedro. Why, what's the matter?
John. I came hither to tell you; and, circumstances shortened, (for she has been too long a talking of the lady is dialoyal.)
Claud. Who? Hero?
John. Even she: Leonato's Hero, your Hero, every man's Hero.
Claud. Dialoyal?
John. The word is too good to paint out her wickedness: I could say, she were worse: think you of a worse title, and I will fit her to it. Wonder not till farther warrant; go but with me to-night, you shall see her chamber-window entered, even the night before her wedding-day: if you love her then, to-morrow we her; but it would better fit your honour to change your mind.
Claud. May this be so?
D. Pedro. I will not think it.
John. If you dare not trust that you see, confess no that you know. If you will follow me, I will show you enough; and when you have seen more, and heard more, proceed accordingly.
Claud. If I see any thing to-night, why should I marry her to-morrow, in the congregation, where should wed, there will I shame her.
D. Pedro. And, as I woeed for thee to obtain her I will join with thee to disgrace her.
John. I will dispartage her no further, till you or my witnesses: bear it coldly but till midnight, and let the issue show itself.
D. Pedro. O day untowardly turned!
Claud. O mischief strangely thwarting!
John. O plague right well prevented! So will you say, when you have seen the sequel.

[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—A Street.

Enter Dogberry and Verges, with the Watch.

Dogb. Are you good men and true?
Verg. Yes, or else it were pity but they should serve for salvation, body and soul.
Dogb. Nay, that were a punishment too good for them, if they should have any allegiance in them being chosen for the prince's watch.
Verg. Well, give them their charge, neighbour Dogberry.
Dogb. First, who think you the most desartless man to be constable?
1 Watch. Hugh Osackle, sir, or George Seacoal, if they can write and read.
Dogb. Come hither, neighbour Seacoal. God has blessed you with a good name: to be a well-favour'd man is the gift of fortune, but to write and read come by natural grace.
2 Watch. Both which, master constable,—
Dogb. You have: I knew it would be your answer.
Well, for your favour, sir, why, give God thanks, and make no boast of it; and for your writing and reading, let that appear when there is no need of such vanity. You are thought here to be the most senseless and fit mas for the constable of the watch; therefore, bear to the lantern. This is your charge. You shall comprehend all vagrom men: you are to bid any man said, in the prince’s name.

1 Watch. How, if a’ will not stand?

Dogb. Why then, take no note of him, but let him pr, and presently call the rest of the watch together, and thank God you are rid of a knave.

Verg. If he will not stand when he is hidden, he is one of the prince’s subjects.

Dogb. True, and they are to meddle with none but the prince’s subjects.——You shall also make no noise in the streets; for, for the watch to babble and talk is most intolerable, and not to be endured.

2 Watch. We will rather sleep than talk: we know what belongs to a watch.

Dogb. Why, you speak like an ancient and most quiet watchman, for I cannot see how sleeping should stand: only, have a care that your bills be not stolen. Well, you are to call at all the ale-houses, and bid them that are drunk get them to bed.

1 Watch. How, if they will not?

Dogb. Why then, let them alone till they are sober; if they make you not then the better answer, you may say, they are not the men you took them for.

2 Watch. Well, sir.

Dogb. If you meet a thief, you may suspect him, by virtue of your office, to be no true man; and, for such end of men, the less you meddle or make with them, the more is for your honesty.

1 Watch. If we know him to be a thief, shall we not lay hands on him?

Dogb. Truly, by your office you may; but, I think, they that touch pitch will be defiled. The most peaceable way for you, if you do take a thief, is, to let him know himself what he is, and steal out of your company.

Verg. You have been always called a merciful man, prince.

Dogb. Truly, I would not hang a dog by my will; nor more a man who hath any honesty in him.

Verg. If you hear a child cry in the night, you must call to the nurse, and bid her still it.

1 Watch. How, if the nurse be asleep, and will not hear it?

Dogb. Why then, depart in peace, and let the child weep with her crying; for the ewe that will not hear her lamb when it bastes, will never answer a calf when it bleats.

Verg. ’Tis very true.

Dogb. This is the end of the charge. You, constable, are to present the prince’s own, if you meet the prince in the night, you may stay him.

Verg. Nay, by’t lady, that, I think, a’ cannot.

Dogb. Five shillings to one on’t, with any man that knows the statutes, he may stay him: marry, not without the prince being willing: for, indeed, the watch right to offend no man, and it is an offence to stay a man against his will.

Verg. But how, if I think it be so.

Dogb. Ha, ha, ha! Well, masters, good night: and be any matter of weightiness, call me up, keep your followers’ counsels and your own, and good night. Come, neighbour.

1 Watch. Well, masters, we hear our charge: let us go sit here upon the church-bench till two, and then all to bed.

Dogb. One word more, honest neighbours. I pray you, watch about signior Leonato’s door: for the wedding being there to-morrow, there is a great coil to-night. Adieu; be vigilant, I beseech you.

[Exeunt Dogberry and Verges.

Enter Borachio and Conrade.

Bora. What, Conrade!

Watch. [Behind and aside.] Peace! stir not.

Bora. Conrade, I say!

Con. Here, man: I am at thy elbow.

Bora. Mass, and my elbow itched; I thought, there would a scab follow.

Con. I will owe thee an answer for that; and now forward with thy tale.

Bora. Stand thee close, then, under this penthouse, for it drizzles rain, and I will, like a true drunkard, utter all to thee.

Watch. [Aside.] Some treason, masters; yet stand close.

Bora. Therefore know, I have earned of Don John a thousand ducats.

Con. Is it possible that any villainy should be so dear?

Bora. Thou shouldnst rather ask, if it were possible any villainy should be so rich; for when rich villains have need of poor ones, poor ones may make what price they will.

Con. I wonder at it.

Bora. That shows thou art unconfirmed. Thou knowest, that the fashion of a doublet, or a hat, or a cloak, is nothing to a man.

Con. Yes, it is apparel.

Bora. I mean, the fashion.

Con. Yes, the fashion is the fashion.

Bora. Tush! I may as well say, the fool’s the fool.

But seest thou not what a deformed thief this fashion is?

Watch. [Aside.] I know that Deformed; a’ has been a vile thief this seven year: a’ goes up and down like a gentleman. I remember his name.

Bora. Didst thou not hear somebody?

Con. No: ’twas the vane on the house.

Bora. Seest thou not, I say, what a deformed thief this fashion is? how giddily a’ turns about all the hot bloods between fourteen and five and thirty? sometime, fashioning them like Phanor’s soldiers in the reechy* painting; sometime, like god Bel’s priests in the old church window; sometime, like the shaven Hercules in the smirched worm-eaten tapestry, where his cod-piece seems as massy as his club?

Con. All this I see, and I see that the fashion wears out more apparel than the man. But art thou not thyself giddy with the fashion too, that thou hast shifted out of thy tale into telling me of the fashion?

Bora. Not so, neither; but know, that I have to-night wooed Margaret, the lady Hero’s gentlewoman, by the name of Hero: she leans me out at her mistress’ chamber-window, bids me a thousand times good night.

—I tell this tale wilyly:—I should first tell thee, how the prince, Claudio, and my master, planted, and placed, and possessed by my master Don John, saw afar off in the orchard this amiable encounter.

Con. And thought they* Margaret was Hero?

Bora. Two of them did, the prince and Claudio; but the devil, my master, knew she was Margaret, and partly by his oaths, which first possessed them, partly by the dark night, which did deceive them, but chiefly by my villainy, which did confirm any slander that Don John had made, away went Claudio enraged; swore he would meet her, as he was appointed, next morning at the temple, and there, before the whole congregation, shame her with what he saw over-night, and send her home again without a husband.

1 Watch. [Coming forward.] We charge you in the prince’s name, stand.

2 Watch. Call up the right master constable. We have here recovered the most dangerous piece of lechery, that ever was known in the commonwealth.

1 Watch. And one Deformed is one of them: I know him, a’ wears a look.

Con. Masters, masters!

2 Watch. You’ll be made bring Deformed forth, I warrant you.

Con. Masters,—

1 Watch. Never speak: we charge you, let us obey you to go with us.

Bora. We are like to prove a goodly commodity, being taken up of these men’s bills.

Con. A commodity in question, I warrant you. Come, we’ll obey you. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—A Room in Leonato’s House.

Enter Hero, Margaret, and Ursula.

Hero. Good. Ursula, wake my cousin Beatrice, and desire her to rise.

Urs. I will, lady.

Hero. And bid her come hither.

Urs. Well. [Exit Ursula.]

Marg. Troth, I think, your other rabato were better.

Hero. No, pray thee, good Meg, I’ll wear this.

Marg. By my troth, it’s not so good; and I warrant your cousin would say so.

Hero. My cousin’s a fool, and thou art another.
I’ll wear none but this.

Marg. I like the new tire within excellently, if the hair were a thought browner; and your gown’s a most rare fashion, i’ faith. I saw the duchess of Milan’s gown, that they praise so.

Hero. O! that exceeds, they say.

Marg. By my troth, it’s but a night-gown in respect of yours: cloth o’ gold, and cuts, and faced with silver, set with pearls down the sleeves, side sleeves, and skirts round, under-borne with a bluish tinsel;
but for a fine, quaint, graceful, and excellent fashion,
yours is worth ten on’t.

Hero. God give me joy to wear it, for my heart is exceeding heavy!

Marg. ’Twill be heavier soon by the weight of a
man.

Hero. Fie upon thee! art not ashamed?

not marriage honourable in a beggar? Is not your lord honourable without marriage? I think, you would have me say, saving your reverence,—a husband: an bad thinking do not wrest true speaking, I’ll offend no body. Is there any harm in it—the heavier for a husband? None, I think, an it be the right husband, and the right wife; otherwise it’s light, and not heavy:
ask my lady Beatrice else; here she comes.

Enter Beatrice.

Beatrice. Hero. Good morning, sweet Hero.

Beat. Why, how now? do you speak in the sick tone?

Beat. I am out of all other tune, methinks.

Marg. Clap us into—“Light o’ love,”¹ that goes without a burden: do you sing it, and I’ll dance it.

Beat. Yea, “Light o’ love,” with your heels!—then, if your husband have stables enough, you’ll see he shall lack no barns.

Marg. O, illegitimate construction! I scorn that with my heels.

Beat. ’Tis almost five o’clock, cousin: ’tis time you were ready. By my troth, I am exceeding ill.—Heigh ho!

Marg. For a hawk, a horse, or a husband?

Beat. For the letter that begins them all, H.⁴

Marg. Well, an you be not turned Turk, there’s no more sailing by the star.

Beat. What means the fool, trow?

Marg. Nothing I; but God send every one their heart’s desire!

Hero. These gloves the count sent me, they are an excellent perfume.

Beat. I am stuffed, cousin; I cannot smell.

Marg. A maid, and stuffed! there’s goodly catching of cold.

Beat. O, God help me! God help me! how long have you profess’d apprehension?

Marg. Ever since you left it. Doth not my wi become me rarely?

Beat. It is not seen enough, you should wear it your cap.—By my troth, I am sick.

Marg. Get you some of this distill’d carduus bepe dictus,⁵ and lay it to your heart: it is the only thin for a qualm.

Hero. There thou pricket her with a thistle.

Beat. Benedictus! why benedictus? you have som moral in this benedictus.

Marg. Moral? no, by my troth, I have no mera meaning; I meant plain holy-thistle. You may think perchance, that I think you are in love: nay, by ‘r lady
I am not such a fool to think what I list; nor I li not to think what I can; nor, indeed, I cannot thin
If I would think my heart out of thinking, that you ar in love, or that you will be in love, or that you can t in love. Yet Benedick was such another, and now he become a man: he swore he would never marry: an yet now, in despite of his heart, he eate his meat witho grudging; and how you may be converted, I know no out, methinks, you look with your eyes, as other wom do.

Beat. What pace is this that thy tongue keeps?

Marg. Not a false gallop.

Enter Ursula.

Urs. Madam, withdraw: the prince, the count, signi Benedick, Don John, and all the gallants of the tow are come to fetch you to church.

Hero. Help to dress me, good ooz, good Meg. go Ursula.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE V.—Another Room in Leonato’s House.

Enter Leonato, with Dogberry and Verges.

Leon. What would you with me, honest neighbour Dogb. Marry, sir, I would have some confidence wi you, that decerns you nearly.

Leon. Brief, I pray you; for, you see, it is a hu time with me.

Dogb. Marry, this it is, sir.

Verg. Yes, in truth it is, sir.

Leon. What is it, my good friends?

Dogb. Goodman Verges, sir, speaks a little off t matter: an old man, sir, and his wits are not so blu

as God help, I would desire they were; but, in faith, honest as the skin between his brows.

Verg. Yes, I thank God, I am as honest as any man living; that is an old man, and no homester than I.

Dogh. Comparisons are odorous: palavras, neighbour Verges.

Leo. Neighbours, you are tedious.

Dogh. It pleases your worship to say so, but we are the poor Duke's officers; but, truly, for mine own part, I'll be as tedious as a king; I could find in my heart to bestow it all of your worship.

Leo. All thy tediousness on me? ha!

Dogh. Yes, an 't were a thousand pound more than I; for I hear as good exclamation on your worship, as any man in the city, and though I be but a poor man, I am glad to hear it.

Verg. And so am I.

Leo. I would fain know what you have to say.

Verg. Marry, sir, our watch to-night, excepting your worship's presence, have taken a couple of as arrogant thieves as any in Messina.

Dogh. A good old man, sir; he will be talking: as she says, when the age is in, the wit is out. God help wh't it is a world to see!—Well said, i' faith, neighbour Verges well, God's a good man: an two men ride of these, one must ride behind.—An honest soul, i' faith, as by my troth he is, as ever broke bread; but, God is to be worshipped: all men are not alike; alas, good neighbour!

Leo. Indeed, neighbour, he comes too short of you.

Dogh. Gifts, that God gives.

Leo. I must leave you.

Dogh. One word, sir. Our watch, sir, have, indeed, comprehended two suspicious persons, and we would have them this morning examined before your worship.

Leo. Take their examination yourself, and bring it me: I am now in great haste, as it may appear unto you.

Dogh. It shall be sufficinse.

Leo. Drink some wine ere you go. Fare you well.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My lord, they say for you to give your daughter to her husband.

Leo. I'll wait upon them: I am ready.

[Exeunt Leonato and Messenger.

Dogh. Go, good partner, go; get you to Francis Seacoal; bid him bring his pen and inkhorn to the gaol: we are now to examination these men.

Verg. And we must do it wisely.

Dogh. We will spare for no wit, I warrant you; here's that shall drive some of them to a non com: only get the learned writer to set down our excommunication, and meet me at the gaol.

[Exeunt.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—The inside of a Church.

Enter Don PEDRO, JOHN, LEONATO, FRIAR, CLAUDIO,

Benedick, Hero, Batiatus, &c.

Leo. Come, friar Francis, be brief: only to the form of marriage, and you shall recount their peculiar duties afterwards.

Fra. You come hither, my lord, to marry this lady?

Leo. No.

Fra. To be married to her; friar, you come to marry her.

Fra. Lady, you come hither to be married to this man?

Leo. I do.

Fra. If either of you know any inward impediment, you should not be conjoined, I charge you on your part to utter it.

Leo. Know you any, Hero?

Her. None, my lord.

Fra. Know you any, count?

Leo. I dare make his answer; none.

Fra. O, what men dare do! what men may do! men daily do, not knowing what they do!

Leo. How now! Interjections? Why then, some laughing, as, ha! ha! ha! ha! ha!

Fra. Stand thee by, Friar.—Father, by your leave: You with free and unconstrained soul: May this maid, your daughter?

Leo. As freely, son, as God did give her me.

Cla. And what have you to give her back, whose worth you counterpose this rich and precious gift?

Pedro. Nothing, unless you render her again.

Cla. Sweet prince, you learn me noble thankfulness.

The rest of the speech is from the quarto. * A quotation from the Acedemus. * thee - in f. e. The change was suggested also.

1: range: in f. e.  # 2: wide: in f. e.
D. Pedro. What should I speak?
I stand dishonour'd, that have gone about
To link my dear friend to a common stale.
Leo. Are these things spoken, or do I but dream?
John. Sir, they are spoken, and these things are true.
Bene. Thus looks not like a nuptial.
Hero. True? O God!
Claud. Leonato, stand I here?
Is this the prince? Is this the prince's brother?
Is this face Hero's? Are our eyes our own?
Leo. All this is so; but what of this, my lord?
Claud. Let me but move one question to your daughter,
And, by that fatherly and kindly power
That you have in her, bid her answer truly.
Leo. I charge thee do so, as thou art my child.
Hero. O God, defend me! how am I bested!
What kind of eateaching call you this?
Claud. To make you answer truly to your name.
Hero. Is it not Hero? Who can blot that name
With any just reproach?
Claud. Marry, that can Hero:
Hero itself can blot out Hero's virtue.
What man was he talk'd with you yesternight
Out at your window, betwixt twelve and one?
Now, if you are a maid, answer to this.
Hero. I talk'd with no man at that hour, my lord.
D. Pedro. Why, then are you no maiden.—Leonato.
I am sorry you must hear: upon mine honour,
Myself, my brother, and this grieved count,
Did see her, hear her, at that hour last night,
Talk with a ruffian at her chamber window;
Who hath, indeed, most like a liberal villain,
Confess'd the vile encounters they have had
A thousand times in secret.
John. Fie, fie! they are not to be nam'd, my lord,
Not to be spoke of;
There is not chastity enough in language,
Without offence to utter them. Thou pretty lady,
I am sorry for thy much misgovernment.
Claud. O Hero! what a Hero hadst thou been,
If half thy outward grace had been plac'd
About thy thoughts, and counsels of thy heart!
But, fare thee well, most foul, most fair! farewell,
Thou pure impurity, and impious purity!
For thee I'll lock up all the gates of love,
And on my eyelids shall conjecture hang,
To turn all beauty into thoughts of harm,
And never shall it more be gracious.
Leo. Hath no man's dagger here a point for me?
[Hero swoons.
Best. Why, how now, cousin! wherefore sink you down?
John. Come, let us go. These things come thus to light,
Smother her spirits up.
[Exeunt Don Pedro, John, and Claudio.
Bene. How doth the lady?
Best. Dead; I think:—help, uncle!
Hero. Why, Hero!—Uncle!—Signior Benedick!— friar!
Leo. O fate! take not away thy heavy hand:
Death is the fairest cover for her shame,
That may be wish'd for.
Best. How now, cousin Hero?
Friar. Have comfort, lady.
Leo. Des't thou look up?
MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING

Leon. Being that I flow in grief,
The smallest twine may lead me.
Friar. 'Tis well consented: presently away,
For to strange sores strangely they strain the cure.—
Come, lady, die to live: this wedding day, Perhaps, is but prolong'd: have patience, and endure. [Exeunt Friar, Hero, and Leonato.

Bene. Lady Beatrice, have you wept all this while?

Beat. Yes, and I will weep a while longer.

Bene. I will not desire that.

Beat. You have seen reason; I do it freely.

Bene. Surely, I do believe your fair cousin is wronged.

Beat. Ah, how much might the man deserve of me that would right her!

Bene. Is there any way to show such friendship?

Beat. A very even way, but no such friend.

Bene. May a man do it?

Beat. It is a man's office, but not yours.

Bene. I do love nothing in the world so well as you.

Is not that strange?

Beat. As strange as the thing I know not. It were as possible for me to say, I loved nothing so well as you; but believe me not, and yet I lie not: I confess nothing, nor I deny nothing.—I am sorry for my cousin.

Bene. By my sword, Beatrice, thou lovest me.

Beat. Do not swear by it, and eat it.

Bene. I will swear by it, that you love me; and I will make him eat it, that says I love not you.

Beat. Will you not eat your word?

Bene. With no sauce that can be devised to it. I protest, I love thee.

Beat. Why, then, God forgive me!

Bene. What offence, sweet Beatrice?

Beat. You have stayed me in a happy hour: I was about to protest, I loved you.

Bene. And do it with all thy heart.

Beat. I love you with so much of my heart, that none is left to protest.

Bene. Come, bid me do any thing for thee.

Beat. Kill Claudio.

Bene. Ha! not for the wide world.

Beat. You kill me to deny it. Farewell.

Bene. Tarry, sweet Beatrice.

Beat. I am gone, though I am here:—there is no love in you.—Nay, I pray you, let me go.

Bene. Beatrice,—

Beat. In faith, I will go.

Bene. We'll be friends first.

Beat. You dare easier be friends with me, than fight with mine enemy.

Bene. Is Claudio thine enemy.

Beat. Is he not approved in the height a villain, that hath slandered, soorned, dishonoured my kinswoman?—
O, that I were a man!—What! bear her in hand until they come to take hands, and then with public accusation, uncovered slander, unmitigated rancour,—O God, that I were a man! I would eat his heart in the market-place.

Bene. Hear me, Beatrice—

Beat. Talk with a man out at a window!—a proper saying.

Bene. Nay, but Beatrice—

Beat. Sweet Hero!—she is wronged, she is slandered, she is undone.

Bene. Beat—

Beat. Princes, and counties! Surely, a princely testimony, a goodly count, count confect; a sweet gallant surely! O, that I were a man for his sake! or that I had any friend would be a man for my sake! But manhood is melted into courtesy, valour into compliment, and men are only turned into tongue, and trim ones too: he is now as valiant as Hercules, that only tells a lie, and swears it.—I cannot be a man with wishing, therefore I will die a woman with grieving.

_Ben._ Tarry, good Beatrice. By this hand, I love thee.

_Beat._ Use it for my love some other way than swearing by it.

_Ben._ Think you in your soul the count Claudio hath wronged Hero?

_Beat._ Yes, as sure as I have a thought, or a soul.

_Ben._ Enough! I am engaged, I will challenge him.
I will kiss your hand, and so I leave you. By this hand, Claudio shall render me a dear account. As you hear of me, so think of me. Go, comfort your cousin: I must say she is dead; and so, farewell. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—A Prison.

_Enter Dogberry, Verges, and Sexton, in gowns; and the Watch, with Conrade and Borachio._

_Dog._ Is our whole assembly appeared?

_Verg._ O! a stool and a cushion for the sexton.

_Sext._ Which be the malefactors?

_Dog._ Marry, that am I and my partner.

_Verg._ Nay, that's certain; we have the exhibition to examine.

_Sext._ But which are the offenders that are to be examined? let them come before master constable.

_Dog._ Yes, marry, let them come before me. —What is your name, friend?

_Bora._ Borachio.

_Dog._ Pray write down Borachio. —Yours, sirrah?

_Con._ I am a gentle man, sir; and my name is Conrade.

_Dog._ Write down master gentleman Conrade.

_Masters, do you serve God?

_Con._ Bora. Yes, sir, we hope.

_Dog._ Write down—that they hope they serve God:
—and write God first: for God defend but God should go before such villains! —Masters, it is proved already that you are little better than false knaves, and it will go near to be thought so shortly. How answer you for yourselves?

_Con._ Marry, sir, we say we are none.

_Dog._ A marvellous witty fellow, I assure you; but I will go about with him. —Come you hither, sirrah: a word in your ear, sir: I say to you, it is thought you are false knaves.

_Bora._ Sir, I say to you, we are none.

_Dog._ Well, stand aside. —Fore God, they are both in a tale. Have you writ down, that they are none?

_Sext._ Master constable, you go not the way to examine: you must call forth the watch that are their accusers.

_Dog._ Yes, marry, that's the easiest way.—Let the watch come forth.—Masters, I charge you, in the prince's name, accuse these men.

_1 Watch._ This man said, sir, that Don John, the prince's brother, was a villain.

_Dog._ Write down—prince John a villain.—Why, this is flat perjury, to call a prince's brother villain.

_Bora._ Master constable.

_Dog._ Pray thee, fellow, peace: I do not like thy look, I promise thee.

_Sext._ What heard you him say else?

_2 Watch._ Marry, that he had received a thousand ducats of Don John, for accusing the lady Hero wrongfully.

_Dog._ Flat burglary as ever was committed.

_Verg._ Yes, by the mass, that it is.

_Sext._ What else, fellow?

_1 Watch._ And that count Claudio did mean, upon his words, to disgrace Hero before the whole assembly, and not marry her.

_Dog._ O villain! thou wilt be condemned into everlasting redemption for this.

_Sext._ What else?

_2 Watch._ This is all.

_Sext._ And this is more, masters, than you can deny. Prince John is this morning secretly stolen away: Hero was in this manner accused, in this very manner refused, and, upon the grief of this, suddenly died. Master constable, let these men be bound, and brought to Leonato's: I will go before, and show him their examination.

[Exeunt.

_Dog._ Come, let them be opinioned.

_Verg._ Let them be bound.

_Bora._ Hands off, coxcomb!

_Dog._ God's my life! where's the sexton? let him write down the prince's officer, coxcomb. —Come, bind them.—Thou naughty varlet.

_Con._ Away! you are an ass; you are an ass.

_Dog._ Dost thou not suspect my place? Dost thou not suspect my years?—O, that he were here to write me down an ass!—but, masters, remember, that I am an ass; though it be not written down, yet forget not that I am an ass.—No, thou villain, thou art full of piety, as shall be proved upon thee by good witness.
I am a wise fellow; and, which is more, an officer; and, which is more, a household; and, which is more, as pretty a piece of flesh as any is in Messina; and one that knows the law, go to; and a rich fellow enough, go to; and a fellow that hath had leases*; and one that hath two gowns, and every thing handsome about him.
Bring him away. O, that I had been writ down an ass!

[Exeunt.

SCENE I.—Before Leonato's House.

_Enter Leonato and Antonio._

_Ant._ If you go on thus, you will kill yourself;
And 't is not wisdom thus to second grief
Against yourself.

_Leon._ Marry, I pray thee, cease thy counsel,
Which falls into mine ears as profitless
As water in a sieve. Give not me counsel;

ACT V.
MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING.

Leon. Thine, Claudio; thine, I say. D. Pedro. You say not right, old man.

Leon. My lord, my lord
I'll prove it on his body, if he dare;
Despite his nice fence, and his active practice,
His May of youth, and blur of lustyhood.
Claud. Away! I will not have to do with you.

Leon. Canst thou so dafflum thee? Thou hast kill'd my child:
If thou killest me, boy, thou shalt kill a man.

Ant. He shall kill two of us, and men indeed:
But that's no matter; let him kill one first:-
Win me and wear me, and let him answer me.—
Come, follow me, boy! come, sir boy, come, follow me Sir boy, I'll whip you from your joining fence;
Nay, as I am a gentleman, I will.

Leon. Brother—

Ant. Content yourself. God knows, I lov'd my niece,
And she is dead; slander'd to death by villains,
That dare as well answer a man, indeed,
As I dare take a serpent by the tongue.
Boys, apes, braggers, Jacks, milk-slops!—

Leon. Brother Antony—

Ant. Hold you content. What, man! I know these years:
And what they weigh, even to the utmost scruple:
Scambling, out-facing, fashion-mong'ring boys,
That lie, and cog, and flout, deprave and slander,
Go antickly, and show an outward hideousness,
And speak off half a dozen dangerous words,
How they might hurt their enemies, if they durst,
And this is all!

Leon. But, brother Antony—

Ant. Do not you meddle, let me deal in this.

D. Pedro. Gentlemen both, we will not wake your patience.
My heart is sorry for your daughter's death;
But, on my honour, she was charg'd with nothing
But what was true, and very full of proof.

Leon. My lord, my lord!—

D. Pedro. I will not hear you.

Leon. No?

Clown. Who wrongs him?

Leon. Marry, thou dost wrong me; thou, dissembler, thou.—

Ner. never lay thy hand upon thy sword, nor thee not.

Claud. Marry, beawhrow my hand,
It should give your age such cause of fear.

D. Pedro. Well, all is one.

Ner. If he could right himself with quarrelling,

Cloth. Whereof we would lie low.

Leon. Marry, thou dost wrong me; thou, dissembler, thou.—

Ner. never lay thy hand upon thy sword, nor thee not.

Claud. Marry, beawhrow my hand,
It should give your age such cause of fear.

Leon. Tush, tush, man! never floor and jest at me:
Speak not like a dotard, nor a fool;
As under privilege of age, to brag.

D. Pedro. Welcome, signior: you are almost come to part almost a fray.

Claud. We had like to have had our two noses snapped off with two old men without teeth.

D. Pedro. Leontes and his brother. What think'at thou? Had we fought, I doubt, we should have been too young for them.

Ben. In a false quarrel there is no true valour. I came to seek you both.

Claud. We have been up and down to seek thee:
For we are high-proof melancholy, and would fain have it beaten away. Wilt thou use thy wit?

Ben. It is in my scabbard: shall I draw it?

D. Pedro. Dost thou wear thy wit by thy side?

Claud. Never any did so, though very many have been beside their wit. —I will bid thee draw, as we do the minstrels; draw to please us.

1 And sorrow, wag! in f.s. 2 Ben Jonson calls a book-worm, a candle-waster. This would make the text mean, pedantic speeches
3 The above are not as the text. 4 Put me aside. 5 Draw their instruments from their cases
D. Pedro. As I am an honest man, he looks pale.—
Art thou sick, or angry?
Claud. What! courage, man! What though care cilled a cat, thou hast mettle enough in thee to kill care.
Bene. Sir, I shall meet your wit in the career, an you charge it against me—I pray you, choose another subject.
Claud. Nay then, give him another staff: this last was broke cross.
D. Pedro. By this light, he changes more and more.
I think he be angry indeed.
Claud. If he be, he knows how to turn his girdle.1
Bene. Shall I speak a word in your ear?
Claud. God bless me from a challenge!2
Bene. You are a villain.—I jest not:—I will make it good how you dare, with what you dare, and when you dare.—Do me right, or I will protest your cowardlice. You have killed a sweet lady, and her death shall fall heavy on you. Let me hear from you.
Claud. Well, I will meet you, so I may have good cheer.
D. Pedro. What, a feast? a feast?
Claud. I faith, I thank him; he hath bid me to a call's-head and capers,3 the which if I do not carve most curiously, say my knife's naught.—Shall not I find a woodcock too?
Bene. Sir, your wit ambles well: it goes easily.
D. Pedro. I'll tell thee how Beatrice praised thy wit the other day. I said, thou hast a fine wit: "True," said she, "a fine little one?" "No," said I, "a great wit:" "Right," says she, "a great gross one?" "Nay," said I, "a great wit:" "Just," said she, "it hurts nobody:" "Nay," said I, "the gentleman is wise?"4
"Certain, said she, "a wise gentleman." "Nay," said
I, "he hath the tongues." "That I believe," said she, for he swore a thing to me on Monday night, which he forsook on Tuesday morning: there's a double tongue; there's two tongues." Thus did she, an hour together, trans-shape thy particular virtues; yet at last she concluded with a sigh, thou wast the properest man in Italy.
Claud. For which she wept heartily, and said she cared not.
D. Pedro. Yea, that she did: but yet, for all that, an if she did not hate him deadly, she would love him dearly. The old man's daughter told us all.
Claud. All, all; and moreover, who saw him when he was hid in the garden.
D. Pedro. But when shall we set the savage bull's horns on the sensitive Benedick's head?
Claud. Yea, and text underneath, "Here dwells Benedick the married man!"
Bene. Fare you well, boy; you know my mind. I will leave you now to your gospit-like humour: you break jests as braggarts do their blades, which, God be thanked, hurt not.—My lord, for your many courtesies
I thank you: I must discontinue your company. Your brother, the bastard, is fled from Messina: you have among you, killed a sweet and innocent lady. For my lord Lack-beard, there, he and I shall meet; and till then, peace be with him. [Exit Benedick.
D. Pedro. He is in earnest.
Claud. In most profound earnest; and, I'll warrant you, for the love of Beatrice.
D. Pedro. And hath challenged thee?
Claud. Most sincerely.

SCENE II.
MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING.

Leon.  Art thou the slave, that with thy breath hast Kild?

Bona.  Yes, even I alone.

Leon.  No, not so, villain; thou believest thyself:
Here stand a pair of honourable men,
A third is fled, that had a hand in it.—
I thank you, princes, for your daughter's death;
Bear it with your high and worthy deeds.
I was bravely done, if you be thinketh you of it.
But I know not how to pray your patience;
Yet I must speak.  Choose your revenge yourselves;
I hope to me what penance your invention
Can lay upon my sin: yet sinn'd I not,
Be in mistaking.

D. Pedro.  By my soul, nor I;
And yet to satisfy this good old man,
I would bend under any heavy weight
But he'll enjoin me to.

Leon.  I cannot bid you spare my daughter live;
There was impossible; but, I pray you both,
Passes the people in Messina, here.
How innocent she died: and, if your love
Can labour sighd in sad invention,
Bear her an epitaph upon her tomb,
And sing it to her bones: sing it to-night.—
Tomorrow morning come you to my house,
And since you could not be my son-in-law,
Yet my nephew. My brother hath a daughter,
Close the copy of my child that's dead,
And she alone is heir to both of us:
Give the right you should have given her cousin,
So dies my revenge.

God.  O noble sir!
Your ever-kindness doth wring tears from me.
I embrace your offer, and dispose Yourself worthy of poor Claudio.

Leon.  To-morrow, then, I will expect your coming:
Then I take my leave.—This naughty man
Stalk'd to face be brought to Margaret,
Who, I believe, was past in all this wrong,
And it to by your brother.

Bona.  No, by my soul, she was not;
Yet knew not what she did, when she spoke to me;
So always hath been just and virtuous,
And everything that I do know by her.

Sib.  Moreover, sir, which, indeed, is not under vice and black, this plaintiff here, the offender, did so the scene: I beseech you, let it be remembered in his account. And also, the watch heard them talk of her means: they say, he wears a key in his ear, and the money in God's the which he hath used so long, and never paid, new men grow hard-hearted, and will lend nothing for God's sake. Pray you, examine him upon that Leon.  I thank thee for thy care and honest pains.

Sib.  Your worship speaks like a most thankful smallest youth, and I praise God for you.

Leon.  There's for thy pains.

Sib.  God save the foundation!

Leon.  Go: I discharge thee of thy prisoner, and I let thee.

Sib.  I leave an arrant knave with your worship:
I beseech your worship, to correct yourself for example of others. God keep your worship; I wish well to God restore to you health. I humbly leave to depart; and if a merry meeting may be wished, God prohibit it.—Come, neighbour.

Leon.  Until to-morrow morning, lords, farewell.

Ant.  Farewell, my lords: we look for you to-mor-

D. Pedro.  We will not fail.

Claud.  To-night I 'll mourn with Hero.

Leon.  Bring you these follows on. We'll talk with Margaret,
How her acquaintance grow with this lewd² follow.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II.
Leonardo's Garden.

Enter. Benedick and Margaret. Meeting.

Bene.  Pray thee, sweet mistress Margaret, deserve well at my hands by helping me to the speech of Beatrice.

Marg.  Will you, then, write me a sonnet in praise of my beauty?

Bene.  In so high a style, Margaret, that no man living shall come over it; for, in most comely truth, thou deservest it.

Marg.  To have no man come over me? why shall I always keep below stairs?

Bene.  Thy wit is as quick as the greyhound's mouth;
it catches.

Marg.  And your's as blunt as the fencer's foils, which hit, but hurt not.

Bene.  A most manly wit, Margaret; it will not hurt a woman; and so, I pray thee, call Beatrice. I give thee the bucklers.

Marg.  Give us the swords, we have bucklers of our own.

Bene.  If you use them, Margaret, you must put in the pikes with a vice; and they are dangerous weapons for maids.

Marg.  Well, I will call Beatrice to you, who, I think, hath legs.

[Exit Margaret.]

Bene.  And therefore will come.

The god of love,
That sits above,

And knows me, and knows me,

How pitiful I deserve.—³

I mean, in singing; but in loving, Leander the good swimmer, Troilus the first employer of panders, and a whole book full of these quondam carpet-mongers, whose names yet run smoothly in the even road of a blank verse, why, they were never so truly turned over and over; as my poor self, in love. Marry, I cannot show it in rhyme; I have tried: I can find oth no rythym to "lady" but "baby," an innocent rhyme; for "corn," "horn," a hard rhyme; for "school," "fool," a babbling rhyme—very ominous endings. No, I was not born under a rhyming planet, nor I cannot woo in festival terms.—

Enter Beatrice.

Sweet Beatrice, wouldst thou come when I called thee?

Beat.  Yes, signior; and depart when you bid me.

Bene.  O stay but till then.

Beat.  "Then," is spoken; fare you well now:—and yet, ere I go, let me go with that I came for; which is,
with knowing what hath passed between you and Claudio.

Bene.  Only foul words; and thereupon I will kiss thee.

Beat.  Foul words is but foul wind, and foul wind is but foul breath, and foul breath is noisome; therefore
I will depart unkissed.
MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING.

ACT V.

Bene. Thou hast frighted the word out of his right sense, so forcible is thy wit. But, I must tell thee plainly, Claudio undergoes my challenge, and either I must shortly hear from him, or I will subscribe him a coward. And, I pray thee now, tell me, for which of my bad parts didst thou first fall in love with me?

Beat. For them all together; which maintained so politic a state of evil, that they will not admit any good part to intermingle with them. But for which of my good parts did you first suffer love for me?

Bene. Suffer love! a good epithet. I do suffer love, indeed, for I love thee against my will.

Beat. In spite of your heart, I think. Alas, poor heart! If you spit it for my sake, I will spit it for yours; for I will never love that which my friend hates.

Bene. Thou and I are too wise to woo peaceably.

Beat. It appears not in this confusion: there's not one wise man among twenty that will praise himself.

Bene. An old, an old instance, Beatrice, that lived in the time of good neighbours. If a man do not erect, in this age, his own tomb ere he dies, he shall live no longer in monument, than the bell rings, and the widow weeps.

Beat. And how long is that, think you?

Bene. Question:—why an hour in clamour, and a quarter in rheum: therefore is it most expedient for the wise, (if Don Worm, his conscience, find no impediment to the contrary,) to be the trumpet of his own virtues, as I am to myself. So much for praising myself, who, I myself will bear witness, is praiseworthy. And now tell me, how doth thy cousin?

Beat. Very ill.

Bene. And how do you?

Beat. Very ill too.

Bene. Serve God, love me, and mend. There will I leave you too, for here comes one in haste. Enter Ursula.

Urs. Madam, you must come to your uncle. Yonder's old coil at home: it is proved, my lady Hero hath been falsely accused, the prince and Claudio mightily abused; and Don John is the author of all, who is fled and gone. Will you come presently?

Beat. Will you go hear this news, signior?

Bene. I will live in thy heart, die in thy lap, and be buried in thy eyes; and, moreover, I will go with thee to thy uncle's.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—The Inside of a Church.

Enter Don Pedro, Claudio, and Attendants, with music and tapers.

Claud. Is this the monument of Leonato?

Att. It is, my lord.

Claud. [Reads.]

EPITAPH.

Done to death by slanderous tongues
Was the Hero that here lies:
Death, in guerdon of her wrongs,
Gives her fame which never dies.
So the life, that died with shame,
Lives in death with glorious fame.
Hang thou there upon the tomb,
Praising her when I am dumb.—

Now music, sound, and sing your solemn hymn.

SONG.

Pardon, goddess of the night,
Those that slew thy virgin bride;
For the witch, with songs of woe,
Round about her tomb we go.

Midnight, assist our moon;
Help us to sigh and groan,
Heavily, heavily:
Graves, yawn, and yield your dead,
Till death be uttered:
Heavily, heavily.

Claud. Now, unto thy bones good night!
Yearly will I do this rite.

D. Pedro. Good morrow, masters: put your torches out.

The wolves have prey'd; and look, the gentle day, Before the wheels of Phoebus, round about Dapples the drowsy east with spots of grey.

Thanks to you all, and leave us: fare you well.

Claud. Good morrow, masters: each his way can tell. [Exeunt Torch-bearers.]

D. Pedro. Come, let us hence, and put on other wood And then to Leonato's we will go.

Claud. And Hymen now with luckier issue speed, Than this, for whom we render'd up this woe! [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—A Room in Leonato's House.

Enter Leonato, Antonio, Benedick, Beatrice, Ursula, Friar, and Hero.

Friar. Did not I tell you she was innocent?

Leon. So are the prince and Claudio, who accur'd her.

Friar. Upon the error that you heard debated: But Margaret was in some fault for this, Although against her will, as it appears.

Ant. Well, I am glad that all things sort so well.

Bene. And so am I, being else by faith enforc'd
To call young Claudio to a reckoning for it.

Leon. Well, daughter, and you gentlewomen all, Withdraw into a chamber by yourselves, And, when I send for you, come hither mask'd. The prince and Claudio promis'd by this hour To visit me.—You know your office, brother; You must be father to your brother's daughter, And give her to young Claudio. [Exeunt Ladies.

Ant. Which I will do with confirm'd countenance.

Bene. Friar, I must entreat your pains, I think.

Friar. To do what, signior?

Bene. To bind me, or undo me; one of them— Signior Leonato, truth it is, good signior, Your niece regards me with an eye of favour. Leon. That eye my daughter lent her: 'tis most true. Bene. And I do with an eye of love requite her. Leon. The sight whereof, I think, you had from me, From Claudio, and the prince. But what's your will?

Bene. Your answer, sir, is eminigual:
But, for my will, my will is, your good will May stand with ours, this day to be conjoin'd In the state of honourable marriage:— In which, good friar, I shall desire your help. Leon. My heart is with your liking.

Friar. And my help Here come the prince, and Claudio.

Enter Don Pedro and Claudio, with Attendants.

D. Pedro. Good morrow to this fair assembly.

Leon. Good morrow, prince; good morrow, Claudio: We here attend you. Are you yet determin'd To-day to marry with my brother's daughter? Claudio. I'll hold my mind were she an Ethiop. Leon. Call her forth, brother: here's the friar ready.

[Exit Antonio.]

---

1 Used in the colloquial emphatic sense, for "great." * knight: in f. e. 4. Dost away with. 4. each his several way: in f. e. 4. Not
D. Pedro. Good morrow, Benedick. Why, what is the matter?

That you have such a February face,
So full of storm, of storm, and cloudiness?

Claud. I think, he thinks upon the savage bull.—

Tush! fear not, man, we’ll tip thy horns with gold,
And all Europe shall rejoice at thee,
As since Europe did at lusty Jove,
When he would play the noble beast in love.

Bene. Bull Jove, sir; had an amiable low;
And some such strange bull-biap’d your father’s cow,
And got a calf in that same noble feat.

Much like to you, for you have just his bleat.

Re-enter Antonio, with the Ladies masked.

Claud. For this I owe you: here come other reckonings.

Which is the lady I must seize upon?

Leon. This same is she, and I do give you her.

Claud. Why, then she’s mine.—Sweet, let me see your face.

Leon. No, that you shall not, till you take her hand
Before this friar, and swear to marry her.

Claud. Give me your hand before this holy friar:
I am your husband, if you like of me.

Hero. And when I liv’d, I was your other wife:

And when you lov’d, you were my other husband.

Claud. Another Hero?

Hero. Nothing certainer.

O Hero died belied; but I do live,
And surely as I live, I am a maid.

D. Pedro. The former Hero! Hero that is dead!

Leon. She died, my lord, but whiles her slander liv’d.

Friar. All this amazement can I qualify;
When after that the holy rites are ended,
I’ll tell you largely of fair Hero’s death:

But, time, let wonder seem familiar,
And to the chapel let us presently.

Bene. Soft and fair, friar.—Which is Beatrice?

Beat. I answer to that name. [Unmasking.] What is your will?

Bene. Do not you love me?

Beat. Why, not no more than reason.

Bene. Why, then, your uncle, and the prince, and Claudio, have been deceived, for they swore you did.

Beat. Do not you love me?

Bene. Troth, no more than reason.

Beat. Why, then, my cousin, Margaret, and Ursula, were much deceived; for they swore, you did.

Bene. They swore that you were almost sick for me.

Beat. They swore that you were well-nigh dead for me.

Bene. It is no matter.—Then, you do not love me?

Beat. No, truly, but in friendly recompense.

Leon. Come, cousin, I am sure you love the gentleman.

Claud. And I’ll be sworn upon’t, that he loves her;
For here’s a paper, written in his hand,
A halting sonnet of his own pure brain,
Fashion’d to Beatrice.

Hero. And hero’s another,
Write in my cousin’s hand, stoln’ from her pocket,
Containing her affection unto Benedick.

Bene. A miracle! here’s our own hands against our hearts.—Come, I will have thee; but, by this light, I take thee for pity.

Beat. I would not deny you;—but, by this good day,
I yield upon great persuasion, and, partly, to save your life, for I was told you were in a consumption.

Bene. Peace! I will stop your mouth.

D. Pedro. How dost thou, Benedick, the married man?

Bene. I’ll tell thee what, prince; a college of wit-crackers cannot flout me out of my humour. Dost thou think I care for a satire, or an epigram? No: if a man will be beaten with brains, a shall wear nothing handsome about him. In brief, since I do purpose to marry, I will think nothing to any purpose that the world can say against it; and therefore never flout at me for what I have said against it, for man is a giddy thing, and this is my conclusion.—For thy part, Claudia, I did think to have beaten thee; but, in that thou art like to be my kinsman, live unbruised, and love my cousin.

Claud. I had well hoped, thou wouldst have denied Beatrice, that I might have cudgeled thee out of thy single life, to make thee a double dealer; which, out of question, thou wilt be, if my cousin do not look exceeding narrowly to thee.

Bene. Come, come, we are friends.—Let’s have a dance ere we are married, that we may lighten our own hearts, and our wives’ heels.

Leon. We’ll have dancing afterward.

Bene. First, of my word; therefore, play, music!—Prince, thou art sad; get thee a wife, get thee a wife: there is no staff more reverent than one tipped with horn.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My lord, your brother John is taken in flight,
And brought with armed men back to Messina.

Bene. Think not on him till to-morrow; I’ll devise three brave punishments for him.—Strike up, pipers.

[Daniel of all the actors.]

Moth, Page to Armado.
A Forester.

Princess of France.
Rosaline.
Maria, Ladies, attending on the Princess.
Katherine.
Jaquenetta, a country wench.

Officers and others, attendants on the King and Princess.

SCENE, Navarre.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Navarre. A Park, with a Palace in it.

Enter the King, Biron, Longaville, and Dumaine.

King. Let fame, that all hunt after in their lives,
Live registred upon our brazen tombs,
And then grace us in the disgrace of death;
When, spite of cornmorant devouring time,
The end of this present breath may buy
That honour, which shall make his skynche's keen edge,
And make us heirs of all eternity.
Therefore, brave conquerors!—for so you are,
That war against your own affections,
And the huge army of the world's desires,—
Our late edict shall strongly stand in force.
Navarre shall be the wonder of the world:
Our court shall be a little Academe,
Still and contemplative in living art.
You three, Biron, Dumaine, and Longaville,
Have sworn for three years' term to live with me,
My fellow-scholars, and to keep those statutes,
That are recorded in this schedule here: [Showing it.]
Your oaths are past, and now subscribe your names,
That his own hand may strike his honour down,
That violates the smallest branch herein.
If you are arm'd to do, as sworn to do,
Subscribe to your deep oaths, and keep them too.

Long. I am resolvd: 'tis but a three years' fast.
The mud shall banquet, though the body pine:
Fat paunches have lean pates; and dainty bits
Make rich the ribs, but bankrupt quite* the wits.

Dum. My loving lord, Dumaine is mortified.
The grosser manner of this world's delights
He throws upon the gross world's baser slaves:
To love, to wealth, to pomp, I pine and die,
With all these living in philosophy.

Biron. I can but say their protestation over;
So much, dear liege, I have already sworn,
That is, to live and study here three years.

* Not in f.s. 1 From the quarto, 1596.
...such public shame as the rest of the court can possibly devise."

This article, my liege, yourself must break;
For, well you know, here comes in embassy
The French king's daughter with yourself to speak,—
A maid of grace, and complete majesty,—
About surrender up of Aquitin
To her decepit, sick, and bed-ridden father:
Therefore, this article is made in vain,
Or vainly comes th' admired princess rather.
King. What say you, lords? why, this was quite
And gives my mind the best forgot.

Biron. So study evermore is overholt:
While it doth study to have what it would,
It doth forget to do the thing it should;
And when it hath the thing it hunteth most,
'Tis won, as towns with fire; so won, so lost.
King. We must of force dispense with this decree:
She must lie here on mere necessity.

Biron. Necessity will make us all forsworn
Three thousand times within this three years' space;
For every man with his effects is born,
Not by might master'd, but by special grace.
If I break faith, this word shall plead for me,
I am forsworn on mere necessity.

So to the laws at large I write my name; [Subscriptions.
And he, that breaks them in the least degree,
Stands in attainder of eternal shame.
Suggestions are to others, as to me;
But, I believe, although I seem so loth,
I am the last that will last keep his oath.
But is there no quiet recreation granted?
King. Ay, that there is. Our court, you know, is haunted
With a refined traveller of Spain;
A man in all the world-new fashions flaunted,
That hath a mint of phrases in his brain:
One, whom the music of his own vain tongue
Doth ravish like enchanting harmony;
A man of compliments, whom right and wrong
Have chose as umpe of their vanity:
This child of fancy, that Armado bright:
For interm to our studies, shall relate
In high-born words the worth of many a knight
From tawny Spain, lost in the world's debate.
How you delight, my lords, I know not, I,
But, I protest, I love to hear him lie.
And I will use him for my minstrelsy,

Biron. Armado is a most illustrious wight,
A man of fire-new words, fashion's own knight.
Long. Costard, the swain, and he shall be our sport;
And so to study three years is but short.

Enter Dull, with a letter, and Costard.
Dull. Which is the duke's own person?
Biron. This, fellow. What wouldst?
Dull. I myself reprehend his own person, for I am his grace's tharborough;11 but I would see his own person in flesh and blood.
Biron. This is he.

Dull. Signior Arm—Arm—commends you. There's villainy abroad: this letter will tell you more.
Cost. Sir, those perfidious women are as touching me.
King. A letter from the magnifient Armado.
Biron. How low soever the matter, I hope in God for high words.
Long. A high hope for a low hearing11: God grant us patience!
Biron. To hear, or forbear hearing.

Long. To hear meekly, sir, and to laugh moderately; or to forbear both.

Biron. Well, sir, be it as the style shall give us cause to chime in1 the merriness.

Cost. The matter is to me, sir, as concerning Jaquenetta. The manner of it is, I was taken with the manner.2

Biron. In what manner?

Cost. In manner and form following, sir; all those three: I was seen with her in the manor house, sitting with her upon the form, and taken following her into the park; which, put together, is, in manner and form following. Now, sir, for the manner,—it is the manner of a man to speak to a woman; for the form,—in some form.

Biron. For the following, sir?

Cost. As it shall follow in my correction; and God defend the right!

King. Will you hear this letter with attention?

Biron. As we would hear an oracle.

Cost. Such is the simplicity of man to hearken after the flesh.

King. [Reads.] “Great deputy, the welkin’s vicegerent, and sole dominator of Navarre, my soul’s earth’s God, and body’s fostering patron,—”

Cost. Not a word of Costard yet.

King. “So it is,—”

Cost. It may be so; but if he say it is so, he is, in telling true, but so,—

King. Peace!

Cost. —be to me, and every man that dares not fight.

King. No words.

Cost. —of other men’s secrets, I beseech you.

King. “So it is, besegged with sable-coloured melancholy, I did commend the black-oppressing humour to the most wholesome physic of thy health-giving air; and, as I am a gentleman, betooke myself to walk. The time when? About the sixth hour; when beasts most graze, birds best peck, and men sit down to that nourishment which is called supper. So much for the time when. Now for the ground which; which, I mean, I walked upon: it is ycleped thr park. Then for the place where; where, I mean, I did encounter that obscene and most preposterous event, that draweth from my snow-white pen the ebon-coloured ink, which here thou viewest, beholdest, surveyest, or seest. But to the place, where,—it standeth north-north-east and by east from the west corner of thy curious-knotted garden: there did I see that low-spirited swain, that base minnow of thy mirth,”—

Cost. Me.

King. “—that unletter’d small-knowing soul,”

Cost. Me.

King. “—that shallow vessel,”

Cost. Still me.

King. “—which, as I remember, hight Costard,”

Cost. Of me.

King. “—sorted and consort ed, contrary to thy established proclaimed edict and continent canon, with—with,—O! with—but with this I passion to say wherewith.”

Cost. With a wench.

King. “—with a child of our grandmother Eve, a female; or, for thy more sweet understanding, a woman. Him I (as my ever-esteemed duty pricks me) have sent to thee, to receive the meed of punishment, by thy sweet grace’s officer, Antony Dull, a man of good repute, carriage, bearing, and estimation.”

Dull. Me, an’t shall please you: I am Antony Dull.

King. “For Jaquenetta, (so is the weaker vessel called) which I apprehended with the aforesaid swain, I keep her as a vessel of thy law’s fury; and shall, at the least of thy sweet notice, bring her to trial. Thine, in all complements of devoted and heart-burning heat of duty;

“DON ADRIANO DE ARMADO”

Biron. This is not so well as I looked for, but the best that ever I heard.

King. Ay, the best for the worst,—But, sirrah, what say you to this?

Cost. Sir, I confess the wench.

King. Did you hear the proclamation?

Cost. I do confess much of the hearing it, but little of the marking of it.

King. It was proclaimed a year’s imprisonment to be taken with a wench.

Cost. I was taken with none, sir: I was taken with a damsel.

King. Well, it was proclaimed damsel.

Cost. This was no damsel neither, sir: she was a virgin.

King. It is so varied, too, for it was proclaimed virgin.

Cost. If it were, I deny her virginity: I was taken with a maid.

King. This maid will not serve your turn, sir.

Cost. This maid will serve my turn, sir.

King. Sir, I will pronounce your sentence: you shall fast a week with bran and water.

Cost. I had rather pray a month with mutton and porridge.

King. And Don Armado shall be your keeper.—

My lord Biron, see him deliver’d o’er;

And go we, lords, to put in practice that Which each to other hath so strongly sworn.

[Exeunt King, Longaville, and Dumaine. Biron. I’ll lay my head to any good man’s hat, These oaths and laws will prove an idle scorn.

Dull. Sirrah, come on.4

Cost. I suffer for the truth, sir: for true it is, I was taken with Jaquenetta, and Jaquenetta is a true girl; and therefore, welcome the sour cup of prosperity! Affliction may one day smile again, and till then, set thee down, sorrow! [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—ARMADO’S House in the Park. Enter Armado and Moth, his page.

Arm. Boy, what sign is it, when a man of great spirit grows melancholy?

Moth. A great sign, sir, that he will look sad.

Arm. Why? sadness is one and the self-same thing, dear imp.

Moth. No, no; 0 lord! sir, no.

Arm. How canst thou part sadness and melancholy, my tender juvénal?5

Moth. By a familiar demonstration of the working, my tough senior.

Arm. Why tough senior? why tough senior?

Moth. Why tender juvenile? why tender juvenile?

Arm. I spoke it, tender juvenile, as a congruent epitaph appertaining to thy young days, which we may nominate tender.

Moth. And I, tough senior, as an appertinent title to your old time, which we may name tough.

Arm. Pretty, and apt.

1 climb in: in f. e. 2 The law French phrase, maistrenoir, with the thing stolen in hand. 3 The fantastic figures in the heads of the formal gardens of the period. 4 vasal: in f. e. 5 f. e. give this speech to Biron.
LOVE'S LABOUR'S LOST.

Scene II.

MOTh. How mean you, sir? I pretty, and my saying apt? or I apt, and my saying pretty?

ArM. They both pretty, because little.

MOTh. Little pretty, because little. Wherefore apt?

ArM. And therefore apt, because quick.

MOTh. Speak you this in my praise, master?

ArM. In thy commend praise.

MOTh. I will praise an eel with the same praise.

ArM. What, that an eel is ingenious?

MOTh. That an eel is quick.

ArM. I do say, thou art quick in answers. Thou hast my blood.

MOTh. I am answered, sir.

ArM. I love not to be crossed.

MOTh. [Aside.] He speaks the more contrary: cares' love not him?

ArM. I have promised to study three years with the duke.

MOTh. You may do it in an hour, sir.

ArM. Impossible.

MOTh. How many is one thrice told?

ArM. I am ill at reckoning: it fitteth the spirit of a tapster.

MOTh. You are a gentleman, and a gamaster, sir.

ArM. I confess both: they are both the varnish of complete man.

MOTh. Then, I am sure, you know how much the sum of deuce-ace amounts to.

ArM. It doth amount to one more than two.

MOTh. Which the base vulgar do call three.

ArM. True.

MOTh. Why, sir, is this such a piece of study? New here is three studied ere you'll thence wink: and how easy it is to put years to the word three, and stub three years in two words, the dancing horse will tell you.

ArM. A most fine figure!

MOTh. [Aside.] To prove you a cypher.

ArM. I will hereupon confess I am in love; and, as a base for a soldier to love, so am I in love with a base woman. If drawing my sword against the honour of a woman would deliver me from the reprobation of it, I would take desire prisoner, and ransom it to any French courtier for a devised courtesy. Shall scorn to sigh: methinks, I should out-swear you. Comfort me, boy. What great men have seen in love?

MOTh. Hercules, master.

ArM. Most sweet Hercules!—More authority, dear name more; and, sweet my child, let them be of good repute and carriage.

SAMSON. Master: he was a man of good weight, great carriage; for he carried the town-gates back, like a porter, and he was in love.

ArM. O well-knit Samson! strong-jointed Samson! in excelsis thee in my rapier, as much as thou didst in carriages. I am in love too. Who was Samson's love, my dear Moth?

MOTh. A woman, master.

ArM. Of what complexion?

MOTh. Of all the four, or the three, or the two, or of all the four.

ArM. Tell me precisely of what complexion.

MOTh. Of the sea-water green, sir.

ArM. Is that one of the four complexions?

MOTh. As I have read, sir, and the best of them too. Green, indeed, is the colour of lovers; but to have a love of that colour, methinks, Samaon had small reason for it. He, surely, affected her for her wit.

MOTh. It was no less for she had a green wit.

ArM. My love is most immaculate white and red.

MOTh. Most maculate thoughts, master, are masked under such colours.

ArM. Define, define, well-educated infant.

MOTh. My father's wit, and my mother's tongue, assist me!

ArM. Sweet invocation of a child; most pretty, and poetical!

MOTh. If she be made of white and red,

ArM. Her faults will never be known;

MOTh. For blushing cheeks by faults are bred,

ArM. And fears by pale white shown.

MOTh. Then, if she fear, or be to blame,

ArM. By this you shall not know;

MOTh. For still her cheeks possess the same,

ArM. Which native she doth owe.

A dangerous rhyme, master, against the reason of white and red.

ArM. Is there not a ballad, boy, of the King and the Beggar?*

MOTh. The world was very guilty of such a ballad some three ages since, but, I think, now 'tis not to be found; or, if it were, it would neither serve for the writing, nor the tune.

ArM. I will have that subject newly writ o'er, that I may example my digression by some mighty precedent.

MOTh. I do love that country girl, that I took in the park with the rational hind Costard: she deserves well.

ArM. [Aside.] To be whippèd; and yet a better love than my master.

ArM. Sing, boy: my spirit grows heavy in love.

MOTh. And that's great marvel, loving a light wrench.

ArM. I say, sing.

MOTh. Forbear, till this company be past.

[Enter DULL, COSTARD, and Jaquenetta.]

DULL. Sir, the duke's pleasure is, that you keep Costard safe: and you must let him take no delight, nor no penance; but 's must fast three days a week. For this damsel, I must keep her at the park; she is allowed for the day's—woman. Fare you well.

ArM. I do betray myself with blushing.—Maid.

Jaq. Man.

ArM. I will visit thee at the lodge.

Jaq. That's hereby.

ArM. I know where it is situated.

Jaq. Lord, how wise you are!

ArM. I will tell thee wonders.

Jaq. With that face?

ArM. I love thee.

Jaq. So I heard you say.

ArM. And so farewell.

Jaq. Fair weather after you.

DULL. Come, Jaquenetta, away.

[Exeunt Dull and Jaquenetta.]

ArM. Villains, thou shalt fast for thy offences, ere thou be pardoned.

Cost. Well, sir, I hope, when I do it, I shall do it on a full stomach.

ArM. Thou shalt be heavily punished.

Cost. I am more bound to you than your fellows, for they are but lightly rewarded.

ArM. Take away this villain: shut him up.

MOTh. Come, you transgressing slave: away!

ACT II.

SCENE I.—Another part of the Park. A Pavilion and Tents at a distance.

Enter the Princess of France, Rosaline, Maria, Katharine, Boyet, Lords, and other Attendants.

Boyet. Now, madam, summon up your dearest spirit.

Consider whom the king your father sends,
To whom he sends, and what's his embassy:
Yourself, held precious in the world's esteem,
To parley with the sole inheritor
Of all perfections that a man may owe,
Matchless Navarre; the plea of no less weight
Than Aquitain, a dowry for a queen.
Be now as prodigal of all dear grace,
As nature was in making grace dear,
When she did starve the general world beside,
And prodigally gave them all to you.

Prin. Good lord Boyet, my beauty, though but mean,
Needs not the painted flourish of your praise:—
Beauty is bought by judgment of the eye,
Not utter'd by base sale of chapmen's tongues.
I am less proud to hear you tell my worth,
Than you much willing to be counted wise
In spending your wit in the praise of mine.
But now to task the tasker.—Good Boyet,
You are not ignorant, all-telling fame
Doth noise abroad, Navarre hath made a vow,
Till painful study shall out-wear three years,
No woman may approach his silent court:
Therefore to us seem'th it a needful course,
Before we enter his forbidden gates,
To know his pleasure; and in that behalf,
Bold of your worthiness, we single you
As our best moving fair solicitor.
Tell him, the daughter of the king of France,
On serious business, craving quick deep speech,
Importunes personal conference with his grace.
Haste, signify so much; while we attend,
Like humble-visa'd suitors, his high will.

Boyet. Proud of employment, willingly I go. [Exit.

Prin. All pride is willing pride, and yours is so.—
Who are the votaries, my loving lords,
That are vow-fellows with this virtuous duke?

1 Lord. Longaville is one.

Prin. Know you the man?

2 Mar. I know him, madam: at a marriage feast,
Between lord Perigort and the beauteous heir

Of Jaques Falconbridge, solemnized
In Normandy, saw I this Longaville.
A man of sovereign parts he is esteem'd;
Well fitted in the arts; glorious in arms:
Nothing becomes him ill, that he would well.
The only soil of his fair virtue's glos,
If virtue's glos will stain with any soil,
Is a sharp wit match'd with too blunt a will;
Whose edge hath power to cut, whose will still w ill
It should none spare that come within his power.

Prin. Some merry mocking lord, belike; is't so?

Mar. They say so most that most his humours know.

Prin. Such short-li'ed wits do wither as they grow.
Who are the rest?

Kath. The young Dauimaine, a well-accomplish'd youth,
Of all that virtue love for virtue lov'd:
Most power to do most harm, least knowing ill,
For he hath wit to make an ill shape good,
And shape to win grace though he had no wit.
I saw him at the Duke Alençon's once;
And much too little of that good I saw
Is my report to his great worthiness.

Ros. Another of these students at that time
Was there with him: if I have heard a truth,
Biron they call him; but a merrier man,
Within the limit of becoming mad,
I never spent an hour's talk withal.
His eye begets occasion for his wit;
For every object that the one doth catch,
The other turns to a mirth-moving jest,
Which his fair tongue (conceit's expositor)
Delivers in such apt and gracious words,
That aged ears play truant at his tales,
And younger hearings are quite ravished,
So sweet and volatile is his discourse.

Prin. God bless my ladies! are they all in love,
That every one her own hath garnished
With such bedecking ornaments of praise?

Lord. Here comes Boyet.

Re-enter Boyet.

Prin. Now, what admittance, lord?

Boyet. Navarre had notice of your fair approach;
And he, and his competitors in oath,
Were all address'd to meet you, gentle lady,
Before I came. Marry, thus much I have learnt,
He rather means to lodge you in the field,
Like one that comes here to besiege his court,
That seek a dispensation for his oath,
To let you enter his unpeopled house.
Here comes Navarre.

[The ladies mask.

Enter KING, LONGAVILLE, DUMAIN, BIRON, and Attendants.

King. Fair princes, welcome to the court of Navarre.

Prin. Fair sir, I give you back again; and welcome I have not yet: the roof of this court is too high to be yours, and welcome to the wide fields too base to be mine.

King. You shall be welcome, madam, to my court.

Prin. I will be welcome thee. Conduct me thither.

King. Hear me, dear lady: I have sworn an oath.

Prin. Our lady help my lord! he 'll be forsworn.

King. Not for the world, fair madam, by my will.

Prin. Why, shall we break it; will, and nothing else.

King. Your ladyship is ignorant what it is.

Prin. Were my lord so, his ignorance were wise,
Where now his knowledge must prove ignorance.

I hear your grace hath sworn out house-keeping:
Tis deadly sin to keep that oath, my lord,
And sin to break it.

But pardon me, I am too sudden-bold:
To teach a teacher ill beseecheth me.

Vouchsaf' to read the purpose of my coming,
And keep this secret in my suit. [Gives a paper.

King. Madam, I will, if suddenly I may. [Reads.

Prin. You will the sooner that I was away,
For you 'll prove perjur'd, if you make me stay.

Biron. Did not I dance with you in Brabant once?

Ros. Did not I dance with you in Brabant once?

Biron. I know you did.

Ros. How needless was it then, then
To ask the question?

Biron. You must not be so quick.

Ros. 'Tis long of you, that spur me with such questions.

Biron. Your wit 's too hot, it speeds too fast, 't will tire.

Ros. Not till it leave the rider in the mire.

Biron. What time o' day?

Ros. The hour that fools should ask.

Biron. Now fairest Biron! your mask!

Ros. Fair fall the face it covers!

Biron. And send you many lovers!

Ros. Amen, so you do none.

Biron. Nay, then will I begone.

King. Madam, your father here doth intimate
The payment of a hundred thousand crowns;
But the one half of an entire sum,
Ours'd by my father in his wars.
In say, that he, or we, (as neither have Reived that sum, yet there remains unpaid
A hundred thousand more: in surety of which,
The part of Aquitain is bound to us,
Though not valued to the money's worth.

Then, the king your father will restore
To that one half which is unsatisfied,
We will give up our right in Aquitain,
And hold fair friendship with his majesty.
In that, it seems, he little purposeth,
But he doth demand to have repaid
A hundred thousand crowns; and not demands
For payment of a hundred thousand crowns,
To have his title live in Aquitain;
Such a much rather had depart'd withal,
And have the money by our father lent, 1

Then Aquitain, so gelded as it is.

Dear princes, were not his requests so far
From reason's yielding, your fair self should make
A yielding, 'gainst some reason in my breast,
And go well satisfied to France again.

Prin. You do the king my father too much wrong.
And wrong the reputation of your name,
In so unseeming to confess receipt
Of that which hath so faithfully been paid.

King. I do protest I never k'ard of it;
And, if you prove it, I'll repay it back,
Or yield up Aquitain.

Prin. We arrest your word.

Boyet, you can produce acquittances
For such a sum from special officers
Of Charles his father.

King. Satisfy me so.

Boyet. So please your grace, the packet is not come,
Where that and other specialties are bound:
To-morrow you shall have a sight of them.

King. It shall suffice me: at which interview,
All liberal reason I will yield unto.

Mean time, receive such welcome at my hand,
As honour, without breach of honour, may
Make tender of to thy true worthiness.
You may not come, fair princes, within my gates;
But here without you shall be so receiv'd,
As you shall deem yourself lodg'd in my heart,
Though so denied free harbour in my house.
Your own good thoughts excuse me, and farewell:
To-morrow shall we visit you again.

Prin. Sweet health and well desires consort your grace!

King. Thy own wish wish I thee in every place!

[Exeunt King and his train.

Biron. Lady, I will commend you to mine own heart.

Ros. Pray you, do my commendations; I would be glad to see it.

Biron. I would, you heard it groan.

Ros. Is the fool sick?

Biron. Sick at the heart.

Ros. Alack! let it blood.

Biron. Would that do it good?

Ros. My physic says, ay.

Biron. Will you prick't with your eye?

Ros. No point, 6 with my knife.

Biron. Now, God save thy life.

Ros. And yours from long living.

Biron. I cannot stay thanking.

[Sstands back.

Dum. Sir, I pray you, a word. What lady is that same?

[Coming forward.

Boyet. The heir of Allen, Rosaline her name.

Dum. A gallant lady. Monseigneur, fare you well.

[Exit.

Long. I beseech you a word. What is she in the white?

[Coming forward.

Boyet. A woman sometimes, as you saw her in the light.

Long. Perchance, light in the light. I desire her name.

Boyet. She hath but one for herself; to desire that,
were a shame.

Long. Pray you, sir, whose daughter?

Boyet. Her mother's, I have heard.

Long. God's blessing on your beard!

Boyet. Good sir, be not offended.

She is an heir of Falconbridge.

Long. Nay, my choler is ended.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—Another part of the same.

Enter Armado and Moth.

Arm. Warble, child: make passionate my sense of hearing.

Moth. Cencinnel.—(Amato bene.)

Arm. Sweet air!—Go, tenderness of years: take this key, give enlargement to the swain, bring him fortunately hither; I must employ him in a letter to my love.

Moth. Master, will you win your love with a French bravi?

Arm. How meaneest thou? brawling in French?

Moth. No, my complete master; but to gig off a tune at the tongue’s end, canary to it with your feet, humour it with turning up your eyelids: sigh a note, and sing a note; sometime through the chest, as if you swallowed love with singing love: sometime through the nose, as if you snuffed up love by smelling love; with your hathouse-like, o’er the shop of your eyes; with your arms crossed on your thin belly’s doublet, like a rabbit on a spit; or your hands in your pocket, like a man after the old painting: and keep not too long in one tune, but a snip and away. These are complements, these are humour; these betray nice wenchesc, which would be betrayed without these, and make them men of note, (do you note, men?) that move are affected to these.

Arm. How hast thou purchased this experience?

Moth. By my paint of observation.

Arm. But O,—but O,—

Moth. The hobby-horse is forgot.

Arm. Callest thou my love hobby-horse?

Moth. No, master; the hobby-horse is but a coxcomb, and your love, perhaps, a hackney. But have you for got your love?

Arm. Almost I had.

Moth. Negligent student! learn her by heart.

Arm. By heart, and in heart, boy.

Moth. And out of heart, master: all these three will prove.

Arm. What wilt thou prove?

Moth. A man, if I live: and this, by, in, and wit out, upon the instant: by heart you love her, because your heart cannot come by her; in heart you love her because your heart is in love with her; and out of heart you love her, being out of heart that you cannot enjoy her.

Arm. I am all these three.
LOVE'S LABOUR'S LOST.

Muk. And three times as much more, and yet no skill at all.

Arm. A messenger well sympathised; a horse to be ambassador for an ass.

Arm. Ha, ha! what sayest thou?

Muk. Marry, sir, you must send the ass upon the here, for he is very slow-gaited: but I go.

Arm. The way is but short. Away! Muk. As swift as lead, sir.

Arm. Thy meaning, pretty ingenuous?

Muk. Misname, honest master; or rather, master, no. Arm. I say, lead is slow.

Muk. You are too swift, sir, to say so: that lead which is fir'd from a gun.

Arm. Sweet smoke of rhetoric! Disperse me a cannon; and the bullet, that's he:—

Muk. Thump then, and I flee. [Exit. Arm. A most acute juvenal; volatile and fair

Muk. If thy favour, sweet walkin', I must sigh in thy face: Not one of melancholy, valour gives thee place.

Arm. He is return'd.

Re-enter MOTH with COSTARD.

Muk. A wonder, master! here's a Costard broken

Arm. Some enigma, some riddle: come, thy Pensivy;

[begin.

Cost. No egnum, no riddle, no Pensivy! no salve in ten a' i' the air: O, sir, plantain, a plain plantain! no

Arm. No salve, no plantain. By virtue, thou art in my spleen; my heaven of my lungs pro carriage is ridiculous smiling. O, pardon me, my stars! but the insusceptible take salve for Pensivy, and the salve

Muk. Do the wise think them other? is not Pensivy

Arm. No, page: it is an epilogue, or discourse, to make plain

Muk. Obscure precedence that hath of course been sink.

will example it:

The fox, the ape, and the humble-bee,
Were still at odds, being but three.

The's the moral: no the Pensivy.

Muk. I will add the Pensivy. Say the moral again.

Arm. The fox, the ape, and the humble-bee,
Were still at odds, being but three.

Muk. Until the goose came out of door,
And stay'd the odds by making' four.

will I begin your moral, and do you follow with Pensivy.

The fox, the ape, and the humble-bee,
Were still at odds, being but three.

Muk. Until the goose came out of door,
Staying the odds by making four.

 freel Pensivy.

Muk. Ending in the goose: would you desire more?

Cost. The boy hath sold him a bargain, a goose, that's a flat.

Now your pennyworth is good, your goose be fat.—

To sell a bargain well is as cunning as fast and loose: let me see, a fat 's a fat goose.

Arm. Come hither, come hither. How did this argument begin?

Moth. By saying that a Costard was broken in a shin.

Then call'd you for the Pensivy.

Cost. True, and I for a plantain: thus came your argument in:

Then the boy's fat Pensivy, the goose that you bought

Arm. But tell me; how was there a Costard broken in a shin?

Moth. I will tell you sensibly.

Cost. Thou hast no feeling of it, Moth: I will speak that Pensivy.

I, Costard, running out, that was safely within,
Fell over the threshold, and broke my shin.

Arm. We will talk no more of this matter.

Cost. Till there be more matter in the shin.

Arm. Sirrah Costard, marry, I will enfranchise thee.

Cost. O! marry me to one Frances?—I smell some Pensivy, some goose, in this.

Arm. By my sweet soul, I mean, setting thee at liberty, enfreedomin thy person: thou wert immured, restrained, captivated, bound.

Cost. True; true; and now you will be my purgation, and let me be loose.

Arm. I give thee thy liberty, set thee free from durance; and, in lieu thereof, impose on thee nothing but this: bear this significant [Giving a letter,] to the country maid Jaquenetta. There is remuneration; for the best ward of mine honour is rewarding my dependants. Moth, follow.

[Exit. Moth. Like the sequel, I,—Signior Costard, adieu.

[Exit. Cost. My sweet ounce of man's flesh! my incoy Jew! Now will I look to his remuneration. Remuneration! O! that's the Latin word for three farthings: three farthings, remuneration.—'What's the price of this inkle? A penny. No, I'll give you a remuneration:' why, it carries it.—Remuneration!—why, it is a fairer name than French crown. I will never buy and sell out of this word.

Enter BIRON.

Biron. O, my good knave Costard! exceedingly well met.

Cost. Pray you, sir, how much carnation ribbon may a man buy for a remuneration?

Biron. What is a remuneration?

Cost. Marry, sir, half-penny farthing. [Shewing it.

Biron! O! why then, three-farthings-worth of silk.

Cost. I thank your worship. God be wi' you.

Biron. O, stay, slave! I must employ thee:

As thou wilt win my favour, good my knave, Do one thing for me that I shall entreat. Cost. When would you have it done, sir?

Biron. O! this afternoon.

Cost. Well, I will do it, sir. Fare you well.

Biron. O! thou knowest not what it is.

Cost. I shall know, sir, when I have done it.

Biron. Why, villain, thou must know first.

Cost. I will come to your worship to-morrow morning.
ACT IV.

SCENE I.—Another part of the Same.

Enter the Princess, Rosaline, Maria, Katharine, Boyet, Lords, Attendants, and a Forester.

Prin. Was that the king, that spurr’d his horse so hard Against the steep uprising of the hill?

Boyet. I know not; but, I think, it was he.

Prin. Whoe’er ’s was, a’ show’d a mounting mind.

Well, lords, to-day we shall have our deeppatch; On Saturday we will return to France.—

Then forester, my friend, where is the bush, That we must stand and play the murderer in?

For. Hereby, upon the edge of yonder coppice; A stand where you may make the fairest shoot.

Prin. I thank my beauty. I am fair that shoot, And thereupon thou speak’st the fairest shoot.

For. Pardon me, madam, for I meant not so.

For. Yes, madam, fair.

Prin. Nay, never paint me now: Where fair is not, praise cannot mend the brow.

Here, good my glass, take this for telling true.

[Going him money.]

Fair payment for foul words is more than due.

For. Nothing but fair is that which you inherit.

Prin. See, see! my beauty shall sav’rd by merit.

O, this is a faith, fit for those days!

A giving hand, though foul, shall have fair praise.—

But come, the bow:—now mercy goes to kill,

And shooting well is then accoutled ill.

Thus will I save my credit in the shoot:

Not wounding, pity would not let me do’t;

If wounding, then it was to show my skill,

That more for praise than purpose meant to kill.

And, out of question, so it is sometimes:

Glory grows guilty of destitute crimes,

liege of all loiterers and malcontents.

Biron. It must be done this afternoon. Hark, slave, It is but this—

The princess comes to hunt here in the park,

And in her train there is a gentle lady;

When tongues speak sweetly, then they name her name,

And Rosaline they call her: ask for her,

And to her white hand see thou do commend

This seal’d-up counsel. There’s thy guerdon: go.

[Give him money.]

Cost. Guerdon.—O, sweet guerdon! better than remuneration; eleven-pence farthing better. Most sweet guerdon!—I will do it, sir, in print. —Guerdon—considering, on the whole, the value of my pains.

Biron. O!—And I, forsooth, in love! I, that have been love’s whip;

A very beadle to a humorous sigh:

A critic, nay, a night-watch constable,

A domineering pedant o’er the boy,

Than whom no mortal so magnificent!

This whimpled, whining, purblind, wayward boy;

This senior-junior, giant-dwarf, Dan Cupid;

Regent of love-rhymes, lord of folded arms,

Th’ anointed sovereign of sighs and groans,

Biron. What? I love! I sue! I seek a wife!

A woman, that is like a German clock,

Still a repairing, ever out of frame,

And never going aright; being a watch,

But being watch’d that it may still go right?

Nay, to be perjur’d, which is worst of all;

And, for the grace to love her, the worth of all;

A witty wanton with a velvet brow,

With two pitch balls stuck in her face for eyes;

Ay, and, by heaven, one that will do the deed,

Though Argus were her eunuch and her guard:

And I to sigh for her! to watch for her!

To pray for her! Go to; it is a plague.

That Cupid will impose for my neglect

Of his almighty dreadful little might.

Well, I will love, write, sigh, pray, sue, and groan:

Some men must love my lady, and some Joan.

[Exit.

When, for fame’s sake, for praise, an outward part,

We bend to that the working of the heart;

As I for praise alone now seek to spill

The poor deer’s blood, that my heart means no ill.

Boyet. Do not curst wives hold that self-sovereignty

Only for praise’ sake, when they strive to be

Lords o’er their lords?

Prin. Only for praise; and praise we may afford

To any lady that subdues a lord.

Prin. Here comes a member of the commonwealth.

Cost. God dig-you-den all. Pray you, which is the head lady?

Prin. Thou shalt know her, fellow, by the rest that have no heads.

Cost. Which is the greatest lady, the highest?

Prin. The thickest, and the tallest.

Cost. The thickest, and the tallest? it is so; truth

Is truth.

An your waist, mistresse, were as slender as my mit,

One of these maids’ girdles for your waist should be fit.

Are not you the chief woman? you are the thickest here.

Prin. What’s your will, sir? what’s your will?

Cost. I have a letter, from monsieur Biron to one lady Rosaline.

[Give him.]

Prin. O, thy letter, thy letter! he’s a good friend

Of mine.

Stand aside, good bearer.—Boyet, you can carve;

Break up this epistle. —[Handing it to him.]

Boyet. I am bound to serve.-

This letter is mistook; it importune none here:

It is writ to Jaquenetta.

Prin. We will read it, I swear.

Break the neck of the wax, and every one give ear.

Boyet. [Reads.] "By heaven, that thou art fair, is most infallible; true, that thou art beautiful; truth itself, that thou art lovely. More fairer than fair,

Footnotes:
1 A tract published in 1698, "A Health to the gentlemanly profession of Serving-Men," has a story of a servant who got a recommendation of three farthings from one of his master’s guests, and a guerdon of a shilling from another. 2 Exactly. "My lord." 3 Appearances; offered the ecclesiastical court, who carried out citations, often, of course, no stare. 4 The cross-bow, with the cross-bow, was a favourite amusement of ladies of rank, in Shakespeare’s time. 7 fair; in f. e. 8 Gries pen. 9 Not in f. e. 10 Caree. 11 Not in f. e.
FINELY put on, indeed! —
Mar. You still wrangle with her, Boyet, and she strikes at the brow.

Boyet. But she herself is hit lower. Have I hit her now?

Ros. Shall I come upon thee with an old saying, that was a woman when king Pepin of France was a little boy, as touching the hit it?

Boyet. So I may answer thee with one as old, that was a woman when queen Guinever of Britain was a little woman, as touching the hit it.

Ros. Thou canst not hit it, hit it, hit it.

Boyet. An I cannot, cannot, cannot,
An I cannot, another can.

[Exit Ros. and Kath.]

Cost. By my troth, most pleasant: how both did fit it!

Mar. A mark marvellous well shot, for they both did hit it.

Boyet. A mark! O! mark but that mark: a mark, says my lady.

Let the mark have a prick in't; to mete at, if it may be.

Mar. Wide o' the bow hand: if faith, your hand is out.

Cost. Indeed, a' must shoot nearer, or he'll never hit the clout.

Boyet. An if my hand be out, then belike your hand is in.

Cost. Then will she get the upshot by clearing the pin.

Mar. Come, come, you talk gracefully; your lips grow foul.

Cost. She's too hard for you at pricks, sir: challenge her to bowl.

Boyet. I fear too much rubbing. Good night, my good owl.

[Exit Boyet and Maria.]

Cost. By my soul, a swain! a most simple swain! Lord, lord! how the ladies and I have put him down! O' my troth, most sweet jests! most incony vulgar wit! When it comes so smoothly off, so obscenely, as it were, so's.

Armado o' the one side. — O, a most dainty man! To see him walk before a lady, and to bear her fan! To see him kiss his hand! and how most sweetly a' will swear; Looking babies in her eyes, his passion to declare.

And his page o' the other side, that handful of small'wit! Ah, heavens, it is a most pathetical nit! Soli, sola! [Shouting within.

[Exit Costard.]

SCENE II.—The Same.

Enter Holofernes, Sir Nathaniel, and Dull.

Nath. Very reverend sport, truly; and done in the testimony of a good conscience.

Hol. The deer was, as you know, sanguis,—in blood; ripe as the posomaster, who now hangeth like a jewel in the ear of cadil,—the sky, the wolkin, the heaven; and anon falleth like a crab, on the face of terres,—the soil, the land, the earth.

Nath. Truly, master Holofernes, the epithets are sweetly varied, like a scholar at the least: but, sir, I assure ye, it was a buck of the first head.

Hol. Sir Nathaniel, haud credo.

Dull. 'Twas not a haud credo, 'twas a pricket.

The two last speeches are usually given to Boyet, as his own, instead of being an appendage to Armado's epistle. 8 An Englishman, who was in York. [Here we leave with you to Saffron Walden, 1861.] quite renown'd his natural English accents and gestures, and wrested very to the Italian politeness." He asserted himself to be sovereign of the world, and from this "phantastick humor" obtained 9 of Monarchoi. 2 A play upon shooter and suitor, showing that the pronunciation of the two was similar. 4 Clout and jete, 3 by, the clout or pin, hold up the mark aimed at. 4 This line is not in i.e. 4 Not a i.e. 4 A kind of apple. 4 A stag but 4 A stag two years old.
Hol. Most barbarous intimation! yet a kind of insinuation, as it were, in via, in way of explication; _facere, as it were, replication, or, rather, ostentare, to show, as it were, his inclination,—after his undressed, unpolished, uneducated, unpruned, untrained, or rather unlettered, or, ratherest, unconfirmed fashion,—to insert again my haud credo for a deer.
Dull. I said, the deer was not a haud credo: it was a pricket.
Hol. 'Twice sod simplicity, bis coctus!—
O thou monster ignorance, how deformed dost thou look!
Nath. Sir, he hath never fed of the dainties that are bred in a book;
He hath not eat paper, as it were; he hath: not drunk ink:
His intellect is not replenished; he is only an animal not to think;'
Only sensible in the duller parts; and such barren plants
Are set before us, that we thankful should be
Which we, having taste and feeling, are for those parts that do frustrify in us more than he:
For as it would ill become me to be vain, indiscreet,
or a fool,
So, were there a patch set on learning, to set him in a school:
But, omne bene, say I; being of an old father's mind,
Many canbrook the weather, that love not the wind.
Dull. You two are book men: can you tell by your wit.
What was a month old at Cain's birth, that's not five weeks old as yet?
Hol. Doctissimus, a good man Dull; Dietyuna, good man Dull.
Dull. What is Dietyuna?
Nath. A title to Phæbe, to Luna, to the moon.
Hol. The moon was a month old when Adam was no more;
And rauthet not to five weeks, when he came to five score.
The allusion holds in the exchange.
Dull. 'Tis true indeed: the allusion holds in the exchange.
Hol. God comfort thy capacity! I say, the allusion holds in the exchange.
Dull. And I say the pollution holds in the exchange, for the moon is never but a month old: and I say beside, that 't was a pricket that the prince kill'd.
Hol. Sir Nathaniel, will you hear an extemporal epithal upon the death of the deer? and, to humour the ignorant, I have call'd the deer the prince kill'd, a pricket.
Nath. Perge, good master Holofernes, perge; so it shall please you to abrogate scrurrility.
Hol. I will something affect the letter, for it argues facility. [Reads.
The preysful princess prict'ed and prick'd a pretty pleasing
pricket;
Some say, a sore; but not a sore, till now made sore with shooting.
The dogs did yell; put I to sore, then sorel jumps from thicket;
Or pricket sore, or else sorel; the people fall a hooting.
If sore be sore, then to sore makes fifty sore: O sore! I
Of one sore I am hundred make, by adding but one more I
Nath. A rare talent!
Dull. If a talent be a claw, look how he claws him with a talent. [Aside.]
Hol. This is a gift that I have, simple, simple; a foolish extravagant spirit, full of forms, figures, shapes, objects, ideas, apprehensions, motions, revolutions:
these are begot in the ventricile of memory, nourished in the womb of pia mater, and delivered upon the mellowing of occasion. But the gift is good in those in whom it is acute, and I am thankful for it.
Nath. Sir, I praise the Lord for you, and so may my parishioners; for their sons are well tutored by you, and their daughters profit very greatly under you: you are a good member of the commonwealth.
Hol. Medercle! if their sons be ingenious, they shall want no instruction: if their daughters be capable, I will put it to them; but, vir sapit, qui pacuo loquuitur.
A soul feminine saluteth us.

Enter JACQUETTA and COSTARD.
Jacq. God give you good morrow, master person.
Hol. Master person,—quasi pera-on. An if one should be pierced, which is the one?
Cost. Martyr, master schoolmaster, he is that is liked to a hoghead.
Hol. Of piercing a hoghead! a good lustre of conceit in a turf of earth; fire enough for a flint, pearl enough for a swine: 'tis pretty; it is well.
Jacq. Good master parson, be so good as read me this letter: it was given me by Costard, and sent me from Don Armado: I beseech you, read it.
Hol. Fauste, pretor gelidum quando pecus omne sub umbra
Ruminat,—and so forth. Ah, good old Mantuan! I may speak of thee as the traveller doth of Venice:
—Venecia, Venegia,
Chi non te vede, non te pregia." 10
Old Mantuan! old Mantuan! Who understandest thee not, loves thee not.—Ut, re, sol, la, mi, fa.—
Under pardon, sir, what are the contents? or, rather, as Horace says in his—What, my soul, verses?
Nath. Ay, sir, and very learned.
Hol. Let me hear a staff, a stanza, a verse: lege, domine.
Nath. If love make me forsook, how shall I swear to love?
Ah, never faith could hold, if not to beauty vowed!
Though to myself forsook, to thee I'll faithful prove;
Those thoughts to me were oaks, to thee like oisiers bowed.
Studi his bas leaves, and makes his book thine eyes,
Where all those pleasures live, that art would comprehend.
If knowledge be the mark, to know thee shall suffice.
Well learned is that tongue, that well can thee commend;
All ignorant that soul, that sees thee without wonder;
Which is to me some praise, that I thy parts admire.
Thy eye Jove's lightning bears, thy voice his dreadful thunder,
Which, not to anger bent, is music, and sweet fire.
Celestial, as thou art, O! pardon, love, this wrong;
That sings heaven's praise with such an earthly tongue!
Hol. You find not the apostrophes, and so miss the accent: let me supervise the canzoni. Here are only numbers ratified: but, for the elegance, facility, and golden cadence of poesy, care. Ovidius Nasso was the man: and why, indeed, Nasso, but for smelling out the odoriferous flowers of fancy, the jorks of invention?
Imitating it is nothing: so doth the hound his master,

LOVE'S LABOUR'S LOST.

135
the age his keeper, the trained horse his rider. But dame, virgin, was this directed to you?

Jay. Ay, sir, from one Monseigneur Biron, one of the gentle queen's lords.

Hol. I will overgloss the superscript. "To the new-white hand of the most beauteous Lady Rosaline." I will look again on the intellect of the letter, for the nomination of the party writing to the person written unto. "Your ladyship's, in all desired employment. Rose." Sir Nathaniel, this Biron is one of the voituriers with the king; and here he hath framed a letter to a peeress of the stranger queen's, which, accidentally, or by the way of progression, hath miscarried. —Trip and as my sweet: deliver this paper into the royal hand of the king; it may concern much. Stay not thy component; I forgive thy duty: adieu.

Jay. Good Costard, go with me.—Sir, God save your lady.

Cost. Have with thee, my girl.

Nath. Sir, you have done this in the fear of God, very religiously; and, as a certain father said—

Hol. Sir, tell me not of the father; I do fear colourable colours. But, to return to the verses: did they please you, sir Nathaniel?

Nath. Marvelous well for the pen.

Hol. I do dine to-day at the father's of a certain pupil of mine; where, if before it shall please you to gratify the table with a grace, I will, on my privilege I have with the parents of the aforesaid child or pupil, undertake your ben venuto; where I will give those verses to be very unlearned, neither savoury of poetry, wit, nor invention. I beseech your society.

Nath. And thank you too; for society (saith the old) is the happiness of life.

Hol. And, cures, the text most inoffensively concludes. —Sir. [To Dull.] I do invite you too: you shall not see me: pauca verba. Away! The gentle are at other game, and we will to our recreation. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—Another part of the Same.

Enter Biron, with a paper.

Biron. The king he is hunting the deer; I am cursing myself: they have pitch'd a toil! I am toiling in a pitch—that defiles. Delibl a foul word. He set thee down, sorrow! for so, they say, the fool said, and so say I, and I the fool. Well proved, wit and the Lord, this love is as mad as Ajax: it kills sheep, this me. I a sheep. Well proved again o' my side! I will not love; if I do, hang me: i' faith, I will not. But her eye,—by this light, but for her eye, I was not love her! yes, for her two eyes. Well, I was in this world but lie, and lie in my throat. Behave, I do love, and it hath taught me to rhyme, and be melancholy; and here is part of my rhyme, and my melancholy. Well, she hath one o' my verses already: the clown bore it, the fool sent it, and the lady hath it: sweet clown, sweeter fool, sweetest sty! By the world, I would not care a pin, if the clerks three were in. Here comes one with a paper: Give me grace to gross! [Ges up into a tree. Enter the King, with a paper.

King. [Reads.] So sweet a kiss the golden sun gives not To those fresh morning drops upon the rose, As thine eye-beams, when their fresh rays have smote The dew of night! that on my cheeks down flowes: Nor shines the silver moon one half so bright Through the transparent bosom of the deep, As doth thy face through tears of mine give light; Thou shin'st in every tear that I do weep: No drop but as a coach doth carry thee; So rides the glory of my soul in thee. Do but behold the tears that swell in me, And they thy glory through my grief will show: But do not love thyself; then thou wilt keep My tears for glasses, and still make me weep. O queen of queens, how far thou dost exced, No thought can think, nor tongue of mortal tell. How shall she know my griefs? I'll drop the paper. Sweet leaves, shade folly. Who is he comes here?

Enter Longaville, with a paper.

What, Longaville! and reading? listen, ear.

Long. [Steps aside.] Biron. [Aside.] I. Now, in thy likeness, one more fool appear!

Biron. Ay me! I am forsworn.

Long. [Aside.] Why, he comes in like a perjurie, wearing papers.

King. [Aside.] In love, I hope. Sweet fellowship in shame!

Biron. [Aside.] One drunkard loves another of the name.

Long. Am I the first that have been perjur'd so?

Biron. [Aside.] I could put thee in comfort: not by two that I know. Thou makest the triumvirity, the corner-cap of society, The shape of love's Tyburn, that hangs up simplicity.

Long. I fear these stubborn lines lack power to move. O sweet Maria, empress of my love!

Biron. [Aside.] O! these numbers will I tear, and write in prose.

Biron. [Aside.] O! rhymes are guards! on wanton Cupid's nose: Disfigure not his slope.

Long. This same shall go. —[He reads the sonnet. Did not the heavenly rhetoric of thine eye, \footnote{19}Gainst whom the world cannot hold argument, Pervade my heart to this false perjury? Voices for thee broke descent not punishment A woman I forswore; but I will prove, Thou bring a goddess, I forswore not thee. My vow was earthly, thou a heavenly love; Thy grace, being gain'd, cures all disgrace in me. Voices are but breath, and breath a vapour is: Then thou, fair sun, which on my earth dost shine, Exalt at this vapour-vote; in thee it is: If broken, then, it is no fault of mine. If by me broke, what fool is so wise, To lose an oath, to win a paradise?

Biron. [Aside.] This is the liver vein, which makes flesh a deity;

A green goose, a goddess: pure, pure idolatry. God amend us! God amend us! we are much out of the way.

Enter Dumaine, with a paper.

Long. By whom shall I send this?—Company! stay.

Biron. [Aside.] All hid, all hid! an old infant play. Like a demi-god here sit I in the sky, And wretched fools' secrets heedfully o'er-eye.
More sacks to the mill! O heavens! I have my wish:
Dumaine transform'd! four woodcocks in a dish.
Dum. O most divine Kate!
Biron. [Aside.] O most profane coxcomb!
Dum. By heaven, the wonder of a mortal eye!
Biron. [Aside.] By earth, she is most corporal; there you lie.
Dum. Her amber hairs for foul have amber quoted.
Biron. [Aside.] An amber-colour'd raven was well noted.
Dum. As upright as the cedar.
Biron. [Aside.] Stoope, I say: Her shoulder is with child.
Dum. As fair as day.
Biron. [Aside.] Ay, as some days; but then no sun must shine.
Dum. O, that I had my wish!
Long. [Aside.] And I had mine!
King. [Aside.] And I mine too, good lord!
Biron. [Aside.] Amen, so I had mine. Is not that a good word?
Dum. I would forget her; but a fever she Reigns in my blood, and will remember'd be.
Biron. [Aside.] A fever in your blood? why, then incision
Would let her out in saucers: sweet misprision!
Dum. Once more I'll read the ode that I have writ.
Biron. [Aside.] Once more I'll mark how love can vary wit.
Dum. On a day, alack the day!
Love, whose month is ever May,
Spied a blossom, passing fair,
Playing in the scanty air:
Through the veils the leaves wind,
All unseen, 'gan passage find;
That the lover, sick to death,
Wish'd himself the heaven's breath.
Air, quoth he, thy cheeks may blow,
Air, would I might triumph so!
But alack! my hand is sworn,
Never to pluck thee from thy thorn:
Vow, alack! for youth unmeet,
Yet so apt to pluck a sweet.
Do not call it sin in me,
That I am forsworn for thee;
Thou for whom great? Jove would swear
Juno but an Ethiop were;
And deny himself for Jove,
Turning mortal for thy love.
This will I send, and something else more plain,
That shall express my true love's lasting pain.
O, would the King, Biron, and Longaville,
Were lovers too! Ill, to example ill,
Would from my forehead wipe a perjur'd note;
For none offend, where all alike do dote.
Long. [Advancing.] Dumaine, thy love is far from charity,
That in love's grief desir'd society:
You may look pale, but I should blush, I know,
To be o'erheard, and taken napping so.
King. [Advancing.] Come, sir, blush you: as his your case is such;
You chide at him, offending twice as much;
You do not love Maria; Longaville
Did never sonnet for her sake compile,
Nor never lay his wreathed arms athwart
His loving bosom, to keep down his heart.
I have been closely shrouded in this bush,
And mark'd you both, and for you both did blush.
I heard your guilty rhymes, observ'd your fashion,
Saw sighs reek from you, noted well your passion:
Ay me! says one; O Jove! the other cries;
One, her hairs were gold, crystal the other's eyes:
You would for paradise break faith and troth:
To Lost.
And Jove for your love would infringe an oath.
To Dumaine.
What will Biron say, when that he shall hear
Faith infringed, with such zeal did swear?
How will he scorn! how will he spend his wit,
How will he triumph, leap, and laugh at it!
For all the wealth that ever I did see,
I would not have him know so much by me.
Biron. Now step I forth to whipt hypocrisy.—
[Coming down from the tree.
Ah, good my liege, I pray thee pardon me.
A good heart! what grace hast thou, thus to reproove
These woes for loving, that art most in love?
Your eyes do make no coaches; in your tears
There is no certain princess that appears:
You'll not be perjur'd, 'tis a hateful thing:
Tush! none but minarets like of sonneting.
But are you not ash'm'd? nay, are you not,
All three of you, to be thus much o'ershot?
You found his mote; the king your mote did see;
But I a beam do find in each of three.
O! what a scene of foolery have I seen,
Of sighs, of groans, of sorrow, and of teen!
O! me! with what strict patience have I sat,
To see a king transformed to a gnat!
To see great Hercules whipping a gig; 4
And profound Solomon to tune a jig,
And Nestor play at pull-fish with the boys,
And eritce Timon laugh at idle toys;
Where lies thy grief? O! tell me, good Dumaine;
And, gentle Longaville, where lies thy pain?
And where my liege's? all about the breast——
A cauldre, he!

King. Too bitter is thy jest.
Are we betray'd thus to thy over-view?
Biron. Not you by me, but I betray'd to you:
I, that am honest; I, that hold it sin
To break the vow I am engaged in;
I am betray'd, by keeping company
With men. like men of strange: inconstancy.
When shall you see me write a thing in rhyme?
Or groan for love? or spend a minute's time
In prying me? When shall you hear that I
Will praise a hand, a foot, a face, an eye,
A gait, a state, a brow, a breast, a waist,
A leg, a limb?—
[Going.]
King.
Soft! Whither away so fast?
A true man, or a thief, that gallops so?
Biron. I post from love; good lover, let me go.
Enter Jacquesetta and Costard.
Jaq. God bless the king!
King.
Jaq. What, peasant? hast thou there?
Cost. Some certain treason.
King. What makes treason here?
Cost. Nay, it makes nothing, sir.
King. If it mar nothing neither,
The treason and you go in peace away together.
Jaq. I beseech your grace, let this letter be read:
Our parson misdoubts it; 'twas treason, he said.
King. Biron, read it over. [Biron reads the letter.'
Where hadst thou it?
The hue of dungeons, and the shade of night;
And beauty's beauteous becomes the heavens well.
Biron. Devils soonest tempt, resembling spirits of light.
O! if in black my lady's brows be deck'd,
It mourns, that painting, and usurping hair,
Should ravish doters with a false aspect;
And therefore is she born to make black fair.
Her favour turns the fashion of these days;
For native blood is counted painting now,
And therefore red, that would avoid displeasure,
Paints itself black, to imitate her brow.
Dum. To look like her are chimney-sweeper black
Long. And since her time are colliers counted bright.
King. And Ethiopians of their sweet complexion crack.
Dum. Dark needs no candles now, for dark is light.
Biron. Your mistresses dare never come in rain,
For fear their colours should be wash'd away.
King. 'T were good, yours did; for, air, to tell you plain,
I'll find a fairer face not wash'd to-day.
Biron. I'll prove her fair, or talk till doomsday here.
King. No devil will fright thee then so much as she.
Dum. I never knew man hold vile stuff so dear.
Long. Look, here's thy love: my foot and her face see.
Biron. O! if the streets were paved with thine eyes,
Her feet were much too dainty for such tread.
Dum. O vile! then, as she goes, what upward lies
The street should see, as she walk'd over head.
King. But what of this? Are we not all in love?
Biron. O! nothing so sure; and thereby all forsworn.
King. Then leave this chat: and, good Biron, now prove
Our loving lawful, and our faith not torn.
Dum. Ay, marry, there; some flattery for this evil.
Long. O! some authority how to proceed;
Some tricks, some quillata's, how to cheat the devil.
Dum. Some salve for perjury.
Biron. O! it is more than need.
Have at you, then, affection's men at arms.—
Consider, what you first did swear unto:—
To fast,—to study,—and to see no woman:
Flat treason 'gainst the kingly state of youth.
Say, can you fast? your stomachs are too young,
And abstinence engenders maladies.
And where that you have vow'd to study, lords,
In that each of you hath forsworn his book,
Can you still dream, and pore, and thereon look?
For when would you, my lord, or you, or you, Have found the ground of study's excellence,
Without the beauty of a woman's face?
From women's eyes this doctrine I derive:—
They are the ground, the books, the Academies,
From whence doth spring the true Prometheus fire.
Why, universal plodding prisons up
The nimble spirits in the arteries,
As motion, and long-during action, tires
The sinewy vigour of the traveller.
Now, for not looking on a woman's face,
You have in that forsworn the use of eyes,
And study, too, the causer of your vow;
For where is any author in the world,
Teaches such learning* as a woman's eye?
Learning is but an adjunct to itself,
And where we are, our learning likewise is.
Then, when ourselves we see in ladies' eyes,*
Do we not likewise see our learning there?

* See note.  snow in f. o. * From quidlibets. * beauty: in f. o. * Between this and the next line, f. o. insert: With ourselves
O! we have made a vow to study, lords,
And in that vow we have forsworn our books:
For when would you, my liege, or you, or you,
In learned contemplation have found out
Such flimsy numbers, as the prompting eyes
Of beauty's tutors have enrich'd you with?
Other slow arts entirely keep the brain,
And therefore, finding barren profession,
Sears show a harvest of their heavy soil;
But love, first learned in a lady's eyes,
Lives not alone immersed in the brain,
But with the motion of all elements
Courses as swift as thought in every power,
And gives to every power a double power,
Above their functions and their offices.
It adds a precious seeing to the eye;
A lover's eyes will gaze an eagle blind;
A lover's ear will hear the lowest sound,
When the suspicious head of theft is stopp'd:
Love's feeling is more soft, and sensible,
Than are the tender horns of cocked unsils:
Love's tongue proves dainty Bacchus gross in taste.
For valour is not love a Hercules,
Still climbing trees in the Hesperides?
Subtle as aphix; as sweet, and musical,
As bright Apollo's lute, strong with his hair;
And, when love speaks, the voice of all the gods
Makes heaven drowsy with the harmony.
Never did poet touch a pen to write,
Until his ink were temper'd with love's sighs;
O! then his lines would ravish savage ears,
And plant in tyrants mild humanity.¹
From women's eyes this doctrine I derive:
They sparkle still the right Promethean fire;
They are the books, the arts, the Academies,
That show, contain, and nourish all the world,
Else none at all in aught proves excellent.
Then, fools you were these women to forswear,
Or, keeping what is sworn, you will prove fools
For wisdom's sake, a word that all men love,
Or for love's sake, a word that loves all men,
Or for men's sake, the authors of these women,
Or women's sake, by whom we men are men,
Let us once lose our oaths, to find ourselves,
Or else lose ourselves to keep our oaths.
It is religion to be thus forsworn:
For charity itself fulfils the law,
And who can never love from charity?
King. Saint Cupid, then! and, soldiers, to the field!
Biron. Advance your standards, and upon them, lords!
Pell-mell, down with them! but be first advis'd,
In conflict that you get the sun of them.
Long. Now to plain-dealing. lay these glosses by.
Shall we resolve to woo these girls of France?
King. And win them too: therefore, let us devise
Some entertainment for them in their tents.
Biron. First, from the park let us conduct them thither;
Then, homeward, every man attach the hand
Of his fair mistress. In the afternoon
We will with some strange pastime solace them,
Such as the shortness of the time can shape;
For revols, dances, masks, and merry hours,
Fore-run fair Love, strewing her way with flowers.
King. Away, away! no time shall be omitted,
That will be time, and may by us be fitted.
Biron. Allons! allons!—Sow'd cockle reap'd no corn;
And justice always whirls in equal measure:
Light wenches may prove plagues to men forsworn
If so, our copper boys no better treasure. [Exeunt.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—Another part of the Same.

Enter HOLOFERNES, Sir NATHANIEL, and DULL.

Hol. Satis quod sufficit.
Nath. I praise God for you, sir: your reasons at dinner have been sharp and sententious; pleasant without securlity, witty without affection,And without impudence, learned without opinion, and strange without heresy. I did converse this quondam day with a companion of the king's, who is intituled, nominated, or called, Don Adriano de Armado. Hol. Novi hominem tanguam te: his humour is lofty, his discourse peremptory, his tongue filed, his eye ambitious, his gait majestical, and his general behaviour vain, ridiculous, and thraconial.² He is too picked, too spruce, too affected, too odd, as were, too peregrinate, as I may call it.

Nath. A most singular and choice ephepit.

Hol. He draweth out the thread of his verbosity finer than the staple of his argument. I abhor such funatical phantasms, such insociable and point-devise companions; such rackers of orthography, as to speak dout, fine, when he should say, doubt; det, when he should pronounce, debt; d, e, b, t, not d, e, t; h he cleaph a calf, cauf; half, haf; neighbour vocatur

² humility, in f. a ² Affectation. ² On the style of Terence's Thraso. ² Nice to excess. ² It insinueth one of insaniac: in f. a ² Taylor, the Water Poet, says Knight, used this word with still another syllable, homorifikacious, &c. ² A small substance, floating on a glass of liquor, which it was a feast for a toper to swallow ignited.

ACT V.
LOVE'S LABOUR'S LOST.

SCENE II.

Moth. Ba! most silly sheep, with a horn. — You hear his learning.

Hol. Quiz, quis, thou consequence?

Moth. The third of the five vowels, if you repeat them; or the fifth, if I.

Hol. I will repeat them, a, e, i.—

Moth. The sheep: the other two concludes it; o, u.

Arm. Now, by the salt wave of the Mediterranean, a sweet touch, a quick ven ens of wit! snip, snap, quick and home: it rejoiceth my intellect; true wit!

Moth. Offer'd by a child to an old man; which is wise-old.

Hol. What is the figure? what is the figure?

Moth. Horns.

Hol. Thou disputest like an infant: go, whip thy gig.

Moth. Lend me thy horn to make one, and I will whip about your infamy circum circit. A gig of a cuckold's horn!

Cost. An I had but one penny in the world, thou shouldst have it to buy gingerbread: hold, there is the very remuneration I had of thy master, thou half-penny pursuer of wit, thou pigeon-egg of discretion. O, an the heavens were so pleased, that thou wert but my bastard, what a joyful father wouldest thou make me. Go to; thou hast it ad dunschill, at the fingers' ends, as they say.

Hol. O! I smell false Latin; dunschill for ungum.

Arm. Arts-man, praebula: we will be singled from the barbarous. Do you not educate youth at the large house on the top of the mountain?

Hol. Or nons, the hill.

Arm. At your sweet pleasure for the mountain.

Hol. I do, sans question.

Arm. Sir, it is the king's most sweet pleasure and affection, to congratulate the princess at her pavilion in the posteriors of this day, which the rude multitude call the afternoon.

Hol. The posterior of the day, most generous sir, is liable, congruent, and measurable for the afternoon: the word is well culted, chose; sweet and apt, I do assure you, sir; I do assure.

Arm. Sir, the king is a noble gentleman, and my familiar, I do assure you, my very good friend. —For what is inward between us, let it pass. —I do beseech thee, remember thy courtesy: —I beseech thee, apparel thy head: —and among other important and most serious designs, —and of great import indeed, too. —but let that pass: —for I must tell thee, it will please his grace (by the world) sometime to lean upon my poor shoulder, and with his royal finger, thus dally with my excrement, with my mustachio: but, sweet heart, let that pass. —By the world, I recount no fable: some certain special honours it pleaseth his greatness to impart to Armado, a soldier, a man of travel, that hath seen the world; but let that pass. —The very all of all is, —but, sweet heart, I do implore secrecy, —that the king would have me present the princess, sweet chuck, with some delightful ostentation, or show, or pageant, or antick, or fire-work. Now, understanding that the curate and your sweet self are good at such eruptions, and sudden breaking out of mirth, as it were, I have acquainted you withal, to the end to crave your assistance.

Hol. Sir, you shall present before her the nine Worthies. —Sir Nathaniel, as concerning some entertainment of time, some show in the posterior of this day, to be rendered by your assistance, —the king's command, and this most gallant, illustrate, and learned gentleman, —before the princess, I say, none so fit as to present the nine Worthies.

Nath. Where will you find men worthy enough to present them?

Hol. Joshua, yourself; myself, or this gallant gentleman, Judas Macabius: this swain, (because of his great limb or joint,) shall pass for Pompey the great; the page, Hercules.

Arm. Pardon, sir; error: he is not quantity enough for that worthy's thumb: he is not so big as the end of his club.

Hol. Shall I have audience? he shall present Hercules in minority; his enter and exist shall be strangling a snake; and I will have an apology for that purpose.

Moth. An excellent device! so, if any of the audience his, you may cry, "Well done, Hercules! now thou crustabest the snake?" that is the way to make an oonference gracious, though few have the grace to do it.

Arm. For the rest of the Worthies?

Hol. I will play three myself.

Moth. Three-worthy gentleman.

Arm. Shall I tell you a thing?

Hol. We attend.

Arm. We will have, if this fadge not, an antick I beseech you to follow.

Hol. Vie! —Goodman Dull, thou hast spoken no word all this while.

Dull. Nor understood none neither, sir.

Hol. Allons! we will employ thee.

Dull. I'll make one in a dance, or so; or I will play on the tabor to the Worthies, and let them dance the hay.

Hol. Most dull, honest Dull. To our sport, away!

[Exeunt]

SCENE II. —Another part of the Same. Before the Princess's Pavilion.

Enter the Princess, Katharine, Rosaline, and Maria, with presents. 3

Prin. Sweet hearts, we shall be rich ere we depart, if fairings come thus plentifully:

A lady wall'd about with diamonds! —

Look you, what I have from the loving king.

Ros. Marry, came nothing else along with that?

Prin. Nothing but this? yes; as much love in rhyme, as would be cram'd up in a sheet of paper, Writ on both sides the leaf, margin and all, That he was fain to seal on Cupid's name.

Ros. That was the way to make his head wax, 4

For he hath been five thousand years a boy.

Kath. Ay, and a shrewd unhappy gallows too.

Ros. You 'll ne'er be friends with him: a kill'd your sister.

Kath. He made her melancholy, sad, and heavy;
And so she died: had she been light, like you, Of such a merry, nimble, stirring spirit, She might a' been a grandam ere she died;
And so may you, for a light heart lives long.

Ros. What's your dark meaning, mouse, of this light word?

Kath. A light condition in a beauty dark.

Ros. We need more light to find your meaning out.

Kath. You'll mar the light by taking it in snuff;
Therefore, I'll do but half the argument.

Ros. Look, what you do, you do it still in the dark.

Kath. So do not you, for you are a light wench.

Ros. Indeed, I weigh not you, and therefore light.

Kath. You weigh me not? —O! that's you care not for me.

Ros. Great reason; for, past cure is still past care.

Prin. Well banded both; a set of wit well play'd

1 A hit in fencing. 2 charge-house; in f. s. 3 Prin. agree. 4 These two words not in f. s. 5 Grow. 6 A term of endearment.
But Rosaline, you have a favour too:
Who sent it? and what is it?
Roz. I would you knew:
An if my face were but as fair as yours,
My favour were as great: be witness this.
Nay, I have verses too, I thank Biron.
The numbers true; and, were the number too,
I were the fairest goddess on the ground;
I new sum'd to twenty thousand fairs.
O! he hath drawn my picture in his letter.
Prin. Any thing like?
Roz. Much, in the letters, nothing in the praise.
Prin. Beauteous as ink: a good conclusion.
Kath. Fair as a text R1 in a copy-book.
Roz. 'Ware pencils! How? let me not die your debtor,
My red dominical, my golden letter:
O, that your face were not so full of O's!
Prin. A potch of that jest! and I beashrew all shows!
But, Katharine, what was sent to you from fair Dumaine?
Kath. Madam, this glove.
Prin. Did he not send you twain?
Kath. Yes, madam; and, moreover,
Some thousand verses of a faithful lover:
A huge translation of hypocrisie,
Vilely compil'd, profound simplicity.
Mar. This, and those pearls to me sent Longaville:
The letter is too long by half a mile.
Prin. I think no less. Dost thou not wish in heart,
The chain were longer and the letter short?
Mar. Ay, or I would those hands might never part.
Prin. We are wise girls to mock our lovers so.
Roz. They are worse fools to purchase mocking so.
That same Biron I'll torture ere I go.
O! that I knew he were but in by the week!*
How I would make him fawn, and beg, and seck,
And wait the season, and observe the times,
And spend his prodigal wits in boastless rhymes,
And shape his service wholly to my behests,
And make him proud to make me proud that jests!
So potently* would I o'erway his state,
That he should be my fool, and I his fate.
Prin. None are so surely catch'd, when they are catch'd,
As wit turn'd fool: folly, in wisdom hatch'd,
Hath wisdom's warrant, and the help of school,
And wit's own grace to grace a learned fool.
Roz. The blood of youth burns not with such excess,
As gravity's revolt to wantonness.
Mar. Folly in fools bears not so strong a note,
As foolery in the wise, when wit doth dote;
Since all the power thereof it doth apply,
To prove by wit worth in simplicity.

Enter Boyet.
Prin. Here comes Boyet, and mirth is in his face.
Boyet. O! I am stabb'd with laughter. Where's her grace?
Prin. Thy news, Boyet?
Boyet. Prepare, madam, prepare!
Arm, wenchers, arm! encountriers* mounted are Against your peace. Love doth approach disguis'd,
Armed in arguments: you'll be surpris'd.
Muster your wits; stand in your own defence,
Or hide your heads like cowards, and fly hence.

Prin. Saint Dennis to saint Cupid! What are they,
That charge the breach* against us? say, scout, say.
Boyet. Under the cool shade of a sycamore,
I thought to close mine eyes some half an hour,
When, lo! to interrupt my purpose's rest,
Toward that shade I might behold addresst
The king and his companions: warily
I stole into a neighbour thicket by,
And overheard what you shall overhear;
That by and by disguised they will be here.
Their herald is a pretty knavish page,
That well by heart hath comm'd his embassage:
Action, and ascent, did they teach him there;
"Thus must thou speak, and thus thy body bear."
And ever and anon they made a doubt
Presence majestical would put him out;
"For," quoth the king, "an angel shalt thou see Yet fear not thou, but speak audaciously."
The boy replied, "An angel is not evil;
I should have feared her, had she been a devil."
With that all laugh'd, and clapp'd him on the shoulder,
Making the bold way by their praises bolder.
One rubb'd his elbow thus, and seer'd and swore
A better speech was never spoke before:
Another, with his finger and his thumb,
Cry'd "Via! we will do't, come what will come."
The third he eaper'd, and cried, "All goes well."
The fourth turn'd on the toe, and down he fell.
With that, they all did tumble on the ground,
With such a zealous laughter, so profound,
That in this spleen ridiculous appears.
To check their folly, passion's sudden tears.
Prin. But what, but what, come they to visit us?
Boyet. They do, they do; and are apparel'd thus,— Like Muscovites, or Russians: as I guess,
Their purpose is, to parle, to court,—and dance;
And every one his love-suit will advance
Unto his several mistress; which they'll know
By favours several which they did bestow.
Prin. And will they so? the gallants shall be tash'd
For, ladies, we will every one be mask'd,
And not a man of them shall have the grace,
Despite of suit, to see a lady's face.—
Hold Rosaline; this fav'ry thou shalt wear.
And then the king will court thee for his dear:
Hold, take thou this, my sweet, and give me thine,
So shall Biron take me for Rosaline.—
And change you favours too; so shall your loves
Woo contrary, deceive'd by these removes.
Roz. Come on them: wear the favours most in sight
Kath. But in this changing what is your intent?
Prin. The effect of my intent is to cross theirs:
They do it but in mockery, merriment;
And mock for mock is only my intent.
Their several counsels they unbosom shall
To loves mistook; and so be mock'd withal,
Upon the next occasion that we meet,
With visages display'd, to talk, and greet.
Roz. But shall we dance, if they desire us to't?
Prin. No; to the death, we will not move a foot:
Nor to their penn'd speech render we no grace;
But, while 'tis spoke, each turn away her face.
Boyet. Why, that contempt will kill the speaker's heart,
And quite divorce his memory from his part.
Prin. Therefore I do it; and, I make no doubt,
The rest will ne'er come in, if he be out.
There's no such sport, as sport by sport o'errhrown;
To make theirs ours, and ours none but our own:
So shall we stay, mocking intended game;
And they, well mock'd, depart sorry with shame.

[Trumpets sound within]

---

1: B in f. e.
2: For a certainty.
3: portent-like in f. e.
4: encounters in f. e.
5: their breath: in f. e.
6: salsom in f. e.
7: Lose feet.
8: Do the quarto; the folio: pear.
Boyet. The trumpet sounds: be mask'd, the maskers come.

[The ladies mask.]

Enter the King, Biron, Longaville, and Dumaine, in Russian habits, and mask'd; Mote, Musicians, and Attendants.

Moth. "All hail, the richest beauties on the earth!"
Biron. "Beauties no richer than rich taffeta."
Moth. "A holy parcel of the fairest damsels,
[The Ladies turn their backs to him.
That ever t'urn'd their backs to mortal views!"
Biron. "Their eyes," villain, "their eyes."
Moth. "That ever t'urn'd their eyes to mortal views!"

Out—

Boyet. True: "out," indeed.
Moth. "Out of your favours, heavenly spirits, vouche-safe Not to behold"—
Biron. "Once to behold," rogue.
Moth. "Once to behold with your sun-beamed eyes—with your sun-beamed eyes—"
Boyet. They will not answer to that epithet;
You were best call it daughter-beamed eyes.
Moth. They do not mark me, and that brings me out.
Biron. Is this your perfection? be gone, you rogue.
Ros. What would these strangers? know their minds, Boyet.

If they do speak our language, 'tis our will
That some plain man recount their purposes.
Know what they would.
Boyet. What would you with the princess?
Biron. Nothing but peace, and gentle visitation.
Ros. What would they, say they?
Boyet. Nothing but peace, and gentle visitation.
Ros. Why, that they have; and bid them so be gone.
Boyet. She says, you have it, and you may be gone.
King. Say to her, we have measur'd many miles,
To read a measure with her on this grass.
Boyet. They say, that they have measur'd many a mile,
To read a measure with you on this grass.
Ros. It is not so: ask them how many inches in one mile? if they have measur'd many,
The measure then of one is easily told.
Boyet. If, to come hither you have measur'd miles,
And many miles, the princess bids you tell,
How many inches do fill up one mile.
Biron. Tell her, we measure them by weary steps.
Boyet. She hears herself.

How many weary steps,
Of many weary miles you have o'ergone,
Are number'd in the travel of one mile?
Biron. We number nothing that we spend for you:
Our duty is so rich, so infinite,—
That we may do it still without accompt.
Vouche-safe to show the sunshine of your face,
That we like savages, may worship it.
Ros. My face is but a moon, and clouded too!
King. Blessed are clouds, to do as such clouds do!
Vouche-safe, bright moon, and these thy stars, to shine
These clouds removed) upon our watery eye.
Ros. O, vain petitioner! beg a greater matter;
But now request'st but moonshine in the water.
King. Then, in our measure do but vouche-safe one change.

This bid'st me beg; this begging is not strange.
Ros. Play, music, then! nay, you must do it soon.
[Music plays.

You give this speech to Boyet, as do most mod. eds. * A formal, slow dance. * To say, was to load dice, to cheat, to deceive.

King. Will you not dance? How come you thus estranged?
Ros. You took the moon at full, but now she's changed.
King. Yet still she is the moon, and I the man.
The music plays: vouche-safe some motion to it.
Ros. Our ears vouche-safe it.
King. But your legs should do it.
Ros. Since you are strangers, and come here by chance,
We'll not be nice. Take hands:—we will not dance.
King. Why take we hands then?
Ros. Only to part friends. —
Court'sy, sweet hearts; and so the measure ends.
King. More measure of this measure: be not nice.
Ros. We can afford no more at such a price.
King. Prize you yourselves? What buys your company?
Ros. Your absence only.
King. That can never be.
Ros. Then cannot we be bought; and so adieu.
Twice to your visor, and half once to you!
King. If you deny to dance, let 's hold more chat.
Ros. In private, then.
King. I am best pleas'd with that. [They converse apart.
Biron. White-handed mistress, one sweet word with thee.
Prin. Honey, and milk, and sugar: there are three.
Biron. Nay, then, two trews, (an you grow so nice)
Methergin, wort, and maltmase.—Well run, dice I
There's half a dozen sweets.
Prin. Seventh sweet, adieu.
Since you can oog*, I'll play no more with you.
Biron. One word in secret.
Prin. Let it not be sweet.
Biron. Thou grieve'st my gall.
Biron. Therefore meet. [They converse apart.
Dum. Will you vouche-safe with me to change a word?
Mar. Name it.

Dum. Fair lady,—
Mar. Say you so? Fair lord.—
Take that for your fair lady.
Dum. Please it you,
As much in private, and I'll bid adieu.
[They converse apart.
Kath. What, was your visor made without a tongue?
Long. I know the reason, lady, why you ask.
Kath. O, for your reason! quite, sir; I long.
Long. You have a double tongue within your mask,
And would afford my speechless visor half.
Kath. Veal, quoth the Dutchman.—is not veal a calf?
Long. Let's part the word.
Kath. No; I will not be your half:
Take all, and wean it: it may prove an ox.
Long. Look, how you butt yourself in these sharp mock.
Will you give horns, chaste lady? do not so.
Kath. Then die a calf, before your horns do grow.
Long. One word in private with you, ere I die.
Kath. Blest softly then: the butcher hear you cry.
[They converse apart.
Boyet. The tongues of mocking wenches are as keen
As is the razor's edge invisible,
Cutting a smaller hair than may be seen;
Above the sense of sense, so sensible
Seemeth their conference; their conceits have wings,
Fleeter than arrows, bullets, wind, thought, swifter things.

Ros. Not one word more, my maids: break off, break off.

Biron. By heaven, all dry-beaten with pure scoff!

King. Farewell, mad wenches: you have simple wits.

[Exeunt King, Lords, Mother, Music, and Attendants.]

Prin. Twenty adieu, my frozen Muscovites—

Are these the breed of wits so wonder'd at?

Boyet. Tapers they are, with your sweet breaths puff'd out.

Ros. Well-liking wits they have; gross, gross; fat, fat.

Prin. O, poverty in wit, kill'd by pure stout!

Will they not, think you, hang themselves to-night,

Or ever, but in visors, show their faces?

This jest Biron was out of countenance quite.

Ros. O! they were all in lamentable cases!

The king was weeping-ripe for a good word.

Prin. Biron did swear himself out of all suit.

Mar. Dumatine was at my service, and his sword:

No point, quoth I: my servant straight was mute.

Kath. Lord Longaville said, I came o'er his heart;

And now you, what he call'd me?

Prin. Qualm, perhaps.

Kath. Yes, in good faith.

Prin. Go, sickness as thou art!

Ros. Well, better wits have worn plain statute-capes,

But will you hear? 'tis the king is my love sworn.

Prin. And quick Biron hath plighted faith to me.

Kath. And Longaville was for my service born.

Mar. Dumatine is mine, as sure as bark on tree.

Boyet. Madam, and pretty mistresses, give ear.

Immediately they will again be here

In their own shapes; for it can never be,

They will digest this harsh indignity.

Prin. Will they return?

Boyet. They will, they will, God knows;

And leap for joy, though they are lame with blows;

Therefore, change favours; and, when they repair,

 Blow like sweet roses in this summer air.

Boyet. Fair ladies, mask'd, are roses in their bud:

Dismask'd, their damask sweet commixture shown,

Are angels vailing clouds, or roses blown.

Prin. Arvant, perplexity! What shall we do,

If they return in their own shapes to woo?

Ros. Good madam, if by you me you'll be advised,

Let's mock them still, as well, known, as disguis'd.

Let us complain to them what fools were here,

Disguis'd like Muscovites, in shapeless gear;

And wonder, what they were, and to what end

Their shallow shows, and prolonge vilely penn'd,

And their rough carriage so ridiculous,

Should be presented at our tent to us.

Boyet. Ladies, withdraw: the gallants are at hand.

Prin. Whip to our tents, as roes run over land.

[Exeunt Princess, Ros. Kath. and Maria.

Enter the King, Biron, Longaville, and Dumatine, in their proper habits.

King. Fair air, God save you! Where is the princess?

Boyet. Gone to her tent: please it you majesty,

Command me any service to her thither?

King. That she vouchsafe me audience for one word.

Boyet. I will; and so will she, I know, my lord.

[Exit.

Biron. This fellow pecks up wit, as pigeons peck.
is of that nature, that to your huge store
Wise things seem foolish, and rich things but poor.
Ros. This proves you wise and rich, for in my eye—
Biron. I am a fool, and full of poverty.
Ros. But that you take what doth to you belong,
It were a fault to snatch words from my tongue.
Biron. O! I am yours, and all that I possess.
Ros. All the fool mine?
Biron. I cannot give you less.
Ros. Which of the visors was it, that you wore?
you this?
Ros. There, then, that visor; that superfluous case,
That hid the worse, and shew'd the better face.
King. We are descried: they'll mock us now downright.
Dum. Let us confesse, and turn it to a jest.
Princ. Amaz'd, my lord? Why looks your highness sad?
Ros. Help! hold his brows! he'll swoon. Why look you pale?
Esrick. I think, coming from Muscovy.
Biron. Thus pour the stars down plagues for perjury.
Can any face of brass hold longer out?—
Here stand I, lady; dart thy skill at me;
Bruise me with scorn, confound me with a fount;
Thrust thy sharp wit quite through my ignorance;
Cut me to pieces with thy keen conceit;
And I will wish thee never more to dance,
Nor never more in Russian habit wait.
O! never will I trust to speeches penn'd,
Nor to the motion of a school-boy's tongue;
Nor never come in visor to my friend;
Nor woo in rhyme, like a blind harper's song;
Tawse phrases, silken terms precise,
Three-pil'd hyperboles, spruce affectation,
Figures pedantic'; these summer flies
Have blown me full of maggote ostentation.
I to forswear them; and I here protest
By this white glove, (how white the hand, God knows).
Henceforth my wooing mind shall be express'd
In russet yearns, and honest kersey noes;
And to begin, —wrench, so God help me, la!
My love to thee is sound, sans crack or flaw.
Ros. Same sans, I pray you.
Biron. Yet I have a trick
Of the old rage —bear with me, I am sick;
I'll leave it by degrees. Soft! let us see—
Writ "Lord have mercy on us" on those three;
They are infected, in their hearts it lies;
They have the plague, and caught of it your eyes:
See lords are visited; you are not free,
For the Lord's tokens on you do I see.
Princ. No; they are free that gave these tokens to us.
Biron. Our states are forfeit: seek not to unde us.
Ros. It is not so; for how can this be true,
That you stand forlorn, being those that sue?
Biron. Peace! for I will not have to do with you.
Ros. Nor shall not, if I do as I intend.
Biron. Speak for yourselves: my wit is at an end.
King. Teach us, sweet madam, for our rude transgression
Some fair excuse.
Princ. Are you not here, but even now, disguis'd?

King. Madam, I was.
Princ. And were you well adviz'd?
King. I was, fair madam.
Princ. When you then were here,
What did you whisper in your lady's ear?
King. That more than all the world I did respect her.
Princ. When she shall challenge this, you will reject her.
King. Upon mine honour, no.
Princ. Peace! peace I forbear:
Your oath once broke, you force not to forswear.
King. Despise me, when I break this oath of mine.
Princ. I will; and therefore keep it.—Rosaline,
What did the Russian whisper in your ear?
Ros. Madam, he swore, that he did hold me dear
As precious eye-sight, and did value me
Above this world; adding thereto, moreover,
That he would wed me, or else die my lover.
Princ. God give thee joy of him! the noble lord
Most honourably doth uphold his word.
King. What mean you, madam? by my life, my troth,
I never swore this lady such an oath.
Ros. By heaven, you did; and to confirm it plain,
You gave me this: but take it, sir, again.
King. My faith, and this, the princess I did give:
I knew her by this jewel on her sleeve.
Princ. Pardon me, sir, this jewel did she wear;
And lord Biron, I thank him, is my dear—
What! will you have me, or your pearl again?
Biron. Neither of either; I remit both twain.—
I see the trick on't:—here was a consent,
Knowing aforesaid of our merriment,
To dash it like a Christmas comedy.
Some carry-tale, some please-man, some slight zany,
Some mumble-news, some trencher-knight, some Dick,
That smiles his cheek in years, and knows the trick
To make my lady laugh when she's disposed,
Told our intents before; which once disclose'd,
The ladies did change favours, and then we,
Following the signs, wo'd but the sign of she.
Now, to our perjury to add more terror,
We are again forsworn—in will, and error.
Much upon this it is:—and might not you
To Bottom, forestal our sport, to make us thus untrue?
Do not you know my lady's foot by the squire?
And laugh upon the apple of her eye?
And stand between her back, sir, and the fire,
Holding a trencher, jesting merrily?
You put our page out: go, you are allow'd,
Die when you will, a smock shall be your shroud.
You leer upon me, do you? there's an eye,
Wounds like a leaden sword.
Boyet. Full merrily
Hath this brave manage, this career, been run.
Biron. Lo! he is tilting straight. Peace! I have done.

Enter Costard.
Welcome, pure wit! thou partest a fair fray.
Cost. O Lord, sir, they would know,
Whether the three Worthies shall come in, or no.
Biron. What are there but three?
Cost. No, sir; but it is varie fines,
For every one pursues three.
Biron. And three times thrice is nine.
Cost. Not so, sir; under correction, sir, I hope, it is not so.
You cannot beg us, sir, I can assure you, sir; we know what we know:

The inscription, written on houses infected with the plague. Hastea, an old use of the word. Square. Beg to have the way of us as lamenates.

I hope, sir, three times thrice, sir,—

Biron. Is not nine.

Cost. Under correction, sir, we know whereunto it doth amount.

Biron. By Jove, I always took three threes for nine.

Cost. O Lord! sir, it were pity you should get your living by reckoning, sir.

Biron. How much is it?

Cost. O Lord! sir, the parties themselves, the actors, sir, will show whereunto it doth amount: for mine own part, I am, as they say, but to pursue one man,—on one poor man—Pompiam the great, sir.

Biron. Art thou one of the Worthies?

Cost. It pleased them, to think me worthy of Pompeam the great: for mine own part, I know not the degree of the Worthy, but I am to stand for him.

Biron. Go, bid them prepare.

Cost. We will turn it finely off, sir: we will take some care. [Exit Costard.

King. Biron, they will shame us; let them not approach.

Biron. We are shame-proof, my lord; and 'tis some policy

To have one show worse than the king's and his company.

King. Indeed, they shall not come.

Prin. Nay, my good lord, let me o'er-rule you now.

That sport best pleasing, that doth least know how Pompeam sceat to strive with content, and the contents.

Die in the zeal of them which it presents,

Their form confounded makes most form in mirth;

When great things labouring perish in their birth.

Biron. A right description of our sport, my lord. [Enter Armado.

Arm. Anointed, I implore so much expense of thy royal sweetness, as will utter a brace of words.

[Armado converses with the King, and delivers a paper to him.

Prin. Doth this man serve God?

Biron. Why ask you?

Prin. A speaks not like a man of God's making.

Arm. That's all one, my fair, sweet, honey monarch; for, I protest, the school-master is exceeding fantastical; too, too vain; too, too vain: but we will put it as they say, to fortuna della guerra. I wish you the peace of mind, most royal couplement! [Exit Armado.

King. Here is like to be a good presence of Worthies. He presents Hector of Troy; the swain, Pompeam the great; the parish curate, Alexander; Armado's page, Hercules; the pedant, Judas Maccabeus.

And if these four Worthies in their first show thrive,

These four will change habits, and present the other five.

Biron. There is five in the first show.

King. You are deceived; 'tis not so.

Biron. The pedant, the braggart, the hedge-priest, the fool, and the boy—Abate throw at novum, and the whole world again Cannot pick out five such, take each one in his vein.

King. The ship is under sail, and here she comes again.

[Enter Costard armed, for Pompeam.

Cost. "I Pompeam am,"—

Boyet. You lie, you are not he.

Cost. "I Pompeam am,"—

Boyet. With ladish's head on knee.

Biron. Well said, old moocker: I must needs be friends with thee.

Cost. "I Pompeam am, Pompeam surnam'd the big,—"

Dum. The great.

Cost. It is great, sir;—"Pompeam surnam'd the great; That oft in field, with targe and shield, did make my foe to sweat: And travelling along this coast I here am come by chance; And lay my arms before the legs of this sweet lass of France."

If your ladyship would say, "Thanks, Pompeam," I had done.

Prin. Great thanks, great Pompeam.

Cost. "'Tis not so much worth; but, I hope, I was perfect. I made a little fault in, "great."

Biron. My hat to a halfpenny, Pompeam proves the best Worthy.

Enter Sir Nathaniel armed, for Alexander.

Nath. "When in the world I liv'd, I was the world's commander; By east, west, north, and south, I spread my conquering might:

My 'scutcheon plain declares, that I am Alisander."

Boyet. Your nose says, no, you are not; for it stands too right.

Biron. Your nose smells, no, in this, most tender-smelling knight."

Prin. The conqueror is dismay'd.—Proceed, good Alexander.

Nath. "When in the world I liv'd, I was the world's commander;"

Boyet. Most true; 'tis right; you were so, Alisander.

Biron. Pompeam the great,—

Cost. Your servant, and Costard.

Biron. Take away the conqueror, take away Alisander.

Cost. O sir, [To Nath.] you have overthrown Alisander the conqueror. You will be scraped out of the painted cloth for this: your lion, that holds his pall-axe sitting on a close-stool, will give to Ajax: he will be the ninth Worthy. A conqueror, and asfread to speak? run away for shame, Alisander. [Nath. retires.]

There, 'n't shall please you; a foolish mild man; an honest man, look you, and soon dash'd. He is a marvelous good neighbour, faith, and a very good bowler; but, for Alisander, alas! you see how 'tis,—a little o'erset.—But there are Worthies a coming will speak their mind in some other sort.

King. Stand aside, good Pompeam. [Exit Costard.

Enter Holofferne armed, for Judas, and Moth armed, for Hercules.

Hol. "Great Hercules is presented by this imp, Whose club kill'd Cerberus, that three-headed canine;

And, when he was a babe, a child, a shrimp, Thus did he strangle serpents in his manus.

Quoniam, he seemeth in minority, Ergo, I come with this apology,—

Keep some state in thy exit, and vanish." [Exit Mor.

Hol. "Judas I am,"—

Dum. A Judas!—

Hol. Not Iscariot, sir,—

"Judas I am, yclep'd Maccabeus."

Dum. Judas Maccabeus clipt is plain Judas.

Biron. A kissing traitor,—How art thou prov'd? Judas?

Hol. "Judas I am,"—

Dum. The more shame for you, Judas.

1 A game at dice, of which five and nine were the chief throws. 2 Panshelle's. 3 Alexander was wry-necked, and his body, says Plutarch, had a sweet odor. 4 Used for walls in place of tapestry. 5 The arms given to Alexander in the old history of the Nine Worthies, were 'a lion sitting in a chair, holding a battle-axe.' 6 Not in f. a.
LOVE'S LABOUR'S LOST.

Act IV, Scene 3.

Humphrey. What mean you, sir?
Boyet. To make Judæa hang himself.
Humphrey. Begin, sir: you are my elder.
Biron. Well fellow'd: Judas was hang'd on an elder. I will not be put out of countenance.
Humphrey. Because thou hast no face.
Humphrey. What is this?
Boyet. A citron's head.
Dem. The head of a toadkin.
Biron. A death's face in a ring.
Long. The face of an old Roman coin, scarce seen.
Briot. The pummel of Caesar's falchion.
Dem. The carry'd-bone face on a flask.
Biron. St. George's half-cheek in a brooch.
Dem. Ay, and in a brooch of lead.
Biron. Ay, and worn in the cap of a tooth-drawer. And now forward, for we have put thee in countenance.
Humphrey. You have put me out of countenance.
Briot. False: we have given thee a lead.
Dem. But thou hast out-faced them all.
Biron. An thou wert a lion, we would do so.
Boyet. Therefore, as he is an ass, let him go.
Dem. So abject, sweet Jude! nay, why dost thou stay?
Dem. For the latter end of his name.
Biron. For the Ass to the Jude? give it him:—Judges away.
Humphrey. This is not generous, not gentle, not humble.
Boyet. A light for miserous Judæa! it grows dark, he may stumble.
Prio. Alas, poor Maccabees, how hath he been baited!

Enter Armado armed, for Hector.

Biron. Hide thy head, Achilles: here comes Hector in arm.

Dem. Though my mock's come home by me, I will we be merry.
King. Hector was but a Trojan in respect of this.
Boyet. But is this Hector?
Biron. I think Hector was not so clean-timer'd.
Long. His leg is too big for Hector's.
Dem. More calf, certain.
Briot. No: he is best induced in the small.
Biron. This cannot be Hector.
Dem. He's a god or a painter; for he makes faces.
Briot. "The armi\{pom\}t\{t\}n\{t\} Mars, of lances the Almighty,\} Get Hector a gift,—" 1
Dem. A gift, nutmeg.
Biron. A lemon.
Briot. Stuck with cloves. 2
Dem. No, eleven.
Long. Peace!
The armi\{pom\}t\{t\}n Mars of lances the Almighty,
Get Hector a gift, the heir of lion:
I can so breath'd, that certain he would fight, yes,
I'm worn till out, out of his pavilion.
[slow flower,—"
Dem. That mint.
Long. That columbine.
Dem. Sweet lord Longavale, rein thy tongue.
Long. I must rather give it the rein, for it runs wild.
Biron. Ay, and Hector's a greyhound.
Dem. The sweet war-man is dead and rotten: sweet heat not the bones of the buried: when he was a man.—But I will forward with my war.
Ste. Royalty, bestow on me the sense of her it.

Prin. Speak, brave Hector: we are much delighted.
Arm. I do adore thy sweet grace's slipper.
Boyet. Loves her by the foot.
Dem. He may not by the yard.
Arm. "This Hector far surmounted Hannibal,"—
Re-enter Costard, in haste, unarm'd.
Cost. The party is gone: fellow Hector, she is gone; she is two months on her way.
Arm. What meanest thou?
Cost. Faith, unless you play the honest Trojan, the poor wench is cast away: she's quick; the child brags in her belly already: 'tis yours.
Arm. Dest thou infamously me among potentates? Thou shalt die.
Cost. Then shall Hector be whip'd for Jaquenetta that is quick by him, and hang'd for Pompey that is dead by him.
Dem. Most rare Pompey!
Boyet. Renowned Pompey!
Biron. Greater than great, great, great, great Pompey! Pompey the huge!
Dem. Hector trembles.
Biron. Pompey is moved.—More Ates, more Ates! stir them on! stir them on!
Dem. Hector will challenge him.
Biron. Ay, if a have no more man's blood in 's belly than will sup a flea.
Arm. By the north pole, I do challenge thee.
Cost. I will not fight with a pole, like a northern man: I'll slash; I'll do it by the sword.—I pray you, let me borrow my arms again.
Dem. Room for the incensed Worthies! Cost. I'll do it in my shirt.
Dem. Most resolute Pompey!
Moth. Master, let me take you a button-hole lower.
Do you not see, Pompey is uncessing for the combat? What mean you? you will lose your reputation.
Arm. Gentlemen, and soldiers, pardon me; I will not combat in my shirt.
Dem. You may not deny it: Pompey hath made the challenge.
Arm. Sweet bloods, I both may and will.
Biron. What reason have you for 't?
Arm. The naked truth of it is, I have no shirt. I go woollen 3 for penance.
Boyet. True, and it was enjoin'd him in Rome for want of linen; since when, I'll be sworn, he wore none, but a dish-clout of Jaquenetta's, and that a wares next his heart for a favour.

Enter Monsieur Mercadieu, a Messenger.

Mere. God save you, madam.
Prin. Welcome, Mercadieu.
But that thou interrupt'st our merriment.
Mere. I am sorry, madam, for the news I bring.
Is heavy in my tongue. The king your father—
Prin. Dead, for my life!
Mere. Even so: my tale is told.
Biron. Worthies, away! The scene begins to cloud.
Arm. For mine own part, I breathe free breath. I have seen the day of wrong through the little hole of discretion, and I will right myself like a soldier.

[Exeunt Worthies.

King. How fares your majesty?
Prin. Boyet, prepare: I will away to-night.
King. Madam, not so; I do beseech you, stay.
Prin. Prepare, I say.—I thank you, gracious lords,
For all your fair endeavours; and entreat,
Out of a new-sad soul, that you vouchsafe
In your rich wisdom to excuse, or hide,
The liberal opposition of our spirits:
If over-boldly we have borne ourselves
In the converse of breath, your gentleness
Was guilty of it. Farewell, worthy lord!
A heavy heart bears not a nimble1 tongue.
Excuse me, so, coming too short of thanks.
For my great suit so easily obtained.

King. The extreme parting time expressly forms
All causes to the purpose of his speed;
And often, at his very loose2, decides
That which long process could not arbitrate:
And though the mourning brow of progeny
Forbid the smiling courtesy of love
The holy suit which fait it would convince;
Yet, since love's argument was first on foot,
Let not the cloud of sorrow jutle it
From what it purposed; since, to wait friends lost
Is not by much so wholesome, profitable,
As to rejouce at friends but newly found.

Prin. I understand you not: my griefs are dull.4

Biron. Honest plain words best pierce the ear of grief;
And by these badges understand the king.
For your fair sakes have we neglected time,
Play'd foul play with our oaths: your beauty, ladies,
Hath much deform'd us, fashioning our humour
Even to the opposite ends of our intents;
And what in us hath seem'd ridiculous,—
As love is full of unbetting strangeness;3
All wanton as a child, skipping, and vain:
Form'd by the eye, and, therefore, like the eye,
Full of strange shapes, of habits, and of forms,
Varying in subjects, as the eye doth roll
To every varied object in his glance:
Which party-coated presence of loose love
Put on by us, if, in your heavenly eyes,
Have misbeconome our oaths and gravities,
Those heavenly eyes, that look into these faults,
Suggest us to make. Therefore, ladies,
Our love being yours, the error that love makes
Is likewise yours: we to ourselves prove false,
By being once false for ever to be true
To those that make us both,—fair ladies, you:
And even: that falsehood, in itself so base,
Thus purifies itself, and turns to grace.

Prin. We have receiv'd your letters full of love;
Your favours, & that ambassador of love;
And, in our maiden counsel, rated them
At courtship, pleasant jest, and courtesy,
As bombastic, and as lining to the time.
But more devout than this, in our respects
Have we not been; and therefore met your loves
In their own fashion, like a merriment.

Dum. Our letters, madam, shew'd much more than jest.

Long. So did our looks.

Ros. We did not quote them so.

King. Now, at the latest minute of the hour,
Grant us your loves.

Prin. A time, methinks, too short
To make a world-without-end bargain in.
No, no, my lord, your grace is perjur'd much,
Full of dear guiltiness; and therefore this.—
If for my love (as there is no such cause)
You will do aught, this shall you do for me:
Your oath I will not trust; but go with speed
To some forlorn and naked hermitage,
Remote from all the pleasures of the world;
There stay, until the twelve celestial signs
Have brought about their annual reckoning.
If this austere incorollable life
Change not your offer made in heat of blood;
If frosts, and fads, hard lodging, and thin weeds,
Nip not the gaudy blossoms of your love,
But that it bear this trial, and last love;
Then, at the expiration of the year,
Come challenge me, challenge6 by these deserts,
And by this virgin palm, now kissing thine,
I will be thine; and, till that instant8, shut
My woful self up in a mournjng house,
Raining the tears of lamentation,
For the remembrance of my father's death.
If this thou do deny, let us hands part,
Neither intitled in the other's heart.

King. If this, or more than this, I would deny,
To flattering up those powers of mine with rest,
The sudden hand of death close up mine eye.
Hence ever then my heart is in thy breast.

Biron. And what to me, my love, and what to me?

Ros. You must be purged too, your sins are rank:4
You are attaint with faults and perjury;
Therefore, if you by your favour mean to get,
A twelvemonth shall you spend, and never rest,
But seek the wretched beds of people sick.

Dum. But what to me, my love? but what to me?

Kath. A wife!—A beard, fair health, and honesty;
With three-fold love I wish you all these three.

Dum. O! shall I say, I thank you, gentle wife?

Kath. Not so, my lord. A twelvemonth and a day
I'll mark no words that smooth-face'd woorers say:
Come when the king doth to my lady come,
Then, if I have much love, I'll give you some.

Dum. I'll serve thee true and faithfully till them.

Kath. Yet swear not, lest you be forsworn again.

Long. What says Maria?

Mar. At the twelvemonth's end,
I'll change my black gown for a faithful friend.

Long. I'll stay with patience; but the time is long.

Mar. The liker you: few taller are so young.

Biron. Studies my lady? mistress look on me:
Behold the window of my heart, mine eye,
What humble suit attends thy answer there;
Impose some service on me for thy love.

Ros. Oft had I heard of you, my lord Biron,
Before I saw you, and the world's large tongue
Proclaims you for a man replete with moods;
Full of comparisons and wounding flouts,
Which you on all estates will exercise,6
That lie within the mercy of your wit:
To weed this wormwood from your fruitful brain,
And, therewithal, to win me, if you please,
Without which I am not to be won.
You shall this twelvemonth term, from day to day,
Visit the speechless sick; and still converse
With groaning wretches; and your task shall be,
With all the fierce endeavour of your wit,
To enforce the pained imponent to smile.

Biron. To move wild laughter in the throat of death?
It cannot be; it is impossible;
Mirth cannot move a soul in agony.

Ros. Why, that's the way to choke a gibing spirit,
Whose influence is begot of that loose grace,
Which shallow laughing hearers give to fools.

A jest's prosperity lies in the ear
Of him that bears it, never in the tongue
Of him that makes it: then, if sickly ears,
Did with the clamours of their own dire groans,
Will hear your idle scorns; continue them,
And I will have you, and that fault withal;
But, if they will not, throw away that spirit,
And I shall find you empty of that fault,
Right joyful of your reformation.
Biron. A twelvemonth? well, besal what will besal,
I'll jest a twelvemonth in an hospital.
Pris. Ay, sweet my lord; and so I take my leave.
[To the King.
King. No, madam; we will bring you on your way.
Biron. Our wooing doth not end like an old play;
Jack hath not Jill: these ladies' courtesy
 Might well have made our sport a comedy.
King. Come, sir, it wants a twelvemonth and a day,
And then 'twill end.
Biron. That's too long for a play.
Enter Armado.
Arm. Sweet majesty, vouchsafe me.—
Pris. Was not that Hector?
Dem. The worthy knight of Troy.
Arm. I will kiss thy royal finger, and take leave.
I am a votary: I have vowed to Jaquenetta to hold
The plough for her sweet love three years. But, most Esteemed greatness, will you hear the dialogue that the two learned men have composed in praise of the owl and the cuckoo? it should have followed in the end of our show.
King. Call them forth quickly; we will do so.
Arm. Holloa! approach.
Enter Holofemus, Nathaniel, Moth, Costard, and others.
This side is Hiems, winter; this Ver, the spring; the see maintained by the owl, the other by the cuckoo.
Ver. begin.

SONG.

Spring. When daisies pied, and violets blue,
And lady-smocks all silver-white,

And cuckoo-buds of yellow hue
Do paint the meadows with delight,
The cuckoo then, on every tree,
Mocks married men, for thus sings he:
Cuckoo,
Cuckoo, cuckoo,—O word of fear!
Unpleasing to a married ear.

II.

When shepherds pipe on oaten straws,
And merry larks are ploughmen's clocks,
When turtles tread, and rooks, and daws,
And maidens bleach their summer smocks,
The cuckoo then, on every tree,
Mocks married men, for thus sings he:
Cuckoo,
Cuckoo, cuckoo,—O word of fear!
Unpleasing to a married ear.

III.

Winter. When icicles hang by the wall,
And Dick the shepherd blows his nail,
And Tom bears logs into the hall,
And milk comes frozen home in pail,
When blood is nipp'd, and ways be foul,
Then nightly sings the staring owl,
To-who,
Tu-whit, to-who, a merry note,
While greasy Joan doth keel the pot.

IV.

When all aloud the wind doth blow,
And coughing drowns the parson's saw,
And birds sit brooding in the snow,
And Marian's nose looks red and raw;
When roasted crab's kiss in the bowl,
Then nightly sings the staring owl,
To-who,
Tu-whit, to-who, a merry note,
While greasy Joan doth keel the pot.

Arm. The words of Mercury are harsh after the songs of Apollo. You, that way: we, this way.

[Exeunt.

Scene: Athens, and a Wood not far from it.

ACT I.

Scene I.—Athens. A Room in the Palace of Theseus.

Enter Theseus, Hippolyta, Philestrate, and Attendants.

The. Now, fair Hippolyta, our nuptial hour Draws on to space: four happy days bring in Another moon; but, oh, methinks, how slow This old moon wanes! she lingers my desires, Like to a step-dame, or a dowager, Long withering out a young man's revenue.

Hippolyta. Four days will quickly steep themselves in nights:

Four nights will quickly dream away the time;
And then the moon, like to a silver bow,
New* bent in heaven, shall behold the night
Of our solemnities.

The. Go, Philestrate,

Stir up the Athenian youth to merriments;
Awake the pert and nimble spirit of mirth:
Turn melancholy forth to funerals,
The pale companion is not for our pomp.—

[Exit Philestrate.

Hippolyta. I wou'd thee with my sword,
And won thou love doing thee injuries;
But I will wed thee in another key,
With pomp, with triumph, and with revelry."

Enter Egeus, with his daughter Hermia, Lyceus, and Demetrius.

Egeus. Happy be Theseus, our renowned duke!

The. Thanks, good Egeus; what's the news with thee?

Egeus. Full of vexation come I; with complaint Against my child, my daughter Hermia.

Stand forth, Demetrius.—My noble lord,
This man hath my consent to marry her—
Stand forth, Lyceus;—and, my gracious duke,
This hath bewitch'd the bosom of my child:
Thou, thou, Lyceus, thou hast given her rhymes,
And interchang'd love-token's with my child:
Thou hast by moon-light at her window sung,
With feigning voice, verses of feigning love;
And stole in the impression of her fantasy
With bracelet of thy hair, rings, gawds, conceits, Knacks, triftes, nose-gays, sweet-meats (messeengers
Of strong prevailment in unharden'd youth),
With cunning hast thou file'd my daughter's heart;
Turn'd her obedience, which is due to me,
To stubborn hardness.—And, my gracious duke,
Be it so, she will not here, before your grace,
Consent to marry with Demetrius,
I beg the ancient privilege of Athens,
As she is mine, I may dispose of her,
Which shall be either to this gentleman,
Or to her death, according to our law
Immediately provided in that case.

The. What say you, Hermia? be advis'd, fair maid.

To you your father should be as a god;
One that compose'd your beauties; yes, and one
To whom you are but as a form in wax,
By him imprinted, and within his power
To leave the figure, or disfigure it.

Demetrius is a worthy gentleman.

Her. So is Lyceus.

The. In himself he is;
But, in this kind, wanting your father's voice,
The other must be held the worthier.

Her. I would, my father look'd but with my eyes!

* now: in 1. e. The change was also suggested by Rowe, and adopted generally. * reveling: in 1. e.
The. Rather, your eyes must with his judgment look.

Her. I do entreat your grace to pardon me.

I have not that power I am made bold, nor how it may concern my modesty, in such a presence here, to plead my thoughts; But I beseech your grace, that I may know The worst that may befal me in this case, if I refuse to wed Demetrius.

The. Either to die the death, or to abjure For ever the society of men. Therefore, fair Hermia, question your desires; Know of your youth, examine well your blood, Whether if you yield not to your father's choice, For can endure the livery of a nun, For eye to be in shady cloister mey'd, To live a barren sister all your life, Chanting faint hymns to the cold fruitless moon. Three blessed they, that master so their blood, To undergo such maiden pilgrimage; Bat earthy happier is the rose distil'd, Than that which, withering on the virgin thorn, Grows, withers, and lies in the grave, in single briersedness. Her. So will I grow, so live, so die, my lord, Ere I will yield my virgin patent up Into his lordship, to whose unwish'd yoke My soul consents not to give sovereignty.

The. Take time to pause: and by the next new moon, The sealing-day betwixt my love and me For everlasting bond of fellowship, Upon that day either prepare to die For disobedience to your father's will, Or else to wed Demetrius, as he would; On Diana's altar to protest, For, eye, austerity and single life.

Dem. Relent, sweet Hermia; — and, Lysander, yield the crazed title to my certain right.

Lys. You have her father's love, Demetrius; Let me have Hermia's: do you marry him.

Eg. Scornful Lysander! true, he hath my love, And mine by mine my love shall render him; And she is mine, and all my right of her I do estate unto Demetrius.

Lys. I am, my lord, as well deriv'd as he, As well possess'd; my love is more than his; My fortunes every way as fairly rank'd, 'Not with vantage, as Demetrius'; And, which is more than all these boasts can be, I am belov'd of beauteous Hermia. Why should not I then prosecute my right? Demetrius, I'll avouch it to his head, Made love to Nedar's daughter, Helena, And won her soul; and she, sweet lady, dotes, Devoutly dotes, dotes in idolatry, Upon this spotted and inconstant man.

The. I must confess, that I have heard so much, And with Demetrius thought to have spoke thereof; But being ever-full of self-affairs, My mind did lose it. — But, Demetrius, come; And come, Egeus: you shall go with me, I have some private schooling for you both. — For you, fair Hermia, look you arm yourself To fit your fancies to your father's will, Or else the law of Athens yields you up (Which by no means we may extenuate) To death, or to a vow of single life. —

Come, my Hippolyta: what cheer, my love? —

Demetrius, and Egeus, go along:

I must employ you in some business Against our unfair and indisposed lord, Of something nearly that concerns yourselves.

Ege. With duty, and desire, we follow you.

Lys. How now, my love? Why is your cheek so pale?

Her. Belfire, for want of rain, which I could well Betee am from the tempest of mine eyes.

Lys. Ah me! for aught that I could ever read, Could ever hear by tale or history, The course of true love never did run smooth; But, either it was different in blood,—

Her. O cross! too high to be enthrall'd to low! Lys. Or else misgrafted, in respect of years; —

Her. O spit! too old to be engag'd to young! Lys. Or else it stood upon the choice of men:—

Her. O hell! to choose love by another's eyes! Lys. Or, if there were a sympathy in choice, War, death, or sickness did design it, Making it momentary as a sound.

Swift as a shadow, short as any dream; Brief as the lightning in the collid'd night, That, in a spleen, unfolds both heaven and earth, And ere a man hath power to say,—behold!
The jaws of darkness do devour it up: So quick bright things come to confusion.

Her. If, then, true lovers have been ever cross'd, It stands as an edict in destiny: Then, let us teach our trial patience, Because it is a customary cross,

As due to love as thoughts, and dreams, and sighs, Wishes, and tears, poor fancy's followers.

Lys. A good persuasion: therefore, hear me, Hermia I have a widow aunt, a dowager Of great revenue, and she hath no child; From Athens is her house remote, seven leagues; And she respects me as her only son. There, gentle Hermia, may I marry thee, And to that place the sharp Athenian law Cannot pursue us. If thou lov'st me, then, Steal forth thy father's house to-morrow night, And in the wood, a league without the town, (Where I did meet thee once with Helena) To do observance to a morn of May) There will I stay for thee.

Her. My good Lysander! I swear to thee by Cupid's strongest bow, By his best arrow with the golden head, By the simplicity of Venus' dove, By that which knitteth souls, and prosper loves, And by that fire which burn'd the Carthagian queen, When the false Trojan under sail was seen; By all the vows that ever men have broke, In number more than ever women spoke; In that same place thou hast appointed me, To-morrow truly will I meet with thee.

Enter Helena.

Demetrius loves your fair: — O happy fair! Your eyes are lode-stars, and your tongue's sweet air More tuneful than lark to shepherd's ear, When wheat is green, when hawthorn buds appear.
Sickness is catching: O, were favour so!
Your words I'd catch, fair Hermia; ere I go,
My ear should catch your voice, my eye your eye,
My tongue should catch your tongue's sweet melody.
Were the world mine, Demetrius being bated,
The rest I'll give to be to you translated.
O! teach me how you look, and with what art
You sway the motion of Demetrius' heart.

Her. I frown upon him, yet he loves me still.
Hel. O, that your frowns would teach my smile
But such skill!

Her. I give him curses, yet he gives me love.
Hel. O, that my prayers could such affection move!

Her. The more I hate, the more he follows me.
Hel. The more I love, the more he hateth me.

Her. His fault, fair Helena, is none of mine. [mine!
Hel. None, but your beauty: would that fault were
Her. Take comfort: he no more shall see my face:

Lysander and myself will fly this place.—
Before the time I did Lysander see,
Seem'd Athens as a paradise to me:
O then, what graces in my love must dwell,
That he hath turn'd a heaven into hell!

Lys. Helen, to your minds we will unfold,
To-morrow night when Phoebe doth behold
Her silver visage in the wat'ry glass,
Decking with liquid pearl the bladed grass,
(A time that lovers' flights doth still conceal),
Through Athens' gates have we devise'd to steal.

Hel. And in the wood, where often you and I
Upon faint primrose-beds were wont to lie,
Emptying our bosome of their counsel sweet,
There my Lysander and myself shall meet;
And thence, from Athens, turn away our eyes,
To seek new friends and stranger companies.

Farewell, sweet playfellow; pray thou for us,
And good luck grant thee thy Demetrius!—
Keep word, Lysander: we must starve our sight
From lovers' food, till morning deep midnight.

[Exit Herm.]

Lys. I will, my Hermia.—Helena, adieu:
As you on him, Demetrius dote on you! [Exit Lys.]

Hel. How happy some, o'er other some can be!
Through Athens I am thought as fair as she;
But what of that? Demetrius thinks not so;
He will not know what all but he do know;
And as he errs, doting on Hermia's eyes,
So I, admiring of his qualities,
Things base and vile, holding no quantity,
Love can transposte to form and dignity.
Love looks not with the eyes, but with the mind,
And therefore is wing'd Cupid painted blind:
Nor hath love's mind of any judgment taste;
Wings, and no eyes, figure unheedly haste:
And therefore is love said to be a child,
Because in choice he is so oft beguil'd.
As wagging boys in game themselves forswear,
So the boy love is perjur'd every where;
For ere Demetrius look'd on Hermia's eyne,
He hail'd down oaths that he was only mine;
And when this hail some heat from Hermia felt,
So he dissolv'd, and showers of oaths did melt.
I will go tell him of fair Hermia's flight;
Then to the wood will he, to-morrow night,
Pursue her; and for this intelligence
If I have thanks, it is dear recompense:
But herein mean to enrich my pain,
To have his sight thither, and back again.

[Exit.]

SCENE II.—The Same. A Room in a Cottage.

Enter Quince, Snug, Bottom, Flute, Snout, and Starveling.

Quin. Is all our company here?
Bot. You were best to call them generally, man by man, according to the script.

Quin. Here is the scroll of every man's name, which is thought fit, through all Athens, to play in our interlude before the duke and duchess on his wedding-day at night.

Bot. First, good Peter Quince, say what the play presents on; then read the names of the actors, and so go on to appoint.¹

Quin. Marry, our play is—The most lamentable comedy, and most cruel death of Pyramus and Thisby.

Bot. A very good piece of work, I assure you, and a merry.—Now, good Peter Quince, call forth your actors by the scroll. Mas'ers, spread yourselves.

Quin. Answer, as I call you.—Nick Bottom, the weaver.

Bot. Ready. Name what part I am for, and proceed.

Quin. You, Nick Bottom, are set down for Pyramus.
Bot. What is Pyramus? a lover, or a tyrant?

Quin. A lover, that kills himself most gallant for love.

Bot. That will ask some tears in the true performing of it: if I do it, let the audience look to their eyes; I will move stones;² I will condole in some measure.

To the rest,—yet my chief humour is for a tyrant: I could play Ercules rarely, or a part to tear a cat in,
to make all split.

"The raging rocks,

"And shivering shocks,

"Shall break the locks

"Of prison-gates:

"And Phibbus' car

"Shall shine from far

"And make and mar

"The foolish fates."

This was lofty!—Now name the rest of the players.—
This is Ercules' vein,³ a tyrant's vein; a lover is more mollifying.

Quin. Francis Flute, the bellows-mender.

Fis. Here, Peter Quince.

Quin. You must take Thisby on you.

Fis. What is Thisby? a wandering knight?

Quin. It is the lady that Pyramus must love.

Fis. Nay, faith, let me not play a woman: I have a beard coming.

Quin. That's all one. You shall play it in a mask, and you may speak as small as you will.

Bot. An I may hide my face, let me play Thisby too. I'll speak in a monstrous little voice:—Thisby, Thisby,—Ah, Pyramus, my lover dear! thy Thisby
dear, and lady dear!"³

Quin. No, no; you must play Pyramus, and, Flute, you Thisby.

Bot. Well, proceed.

Quin. Robin Starveling, the tailor.

Snr. Here, Peter Quince.

Quin. Robin Starveling, you must play Thisby's mother.—Tom Snout, the tinker.

Snout. Here, Peter Quince.

Quin. You, Pyramus's father: myself, Thisby's father.—Snug, the joiner, you, the lion's part;—and,
I hope, here is a play fitted.

Snug. Have you the lion's part written? pray you, in it be, give it me, for I am slow of study.

¹Beauty. ²Polly, in place of, fault, fair: in f. e. ³A dear expense: in f. e. ⁴To go on to a point: in f. e. ⁵Storms: in f. e. ⁶In Greene's Great's worth of wit, a player says "The twelve labours of Hercules have I terribly thundered on the stage."
Quin. You may do it extempore, for it is nothing but roaring.

Bot. Let me play the lion too. I will roar, that I will do any man's heart good to hear me: I will roar, that I will make the duke say, “Let him roar again: let him roar again.”

Quin. An you should do it too terribly, you would fright the duchess and the ladies, that they would shriek: and that were enough to hang us all.

All. That would hang us, every mother's son.

Bot. I grant you, friends, if that you should fright the ladies out of their wits, they would have no more discretion but to hang us, but I will aggravate my voice so, that I will roar you as gently as any sucking dove: I will roar you as you were any nightingale.

Quin. You can play no part but Pyramus; for Pyramus is a sweet-faced man: a proper man, as one shall see in a summer's day, a most lovely, gentlemanlike man: therefore, you must needs play Pyramus.

Bot. Well, I will undertake it. What beard were I best to play it in?

Quin. Why, what you will.

Bot. I will discharge it in either your straw-coloured beard, your orange-tawny beard, your purple-in-grain beard, or your French-crown-coloured beard, your perfect yellow.

Quin. Some of your French crowns have no hair at all, and then you will play bare-faced. But masters, here are your parts; and I am to entreat you, request you, and desire you, to con them by to-morrow night, and meet me in the palace wood, a mile without the town, by moon-light: there will we rehearse: for if we meet in the city, we shall be dog'd with company, and our devices known. In the meantime I will draw a bill of properties, such as our play wants. I pray you, fail me not.

Bot. We will meet; and there we may rehearse more obsequiously, and courageously.

Quin. Take pains; be perfect; adieu. At the duke's oak we meet.

Bot. Enough, hold, or cut bow-strings.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—A Wood near Athens.

Enter a Fairy and Puck at opposite doors.

Puck. How now, spirit! whither wander you?

Fairy. Over hill, over dale,
Thorough bush, thorough brier,
Over park, over pale,
Thorough flood, thorough fire,
I do wander everywhere,
Swifter than the moon's sphere;
And I serve the fairy queen,
To dew her orbs upon the green:
The cowslips all her pensioners be;
In their gold cups sheo spots you see.
Those be rubies, fairy favours,
In those freckles live their savours:
I must go seek some dew-drops here,
Hang a pearl in every cowslip's ear.
Fair well, thou lob of spirits; I'll be gone.
Queen and all her elves come here anon.

Puck. The king doth keep his revels here to-night.
Tis heed, the queen come not within his sight;
For Oberon is passing full and wrath,

3 Brute that she, as her attendant, bath.

A lovely boy, sto'dn from an Indian king:
Hath never so sweet a changeling;
And jealous Oberon would have the child
Light of his train, to trace the woods wild;
'Tis she, perchance, withheld the loved boy,
Crown'd him with flowers, and makes him all her joy:
For now they never meet in grove, or green,
But contain clear, or spangled star-light sheen,
But they do square, that all their elves, for fear,
Creep into acorn cups, and hide them there.

Puck. Either I mistake your shape and making quite,
Or else you are that shrewd and knavish sprite, Cai'd Robin Good-fellow. Are you not he,
That frights the maidens of the village?
Shee milk, and sometimes labours in the quern, at Bootless makes the breathless housewife churl;'n
Doth sometimes make the drink to bear no harm?

Misaed night-wanderers, laughing at their harm?
Those that Hobgoblin call you, and sweet Puck,
You do their work, and they shall have good luck.
Are not you he?

Puck. Fairy, thou speakest aright;
I am that merry wanderer of the night.
I jest to Oberon, and make him smile,
When I a fat and bean-fed horse beguile,
Neighing in likeness of a silly foal:
And sometimes lurk I in a gazelle's bowl,
In very likeness of a roasted crab;
And, when she drinks, against her lips I bob,
And on her wither did lay for the ale.
The wisest sallent falling the saddest tale,
Sometime for three-foot stool mistaketh me;
Then slip I from her bun, down topples she,
And "tailor" cries, and falls into a cough;
And then the whole quire hold their hips, and laugh,
And waxen in their mirth, and neeze, and swear
A merrier hour was never wasted there.—
But room, Fairy: here comes Oberon.

Fairy. And here my mistress.—Would that he were gone!

Enter Oberon, from one side, with his train, and Titania, from the other, with hers.

Oberon. Ill met by moon-light, proud Titania.
Titania. What, jealous Oberon! Fairies, skip hence.

I have forsworn his bed and company.

Oberon. Tarry, rash wanton. Am not I thy lord?
Titania. Then, I must be thy lady; but I know
When thou hast sto'ln away from fairy land,
And in the shape of Corin sat all day,
Playing on pipes of corn, and varying love
To amorous Phillida. Why art thou here,
Come from the farthest steep of India,
But that, forsooth, the bumbling Amazon,
Your buskin'd mistress and your warrior love,
To Theseus must be wedged? and you come
To give their bed joy and prosperity?

Oberon. How came thou thus, for shame, Titania,
Glance at my credit with Hippolyta,
Knowing I know thy love to Theseus?
Didst thou not lead him through the glittering night
From Perigenia, whom he ravished?
And make him with fair Ægîb break his faith,
With Ariadne, and Antiope?
Tita. These are the forgeries of jealousy:
And never, since the middle summer's spring, ¹
Met we on hill, in dale, forest, or mead,
By paved fountain, ² or by rushy brook,
Or on the beached margin of the sea,
To dance our ringlets to the whistling wind,
But with thy brawls thou hast disturb'd our sport.
Therefore the winds, piping to us in vain,
As in revenge, have suck'd up from the sea
Contagious foâs: which falling in the land,
Have every peltling ³ river made so proud,
That they have overborne their continents:
The ox hath therefore stretch'd his yoke in vain,
The ploughman lost his sweat: and the green corn
Hath rotted, ere his youth attain'd a beard:
The fold stands empty in the drowned field,
And crows are fatten'd with the murrain flock:
The nine men's Morris is fill'd up with mud; ⁴
And the quaint mazes on the wanton green,
For lack of tread are undistinguishable.
The human mortals want their winter here:
No night is now with hymn or carol blest;
Therefore the moon, the governess of floods,
Pale in her anger, washes all the sea,
That rheumatic diseases do abound:
And thorough this distemperature, we see
The seasons alter: hoary-headed frosts
Fall in the fresh lap of the crimson rose;
And on old Hyem's chin, ⁵ and icy crown,
An odorous chaplet of sweet summer buds
Is, as in mockery, set. The spring, the summer,
The childhood autumn, angry winter, change
Their wonted livery; and the mazed world,
By their increase, now knows not which is which.
And this same progeny of evils comes
From our debate, from our dissension:
We are their parents and original.
Ober. Do you amend it then; it lies in you.
Why should Titania cross her Oberon?
I do but beg a little changeling boy,
To be my huntman.
Tita. Set your art at rest:
Thy fairy land buys not the child of me.
His mother was a votress of my order:
And, in the spiced Indian air, by night,
Full often hath she gossip'd by my side,
And sat with me on Neptune's yellow sands,
Marking th' embark'd traders on the flood:
When we have laugh'd to see the sails conceive,
And grow big-bellied, with the wanton wind;
Which she, with prettiness and with swimming gait
Follows them: then, when she meet my Hermia
Would imitate, and sail upon the land,
To fetch me trifles, and return again,
As from a voyage, rich with merchandize.
But she, being mortal, of that boy did die;
And for her sake I do rear up her boy,
And for her sake I will not part with him.
Ober. How long within this wood intend you stay?
Tita. Perchance, till after Theseus' wedding-day.
If you will patiently dance in our round,
And see our moonlight revels, go with us;
If not, shun me, and I will spare your haunts.
Ober. Give me that boy, and I will go with thee.
Tita. Not for thy fairy kingdom.—Fairies, away!
We shall chide downright, if I longer stay.
Exit Titania, with her train.
Ober. Well, go thy way: thou shalt not from this grove,
Till I torment thee for this injury.—
My gentle FucK, come hither; thou remember'st
Since once I sat upon a promontory,
And heard a mermaid on a dolphin's back
Uttering such dulcet and harmonious breath,
That the rude sea grew civil to her song,
And certain stars shot madly from their spheres,
To hear the sea-maid's music.
Puck. I remember.
Ober. That very time I saw (but thou couldst not)
Flying between the cold moon and the earth,
Cupid all arm'd: a certain aim he look
At a fair vestal ⁶ thronged by the west,
And loe'd his love-shaft smartly from his bow,
As it should pierce a hundred thousand hearts:
But I might see young Cupid's fiery shaft
Quench'd in the chaste beams of the watery moon,
And the imperial votaries pass'd on,
In maiden meditation, fancy-free.
Yet mark'd I where the bolt of Cupid fell:
It fell upon a little western flower,
Before milk-white, now purple with love's wound,
And maidens call it love-in-idleness.
Fetch me that flower; the herb I show'd thee once:
The juice of it on sleeping eyelids laid,
Will make or man or woman madly dote
Upon the next live creature that is seen.¹¹
Fetch me this herb; and be thou here again,
Ere the Leviathan can swim a league.
Puck. I'll ¹² put a girdle round about the earth
In forty minutes.
Exeunt Puck, Oberon.
Ober. Having once this juice,
I'll watch Titania when she is asleep,
And drop the liquor of it in her eyes:
The next thing then she waking looks upon,
(But it on lion, bear, or wolf, or bull,
On meddling monkey, or on busy ape.)
She shall pursue it with the soul of love;
And ere I take this charm off from her sight
(As I can take it with another herb),
She'll make her vendor up to procure to me.
But who comes here? I am invisible,
And I will over-hear their conference.
Retiring
Enter Demetrius, Helena following him.
Dem. I love thee not, therefore pursue me not.
Where is Lysander, and fair Hermia?
The one I'll slay, the other slayeth me.
Thou told'st me they were sto'n in this wood,
And here am I, and wood" within this wood,
(Which cause I think you know.)
Hence! get thee gone, and follow me no more.
Hel. You draw me, you hard-hearted adamannt;
But yet you draw not iron, for my heart
Is true as steel: leave you your power to draw,
And I shall have no power to follow you.
Dem. Do I entice you? Do I speak you fair?
Or, rather, do I not in plainest truth
Tell you I do not, nor I cannot love you?
Hel. And even for that do I love you the more.
I am your spirit; and, Demetrius,

SCENE II.—Another Part of the Wood.

Enter TITANIA, with her train.

Tit. Come, now a roundel, and a fairy song;
Then, for the third part of a minute, hence:
Some, to kill cankers in the musk-rose buds;
Some war with rear-mace for their leathern wings,
To make my small elves coasts; and some keep back
The clamorous owl, that nightly hoots, and wonders
At our quaint spirits. Sing me now asleep;
Then to your offices, and let me rest.

FAIRIES’ SONG.

1 Fai. You spotted snakes, with double tongue;
Thorny hedge-hogs, be not seen,
Nevets, and blind-worms, do no wrong;
Come not near our fairy queen;

CHORUS.

Philomel, with melody,
Sing now your sweet lullaby;
Lulla, lulla, lullaby; lulla, lulla, lullaby:
Never harm,
Nor will I charm,
Come on my lovely lady nigh;
So good night, with lullaby.

II.

2 Fai. Weaving spiders, come not here;
Hence, you long-legged spinners, hence;
Beetles black, approach not near;
Worm, nor snail, do no offence.

CHORUS.

Philomel, and melody, &c.

3 Fai. Hence, away! now all is well.
One, aloof, stand sentinel.

[Exeunt Fairies. TITANIA sleeps.

Enter OBERON.

Ob. What thou seest, when thou dost wake,
[Anointing TITANIA’s eye-lids.

Do it for thy true love sake;
Love, and languish for his sake:
Be it ounce, or cat, or bear,
Pard, or boar with bristled hair,
In thy eye that shall appear
When thou wak’st, it is thy dear.

Wake when some vile thing is near.

[Exit.

Enter LYSANDER and HERMIA.

Lys. Fair love, you faint with wandering in the wood;
And, to speak truth, I have forgot our way:
We’ll rest us, Hermia, if you think it good,
And tarry for the comfort of the day.
Her. Be it so, Lysander: find you out a bed,
For I upon this bank will rest my head.
Lys. One turf shall serve as pillow for us both:
One heart, one bed, two bosoms, and one thought.
Her. Nay, good Lysander; for my sake, my dear,
Lie further off yet: do not lie so near.
Lys. O, take the sense, sweet, of my innocence;
Love takes the meaning in love’s confidence. I mean, that my heart unto yours is knit, so that but one heart we can make of it:
Two bosoms interchanged with an oath;
So then, two bosoms, and a single thought,
Then, by your side no bed-room me deny,
For, lying so, Hermia, I do not lie.
Her. Lysander riddles very prettily.
Now much beshrew my manners and my pride, if Hermia meant to say Lysander lie’d.
But, gentle friend, for love and courtesy,
Lie further off; in human modesty
Such reparation as may well be said.
Becomes a virtuous bachelor and a maid,
So far be distant; and good night, sweet friend.
Thy lover ever till thy sweet life end!

Lys. Amen, amen, to that fair prayer, say I;
And then end life, when I end loyalty!
Here is my bed: sleep give thee all his rest!

Her. With half that wish the wisher's eyes be press'd!

Enter Puck.

Puck. Through the forest have I gone,
But Athenian found I none,
Or those eyes I might approve
This flower's force in stirring love.
Night and silence! who is here?
Weeds of Athens he doth wear:
This he is, my master said,
Despised the Athenian maid;
And here the maiden, sleeping sound
On the dank and dirty ground.
Pretty soul! she durs' not lie
Near this lack-love, kill-courteous.
Charl, upon the eyes I throw
All the power this charm doth owe.

Anointing his eyes.
When thou wak'lest, let love forbid
Sleep his seat on thy eyelid.
So awake when I am gone,
For I must now to Oberon.

Exit. Enter Demetrius and Helena, running.

Hel. Stay, though thou kill me, sweet Demetrius.
Dem. I crave thee, hence; and do not haunt me thus.
Hel. O! will thou darkling leave me? do not so.
Dem. Stay, on thy peril: I alone will go.

Exit Demetrius.

Hel. O! I am out of breath in this fond chase.
The more my prayer, the lesser is my grace.
Happy is Hermia, wheresoe'er she lies,
For she hath blessed and attractive eyes.
How came her eyes so bright? Not with salt tears:
If so, my eyes are oftener wash'd than hers.
No, no, I am as ugly as a bear,
For beasts that meet me, run away for fear;
Therefore, no marvel, though Demetrius
Do, as a monster, fly my presence thus.
What wicked and dissenting glass of mine
Made me compare with Hermia's spher'd eye?—
But who is here?—Lysander on the ground?
Dead, or asleep?—I see no blood, no wound.
Lysander, if you live, good air, awake.

Lys. And run through fire I will, for thy sweet sake.

Transparent Helena! Nature here shows art,
That through thy bosom makes me see thy heart.

Where is Demetrius? O, how fit a word
Is that vile name to perish on my sword!

Hel. Do not say so, Lysander; say not so.
What though he love your Hermia? Lord! what though!
Yet Hermia still loves you: then, be content.

Lys. Content with Hermia? No: I do repent
The tedious minutes I with her have spent.
Not Hermia, but Helena I love.
Who will not change a raven for a dove?
The will of man is by his reason aw'd,
And reason says you are the worthier maid.
Things growing are not ripe until their season;
So I, being young, till now ripe not to reason;
And touching now the point of human skill,
Reason becomes the marshal to my will,
And leads me to your eyes; where I o'erlook
Love's stories, written in love's richest book.

Hel. Wherefore was I to this keen mockery born?
When, at your hands, did I deserve this scorn?
Is't not enough, is 't not enough, young man,
That I did never, no, nor never can,
Deserve a sweet look from Demetrius' eye,
But you must flout my insufficiency?
Good truth, you do me wrong; good sooth, you do,
In such disdainful manner me to woo.
But fare you well: perforce I must confess,
I thought you lord of more true gentleness,
O, that a lady, of one man refus'd,
Should, of another, therefore, be abus'd!

Lys. She sees not Hermia.—Hermia, sleep thou there;
And never may'st thou come Lysander near;
For, as a surfeit of the sweetest things
The deepest loathing to the stomach brings;
Or, as the heresies, that men do leave,
Are hated most of those they did deceive;
So thou, my surfeit, and my heresy,
Of all be hated, but the most of me;
And all my powers address their love and might,
To honour Helen, and to her knight.

Hel. Help me, Lysander, help me! do thy best,

Waking. To pluck this crawling serpent from my breast.
Ah, me, for pity!—what a dream was here!
Lysander, look, how I do quake with fear.
Methought a serpent ate my heart away,
And you sat smiling at his cruel prey.
Lysander! what, remov'd? Lysander! lord!
What, out of hearing? gone? no sound, no word?
Alack! where are you? speak, an you hear you;
Speak, of all loves! I swoon almost with fear.
No?—then I will perceive you are not nigh:
Either death, or you, I'll find immediately.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—The Same. Titania lying asleep.

Enter Quince, Snug, Bottom, Flute, Snout, and Starveling.

Bot. Are we all met?
Quin. Pat, pat; and here 's a marvellous convenient place for our rehearsals. This green plot shall be our stage this hawthorn brake our 'tiring-house; and we will do it in action, as we will do it before the duke.
MIDSUMMER-NIGHTS DREAM.

Write me a prologue; and let the prologue seem to say, we will do no harm with our swords, and that Pyramus is not killed indeed: and, for the more better assurance, tell them, that I, Pyramus, am not Pyramus, but Bottom the weaver. This will put them out of fear.

Quin. Well, we will have such a prologue, and it shall be written in eight and six.

Bot. No, make it two more: let it be written in eight and eight.

Snozf. Will not the ladies be afraid of the lion?

Star. I fear it, I promise you.

Bot. Masters, you ought to consider with yourselves: a strange, God shield us! a lion among ladies, is a most fearful thing; for there is not a more fearful wild-fer than your lion living, and we ought to look to it.

Snozf. Therefore, another prologue must tell he is not a lion.

Bot. Nay, you must name his name, and half his face must be seen through the lion's neck; and he himself must speak through, saying thus, or to the same effect:—"Ladies, or fair ladies, I would wish you, or, I would request you, or, I would entreat you, or, it is but to trouble: my life for yours. If you think I come hither as a lion, it were pity of my life: so, I am no such thing: I am a man as other men are: and there, indeed, let him name his name, and tell them plainly he is Snug, the joiner.

Quin. Well, it shall be so. But there is two hard days: that is, to bring the moonlight into a chamber; as you know, Pyramus and Thisby meet by moonlight.

Snozf. Both the moon shine that night we play our play.

Bot. A calendar, a calendar! look in the almanack; first out moonshine, find out moonshine.

Quin. Yes, it doth shine that night.

Bot. Why, then you may leave a casement of the great chamber window, where we play, open; and the moon may shine in at the casement.

Quin. Ay; or else one must come in with a bush of trees and a lantern, and say, he comes to disfigure, as is present, the person of moonshine. Then, there is another thing: we must have a wall in the great chamber; for Pyramus and Thisby (says the story) did talk through the chink of a wall.

Snozf. You can never bring in a wall.—What say you, Bottom?

Bot. Some man or other must present wall; and let him have some plaster, or some lime, or some rough-ast about him, to signify wall: and let him hold his ears thus, and through that cranny shall Pyramus and Thisby whisper.

Quin. If that may be, then all is well. Come, sit down, every mother's son, and rehearse your parts.

Pyr. "Thisby, the flowers have odious savours sweet,"—

Quin. Odours, odours.

Pyr. —"odours savours sweet:"—

Bot. What hempen home-spuns have we swaggering here?

Quin. In the cradle of the fairy queen.

Bot. Who makes the toward? I'll be an auditor; an actor too, perhaps, if I see cause.

Quin. Speak, Pyramus.—Thisby, stand forth.

Pyr. "Thisby, the flowers have odious savours sweet,"—

Quin. Odours, odours.

Pyr. —"odours savours sweet:"—

So hath thy breath, my dearest Thisby, dear.—

But, hark, a voice! stay thou but here a while,

And by and by I will to thee appear." [Exit.

FucK. A stranger Pyramus than e'er play'd here.

[Exit.

This. Must I speak now?

Quin. Ay, marry, must you; for you must understand, he goes but to see a noise that he heard, and to come again.

This. "Most radiant Pyramus, most lily-white of hue,

Of colour like the red rose on triumphant brier,

Most briskly juvenal, and eke most lovely Jew,

As true as truest horses, that yet would never tire,

I'll meet thee, Pyramus, at Ninny's tomb." [Exit.

Quin. Ninus's tomb, man. Why you must not speak that yet; that you answer to Pyramus. You speak all your part at once, cues and all.—Pyramus, enter: your cue is past; it is, "never tire."

Re-enter FucK, and Bottom with an ass's head on.

This. O!—"As true as truest horse, that yet would never tire."

Pyr. "If I were, fair Thisby, I were only thine."—

Quin. O monstrous! O strange! we are haunted.

Pray, masters! Fly, masters! help!" [Exit.

Exeunt Cloves, in confusion.

FucK. I'll follow you, I'll lead you about a round,

Through bog, through bushes, through brake, through brake,

Sometimes a horse I'll be, sometimes a hound,

A hog, a headless bear, sometimes a fire;

And neigh, and bark, and grunt, and roar, and burn,

Like horse, hound, hog, bear; fire, at every turn. [Exit.

Bot. Why do they run away? this is a knavery of them, to make us afeard.

Re-enter Snozf.

Snozf. O Bottom! thou art changed: what do I see on thee? . . . [Exit, frightened. 1

Bot. What do you see? you see an ass's head, of your own, do you?

Re-enter QuinC.

Quin. Bless thee, Bottom! bless thee! thou art translated.

[Exit, frightened. 2

Bot. I see their knavery. This is to make an ass of me, to fright me, if they could; but I will not stir from this place, do what they can. I will walk up and down here, and I will sing, that they shall hear I am not afraid.

[Exit, singing.

The oose-cock, so black of hue,
With orange-tawny bill,
The throatle with his note so true,
The wren with little quill.

Tita. What angel wakes me from my flowery bed?

[Exit. 3

Bot. The finch, the sparrow, and the lark,

The plain-song cuckoo gray,
Who's note full many a man doth mark,
And dares not answer, nay;

for, indeed, who would set his wit to so foolish a bird?

Who would give a bird the lie, though he cry "cuckoo" never so?

Tita. I pray thee, gentle mortal, sing again:

Mine ear is much enamoured of thy note,

So is mine eye enthralled to thy shape;

And thy fair virtue's force, perforce, doth move me,

On the first view, to say, to swear, I love thee.

Bot. Methinks, mistress, you should have little reason for that: and yet, to say the truth, reason and love keep little company together now-a-days. The more the pity, that some honest neighbours will not make them friends. Nay, I can gleeck' upon occasion.

Tit. Thou art as wise as thou art beautiful.

Bot. Not so, neither; but if I had wit enough to get out of this wood, I have enough to serve mine own turn.

Tit. Out of this wood do not desire to go:
Thou shalt remain here, whether thou wilt or no.
I am a spirit of no common rate;
The summer still doth tend upon my state,
And I do love thee: therefore, go with me;
I'll give thee fairies to attend on thee;
And they shall fetch thee jewels from the deep,
And sing while thou on pressed flowers dost sleep:
And I will purge thy mortal grossness so,
That thou shalt like an airy spirit go.

Peas-blossom! Cobweb! Moth! and Mustard-seed.

Enter four Fairies.

1 Fa. Ready. And I.
2 Fa. And I.
3 Fa. And I.
4 Fa. Where shall we go?

Tit. Be kind and courteous to this gentleman:
Hath he warm walks, and gambol in his eyes;
Feed him with apricocks, and dewberries,
With purple grapes, green figs, and mulberries.
Their honey bags steal from the humble-bees,
And for night tapers crop their waxen thighs,
And light them at the fiery glow-worm's eyes,
To have my love to bed, and to arise;
And pluck the wings from painted butterflies,
To fan the moon-beams from his sleeping eyes.
Nod to him, elves, and do him courtesies.

1 Fa. Hal! mortal.
2 Fa. Hal!
3 Fa. Hal!
4 Fa. Hal!

Bot. I cry your worship's mercy, heartily.—I beseech you, your worship's name.

Cob. Cobweb.

Bot. I shall desire of you more acquaintance, good master Cobweb. If I cut my finger, I shall make bold with you.—Your name, honest gentleman?

Peas. Peas-blossom.

Bot. I pray you, commend me to mistress Squash, your mother, and to master Peasodd, your father. Good master Peas-blossom, I shall desire of you more acquaintance too.—Your name, I beseech you, sir?

Mus. Mustard-seed.

Bot. Good master Mustard-seed, I know your patience well: that same cowardly, giant-like ox-beef hath devoured many a gentleman of your house. I promise you, your kindred hath made my eyes water ere now. I desire of you more acquaintance, good master Mustard-seed.

Tit. Come, wait upon him: lead him to my bower.
The moon, methinks, looks with a watery eye,
And when she weeps, weeps every little flower,
Lamenting some enforced chastity.

Tie up my lover's tongue, and bring him silently.

[Exeunt.

Scene II.—Another Part of the Wood.

Enter Oberon.

Obe. I wonder, if Titania be awake? Then, what it was that next came in her eye, Which she must dote on in extremity.

Enter Puck.

Here comes my messenger.—How now, mad spirit? What night-rule now about this haunted grove?

Puck. My mistress with a monster is in love.

Near to her close and consecrated bower,
While she was in her dull and sleeping hour,
A crew ofwitches, rude mechanicals,
That work for bread upon Athenian stalls,
Were met together to rehearse a play,
Intended for great Theseus' nuptial day.
The shallowest thick-skin of that barren sort,
Who Pyramus presented in their sport,
Forsook his scene, and enter'd in a brake,
When I did him at this advantage take;
An ass's now! I fixed on his head:
Anon, his Thibes must be ambulance,
And forth my mimic comes. When they him spy,
As wild geese that the creeping fowl'd eye,
Or russet-pated choughs, many in sort,
Rising and cawing at the gun's report,
Sever themselves, and madly sweep the sky;
So, at his sight, away his fellows fly,
And, at our stamp, here o'er and o'er one falls:
He murder cries, and help from Athens calls.
Their sense thus weak, last with their fears thus strong,
Made senseless things begin to do them wrong,
For briars and thorns at their apparel snatch,
Some, sleeves, some, hats, from yielders all things catch.
I led them on in this distracted fear,
And left sweet Pyramus translated there;
When in that moment (so it came to pass,) Titania wak'd, and straightway lov'd an ass.

Obe. This falls out better than I could devise.
But hast thou yet catch'd the Athenian's eye?
With the love-juice, as I did thee do?
1 Puck. I took him sleeping, (that is finish'd too)
And the Athenian woman by his side,
That, when he wak'd, of force she must be ey'd.

Enter Demetrius and Hermia.

Obe. Stand close: this is the same Athenian.

Puck. This is the woman; but not this the man.

[They stand apart."

Dem. O! why rebuke you him that loves you so?
Lay breath so bitter on your bitter foe.
Her. Now, I but chide; but I should use thee worse,
For thou, I fear, hast given me cause to curse.
If thou hast slain Lyander in his sleep,
Being o'er shoes in blood, plunge in the deep,
And kill me too.
The sun was not so true unto the day,
Ah he to me. Would he have stol'n away
From sleeping Hermia? I'll believe as soon,
This whole earth may be bor'd, and that the moon
May through the centre creep, and so displace
Her brother's moon-tide with th' Antipodes.

It cannot be but thou hast murder'd him;
So should a murderer look, so dead, so grim.

Dem. So should the murderer look, and so should I,
Pier'd through the heart with your stern cruelty;
Yet you, the murderer, look as bright, as clear,
As yonder Venus in her glimmering sphere.
Her. What's this to my Lyander? where is he?
Ah, good Demetrius, wilt thou give him me?

Dem. I had rather give his carcass to my hounds,
Her. Out, dog! out, our! thou driv'st me past the bounds
Of maiden's patience. Hast thou slain him then?
Henceforth be never number'd among men!
O! once tell true, tell true, e'en for my sake;
Durst thou have look'd upon him, being awake,
And hast thou kill'd him sleeping? O brave touch!
Could not a worm, an adder, do so much?

As slander did it; for with doubler tongue
Thou wilt, thou serpent, never adder stung.

Dem. You spend your passion in a mispris’d flood:—
I am not guilty of Lysander’s blood.

Nor be he dead, for aught that I can tell.

Her. I pray thee, tell me, then, that he is well.

Dem. And, if I could, what should I get therefore?

Her. A privilege, never to see me more.—

And from thy hated presence part I so;

See me no more, whether he be dead or no. [Exit.

Dem. There is no following her in this fierce vein:
Here, therefore, for a while I will remain.

So sorrow’s heaviness doth heavier grow
For debt that bankrupt sleep doth sorrow owe;

Which now in some slight measure it will pay,
If for his tender here I make some stay. [Lies down.

Ocb. What hast thou done? thou hast mistaken quite,

[Coming forward.

And laid the love-juice on some true-love’s sight:
Of thy misprision must perforce ensue.
Some true-love turned, and not a false turned true.

Puck. Then fate o’er-rules; that one that holds

A million fail, confounding oath on oath.

Ocb. About the wood go swifter than the wind,
And Helen of Athens look thou find:

All fancy-sick she is, and pale of cheer.

With sights of love, that cost the fresh blood dear.

Be some illusion see you bring her here:

I’ll charm his eyes against she do appear.

Puck. I go, I go; look how I go;

Sheer than arrow from the Tartar’s bow. [Exit.

Obs. Flower of this purple die,
Hie with Cupid’s archery,
Sink in apple of his eye. [Anointing his eyes.

When his love he doth espy,
Let her shine as gloriously
As the Venus of the sky,—

When thou wak’st, if she be by,
Beg of her for remedy.

Re-enter Puck.

Puck. Captain of our fairy band,
Helen is here at hand.

And the youth, mistook by me,
Pleasing for a lover’s fee.

Shall we their fond pageant see?

Lord, what fools these mortals be!

Obs. Stand aside: the noise they make
Will cause Demetrius to awake.

Puck. Then will two at once woo one;

That must needs be sport alone;

And those things do best please me,

That befal preposterously. [They stand apart.

Enter Lysander and Helen.

Lys. Why should you think that I should woo in scorn?

Sonnet and derision never come in tears:

Look, when I woe I weep, and vows so born,

In their nativity all truth appears.

How can these things in me seem scorn to you,

Bearing the badge of faith to prove them true?

Hel. You do advance your cunning more and more.

With thoughts of Helen I dream in sleepless fray!

These vows are Hermia’s: will you give her o’er?

Weigh oath with oath, and you will nothing weigh:

Your vows, to her and me, put in two scales,

Will even weigh, and both as light as tales.

Lys. I had no judgment, when to her I swore.

Hel. Nor none, in my mind, now you give her o’er.

Lys. Demetrius loves her, and he loves not you.

Dem. O Helen, goddess, nymph, perfect, divine!

To what, my love, shall I compare thee?—

Crystal is muddy. O! how ripe in show

Thy lips, those kissing cherries, tempting grow!

That pure congealed white, high Taurus snow,

Fann’d with the eastern wind, turns to a crow,

When thou hol’dst up thy hand. O, let me kiss

This impress of pure white, this seal of bliss!

Hel. O spite! O hell! I see you all are bent

To set against me, for your erritament:

If you were civil, and knew courtesy,

You would not do me such much injury.

Can you not hate me, as I know you do,

But you must join in souls to mock me too?

If you were men, as men you are in show,

You would not use a gentle lady so:

To vow, and swear, and superpraise my parts,

When, I am sure, you hate me with your hearts.

You both are rivals, and love Hermia,

And now both rivals, to mock Helen.

A trim exploit, a manly enterprise,

To conjure tears up in a poor maid’s eyes

With your derision! none of noble sort

Would so offend a virgin, and extort

A poor soul’s patience, all to make you sport.

Lys. You are unkind, Demetrius; be not so,

For you love Hermia; this, you know, I know:

And here, with all good will, with all my heart,

In Hermia’s love I yield you up my part;

And yours in Helen to me bequeath.

Whom I do love, and will do till my death.

Hel. Never did mockers waste more idle breath

Dem. Lysander, keep thy Hermia: I will none:

If o’er I lov’d her, all that love is gone.

My heart to her but as guest-wise sojourn’d,

And now to Helen it is home return’d,

There to remain.

Lys. Helen, it is not so.

Dem. Disparage not the faith thou dost not know,

Lest to thy peril thou aby it dear.—

Look, where thy love comes: yonder is thy dear.

Enter Hermia.

Hel. Dark night, that from the eye his function takes,
The ear more quick of apprehension makes;

Wherein it doth impair the seeing sense,

It pays the hearing double recompense.

Thou art not by mine eye, Lysander, found,

Mine ear, I thank it, brought me to thy sound.

But why unkindly didst thou leave me so?

Lys. Why should he stay, whom love doth press to go?

Hel. What love could press Lysander from my side?

Lys. Lysander’s love, that would not let him bide,

Fair Helen, who more engilds the night

Than all you fiery oes and eyes of light.

Why seek’st thou me? could not this make thee know,
The hate I bare thee made me leave thee so?

Hel. You speak not as you think: it cannot be.

Hel. Lo! she is one of this confederacy.

Now I perceive they have conjoin’d, all three,

To fashion this false sport in spite of me.

Injurious Hermes! most ungrateful maid!

Have you conspier’d, have you with these contraived to bait me with this foul derision?

Is all the counsel that we two have shair’d,

The sisters’ vows, the hours that we have spent,

When we have chid the hasty-footed time

For parting us,—O! is all forgot?

All school days’ friendship, childhood’s innocence?
We, Hermia, like two artificial gods,
Have with our needles created both one flower,
Both one samplers, sitting on one cushion,
Both warbling of one song, both in one key.
As if our hands, our sides, voices, and minds,
Had been incorporate. So we grew together,
Like to a double cherry, seeming parted,
But yet an union in partition;
Two loving berries moulded on one stem,
So, with two seeming bodies, but one heart;
Two of the first, like coats in heraldry,
Due but to one, and crowned with one crest.
And will you rend our ancient love asunder?
To join with men in scorn ing your poor friend?
It is not friendly, 'tis not maidenly:
Our sex, as well as I, may chide you for it,
Though I alone do feel the injury.

Her. I am amazed at your passionate words.
I scorn you not: 't seems that you scorn me.

Hel. Have you not set Lysander, as in scorn,
To follow me, and praise my eyes and face,
And make your other love, Demetrius, (Who even but now did spurn me with his foot,
To call me goddess, nymph, divine, and rare,
Precious, celestial? Wherefore speaks he this
To her he hates? and wherefore doth Lysander
Deny your love, so rich within his soul,
And tender me, forsooth, affection,
But by your setting on, by your consent?
What thought I be not so in grace as you,
So hung upon with love, so fortunate,
But miserable most to love unkind.
This you should pity, rather than despise.

Her. I understand not what you mean by this.

Hel. Ay, do, persevere, counterfeit sad looks,
Make mouths upon me when I turn my back;
Wink at each other; hold the sweet jest up:
This sport, well carried, shall be chronicled.
If you had any pity, grace, or manners,
You would not make me such an argument.
But fare ye well: 'tis partly mine own fault,
Which death, or absence, soon shall remedy.

Lys. Stay, gentle Helena: hear my excuse:
My love, my life, my soul, fair Helena!
Hel. O excellent!

Her. Sweet, do not scorn her so.

Dem. If she cannot entreat, I can compel.
Lys. Thou canst compel no more than she entreat:
Thy threats have no more strength than her weak prayers.—

Helen, I love thee; by my life, I do:
I swear by that which I will lose for thee,
To prove him false, that says I love thee not.

Dem. I say, I love thee more than he can do.

Lys. If thou say so, withdrawing, and prove it too.

Dem. Quick, come,—

Her. Lysander, whereto tends all this? [Holding him.*

Lys. Away, you Ethiop!

Dem. No, no, he 'll—

Seem to break loose; take one up, by you would follow;
But yet come not. You are a tame man, go!

Lys. Hang off, thou cat, thou burr! vile thing, let loose.
Or I will shake thee from me like a serpent.

Her. Why are you grown so rude? what change is this,
Sweet love?

Lys. Thy love? out, tawny Tartar, out! Out, loathed medicine! hated potion, hence!

Hel. Do you not jest?

MIDSUMMER-NIGHT’S DREAM.

Get you gone, you dwarf;
Ye minuims, of hindering knot-grass’ made:
Ye bed, ye acorn.

You are too officious
In her behalf that acorns your services.
Let her alone; speak not of Helena;
Take not her part, for if thou dost intend
Never so little show of love to her,
Thou shalt aby’ it.

Now she holds me not;
New follow, if thou dares’t, to try whose right,
Or thine or mine, is most in Helen’s heart.

Follow? nay, I’ll go with thee, cheek by jowl.

You, mistresses, all this coil is ‘long of you.

I will not trust you, I,
Nor longer stay in your court company.
Your hands, than mine, are quicker for a fray;
My legs are longer though, to run away.

If I am amaz’d, and know not what to say,

This is thy negligence: still thou mistak’st,

Or else commit’st thy knavery with fulness.

Believe me, king of shadows, I mistook.

Did you not tell me I should know the man
By the Athenian garments he had on?
And so far blameless proves my enterprise,
That I have ‘nointed an Athenian’s eyes;
And so far am I glad it so did sort,
As this their jangling I esteem a sport.

Thou seest these lovers seek a place to fight:
Therefore Robin, overcast the night;
The starry welkin cover thou anon
With drooping fog, as black as Acheron;
And lead these tresty rivals so astray,
As one come not within another’s way.
Like to Lysander sometime frame thy tongue,
Then stir Demetrius up with bitter wrong;
And sometime rail thou like Demetrius;
And from each other look thou lead them thus,
Till o’er their brows death-counterfeiting sleep,
With leaden legs and batly wings, doth creep.
Then crush this herb into Lysander’s eye;
Whose liquor hath this virtuous property.
To take from thence all error with his might,
And make his eye-balls roll with wonted sight.
When they next wake, all this derision
Shall seem a dream, and fruitless vision;
And back to Athens shall the lovers wend,
With league, whose date till death shall never end.
While I in this affair do thee employ,
I’ll to my queen, and beg her Indian boy;
And then will her charmed eye release
From monster’s view, and all things shall be peace.

Fairy lord, this must be done with haste,
For night’s swift dragons cut the clouds full fast,
And yonder shines Aurora’s harbinger.
At whose approach, ghosts, wandering here and there,
Troop home to church-yards: damned spirits all,
That cross ways and floods have hurled,
Already to their wormy beds are gone;
For fear last day should look their shames upon,
They willfully themselves exile from light,
And must for aye consort with black-brow’d night.

But we are spirits of another sort.
I with the morning’s love have oft made sport;
And, like a forester, the groves may tread,
Even till the eastern gate, all fiery-red,
Opening our Neptune with fair blessed beams,
Turns into yellow gold his salt green streams.
But, notwithstanding, haste; make no delay;
We may effect this business yet ere day.

Puck. Up and down, up and down;
I will lead them up and down:
I am fear’d in field and town;
Goblin, lead them up and down.

Here comes one.

Enter Lysander.

Where art thou, proud Demetrius? speak thou now.

Thou here, villain! drawn and ready.

Enter Lysander.

Ly. Thou saidst, I am afraid to speak.

Speak! in some bush? Where does thou hide thy head?

Puck. Thou coward! art thou bragging to the stars,
Telling the boughs that thou look’st for wars,
And wilt not come? Come, recount; come, thou child;
I’ll whip thee with a rod: he is defil’d,
That draws a sword on thee.

Ly. art thou there?

Puck. Follow my voice: we’ll try no manhood here.

Enter Demetrius.

Thou saidst, I am afraid to speak.

Thou shalt be safe here.

Enter Lysander.

Ly. He goes before me, and still dares me on:
When I come where he calls, then he is gone.
The villain is much lighter heel’d than I:
I follow’d fast, but faster he did fly;
That fallen am I in dark uneven way,
And here will rest me. Come, thou gentle day!

Puck. For if but once thou show me thy grey light,
I’ll find Demetrius, and revenge this spite.

Enter Lysander.

Ly. Ho! ho! ho! Coward, why com’st thou not?

Dem. Abide me, if thou dares’t; for well I wot,
Thou run’st before me, shifting every place,
And dares’t not stand, nor look me in the face.

Where art thou now?

Dem. Nay, then thou mock’st me: Thou shalt by this dear,
If ever I spy thee by day-light see;
Now go thy way. Faintness constraineth me
To measure out my length on this cold bed.
By day’s approach look to be visited.

Enter Helena.

Hel. O weary night! O, long and tedious night!
Abate thy hours: shine, comforts, from the east.
That I may back to Athens, by day-light,
From these that my poor company detest.
And sleep, that sometimes shut up sorrow’s eye,
Steal me a while from mine own company.

Puck. Yet but three? Come one more;
Two of both kinds make up four.
Here she comes, curst and sad.
Cupid is a knavish lad,
Thus to make poor females mad.

Enter Hermia.

Her. Never so weary, never so in woe,
Bedabbled with the dew, and torn with briers.

1 Formerly supposed to have the property of hindering the growth. * Abide, answer for. * Not in f.e. * So the quarto: the folio: well way.
I can no farther crawl, no farther go;
My legs can keep no pace with my desires.
Here will I rest me till the break of day.
Heavens shield Lysander, if they mean a fray!

Puck. On the ground sleep sound.
I'll apply to your eye,
Gentle lover, remedy.

[Anointing Lysander's eyes.]
When thou wak'st, see thou tak'st

True delight in the sight
Of thy former lady's eye:
And the country proverb known,
That every man should take his own,
In your waking shall be shown:
Jack shall have Jill;
Nought shall go ill;
The man shall have his mare again,
And all shall be well.

[Exit Puck.—Dem. Hel. _t. sleep.]

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—The Same.

Enter Titania and Bottom: Fairies attending: Oberon behind unseen.

Tit. Come, sit thee down upon this flowery bed,
While I thy amiable checks do coy.*
And stick musk-roses in thy sleek smooth head,
And kiss thy fair large ears, my gentle joy.
Bot. Where's Peas-blossom?
Peas. Ready.
Bot. Scratch my head, Peas-blossom.—Where's my music Cobweb?
Cob. Ready.
Bot. Monsieur Cobweb; good monsieur, get your weapons in your hand, and kill me a red-hipped humble-bee on the top of a thistle; and good monsieur, bring me the honey-bag. Do not fret yourself too much in the action, monsieur; and, good monsieur, have a care the honey-bag break not: I would be loath to have you overthrown with a honey-bag, signior.—
Where's monsieur Mustard-seed?

Must. Ready.
Bot. Give me your neif,* monsieur Mustard-seed.
Pray you, leave your courtesy, good monsieur.

Must. What's your will?
Bot. Nothing, good monsieur, but to help cavalry Cobweb* to scratch. I must to the barber's, monsieur; for, methinks, I am marvellous hairy about the face, and I am such a tender ass, if my hair do but tickle me, I must scratch.

Tit. What, wilt thou hear some music, my sweet love?
Bot. I have a reasonable ear in music: let's have the tangos and the bones.

Tit. Or, say, sweet love, what thou desirest to eat.

Bot. Truly, a peck of provender: I could munch your good dry oats. Methinks I have a great desire to a bottle of hay: good hay, sweet hay, hath no fellow.

Tit. I have a venturesome fairy that shall seek
The squirrel's hoard, and fetch thee new nuts.
Bot. I had rather have a handful or two of dried peas. But, I pray you, let none of your people stir me: I have an exposition of sleep come upon me.

Tit. Sleep thou, and I will wind thee in my arms.
Fairies, be gone, and be a while* away.
So do the woodbine, the sweet honeysuckle,
Gently entwist: the female ivy so
Enrings the barky fingers of the elm.
Oh, how I love thee! how I dote on thee! [They sleep.]

Enter Puck.

Obe. [Advancing.] Welcome, good Robin. Seest thou this sweet sight?
Her dotage now I do begin to pity;
For meeting of her late behind the wood,
Seeking sweet savours for this hateful fool,
I did upbraid her, and fall out with her;
For she his hairy temples then had rounded
With coronet of fresh and fragrant flowers;
And that same dew, which sometime on the buds
Was wont to swell like round and orient pearls,
Stood now within the pretty flow'rs' eyes,
Like tears that did their own disgrace bewail.
When I had at my pleasure taunted her,
And she in mild terms begg'd my patience,
I then did ask of her her changeling child,
Which straight she gave me; and her fairy sent
To bear him to mybower in fairy land.
And now I have the boy, I will undo
This hateful imperfection of her eyes:
And, gentle Puck, take this transformed scalp
From off the head of this Athenian swain,
That he, awaking when the other do,
May all to Athens back again repair,
And think no more of this night's accidents,
But as the fierce vexation of a dream.
But first I will release the fairy queen.

Bot. Boa, as thou wast wont to be; [Anointing her eyes.

Now, my Titania! wake you, my sweet queen.

Tit. My Oberon! what visions have I seen!

Bot. Methought, I was enamour'd of an ass.

Ob. There lies your love.

Tit. How came these things to pass?

Ob. How mine eyes doth loath his visage now!

Ob. Silence, a while.—Robbin, take off this head.—

Tit. Titanias music call; and strike more dead
Than common sleep of all these five the sense.

Tit. Music, ho! music! such as charmeth sleep.

Puck. Now, when thou wakest, with thine own fool's eyes peep.

Ob. Silence, music! Come, my queen, take hands
And rock the ground whereon these sleepers be.

Now thou and I are new in amity,
And will to-morrow midnight solemnly
Dance in Duke Theseus' house triumphantly,
And bless it to all fair posterity.
There shall the pairs of faithful lovers be Wedded, with Theseus, all in jollity.

Puck. Fairy king attend, and mark:
I do hear the morning lark:

Ob. That my queen in silence sad
Trip we after the night's shade;
We the globe can compass soon,
Swifter than the wandering moon.

Tit. Come, my lord; and in our flight,

1 Lies down: in l. a.
2 Squeezing the juice on.
3 Caress.
4 Pleat.
5 A probable misprint for Peas-blossom.
6 All ways: in l. a.
Tell me how it came this night,
That I sleeping here was found
With these mortals on the ground.  [Exeunt.]

[Horns sound within.]

Enter Thesaurus, Hippolitta, Theseus, and Train.

Thes. Go, one of you, find out the forest;
For now our observation is perform'd;
And since we have the vaward of the day,
My love shall hear the music of his hounds.—
Uncover in the western valley: let them go!—
Des. Dispatch, I say, and find the forest.

We will, fair queen, up to the mountain's top,
And mark the musical confusion
Of hounds and echo in conjunction.

Hipp. I was with Hercules, and Cadmus, once,
When in a wood of Crete they bade the bear
With hounds of Sparta: never did I hear
Such gallant chiding; for, besides the groves,
The skies, the fountains, every region near Seem'd all one mutual cry. I never heard
So musical a discord, such sweet thunder.

The. My hounds are bred out of the Spartan kind,
So swift, so sanguine; and their heads are hung
With ears that sweep away the morning dew;
Crook-kneed, and dew-lap'd like Thessalian bulls;
Slow in pursuit, but match'd in mouth like bells,
Each under each. A cry more tunable
Was never bellow'd to, nor cheer'd with horn,
In Crete, in Sparta, nor in Theesely:
Judge, when you hear.—But, soft! what nymphs are these?

Ege. My lord, this is my daughter here asleep;
And my son Lyssander; this Demetrius is;
This Helena, old Nedar's Helena:
I wonder of their being here together.

Thes. The, no doubt, they rose up early, to observe
The rite of May; and, hearing our intent,
Came here in grace of our solemnity.—
But speak, Egeus; is not this the day
That Hermione should give answer of her choice?

Ege. It is, my lord.

Thes. Go, bid the huntsmen wake them with their horns.

[Exeunt horns and shouts within. Demetrius, Lyssander, Hermione, and Helena wake and start up.]

The. The good-morrow, friends. Saint Valentine is past;
Beneath these wood-birds but to couple now?

Lyss. Pardon, my lord. [He and the rest kneel.]

The. I pray you all, stand up.

I know you two are rival enemies;
How comes this gentle concord in the world,
That hatred is so far from jealousy;
To sleep by hate, and fear no enmity?

Lyss. My lord, I shall reply amaz'd,
Half sleep, half waking: but as yet, I swear,
I cannot truly say how I came here;—
But as I think, (for truly would I speak,—
And now I do bethink me, so it is)
I came with Hermione hither: our intent
Was to be gone from Athens, where we might be Without the peril of the Athenian law.

Ege. Enough, enough! my lord, you have enough.
I beg the law, upon his head,
They would have stol'n away; they would, Demetrius,
Thereby to have defeated you and me;
Yes, of your wife, and me, of my consent,
Of my consent that she should be your wife.

Des. My lord, fair Helen told me of their stealth,
Of their purpose hither, to this wood;
And I in fury hither follow'd them,
Fair Helena in fancy following me.
But, my good lord, I wot not by what power,
(But by some power it is,) my love to Hermione,
Melted as the snow, seems to me now,
As the remembrance of an idle gawd,
Which in my childhood I did dote upon;
And all the faith, the virtue of my heart,
The object, and the pleasure of mine eye,
Is only Helena. To her, my lord,
Was I betroth'd ere I saw Hermia:
But, like in sickness, did I loath this food;
But, as in health, come to my natural taste,
Now do I wish it, love it, long for it,
And will for evermore be true to it.

The. Fair lovers, you are fortunately met.
Of this discourse we more will hear anon.

Egeus, I will overbear your will,
For in the temple, by and by with us,
These couples shall eternally be knit.
And, for the morning now is something worn,
Our purpose hunting shall be set aside.
Away, with us, to Athens: three and three,
We'll hold a feast in great solemnity.—

Come, Hippolitta.

[Exeunt Thesaurus, Hippolitta, Egeus, and Train.]

Dem. These things seem small, and undistinguishable,
Like far-off mountains turned into clouds.

Her. Methinks, I see these things with parted eye,
When every thing seems double.

Hel. So methinks:
And I have found Demetrius, like a jewel,
Mine own, and not mine own.

Dem. Are you sure
That we are awake? It seems to me
That yet we sleep, we dream.—Do not you think
The duke was here, and bid us follow him?

Her. Yea; and my father.

Hel. And Hippolitta.

Lyss. And he did bid us follow to the temple.

Dem. Why then, we are awake. Let's follow him,
And by the way let us recount our dreams. [Exeunt.]

Bot. [Waking.] When my cue comes, call me, and I will answer:
—my next is "Most fair Pyramus."

Hey ho!—Peter Quince! Flute, the bellows-mender! Snout, the tinker! Starveling! God's my life! stolen hence, and left me asleep. I have had a most rare vision. I have had a dream,—past the wit of man to say what dream it was: man is but an ass, if he go about to expound this dream. Menthought I was—there is no man can tell what. Menthought I was, and methought I had,—but man is but a patched fool, if he will offer to say what methought I had. The eye of man hath not yet heard, the ear of man hath not seen, man's hand is not able to taste, his tongue to conceive, nor his heart to report, what my dream was. I will get Peter Quince to write a ballad of this dream: it shall be called Bottom's Dream, because it hath no bottom, and I will sing it in the latter end of the play, before the duke: perdadventure, to make it the more gracious, I shall sing it at thisbey's death.

[Exit.]

SCENE II.—Athens. A Room in QUINCE'S HOUSE.

Enter Quince, Flute, Snout, and Starveling.

Quin. Have you sent to Bottom's house? is he come home yet?

Star. He cannot be heard of. Out of doubt, he is transported.
Scene I.—The Same. An Apartment in the Palace of Theseus.

Enter Theseus, Hippolyta, Philostrate, Lords, and Attendants.

Hip. 'Tis strange, my Theseus, that these lovers speak of.

The. More strange than true: I never may believe
That such fables, nor these fairy toys.

Lovers, and madmen, have such soothed brains,
Such shaping fantasies, that apprehend
More than cool reason ever comprehends.

The lunatic, the lover, and the poet,
Are of imagination all compact:
One sees more devils than vast hell can hold;
That is, the madman: the lover, all as frantic,
Sees Helen's beauty in a brow of Egypt:
The poet's eye, in a fine frenzy rolling,
Doth glance from heaven to earth, from earth to heaven;
And, as imagination bodies forth
The forms of things unknown, the poet's pen
Turns them to shapes, and gives to airy nothing
A local habitation, and a name.

Such tricks hath strong imagination,
That, if it would but apprehend some joy,
It comprehends some bringer of that joy;
Or in the night, imagining some fear,
How easy is a bush suppos'd a bear!

Hip. But all the story of the night told over,
And all their minds transfigur'd so together,
More witnesseth than fancy's images,
And grows to something of great constancy,
But, howsoever, strange, and admirable.

The. Here come the lovers, full of joy and mirth.

Enter Lyndander, Demetrius, Hermia, and Helena.

Joy, gentle friends; joy, and fresh days of love,
Accompany your hearts!

Joy. More than to us
Wait in your royal walks, your board, your bed! have,

The. Come now; what masks, what dances shall we
To wear away this long age of three hours,
Between our after-supper, and bed-time?
Where is our usual manager of mirth?

Enter Bottom. What revels are in hand? Is there no play,
To ease the anguish of a torturing hour?

Call Philostrate.

Philo. Here, mighty Theseus.

The. Say, what abridgment have you for this evening?
What mask? what music? How shall we beguile
The lazy time, if not with some delight?

Philo. There is a brief how many sports are ripe;
Make choice of which your highness will see first.

[Strolling off.]

The. [Reads.] "The battle with the Centaurs, to be sung
By an Athenian eunuch to the harp."

We'll none of that: that have I told my love,
In glory of my kinsman Hercules.

The riot of the tippy Bocchanales,
Tearing the Thracian singer in their rage.

That is an old device; and it was play'd
When I from Theseus came last a conqueror.

The thrice three Muses mourning for the death
Of learning, late deceased in beggary.

That is some satire, keen, and critical,
Not sorting with a nuptial ceremony.

A tedious brief scene of young Pyramus,
And his love Thisebe; very tragical mirth.

Merry and tragical! Tidious and brief!
That is, hot ice, and wondrous soothsome snow.
How shall we find the concord of this discord?"

Philo. A play this is, my lord, some ten words long,
Which is as brief as I have known a play;
But by ten words, my lord, it is too long,
Which makes it tedious; for in all the play
There is not one word apt, one player fitted:
And tragic, my noble lord, it is,
For Pyramus therein doth kill himself.

Which, when I saw rehearse'd, I must confess,
Made mine eyes water; but more merry tears
The passion of loud laughter never shed.

The. What are they, that do pay it?

Philo. Hard-handed men, that work in Athens here,
Which never labour'd in their minds till now;
And now have toll'd their unbreath'd memories
With this same play, against your nuptial.
The. And we will hear it.

Phil. No, my noble lord:
It is not for you: I have heard it over,
And is no thing, nothing in the world;
Unless you can find sport in their intents,
Extremely stretch'd, and conn'd with cruel pain,
To do you service.

The. I will hear that play:
For never any thing can be amiss,
When simplicity and duty tender it.
Go, bring them in;—and take your places, ladies.

[Exit PHILOSTRATE.

Hyp. I love not to see wretchedness o'ercharg'd,
And duty in his service perishing.
The. Why, gentle sweet, you shall see no such thing.
Hyp. He says they can do nothing in this kind.
The. The kinder we, to give them thanks for nothing.
Our sport shall be to take what they mistake:
And what poor duty cannot do,
Noble respect takes it in might, not merit.
Where I have come, great clerks have purposed
To meet me with premeditated welcomes:
Where I have seen them shiver and look pale,
Make periods in the midst of sentences;
Throttle their practis'd accent in their fears,
And in conclusion, dumby have broke off,
Not paying me a welcome. Trust me, sweet,
Out of this silence, yet, I pick'd a welcome;
And in the modesty of fearful duty
I read as much, as from the rattling tongue
Of saucy and sudacious eloquence.
Love, therefore, and tongue-tied simplicity,
Is least speak most, to my capacity.

Enter PHILOSTRATE.

Phil. So please your grace, the prologue is address'd.
The. Let him approach. [Flourish of trumpets.

Enter the PROLOGUE.

Prof. If we offend, it is with our good will.
That you should think, we come not to offend,
But with good-will. To show our simple skill,
That is the true beginning of our end.
Consider, then, we come but in despite.
We do not come as minding to content you,
Our true intent is. All for your delight.
We are not here. That you should here repent you,
The acts are at hand; and, by their show,
You shall know all, that you are like to know.

This fellow doth not stand upon his points.
Lyr. He hath rid his prologue like a rough oot;
He knows not the stop. A good moral, my lord: it is Not enough to speak, but to speak true.
Hyp. Indeed, he hath played on this prologue, like a child on a recorder; a sound, but not in government.

The. His speech was like a tangle chain,
Nothing impair'd, but all disordered.
Who is next?

Enter the PRESENTER, PYRAMUS, and THISBE, WALL, MOONSHINE, and LION, as in dumb show.

Pre. "Gentles, perchance, you wonder at this show;
But wonder on, till truth make all things plain.
This man is Pyramus, if you would know;
This beauteous lady Thysib is, certain.
This man, with time and thoughtfull, doth present
Wall, that vile wall which did these lovers surder;
And through wall's chink, poor souls, they are content
To whisper, at the which let no man wonder.
This man, with lantern, dog, and bush of thorn,
Prospeth moonshine; for, if you will know,
By moonshine did these lovers think no scorn

To meet at Ninnus' tomb, there, there to woo.
This grisly beast, which lion hight by name,
The trusty Thysib, coming first by night,
Did sore away, or rather did affright:
And, as she fled, her mantle she did fall,
Which lion vile with bloody mouth did stain.
Anon comes Pyramus, sweet youth and tall,
And finds his gentle Thysib's mantle slain:
Whereat, with blade, with bloody shameful blade,
He bravely broach'd his boiling bloody breast;
And Thysib, tarrying in mulberry shade,
His dagger drew, and died. For all the rest,
Let lion, moonshine, wall, and lovers twain,
At large discourse, while here they do remain."

[Exeunt PERS, THUSB, LION, and MOONSHINE.

The. I wonder, if the lion be to speak.

Dem. No wonder, my lord:
One lion may, when many asse do.
Wall. "In this same interlude, it doth befall,
That I, one Snout by name, present a wall;
And such a wall, as I would have you think,
That had in it a cranny, hole, or chink,
Through which the lovers, Pyramus and Thysib,
Did whisper often very secretly.
This lime, this rough-cast, and this stone, doth show
That I am that same wall: the truth is so;
And this the cranny is, right and sinister,
Through which the fearful lovers are to whisper."

The. Would you desire lime and hair to speak better? Dem. It is the wittiest part that ever I heard discourse, my lord.

The. Pyramus draws near the wall: silence! Enter PYRAMUS.

Pyr. "O, grim-look'd night! O, night with hue so black!
O night, which ever art, when day is not!
O night! O night! I will not speak.
I fear my Thysib's promise is forgot.—
And thou, O wall! O sweet, O lovely wall!
That stand'est between her father's ground and mine;
Thou wall, O wall! O sweet, and lovely wall!
Show me thy chin to blink through with mine eyne.
[Wall holds up his fingers."

Thanks, courteous wall: Jove shield thee well for this!
But what see I? No Thysib do I see.
O wicked wall! through whom I see no bliss;
Curst be thy stones for thus deceiving me!"

The. The wall, methinks, being sensible, should curse again.

Pyr. No, in truth, sir, he should not.—"Deceiving me," is Thysib's one: she is to enter now, and I am to spy her through the wall. You shall see, it will fall pat as I told you.—Yonder she comes.

Enter THUSB.

This. "O wall, full often hast thou heard my moans,
For parting my fair Pyramus and me:
My cherry lips have often kiss'd thy stones;
Thy stones with lime and hair knit up in thee."

Pyr. "I see a voice: now will I to the chink,
To spy an I can hear my Thysib's face."

Thysib!"

This. "My love! thou art my love, I think."

Pyr. "Think what thou wilt, I am thy lover's grace;
And like Limander am I trusty still."

This. "And I like Helen, till the fates me kill."

Pyr. "Not Shaelus to Procrus was so true."

This. "As Shaelus to Procrus, I to you."

Pyr. "O! kiss me through the hole of this vile wall."

This. "I kiss the wall's hole, not your lips at all."

"Lady. "Flag as a leaf. "Not in f. e. "This speech is given in f. e. to the Prologue."
Pyr. "Wilt thou at Ninny's tomb meet me straightway?"
This. "'Tide life, 'tide death, I come without delay."
Wall. "Thus have I, wall, my part discharged so; And, being done, thus wall away doth go."

The. Now is the wall down between the two neighbours.
Dem. No remedy, my lord, when walls are so wilful to hear without warning.
Hip. This is the silliest stuff that ever I heard.
The. The best in this kind are but shadows; and the worst are none, if imagination amend them.
Hip. It must be your imagination, then, and not theirs.
The. If we imagine no worse of them, than they of themselves, they may pass for excellent men. Here come two noble beasts in, a man and a lion.

Enter Lion and Moonshine.

Lion. "You, ladies, you, whose gentle hearts do fear The smallest circumstance mouse that creeps on floor, May now, perceiving, both quake and tremble here, When lion rough in wildest rage doth roar.
Then know, that I, one Snug the joiner, am A lion's foil, or else no lion's dam:
For, if I should as lion come in strife Into this place, 't were pity on your life."
The. A very gentle beast, and of a good conscience.
Dem. The very best at a beast, my lord, that ever I saw.
Lys. This lion is a very fox for his valour.
The. True, and a goose for his discretion.
Dem. Not so, my lord; for his valour cannot carry his discretion, and the fox carries the goose.
The. His discretion, I am sure, cannot carry his valour, for the goose carries not the fox. It is well: leave it to his discretion, and let us listen to the moon.

Moon. "This lantern doth the hornsed moon present;"
Dem. He should have worn the horns on his head.
The. He is not crescent, and his horns are invisible within the circumference mouse that creeps on floor.

Moon. "This lantern doth the hornsed moon present; Myself the man i' the moon do seem to be."
The. This is the greatest error of all the rest. The man should be put into the lantern: how is it else the man i' the moon?
Dem. He dares not come there for the candle: for, you see, it is already in snuff.

Hip. I am aweary of this moon: would, he would change!
The. It appears by his small light of discretion, that he is in the wane; but yet, in courtesy, in all reason, we must stay the time.
Lys. Proceed, moon.

Moon. All that I have to say, is, to tell you, that the lantern is the moon; I, the man in the moon; this thorn-bush, my thorn-bush; and this dog, my dog.

Dem. Why, all these should be in the lantern; for all these are in the moon. But, silence! here comes Thisbe.

Enter Thisbe.

This. "This is old Ninny's tomb. Where is my love?"

Lion. "Oh—" [The Lion roars.—Thisbe runs off.

Dem. Well roared, lion.
The. Well run, Thisbe.
Hip. Well shone, moon.—Truly, the moon shines with a good grace. [The Lion tears Thisbe's mantle, [and exit.

The. Well mouthed lion.

Dem. And then came Pyramus.

Lys. And so the lion vanished.

Enter Pyramus.

Pyr. "Sweet moon, I thank thee for thy sunny beams; I thank thee, moon, for shining now so bright, For, by thy gracious, golden, glittering streams, I trust to take of truest Thisby sight.
But stay!—O spite! [Seeing Thisbe's mantle.
But mark, poor knight! What dreadful dole is here! Eyes, do you see? How can it be? O dainty duck! O dear! Thy mantle good, What! stain'd with blood? Approach, ye furies fell! O fates! come, come; Cut thread and thrum; Quail, crush, conclude, and quell!"

This. This passion on the death of a dear friend, would go near to make a man look sad.

Hip. Beshrew my heart, but I pity the man.

Pyr. "O, wherefore, nature, didst thou lions frame, Since lion vile hath here defouled my dear? Which is—no, no—which was the fairest dame, That liv'd, that lov'd, that lik'd, that look'd with cheer. Come, tears, confound; Out, sword, and wound

The lap of Pyramus:

"Ay, that left pap, Where heart doth hop:
Thus die I, thus, thus, thus! [Stabs himself [as often.
Now am I dead,
Now am I fled;
My soul is in the sky:
Tongue, lose thy light! Moon, take thy flight! [Exit Moonshine.

Now die, die, die, die, die."

Dies.

Dem. No die, but an ace, for him; for he is but one. Lys. Less than an ace, man, for he is dead; he is nothing.
The. With the help of a surgeon, he might yet recover, and yet prove an ass.

Hip. How chance moonshine is gone, before Thisbe comes back and finds her lover?
The. She will find him by starlight.—Here she comes, and her passion ends the play.

Enter Thisbe.

Hip. Methinks, she should not use a long came for such a Pyramus: I hope she will be brief.

Dem. A mote will turn the balance, which Pyramus, which Thisbe, is the better: be for a man, God warrant us; she for a woman, God bless us.

Lys. She hath spied him already with those sweet eyes.

Dem. And thus she moans, videlicet——

This. "Asleep, my love? What, dead, my dove? O Pyramus! arise: Speak, speak! Quite dumb? Dead, dead? A tomb Must cover thy sweet eyes. This lily lip, This cherry tip, These yellow cowslip cheeks, Are gone, are gone.

1 in 3.: in f. e. * A lion fell: in f. e. B. Field suggested this correction also. 2 moans: in f. e. * This direction not in f. e. 3 and in f. e. * This direction not in f. e. 7 in f. e.: this direction is given at the next line. 8 These lily lips: in f. e. * Neck.
Lovers, make moan:
His eyes were green as loeks.
O! sisters three,
Come, come to me,
With hands as pale as milk;
Lay them in gore,
Since you have shore
With shears his thread of silk.
Tongue, not a word:—
Come, trusty sword;
Come, blade, my breast imbrue:
And farewell, friends.—
Thus Thesby ends:
Adieu, adieu, adieu." [Dies.
Mr. Moonshine and Lion are left to bury the dead.
Des. Ay, and wall too.
Bot. No, I assure you; the wall is down that parted their fathers. Will it please you to see the epilogue, or to hear a Beroomask[1] dance between two of our company?
The No epilogue, I pray you; for your play needs no excuse. Never excuse, for when the players are at last, there need none to be blamed. Marry, if he that writ it, had play'd Pyramus, and hanged himself in Thesbe's garret, it would have been a fine tragedy; and so it is, truly, and very notably discharged. But come, your Beroomask: let your epilogue alone.

[A dance.
The iron tongue of midnight hath told twelve.—
Lovers, to bed: 'tis almost fair time.
I fear we shall outsleep the coming morn,
As much as we this night have overwatch'd.
This palpable gross play hath well beguil'd
The heavy gait of night.—Sweet friends, to bed.—
A fortnight hold we this solemnity,
In nightly revels, and new jollity. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.

Enter Puck, with a broom on his shoulder.
Puck. Now the hungry lion roars;
And the wolf behoves the moon;
Whilst the heavy ploughman snores,
All with weary task fordone.
Now the wasted brands do glow,
Whilst the screech-owl, screeching loud,
Puts the wretch, that lies in woe,
In remembrance of a shroud.
Now it is the time of night,
That the graves, all gaping wide,
Every one lets forth his sprite,
In the church-way paths to glide:
And we fairies, that do run
By the triplo Hecate's team,
From the presence of the sun,
Following darkness like a dream,
Now are frolic; not a mouse

Shall disturb this hallow'd house:
I am sent with broom before,
To sweep the dust behind the door.
Enter Oberon and Titania, with all their train.
Obe. Through the house give glistening light,
By the dead and drowsy fire;
Every elf, and fairy sprite,
Hop as light as bird from brier;
And this ditty after me
Sing, and dance it trippingly.
Tit. First, rehearse your song by rote,
To each word a warbling note:
Hand in hand with fairy grace
Will we sing, and bless this place.

THE SONG.

Now, until the break of day,
Through this house each fairy stray.
To the bed bride-bed will we,
Which by us shall blessed be;
And the issue there create
Ever shall be fortunate.
So shall all the couples three Ever true in loving be;
And the plots of nature's hand
Shall not in their issue stand:
Never mole, hare-lip, nor scar,
Nor mark prodigious, such as are Despised in nativity,
Shall upon their children be;
With this field-dew consecrate.
Every fairy take his gait,
And each several chamber bless,
Through this palace with sweet peace;
Ever shall it safely rest,
And the owner of it blest.
Trip away; make no stay;
Meet me all by break of day. [Exeunt Oberon, Titania, and train.

Puck. If we shadows have offended,
Think but this, and all is mended,
That you have but alumer'd here,
While these visions did appear;
And this weak and idle theme,
No more yielding but a dream,
Gentles, do not reprehend:
If you pardon, we will mend.
And, as I'm an honest Puck,
If we have unlearned luck
Now to 'scape the serpent's tongue,
We will make amends ere long,
Else the Puck a liar call:
So, good night unto you all.
Give me your hands, if we be friends,
And Robin shall restore amends. [Exit.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Venice. A Street.

Enter Antonio, Salanio, and Salanio.

Ant. In sooth, I know not why I am so sad. It wearies me: you say, it wearies you; But how I caught it, found it, or came by it, What stuff’t is made of, whereof it is born, I am to learn;
And such a want-wit sadness makes of me, That I have much ado to know myself.

Salar. Your mind is tossing on the ocean, There, where your argories1 with portly sail, Like signors and rich burghers on the flood, Or, as it were, the pageants of the sea, Do overpeer the petty traffickers, That curst’ry to them, do them reverence, As they fly by them with their woven wings.

Salan. Believe me, sir, had I such venture forth, The better part of my affections would Be with my hopes abroad. I should be still Plucking the grass to know where sits the wind, Peering in maps for ports, and piers, and roads; And every object that might make me fear Misfortune to my ventures, out of doubt, Would make me sad.

Salar. My wind, cooling my broth, Would blow me to an ague, when I thought What harm a wind too great might do at sea. I should not see the sandy hour-glass run, But I should think of shallows and of flats, And see my wealthy Andrew dock’d in sand, Vailing her high top lower than her ribs, To kiss her burial. Should I go to church, And see the holy edifice of stone, And not bethink me straight of dangerous rocks, Which touching but my gentle vessel’s side, Would scatter all her spices on the stream,

1 Vessels of about two hundred tons.

Enrobe the roaring waters with my silks, And, in a word, but even now worth this, And now worth nothing? Shall I have the thought To think on this, and shall I lack the thought, That such a thing behance’d would make me sad? But, tell not me: I know, Antonio Is sad to think upon his merchandise.

Ant. Believe me, no. I thank my fortune for it, My ventures are not in one bottom trusted, Nor to one place; nor is my whole estate Upon the fortune of this present year: Therefore, my merchandise makes me not sad.

Salan. Why, then you are in love.

Ant. Fie, fie! Salan. Not in love neither? Then let’s say, yo are sad, Because you are not merry: and ’twas were as easy For you to laugh, and leap, and say, you are merry, Because you are not sad. Now, by two-headed Janus Nature hath fram’d strange fellows in her time: Some that will evermore peep through their eyes, And laugh, like parrots, at a bag-piper; And other of such vinegar aspect. That they’ll not show their teeth in way of smile, Though Nestor swear the jest be laughable.

Enter Bassanio, Lorenzo, and Gratiano.

Salan. Here comes Bassanio, your most noble kinsman,

Gratiano, and Lorenzo. Fare you well: We leave you now with better company. Salar. I would have stay’d till I had made you merry If worthier friends had not prevented me.

Ant. Your worth is very dear in my regard. I take it, your own business calls on you, And you embrace the occasion to depart.

Salar. Good morrow, my good lords. [when Bass. Good sighors both, when shall we laugh? Sa
You grow exceeding strange: must it be so?
Sal. We’ll make our leisure to attend on yours.

[Exeunt Salario and Salanio.

Lor. My lord Bassanio, since you have found Antonio,
We two will leave you; but at dinner-time,
I pray you, have in mind where we must meet.
Bass. I will not fail you.
Gra. You look not well, signior Antonio;
You have come back too much request upon the world:
They lose it, that do buy it with much care.
Believe me, you are marvellously changed.
Ant. I hold the world but as the world, Gratiano;
A stage, where every man must play a part,
And mine a sad one.

Gra. Let me play the fool:
With mirth and laughter let old wrinkles come,
And let my liver rather heat with wine,
Than my heart cool with mortifying groans.
Why should a man, whose blood is warm within,
Sit like his grandsire cut in alabaster?
Sleep when he wakes, and creep into the jaundice
By being peevish? I tell thee what, Antonio,—
Here thee, and it is my love that speaks; —
There are a sort of men, whose visages
Do cream and mantle, like a standing pond,
And do a wilful stillness entertain,
With purpose to be dress’d in an opinion
Of wisdom, gravity, profound conceit;
As he who should say, ’I am sir Oracle,
And, when I open my lips, let no dog bark’? 4
O! my Antonio, I do know of these,
That therefore only are reputed wise,
For saying nothing; when I am very sure,
If they should speak, ’t would almost damn those ears,
Which hearing them, would call their brothers fools.
I’ll tell thee more of this other time:
Bass not, with this melancholy bait,
For this fool-gudgeon, this opinion.—
Ces. good Lorenzo.— Fare ye well, awhile:
I’ll end my exhortation after dinner.
Lor. Well, we will leave you, then, till dinner-time.
Must I be one of those same dull wits men,
For Gratiano never let’s me speak.
Gra. Well, keep me company but two years more,
Then shalt not know the sound of thine own tongue.
Ant. Farewell: I’ll grow a talker for this gear. 5
Gra. Thanks, faith; for silence is only commendable
To a man’s tongue dried, and a mind not vendible.

[Exeunt Gratiano and Lorenzo.

Ant. It is that: —any thing now. 4
Bass. Gratiano speaks an infinite deal of nothing, More than any man in all Venice. His reasons are his
Two grains of wheat hid in two bushels of chaff: you
All seek all day ere you find them; and when you
There, they are not worth the search.
Ant. Well; tell me now, what lady is the same
In whom you swore a secret pilgrimage,
That you to-day promised to tell me of?
Bass. There is a unknown to you, Antonio,
For much I have disabled mine estate,
Something showing a more swelling port
Than my faint means would grant continuance:
Nor do I now make mean to be abrig’d
From such a noble rate; but my chief care
To come fairly off from the great debts,
Wherein my time, something too prodigal,
Sith left me gaged. To you, Antonio,
Lives the most, in money, and in love;
And from your love I have a warranty
To unburthen all my plights and purposes,
How to get clear of all the debts I owe.
Ant. I pray you, good Bassanio, let me know it
And if it stand, as you yourself still do,
With the eye of honour, be assured,
My purse, my person, my extremest means,
Lie all unlock’d to your occasions;
Bass. In my school-days, when I had lost one shaft,
I shot his fellow of the self-same flight
The self-same way with more advised watch,
To find the other forth; and by adventuring both,
I oft found both. I urge this childhood proof,
Because what follows is pure innocence.
I owe you much, and, like a wasteful youth,
That which I owe is lost; but if you please
To shoot another arrow that self way
Which you did shoot the first, I do not doubt,
As I will watch the aim, or to find both,
Or bring your latter hazard back again,
And thankfully rest debtor for the first.
Ant. You know me well, and herein spend but time.
To wind about my love with circumstance;
And, out of doubt, you do me now more wrong,
In making question of my uttermost,
Than if you had made waste of all I have:
Then do, but say to me what I should do.
That in your knowledge may by me be done,
And I am prest unto it: therefore, speak.
Bass. In Belmont is a lady richly left,
And she is fair, and, fairer than that word,
Of wondrous virtues: sometimes from her eyes
I did receive fair speechless messages.
Her name is Portia; nothing undervalued.
To Cato’s daughter, Brutus’ Portia.
Nor is the wide world ignorant of her worth,
For the four winds blow in from every coast
Renowned suitors; and her sunny locks
Hang on her temples like a golden fleece;
Which makes her seat of Belmont Caleos’ strand,
And many Jasons come in quest of her.
O, my Antonio! had I but the means
To hold a rival place with one of them,
I have a mind pressage me such thrift,
That I should questionless be fortunate.
Ant. Thou know’st, that all my fortunes are at sea,
Neither have I money, nor commodity
To raise a present sum; therefore, go forth;
Try what my credit can in Venice do;
That shall be back’d, even to the uttermost,
To furnish thee to Belmont, to fair Portia.
Go, presently inquire, and so will I,
Where money is, and I no question make,
To have it of my trust, or for my sake.

SCENE II.—Belmont. An Apartment in Portia’s House.

Enter Portia and Nerissa.

Por. By my troth, Nerissa, my little body is aweary
Of this great world.
Ner. You would be, sweet madam, if your miseries
Were in the same abundance as your good fortunes are.
And, yet, for aught I see, they are as sick,
That surfeit with too much, as they that starve with nothing:
it is no mean’ happiness, therefore, to be seated in the Mean: superfluity comes sooner by white hairs, but Competency lives longer.
Por. Good sentences, and well pronounced.

1 & 2 all ed. copies; mod. eds., following Rowe, read: "who."
2 would: in f.e. 4 For this matter. 4 So all quartos, and first and 4 so; mod. eds. read: "is that anything, now?" 5 wishful: in f.e. 6 Read.
7 So the quartos; the folio: "small."
THE MERCHANT OF VENICE.

Ner. They would be better, if well followed.

Por. If to do were as easy as to know what were good to do, chapels had been churches, and poor men's cottages princes' palaces. It is a good divine that follows his own instructions: I can easier teach twenty what were good to be done, than be one of the twenty to follow mine own teaching. The brain may devise laws for the blood; but a hot temper leaps o'er a cold decree. It is madness, the youth, to skip o'er the meshes of good counsel, the cripple. But this reasoning is not in the fashion to choose me a husband.

—O me! the word choose! I may neither choose whom I would, nor refuse whom I dislike; so is the will of a living daughter curbed by the will of a dead father.

—Is it not hard, Nerissa, that I cannot choose one, nor refuse none?

Ner. Your father was ever virtuous, and holy men at their death have good inspirations; therefore, the lottery, that he hath devised in these three chests of gold, silver, and lead (whereof who chooses his meaning, chooses you will), no doubt, never be chosen by any rightly, but one whom you shall rightly love. But what warmth is there in your affection towards any of these princely suitors that are already come?

Por. I pray thee, over-name them, and as thou namest them, I will describe them; and, according to my description, love at my affection.

Ner. First, there is the Neapolitan prince.

Por. Ay, that's a colt, indeed, for he doth nothing but talk of his horse; and he makes it a great approbation of his own good parts, that he can shoe himself. I am much afraid, my lady his mother played false with a smith.

Ner. Then, is there the county Palantine.

Por. He doth nothing but frown, as who should say, "An you will not have me, choose." He hears merry tales, and smiles not: I fear he will prove the weeping philosopher when he grows old, being so full of unmanly sadness in his youth. I had rather be married to a dead man's head with a bone in his mouth, than to either of these. God defend me from these two!

Ner. How say you by the French lord, monsieur le Bon?

Por. God made him, and therefore let him pass for a man. In truth, I know it is a sin to be a mockor; but he! why, he hath a horse better than the Neapolitan's: a better bad habit of frowning than the count Palantine, he is every man in no man; if a throttle singing, he falls straight a capering; he will fence with his own shadow. If I should marry him, I should marry twenty husbands. If he would despise me, I would forgive him; for if he love me to madness, I shall never require him.

Ner. What say you, then, to Faulconbridge, the young baron of England?

Por. You know, I say nothing to him, for he understands not me, nor I him: he hath neither Latin, French, nor Italian; and you will come into the court and swear, that I have a poor penny-worth in the English. He is a proper man's picture; but, alas! who can converse with a dumb show? How oddly he is suited! I think, he bought his doublet in Italy, his round hose in France, his bonnet in Germany, and his behaviour everywhere.

Ner. What think you of the Scottish lord, his neighbour?

Por. That he hath a neighbourly charity in him; for he borrowed a box of the ear of the Englishman, and swore he would pay him again, when he was able. I think, the Frenchman became his surety, and sealed under for another.

Ner. How like you the young German, the duke of Saxony's nephew?

Por. Very vilely in the morning, when he is sober, and most vilely in the afternoon, when he is drunk: when he is best, he is a little worse than a man; and when he is worst, he is little better than a beast. And the worst fall that ever fell, I hope, I shall make shift to go without him.

Ner. If he should offer to choose, and choose the right casket, you should refuse to perform your father's will, if you should refuse to accept him.

Por. Therefore, for fear of the worst, I pray thee, set a deep glass of Rhenish wine on the contrary casket; for, if the devil be within, and that temptation without, I know he will choose it. I will do anything, Nerissa, ere I will be married to a sponge.

Ner. You need not fear, lady, the having any of these lords: they have acquainted me with their determinations; which is indeed, to return to their homes, and to trouble you with no more suit, unless you may be won by some other sort than your father's imposition, depending on the caskets.

Por. If I live to be as old as Sibylla, I will die as chastly as Diana, unless I be obtained by the manner of my father's will. I am glad this parcel of woeers are so reasonable; for there is not one among them but I dote on his very absence, and I pray God grant them a fair departure.

Ner. Do you not remember, lady, in your father's time, a Venetian, a scholar, and a soldier, that came hither in company of the marquis of Montferrat?

Por. Yes, yes; it was Bassanio: as I think, so was he called.

Ner. True, madam: he, of all the men that ever my foolish eyes looked upon, was the best deserving a fair lady.

Por. I remember him well, and I remember him worthy of thy praise. —How now? what news?

Enter a Servant.

Srv. The four strangers seek for you, madam, to take their leave; and there is a forerunner come from a fifth, the prince of Morocco, who brings word, the prince, his master, will be here to-night.

Por. If I could bid the fifth welcome with so good heart, as I can bid the other four farewell, I should be glad of his approach: if he have the condition of a saint, and the complexion of a devil, I had rather he should shrive me than wise me. Come. Nerissa,—Surrup, go before.—Whiles we shut the gate upon one wooer, another knocks at the door.

[Exit.]

SCENE III.—Venice. A public Place.

Enter BASSANIO and SHYLOCK.

Shy. Three thousand ducats.—well.
Bass. Ay, sir, for three months.
Shy. For three months.—well.
Bass. For the which, as I told you, Antonio shall be bound.
Shy. Antonio shall become bound,—well.
Bass. May you stand me? Will you pleasure me? Shall I know your answer?
Shy. Three thousand ducats for three months, and Antonio bound.
Bass. Your answer to that.
Shy. Antonio is a good man.

1 reason: in f. o. The quartos, as in the text. 2 The rest of the sentence is from the quartos. 3 Knight and Dye where these three words as the first, and the rest of the speech as the last line of a couplet.
Act III.

THE MERCHANT OF VENICE.

Bass. Have ye heard any imputation to the contrary?
Shy. No, no, no, no:—my meaning, in saying he is a good man, is to have you understand, that he is sufficient; yet his means are in supposition. He hath an argosy bound to Tripolis, another to the Indies; I understand moreover upon the Rialto, he hath a third at Mexico, a fourth for England, and other ventures. He hath squandered abroad; but ships are but boards, lines but men: there be land-rats, and water-rats, land-thieves, and water-thieves; I mean, pirates: and then, there is the peril of waters, winds, and rocks. The man is, notwithstanding, sufficient: three thousand ducats. I think, I may take his bond.

Bass. Be assured, thou mayest.
Shy. I will be assured, I may; and, that I may be assured, I will bethink me. May I speak with Antonio?

Bass. If it please you to dine with us.

Shy. Yes, to smell pork; to eat of the habitation when your prophet, the Nazarite,conjured the devil into. I will buy with you, sell with you, talk with you, walk with you, and so following; but I will not eat with you, drink with you, nor pray with you. What news on the Rialto? Who is he comes here?

Enter Antonio.

Bass. This is signior Antonio.

Shy. [Aside.] How like a fawning publican he looks! I hate him for he is a Christian; but more, for that, in low simplicity, he lends out money gratis, and brings down the rate of usance here with us in Venice. If I can catch him once upon the hip, I will feed fat the ancient grudge I bear him. He hates our sacred nation; and he rails, even there where merchants most do congregate, on my bargains, and my well-won thrift, which he calls interest. Cursed be my tribe, if I forgive him!

Shy. Shylock, do you hear?

Shy. I am debating of my present store, and, by the near guess of my memory, I cannot instantly raise up the gross. Of fall three thousand ducats. What of that? Tubal, a wealthy Hebrew of my tribe, will furnish me. But soft! how many months do you desire?—Rost you fair, good signior;

To Antonio.

Your worship was the last man in our mouths.

Ant. Shylock, albeit I neither lend nor borrow, nor taking nor by giving of excess, to supply the rife wants of my friend, I'll break a custom. Are you yet possess'd, how much he would?

Shy. Ay, ay, three thousand ducats.

Ant. And for three months.

Shy. I had forgot:—three months; you told me so. Well then, your bond; and let me see—But hear you: I thought, you said, you neither lend nor borrow upon advantage.

Ant. I do never use it.

Shy. When Jacob graz'd his father in the Laban's sheep, the wise woman murthered in his behalf; the third possessor; ay, he was the third.

Ant. And what of him? did he take interest?

Shy. No, not take interest; not, as you would say, decently interest: mark what Jacob did. Remember Laban and himself were compromised; and all the emblings which were streak'd, and pied, Should fall as Jacob's hire, the ewes, being rank, in end of autumn turned to the rams; and when the work of generation was between these wooley breeders in the act, the skilful shepherd peal'd me certain wands, and, in doing the deed of kind, he stuck them up before the fulsome ewes, who, then conceiving, did in eating time fall partly colour'd lambs, and those were Jacob's. This was a way to thrive, and he was blest; and thrift is blessing, if men steal it not.

Ant. This was a venture, sir, that Jacob serv'd for; a thing not in his power to bring to pass, but swayed, and fashion'd by the hand of heaven.

Shy. Was this inferred to make interest good? Or is your gold and silver, ewes and rams?

Shy. I cannot tell: I make it breed as fast.

Ant. Mark you this, Bassanio. The devil can cite scripture for his purpose. An evil soul, producing holy witness, is like a villain with a smiling cheek, a goodly apple rotten at the heart. O, what a goodly outside falsehood hath!

Shy. Three thousand ducats:—'tis a good round sum, three months from twelve, then let me see the rate.

Ant. Well, Shylock, shall we be beholding to you?

Shy. Signior Antonio, many a time and oft, on the Rialto, you have rated me about my monies and my usances: still have I borne it with a patient shrug; for sufferance is a badge of all our tribe. You call'd me—misbeliever, cut-throat dog, and spit upon my Jewish gaberdine, and all for use of that which is mine own. Well then, it now appears, you need my help: go to, then; you come to me, and you say, "Shylock, we would have monies:" you say so; you, that did void your rheum upon my beard, and foot me as you spurn a stranger cur over your threshold; monies is your suit. What should I say you to? Should I not say, "Hath a dog money? Is it possible, a cur can lend three thousand ducats?" or shall I bend low, and in a bondman's key, with bated breath, and whispering humbleness, say this:—

"Fair sir, you spit on me on Wednesday last; you spurn'd me such a day; another time you call'd me dog; and for these courtesies I'll lend you thus much monies?"

Ant. I am as like to call thee so again, to spit on thee again, to spurn thee too. If thou wilt lend this money, lend it not as to thy friend; for whom did friendship take a breed for barren metal of his friend? But lend it rather to thine enemy; who if he break, thou may'st with better face exact the penalty.

Shy. Why, look you, how you storm! I would be friends with you, and have your love, forget the shame which you have again'd me with, supply your present wants, and take no doit of usance for my monies, and you'll not hear me. This is kind I offer.

Ant. This were kindness.

Shy. This kindness will I shew.

Go with me to a notary, seal me there

ACT II.

SCENE I.—Belmont. An Apartment in Portia’s House.

Enter the Prince of Morocco, and his followers; Portia, Nerissa, and other of her train. Flourish Cornets.

Mor. Mislike me not for my complexion,
The shadow’d livery of the burn’st sun,
To whom I am a neighbour, and near bred.
Bring me the fairest creature northward born,
Where Phæbus’ fire scarce thaws the icles,
And let us make incision for your love,
To prove whose blood is reddest, his, or mine.
I tell thee, lady, this aspect of mine
Hath fear’d the valiant: by my love, I swear.
The best regardéd virgins of our clime
Have lov’d it too. I would not change this hue,
Except to steal your thoughts, my gentle queen.

Por. In terms of choice I am not solely led
By nice direction of a maiden’s eyes:
Besides, the lottery of my destiny
 Bars me the right of voluntary choosing;
But, if my father had not scanté me,
And hedg’d me by his wit, to yield myself
His wife who wins me by that means I told you,
Yourself, renowned prince, then stood as fair,
As any comber I have look’d on yet,
For my affection.

Mor. Even for that I thank you:
Therefore, I pray you, lead me to the caskets,
To try my fortune. By this semicircular,
That slew the Sphyry, and a Persian prince,
That won three fields of Sultan Soylman,—
I would out-star the sternest eyes that look,
Out-brave the heart most daring on the earth,
Pluck the young sucking cubs from the she-bear,
Yes, mock the lion when he roars for prey,
To win thee, lady. But, alas the while!
If Heracles and Lænas play at dice,
Which is the better man? the greater throw?
May turn by fortune from the weaker hand:
So is Alcides beaten by his page;
And so may I, blind fortune leading me.
Miss that which one unworthy may attain,
And die with grieving.

By the exaction of the forfeiture?
A pound of man’s flesh, taken from a man,
Is not so estimable, profitable neither,
As flesh of muttons, beecess, or goasts. I say,
To buy his favour I extend this friendship:
If he will take it, so; if not, adieu;
And, for my love, I pray you, wrong me not.

Ant. Yes, Shylock, I will seal unto this bond.
Shy. Then meet me forthwith at the notary’s.
Give him direction for this merry bond,
And I will go and purge the duke straight;
See to his house, left in the fearful guard
Of an unthrifty knave, and presently
I will be with you.

[Exit.

Ant. His thee, gentle Jew.

The Hebrew will turn Christian: he grows kind.

Bass. I like not fair terms, and a villain’s mind.
Ant. Come on: in this there can be no dismay,
My ships come home a month before the day.

[Exeunt.

Por. You must take your chance;
And either not attempt to choose at all,
Or swear before you choose, if you choose wrong,
Never to speak to lady afterward
In way of marriage: therefore, be advis’d.

Mor. Nor will not. Come, bring me unto my chance.
Por. First, forward to the temple: after dinner
Your hazard shall be made.

Mor. Good fortune then, [Cornets.
To make me blest, or cursed’st among men!

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Venice. A Street.

Enter Launcelot Gobbo.

Lawn. Certainly, my conscience will serve me to run from this Jew, my master. The fiend is at mine elbow, and tempteth me, saying to me, “Gobbo, Launcelot Gobbo, good Launcelot, or good Gobbo, or good Launcelot Gobbo, use your legs, take the start, run away!” My conscience says,—“No; take heed, honest Launcelot; take heed, honest Gobbo;” or, as aforesaid, “honest Launcelot Gobbo; do not run; scorns running with thy heels.” Well, the most contumacious fiend bite me pack; “Via!” says the fiend; “away!” says the fiend; “fore the heavens, rouse up a brave mind,” says the fiend, “and run.” Well, my conscience, hanging about the neck of my heart, says very wisely to me,—“My honest friend Launcelot, being an honest man’s—” or rather an honest woman’s—;—for, indeed my father did something smack, something grow to he had a kind of taste;—well, my conscience says “Launcelot, budge not.” “Budge,” says the fiend “budge not,” says my conscience. Conscience, say I, you counsel well; fiend, say I, you counsel well to be ruled by my conscience, I should stay with the Jew my master, who (God bless the mark!) is a kind of devil; and, to run away from the Jew, I should be ruled by the fiend, who, saving your reverence, is the devil himself. Certainly, the Jew is the very devil incarnacion; and, in my conscience, my conscience is but a kind of hard conscience to offer to counsel me to stay with the Jew. The fiend gives the more friendly counsel: I will run, fiend; my heels are at your commandment; I will run.

[Going out in haste.

1 burnish’d: in f. a. 2 One of the quarto, and the folio read; “o’er-stare.” 3 old ed.: rage. Most have, however, adopted the change; also suggested by Theobald. 4 courageous: in f. a. 5 This direction not in f. a.
Enter Old Gobbo, with a Basket.

Gob. Master, young man, you; I pray you, which is the way to master Jew's?
Law. [Aside.] O heaven's! this is my true begotten father, who, being more than sand-blind, high-gravel-blind, know me not:—I will try confusions' with him.

Gob. Master, young gentleman, I pray you, which is the way to master Jew's?

Law. Turn up on your right hand at the next turning; but at the next turning of all, on your left; marry, at the very next turning, turn of no hand, but turn down helter-skelter to the Jew's house.

Gob. By God's sect's, it will be a hard way to hit. Can you tell me whether one Launcelot, that dwells with him, dwell with him, or no?

Law. Talk you of young master Launcelot?—[Aside.] Mark me now; now will I raise the waters.—[To him.] Talk you of young master Launcelot?

Gob. No master, sir, but a poor man's son: his father, though I say it, is an honest exceeding poor man; and, God be thanked, well to live.

Law. Well, let his father be what a' will, we talk of young master Launcelot.

Gob. Of Launcelot, an't please your mastership.

Law. Ergo, master Launcelot. Talk not of master Launcelot, father; for the young gentleman (according to fates and destinies, and such odd sayings, the sisters three, and such branches of learning), is, indeed, deceased; or, as you would say, in plain terms, gone to heaven.

Gob. marry, God forbid! the boy was the very stuff of my age, my very prop.

Law. [Aside.] Do I look like a cudgel, or a novel-valet, a staff, or a prop?—[To him.] Do you know me, sir?

Gob. Attack the day! I know you not, young gentleman. But I pray you, tell me, is my boy, (God rest his soul!) alive, or dead?

Law. Do you not know me, father?

Gob. Alack, sir, I am sand-blind; I know you not.

Law. Nay, indeed, if you had your eyes, you might fail of the knowing me: it is a wise father that knows his own child. Well, old man, I will tell you news of your son. [Kneels.] Give me your blessing: truth will come to light; murder cannot be hid long, a man's way may, but in the end truth will out.

Gob. Pray you, sir, stand up. I am sure you are no Launcelot, my boy.

Law. Pray you, let's have no more fooling about it, but give me your blessing: I am Launcelot, your boy that was, your son that is, your child that shall be.

Gob. I cannot think you are my son.

Law. I know not what I shall think of that; but I am Launcelot, the Jew's man, and, I am sure, Margery, your wife, is my mother.

Gob. Her name is Margery, indeed: I'll be sworn, if thou be Launcelot, thou art mine own flesh and blood. Lord! worship'd might he be! what a beard hast thou got: thou hast got more hair on thy chin, than Dobbin's full-horse has on his tail.

Law. [Rising.] It should seem, then, that Dobbin's tail grows backward: I am sure he had more hair of his tail, than I have of my face, when I last saw him.

Gob. Lord! how art thou changed! How dost thou and thy master agree? I have brought him a present. How agree you now?

Law. Well, well; but, for mine own part, as I have set up my rest to run away, so I will not rest till I have run some ground. My master's a very Jew: give him a present! give him a hallter: I am famish'd in his service: you may tell every finger I have with my ribs. Father, I am glad you are come: give me your present to one master Bassanio, who, indeed, gives rare new liveries. If I serve not him, I will run as far as God has any ground.—O rare fortune! here comes the man: to him, father; for I am a Jew, if I serve the Jew any longer.

Enter Bassanio, with Leonardo, and Followers.

Bass. You may do so;—but let it be so hasted, that supper be ready at the farthest by five of the clock. See these letters delivered; put the liveries to making, and desire Gratiano to come anon to my lodging. [Exit Law. To him, father. [A Servant.
Gob. God bless your worship!
Bass. Grammarian. Wouldst thou aught with me?
Gob. Here's my son, a poor boy,——

Law. Not a poor boy, sir, but the rich Jew's man, that would, sir, as my father shall specify.

Gob. He hath a great infection, sir, as one would say, to serve——

Law. Indeed, the short and the long is, I serve the Jew, and have a desire, as my father shall specify.

Gob. His master and he (saving your worship's reverence), are scarce easter-cousins.

Law. To be brief, the very truth is, that the Jew having done me wrong, doth cause me,—as my father, being, I hope, an old man, shall fructify unto you.

Gob. I have here a dish of doves, that I would bestow upon your worship; and my suit is——

Law. In very brief, the suit is impertinent to myself, as your lordship shall know by this honest old man; and, though I say it, though old man, yet, poor man, my father.

Bass. One speak for both. What would you?
Law. Serve you, sir.

Gob. That is the very defect of the matter, sir.

Bass. I know thee well: thou hast obtained thy suit. Shylock, thy master, spoke with me this day, and hath prefer'd thee; if it be preferment, to leave a rich Jew's service, to become the follower of so poor a gentleman.

Law. The old proverb is very well parted between my master Shylock and you, sir: you have the grace of God, sir, and he hath enough. [Exit Bass. Thou speak'st it well. —Go, father, with thy take leave of thy old master, and inquire my lodging out. Give him a livery. [To his followers. More guarded than his fellows': see it done.

Law. Father, in. I cannot get a service, no; I have ne'er a tongue in my head. —Well; [Looking on his palm] if any man in Italy have a fairer table, which doth offer to swear upon a book,—I shall have good fortune, Go to; here's a simple line of life! here's a small tribe of wives: alas! fifteen wives is nothing: eleven widows, and nine maids, is a simple coming in for one man; and then, to scape drowning thrice, and to be in peril of my life with the edge of a feather-bed: here are simple 'scape's! Well, if fortune be a woman, she's a good wench for this gear.—Father, come; I'll take my leave of the Jew in the twinkling of an eye. [Exit Launcelot and Old Gobbo.
Bass. I pray thee, good Leonardo, think on this.
These things being bought, and orderly bestow'd,
Return in haste, for I do feast to-night
My best-esteem'd acquaintance: hie thee, go.

Leon. My best endeavours shall be done herein.

Enter Gratiano.

Gra. Where is your master?

Leon. Yonder, sir, he walks. [Exit Leonardo.

Gra. Signior Bassanio!

Bass. Gratiano.

Gra. I have a suit to you.

Bass. You have obtain'd it.

Gra. You must not deny. I must go with you to Belmont.

Bass. Why, then you must; but hear thee, Gratiano.

Thou art too wild, too rude, and bold of voice; —
Parts, that become thee happily enough,
And in such eyes as ours appear not faults:
But where thou art not known, why, there they show
Something too liberal. — Pray thee, take pain
To alay with some cold drops of modesty
Thy skipping spirit, lest through thy wild behaviour,
I be misconstrued in the place I go to,
And lose my hopes.

Gra. Signior Bassanio, hear me:
If I do not put on a sober habit,
Talk with respect, and swear but now and then,
Wear prayer-books in my pocket, look demurely;
Nay more, while grace is saying, hood mine eyes
Thus with my hat, and sigh, and say amen;
Use all the observance of civility,
Like one well studied in a sad ostent
To please his grandam, never trust me more.

Bass. Well, we shall see your bearing.

Gra. Nay, but I bar to-night: you shall not gage me
By what we do to-night.

Bass. No, that were pity.

I would entreat you rather to put on
Your boldest suit of mirth, for we have friends
That purpose merriment. But fare you well,
I have some business.

Gra. And I must to Lorenzo, and the rest;
But we will visit you at supper-time. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The Same. A Room in Shylock's House.

Enter Jessica and Launcelot.

Jes. I am sorry thou wilt leave my father so: Our house is hell, and thou, a merry devil,
Didst rob it of some taste of tediousness
But fare thee well; there is a ducat for thee.
And, Launcelot, soon at supper shalt thou see
Lorenzo, who is thy new master's guest;
Give him this letter: do it secretly,
And so farwell. I would not have my father
See me in talk with thee.

Laun. Adieu!—tears exhibit my tongue.—Most beautiful pagan,—most sweet Jew! If a Christian did not play the knave, and get thee, I am much deceived; but, adieu! these foolish drops do somewhat drown my merry spirit: adieu! [Exit.

Jes. Farewell, good Launcelot.—
Alack, what heinous sin is it in me,
To be sahm'd to be my father's child!
But though I am a daughter to his blood,
I am not to his manners. O Lorenzo!
If thou keep promise, I shall end this strife,
Become a Christian, and thy loving wife. [Exit.

SCENE IV.—The Same. A Street.

Enter Gratiano, Lorenzo, Salario, and Salanio.

Lor. Nay, we will slink away in supper-time,

Disguise us at my lodging, and return
All in an hour.

Gra. We have not made good preparation.

Salario. We have not spoke as yet of torch-bearers.

Salano. 'Tis vile, unless it may be quaintly order'd,
And better, in my mind, not undertook.

Lor. 'Tis now but four o'clock: we have two hours
To furnish us.—

Enter Launcelot, with a letter.

Friend Launcelot, what's the news?

Laun. An it shall please you to break up this, it shall seem to signify.

Lor. I know the hand: in faith, 'tis a fair hand;
And whiter than the paper it writ on
Is the fair hand that writ.

Gra. Love-news, in faith:

Laun. By your leave, sir.

Lor. Whither goest thou?

Laun. Marry, sir, to bid my old master, the Jew, to sup to-night with my new master, the Christian.

Lor. Hold here, take this. —Tell gentle Jessica, I will not fail her: —speak it privately;
Go. —Gentlemen, [Exit Launcelot.

Will you prepare for this masque to-night?
I am provided of a torch-bearer.

Salario. Ay, marry, I'll be gone about it straight.

Salano. And so will I.

Lor. Meet me, and Gratiano,
At Gratiano's lodging some hour hence.

Salano. 'Tis good we do so. [Exeunt Salario and Salano.

Gra. Was not that letter from fair Jessica?

Lor. I must needs tell thee all. She hath directed,
How I shall take her from her father's house;
What gold and jewels she is furnish'd with;
What page's suit she hath in readiness.
If e'er the Jew her father come to heaven,
It will be for his gentle daughter's sake;
And never dare misfortune cross her foot,
Unless she do it under this excuse,
That she is issue to a faithless Jew.
Come, go with me: perseve this, as thou goest.
Fair Jessica shall be my torch-bearer. [Exeunt.

SCENE V.—The Same. Before Shylock's House.

Enter Shylock and Launcelot.

Shy. Well, thou shalt see, thy eyes shall be thy judge,
The difference of old Shylock and Bassanio.—
What, Jessica! —Thou shalt not gormandize,
As thou hast done with me! —What, Jessica! —
And sleep and snore, and rend apparel out.—

Why, Jessica, I say!

Laun. Why, Jessica!

Laun. Your worship was wont to tell me, that I could do nothing without bidding.

Enter Jessica.

Jes. Call you? What is your will? Shy. I say bid forth to supper, Jessica: —
There are my keys.—But wherefore should I go? I am not bid for love; they flatter me:
But yet I'll go in hate, to feed upon
The prodigal Christian.—Jessica, my girl,
Look to my house:—I am right loath to go.
There is some ill a brewing towards my rest,
For I did dream of money-bags to-night.

Laun. I beseech you, sir, go: my young master doth expect your reproach.

Shy. So do I his.

Laun. And they have conspired together: —I will not say, you shall see a masque; but if you do, then it was not for nothing that my nose fell a bleeding on 'Monday' last, at six o'clock: 'tis the morning, falling out that year on Ash-Wednesday was four year in the afternoon.

Jes. Lorenzo, and thy love.
Jas. Lorenzo, certain; and my love, indeed,
For whom love I so much? And now who knows,
But you, Lorenzo, whether I am yours?
Lor. Heaven, and thy thoughts are witness that thou art.

Jas. Here, cut this casket: it is worth the psalm.
I am glad 'tis night, you do not look on me,
For I am much ashamed of my exchange;
But love is blind, and lovers cannot see
The pretty follies that themselves commit;
For if they could, Cupid himself would blush
To see me thus transformed to a boy.
Lor. Descend, for you must be my torch-bearer.
Jas. What! must I hold a candle to my shame?
They in themselves, good sooth, are too too light.
Why, 'tis an office of discovery, love,
And I should be obscure'd.

Lor. So are you, sweet,
Even in the garnish of a lovely boy.
But come at once;
For the close night doth play the run-away,
And we are stay'd for at Bassanio's feast.
Jes. I will make fast the doors, and gild myself
With some more ducats, and be with you straight.

Gra. Now, by my hood, a Gentile, and no Jew.
Lor. Beshrew me, but I love her heartily;
For she is wise, if I can judge of her,
And fair she is, if that mine eyes be true,
And true she is, as she hath prov'd herself;
And therefore, like herself, wise, fair, and true,
She shall be placed in my constant soul.

Enter Jessica, to them below.

What, art thou come?—On, gentlemen; away!
Our masquing mates by this time for us stay.

Enter Gratiano and Salario, masqued.
Gr. This is the pent-house, under which Lorenzo
Desir'd us to make stand.

Sal. His hour is almost past.
Gr. And it is marvel he out-dwells his hour,
For lovers ever run before the clock.

Sal. O! ten times faster Venus' pigeons fly
To seal love's bonds new-made, than are they wont
To keep oblig'd faith unforfeited!

Gr. That ever holds: who riseth from a feast,
Wit that keen appetite that he sits down?
Where is the horse that doth untread arvin
His tedious measures, with the unbated fire
That he did pass them first? All things that are,
Are with more spirit chased than enjoy'd.
How like a younger, or a prodigal,
The scarred bark puts from her native bay,
Hagg'd and embraced by the strumpet wind!
How like a prodigal doth she return,
With over-weather'd ribe, and ragged sails,
Lean, rent, and beggar'd by the strumpet wind!

Enter Lorenzo.

Sal. Here comes Lorenzo: more of this hereafter.
Lor. Sweet friends, your patience for my long abode;
Not I, but my affairs have made you wait:
When you shall please to play the thieves for wives,
I'll watch as long for you then.—Approach;
Here dwells my father Jew.—Ho! who's within?

Enter Jessica above, as a boy.

Jes. Who are you? Tell me for more certainty,
Albeit I'll swear that I do know your tongue.
"Who chooseth me must give and hazard all he hath."
Must give,—For what? for lead? hazard for lead?
This casket threatens men, that hazard all,
Do it in hope of fair advantages:
A golden mind stoops not to shows of dross;
I'll then nor give, nor hazard, sought for lead.
What says the silver, with her virgin hue?
"Who chooseth me shall get as much as he deserves."
As much as he deserves?—Pause there, Moroco,
And weigh thy value with an even hand.
If thou be'st rated by thy estimation,
Thou dost deserve enough; and yet enough
May not extend so far as to the lady;
And yet to be afeard of my deserving
Were but a weak disabling of myself.
As much as I deserve?—Why, that's the lady:
I do in birth deserve her, and in fortunes,
In graces, and in qualities of breeding:
But more than these in love I do deserve her.
What if I stray'd no farther, but chose here?—
Let's see once more this saying grav'd in gold:
"Who chooseth me shall gain what many men desire."
Why, that's the lady; all the world desires her:
From the four corners of the earth they come,
To kiss this shrine, this mortal breathing saint.
The Hyrcanian deserts, and the vasty wilds
Of wide Arabia, are as through-fares now,
For princes to come view fair Portia:
The wat'ry kingdom, whose ambitious head
Spits in the face of heaven, is no bar
To stop the foreign spirits, but they come,
As o'er a brook, to see fair Portia.
One of these three contains her heavenly picture.
Is't like, that lead contains her? 'T were damnation,
To think so base a thought: it were too gross
To rob her cereloch in the obscure grave.
Or shall I think in silver she's immur'd,
Being ten times undervalued to tried gold?
O sinful thought! Never so rich a gem
Was set in worse than gold. They have in England
A coin, that bears the figure of an angel
Stamped in gold, but that's in fool'd upon;
But here an angel in a golden bed
Lies all within.—Deliver me the key:
Here do I choose, and thrive I as I may!
Por. There, take it, prince; and if my form lie there,
Then I am yours. [He opens the golden casket.
Mor. O hell! what have we here?
A carrion death, within whose empty eye
There is a written scroll. I'll read the writing.
"All that glisters is not gold;
Often have you heard that told:
Many a man his life hath sold,
But my outside to behold:
Gilded tombs do worms infold.
Had you been as wise as bold,
Young in limbs, in judgment old,
Your answer had not been inscriv'd:
Fare you well; your suit is cold."
Cold, indeed, and labour lost:
Then, farewell, heat: and, welcome, frost.—
Portia, adieu. I have too griev'd a heart
To take a tedious leave: thus losses part.
[Exit. Por. A gentle ridgeance.—Draw the curtains: go.
[Curtains drawn.
Let all of his complexion choose me so. [Exeunt.

SCENE VIII.—Venice. A Street.

Enter Salario and Salanio.

Salar. Why man, I saw Bassanio under sail:
With him is Gratiano gone along;
And in their ship, I'm sure, Lorenzo is not.
Salan. The villain Jew with outcries rais'd the duke,
Who went with him to search Bassanio's ship.
Salar. He came too late, the ship was under sail:
But there the duke was given to understand,
That in a gondola were seen together
Lorenzo and his amorous Jessica.
Besides, Antonio certificed the duke,
They were not with Bassanio in his ship.
Salan. I never heard a passion so confus'd,
So strange, outrageous, and so variable.
As the dog Jew did utter in the streets:
"My daughter!—O my ducats!—O my daughter!
Fled with a Christian?—O my Christian ducats!
Justice! the law! my ducats, and my daughter!
A sealed bag, two sealed bags of ducats,
Of double ducats, stoll'n from me by my daughter!
And jewels too! two rich and precious stones,
Stoll'n by my daughter!—Justice! find the girl!
She hath the stones upon her, and the ducats!"
Salar. Why, all the bondmen in Venice follow him,
Crying, his ducats, his daughter, and his ducats.
Salan. Let good Antonio look he keep his day,
Or he shall pay for this.

Salar. Marry, well remember'd.
I reason'd with a Frenchman yesterday,
Who told me, in the narrow seas, that part
The French and English, there miscarried
A vessel of our country, richly fraught.
I thought upon Antonio when he told me,
And wish'd in silence that it were not his.
Salan. You were best to tell Antonio what you hear;
Yet do not suddenly, for it may grieve him.
Salar. A kinder gentleman treats not the earth.
I saw Bassanio and Antonio part.
Bassanio told him, he would make some speed
Of his return: he answer'd,—'Do not so;
Slubber not businers for my sake, Bassanio,
But stay the very ripling of the time:
And for the Jew's bond, which he hath of me,
Let it settle in your own heart of love.
Be merry; and apply your chiefest thoughts
To courtship, and such fair contents of love
As shall conveniently become you there.'
And even there, his eye being big with tears,
Turning his face, he put his hand behind him,
And with affection wondrous sensible
He wrung Bassanio's hand; and so they parted.
Salan. I think, he only loves the world for him.
I pray thee, let us go, and find him out,
And quicken his embraced heaviness
With some delight or other.

Salar. Do we so. [Exeunt.

SCENE IX.—Belmont. An Apartment in Portia's House.

Enter Nerissa, with a Servitor.

Ner. Quick, quick, I pray thee; draw the curtains straight.

The prince of Arragon hath taken his oath,
And come to his election presently.

Enter the Prince of Arragon, Portia, and their train.

Flourish cornets. Curtains withdrawn.

Por. Behold, there stand the caskets, noble princes.
If you choose that wherein I am contain'd,
Straight shall our nuptial rites be solemniz'd;
But if you fail, without more speech, my lord,
You must be gone from hence immediately.

Ar. I am enjoin'd by oath to observe three things:
THE MERCHANT OF VENICE. 175

First, never to unfold to any one
Which casket 't was I chose: next, if I fail
Of the right casket, never in my life
To woo a maid in way of marriage: lastly,
If I do fail in fortune of my choice, immediately to leave you and be gone.

Por. To these injunctions every one doth swear,
That comes to hazard for my worthless self.

Ar. And so have I addressed me. Fortune now
To my heart's hope!—Gold, silver and base lead.
What chooseth me must give and hazard all he hath:"
You shall look fairer, ere I give, or hazard.
What says the golden chest? ha! let me see:—
What chooseth me shall gain what many men desire.

What many men desire:—that many may be meant
By the foul multitude, that choose by show,
Yet learning more than the fond eye doth teach:
Which prize not th' interior, but, like the martlet,
Builds in the weather, on the outward wall,
Eyes in the force and road of casualty.
I will not choose what many men desire,
Because I will not jump with common spirits,
And rank me with the barbarous multitudes.

Why, then to thee, thou silver treasure-house;
Tell me once more what title thou dost bear:
What chooseth me shall gain by their wit to lose;
And well said too; for who shall go about
To ozen fortune, and be honourable,
Without the stamp of merit? Let none presume
To wear an undeserved dignity.
O! that estates, degrees, and offices,
Were not deriv'd corruptly; and that clear honour
Were purchas'd by the merit of the wearer!
How many then should cover, that stand bare;
How many be commanded, that command:
How much low peasantry would then be glean'd
From the true seed of honour; and how much honour
Pick'd from the chaff and ruin of the times,
To be new varnish'd! Well, but to my choice:

"Who chooseth me shall stand as much as he deserves."
I will assume dessert:—give me a key for this,
And instantly unlock my fortunes here.

[He opens the silver casket.]

Por. Too long a pause for that which you find there.

Ar. What's here? the portrait of a blinking idiot,
Presenting me a schedule? I will read it.

How much unlike art thou to Portia?
How much unlike my hopes, and my deservings!

"Who chooseth me shall have as much as he deserves?"
Did I deserve no more than a fool's head?
Is that my prize? are my deserts no better?

Por. To offend, and judge, are distinct offices,
And of opposed natures.

Ar. What is here?

"The fire seven times tried this:
Seven times tried that judgment is,
That did never choose amiss.
Some there be that shadows kiss;
Such have but a shadow's bliss.
There be fools alive, I wis,
Silver'd d' e'r; and so was this.
Take what wife you will to bed,
I will ever be your head;
So begone: you are sped.
Still more fool I shall appear
By the time I linger here:
With one fool's head I came to woo,
But I go away with two.—
Sweet, adieu. I'll keep my oath,
Patiently to bear my wretch.

[Exeunt Arragon, and train.

Por. Thus hath the candle sing'd the moth.
O, these deliberate fools! when they do choose,
They have the wisdom by their wit to lose.

Ner. The ancient saying is no heresy:
Hanging and wiving go by destiny.

Por. Come, draw the curtain, Nerissa.

[Draws.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Where is my lady?

Por. Here; what would my lord?

Mess. Madam, there is a lightheart at your gate.

Por. What's there? to signify the approaching of his lord,
From whom he bringeth sensible regrets?
To wit, (besides commends, and courteous breath,) Gifts of rich value; yet I have not seen
So likely an ambassador of love.
A day in April never came so sweet,
To show how costly summer was at hand,
As this fore-supper comes before his lord.

Por. No more, I pray thee: I am half afeard,
Thou wilt say anon he is some kin to thee,
Thou spendest such high-day wit in praising him.—
Come, come, Nerissa; for I long to see
Cupid's quick post, that comes so mannerly.

Ner. Bassanio, lord Love, if thy will it be. [Exeunt.]"
Salan. And Shylock, for his own part, knew the bird was fledged; and then, it is the complexion of them all to leave the aim.

Shy. She is damned for it.

Salar. That’s certain, if the devil may be her judge.

Shy. My own flesh and blood to rebel!

Salar. Out upon it, old carrion! rebels it at these years?

Shy. I say, my daughter is my flesh and blood.

Salar. There is more difference between thy flesh and hers, than between jet and ivory; more between thy bloods, than there is between red wine and rhenish. But tell us, do you hear whether Antonio have any loss at sea or no?

Shy. There I have another bad match: a bankrupt, a prodigal, who dare scarce show his head on the Rialto—a beggar, that was wont to come smug upon the mart. Let him look to his bond: he was wont to call me usurer;—let him look to his bond: he was wont to lend money for a Christian courtesy;—let him look to his bond.

Salar. Why, I am sure, if he forfeit, thou wilt not take his flesh: what’s that good for?

Shy. To bait fish withal: if it will feed nothing else, it will feed my revenge. He hath disgraced me, and hindered me half a million; laughed at my losses, mocked at my gains, scorned my nation, thwarted my bargains, cooled my friends, heated mine enemies; and what’s his reason? I am a Jew. Hath not a Jew eyes? hath not a Jew hands, organs, dimensions, senses, affections, passions? fed with the same food, hurt with the same weapons, subject to the same diseases, healed by the same means, warmed and cooled by the same winter and summer, as a Christian is? if you prick us, do we not bleed? if you tickle us, do we not laugh? if you poison us, do we not die? and if you wrong us, shall we not revenge? If we are like you in the rest, we will resemble you in that. If a Jew wrong a Christian, what’s his humility? revenge. If a Christian wrong a Jew, what should his sufferance be at the Jew’s example? why, revenge. The villainy you teach me, I will execute; and it shall go hard but I will better the instruction.

Enter a Servant.

Serv. Gentlemen, my master Antonio is at his house, and desires to speak with you both.

Salar. We have been up and down to seek him.

Salan. Here comes another of the tribe: a third cannot be matched, unless the devil himself turn Jew.

[Exeunt Salan, Salar, and Servant.

Enter Tubal.

Shy. How now, Tubal? what news from Genoa? hast thou found my daughter?

Tub. Ye, other men have ill luck too. Antonio, as I heard in Genoa,—

Shy. What, what, what? ill luck, ill luck?

Tub. — hath an argosy cast away, coming from Tripolis.

Shy. I thank God! I thank God! Is it true? is it true?

Tub. I spoke with some of the sailors that escaped the wreck.

Shy. I thank thee, good Tubal.—Good news, good news! ha! ha!—Where? in Genoa?

Tub. Your daughter spent in Genoa, as I heard, one night, fourscore ducats.

Shy. Thou stick’st a dagger in me. I shall never see my gold again. Fourscore ducats at a sitting? fourscore ducats!

Tub. There came divers of Antonio’s creditors in my company to Venice, that swear he cannot choose but break.

Shy. I am very glad of it. I’ll plague him; I’ll torture him: I am glad of it.

Tub. One of them showed me a ring, that he had of your daughter for a monkey.

Shy. Out upon her! Thou tormentest me, Tubal: it was my turquoise; I had it of Leah, when I was a bachelor: I would not have given it for a wilderness of monkeys.

Tub. But Antonio is certainly undone.

Shy. Nay, that’s true, that’s very true. Go, Tubal, fee me an officer: bespeak him a fortnight before. I will have the heart of him, if he forfeit; for, were he out of Venice, I can make what merchandise I will. Go, Tubal, and meet me at our synagogue: go, good Tubal; at our synagogue, Tubal.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Belmont. An Apartment in Portia’s House.

Enter Bassanio, Portia, Grattiano, Nerissa, and their Attendants.

Por. I pray you tarry: pause a day or two, Before you hazard; for, in choosing wrong, I lose my company; therefore, forbear a while. There’s something tells me, (but it is not love,) I would not lose you, and you know yourself, Hate counsels not in such a quality. But lest you should not understand me well, And yet a maiden hath no tongue but thought, I would detain you here some month or two, Before you venture for me. I could teach you, How to choose right, but then I am forsworn; So will I never be: so may you miss me; But if you do, you’ll make me wish a sin, That I had been forsworn. Beshrew your eyes, They have o’er-look’d me, and divided me; One half of me is yours, the other half yours.—Mine own, I would say; but if mine, then yours, And so all yours! O! these naughty times Put bars between the owners and their rights; And so, though yours, not yours.—Prove it so, Let fortune go to hell for it,—not I. I speak too long; but it’s to pause the time, To eke it, and to draw it out in length, To stay you from election.

Bass. Let me choose; For, as I am, I live upon the rack.

Por. Upon the rack, Bassanio? then confess What treason there is mingled with your love. Bass. None, but that ugly treason of mistrust, Which makes me fear th’ enjoyment of my love.

1 that used; in f.o. 2 it was a popular superstition, that this stone doth more when there is saye peril prepared to him who weareth it. 3 Charmed. 4 poise: in f.o.
There may as well be amity and life
'Tween snow and fire, as treason and my love.
For, Ay, but, I fear, you speak upon the rack,
Where men enforced do speak any thing.
Bass. Promise me life, and I'll confess the truth.
Por. Well then, confess, and live.
Bass. Confess, and love,
Had been the very sum of my confession.
Oh happy torment, when my torturer
Bids teach me answers for deliverance! [Drown aside.]
But let me to my fortune and the caskets. [Curtains]
Por. Away then. I am lock'd in one of them:
If you do love me, you will find me out.—
Neros, and the rest, stand all aloof.—
Let music sound while he doth make his choice;
Then, if he lose, he makes a swan-like end,
Fading in music: that the comparison
May stand more proper, my eye shall be the stream,
And watery death-bed for him. He may win,
And what is music then? then music is Even as the flourishment when true subjects bow
To a new-crowned monarch: such it is,
As are those dulcet sounds in break of day,
That creep into the dreaming bridegroom's ear,
And summon him to marriage. Now he goes,
With no less presence, but with much more love,
Than young Alcmen, so when he did redeem
The virgin tribute paid by howling Troy
To the sea-monster: I stand for sacrifice,
The rest aloof are the Dardanian wives,
With bleared visages, come forth to view
The issue of th' exploit. Go, Hercules!
Live thou, I live:—with much, much more dismay
I view the fight, than thou that mak'st the fray.

A Song, the whilst Bassanio comments on the caskets to himself.
Tell me, where is fancy bred,
Or in the heart, or in the head?
How begot, how nourished?
Reply, reply.
It is engender'd in the eyes,
With gazing fed; and fancy dies
In the cradle where it lies.
Let us all ring fancy's knell;
I'll begin it,—Ding, dong, bell.
All. Ding, dong, bell.

Bass. So may the outward shows be least themselves:
The world is still deceiv'd with ornament.
In law, what plea so tainted and corrupt,
But being season'd with a gracious voice,
Preserves the show of evil? In religion,
What damned error, but some sober brow
Will bless it, and approve it with a text,
Hiding the grossness with fair ornament?
There is no vice so simple, but assumes
Some mark of virtue on his outward parts.
How many cowards, whose hearts are all as false
As sand, wear yet upon their chins
The beards of Hercules, and glowing Mars,
Who, inward search'd, have livers white as milk:
And these assume but valour's excrement,
To render them redoubled. Look on beauty,
But shall we see 'tis purchased by the weight;
When therein wear a mask in summe where,
Making them lightest that wear most of it:
Are those crested snaky golden locks,
Which make such wanton gambols with the wind,
Upon supposed fairness, often known
To be the dowry of a second head,
The scull that bred them, in the sopplchar.
Thus ornament is but the gullying shore
To a most dangerous sea, the beauteous scarf
Velling an Indian: beauty, in a word,
The seeming truth which cunning times put on
To entrap the wise. Therefore, thou gaudy gold,
Hard food for Midas, I will none of thee.
Nor none of thee, thou pale and common drudge
'Tween man and man: but thou, thou meagre lead,
Which rather threaten'st than dost promise aught,
Thy paleness moves me more than eloquence,
And here choose I. Joy be the consequence!
Por. How all the other passions fleet to air,
As doubtful thoughts, and rash embrac'd despair,
And shuddering fear, and green-eyed jealousy.
O love! be moderate; alay thy ecstacy:
In measure rain thy joy; scent this excess;
I feel too much thy blessing; make it less,
For fear I surprst.
Bass. What find I here? [He opens the leaden casket]
Fair Portia's counterfeit! What demi-god
Hath come so near creation? Move these eyes?
Or whether, riding on the balls of mine,
Seem they in motion? Here are sever'd lips,
Parted with sugar breath: so sweet a bar
Should sunder such sweet friends. Here, in her hair,
The painter plays the spider, and hath woven
A golden mesh 't entrap the hearts of men,
 Faster than gnats in cobwebs; but her eyes!—
How could he see to do them; having made one,
Methinks, it should have power to steal both his,
And leave itself unfinish'd: yet look, how far
The substance of my praise doth wrong this shadow
In underprizing it, so far this shadow
Doth limp behind the substance.—Here's the scroll,
The continent and summary of my fortune.
"You that choose not by the view,
Chance as fair, and choose as true!
Since this fortune fails to you,
Be content, and seek no bliss.
If you be well pleas'd with this,
And hold your fortune for your bliss,
Turn you where your lady is,
And claim her with a loving kiss."

A gentle scroll.—Fair lady, by your leave;
I come by note, to give, and to receive. [Kissing her.
Like one of two contending in a prize,
That thinks he hath done well in people's eyes,
Hearing applause, and universal shout,
Giddy in spirit, still gazing, in a doubt
Whether those plagues of praise be his or no;
So, thrice fair lady, stand I, even so,
As doubtful whether what I see be true,
Until confirm'd, sign'd, ratify'd by you.
Por. You see me, lord Bassanio, where I stand,
Such as I am: though, for myself alone
I would not be ambitious in my wish,
To wish myself much better; yet for you
I would be trebled twenty times myself;
A thousand times more fair, ten thousand times more rich,
That only to stand high in your account,
I might in virtues, beauties, living, friends,
Exceed account: but the full sum of me
Is sum of nothing; which, to term in gross,
Is an unlesson'd girl, unschoold, unpractis'd:
Happy in this, she is not yet so old.

1 This speech not in F. & ggd: in f. o. 3 f. o. have: "Velling an Indian beauty; in a word. 4 unfinished: in f. o. Steevens marked the same change. 5 So the quartus; the folio: "You see, my lord Bassanio."
But she may learn; happier than this,
She is not bred so dull but she can learn;
Happiest of all, in that her gentle spirit
Commits itself to yours to be directed,
As from her lord, her governor, her king.
Myself, and what is mine, to you, and yours
Is now converted: but now I was the lord
Of this fair mansion, master of the servants,
Queen o'er myself; and even now, but now,
This house, these servants, and this same myself,
Are yours, my lord. I give them with this ring,
Which when you part from, lose, or give away,
Let it press the ruin of your love,
And be my vantage to exclaim on you. [Giving it.]

Bass. Madam, you have bereft me of all words:
Only my blood speaks to you in my veins;
And there is such confusion in my powers,
As after some oration, fairly spoke
By a beloved prince, there doth appear
Among the buzzing pleased multitude;
Where every something, being blent together,
Turns to a wild of nothing, save of joy,
Express'd, and not express'd. But when this ring
Parts from this finger, then parts life from hence:
O! then be bold to say, Bassanio's dead.

Ner. My lord and lady, it is now our time,
That we have stood by, and seen our wishes prosper,
To cry, good joy. Good joy, my lord, and lady!

Gra. My lord Bassanio, and my gentle lady!
I wish you all the joy that you can wish,
For, I am sure, you can wish none from me;
And, when your honours mean to solemnize
The bargain of your faith, I do beseech you,
Even at that time I may be married too.

Bass. With all my heart, so thou canst get a wife.

Gra. I thank your lordship, you have got me one.
My eyes, my lord, can look as swift as yours:
You saw the mistress, I beheld the maid;
You lov'd, I lov'd; for intermission
No more pertains to me, my lord, than you.
Your fortune stood upon the caskets there,
And so did mine too, as the matter falls;
For wooing here, until I sweat again,
And swearing, till my very tongue was dry
With wishes of love, at last, if promise last;
I got a promise; this fair one here,
To have her love, provided that your fortune
Achiev'd her mistress.

Por. Is this true, Nerissa?

Ner. Madam, it is, so you stand pleas'd withal.

Bass. And do you, Gratiano, mean good faith?

Gra. Yes, 'tis faith, my lord. [marriage.

Bass. Our feast shall be much honour'd in your

Gra. We'll play with them the first boy for a thousand ducats.

Ner. What, and stake down?

Gra. No; we shall ne'er win at that sport, and stake down.

Por. But who comes here? Lorenzo, and his infidel?
What! and my old Venetian friend, Salerio?

Enter Lorenzo, Jessica, and Salerio.

Bass. Lorenzo, and Salerio, welcome hither,
If that the youth of my new interest here
Have taught you to cherish your welcome—By your leave
I bid my very friends and countrymen,

Sweet Portia, welcome.

Por. Do so I, my lord:

They are entirely welcome.

Lor. I thank your honour.—For my part, my lord,

My purpose was not to have seen you here.
But meeting with Salerio by the way,
He did entreat me, past all saying nay,
To come with him along.

Saler. I did, my lord,
And I have reason for it. Signior Antonio
Commends him to you. [Gives Bassanio a letter.

Bass. Ere I open this letter, my lord,
I pray you, tell me how my good friend doth.

Saler. Not sick, my lord, unless it be in mind;
Nor well, unless in mind: his letter there
Will show you his estate. [BASSANIO reads.]

Gra. Nerissa, cheer you stranger; bid her welcome.

Your hand, Salerio: what's the news from Venice?
How doth that royal merchant, good Antonio?
I know, he will be glad of our success;
We are the Junes, we have won the fleece.

Saler. I would you had won the fleece that he hath lost!

Por. There are some shrewd contents in you same paper,
That steal the colour from Bassanio's cheek:
Some dear friend dead, else nothing in the world
Could turn so much the constitution
Of any constant man. What's, worse and worse?—
With leave, Bassanio; I am half yourself,
And I must freely have the half of any thing
That this same paper brings you.

Bass. O sweet Portia! Here are a few of the unpleasant'st words
That ever blotted paper. Gentle lady,
When I did first impart my love to you,
I freely told you, all the wealth I had
Ran in my veins—I was a gentleman:
And then I told you true, and yet, dear lady,
Rating myself at nothing, you shall see
How much I was a braggart. When I told you
My state was nothing, I should then have told you,
That I was worse than nothing; for, indeed,
I have engag'd myself to a dear friend,
Engag'd my friend to his more enemy,
To feed my means. Here is a letter, lady;
The paper as the body of my friend,
And every word in it a gaping wound,
Issuing life-blood.—But is it true, Salerio?
Have all his ventures fail'd?—Or last, not one hit?
From Tricoli, from Messina, and England,
From Lisbon, Barbary, and India?
And not one vessel 'scap'd the dreadful touch
Of merchant-marring rocks?

Saler. Not one, my lord.
Besides, it should appear, that if he bad
The present money to discharge the Jew,
He would not take it. Never did I know
A creature, that did bear the shape of man,
So keen and greedy to confound a man.
He plies the duke at morning, and at night,
And doth impeach the freedom of the state,
If they deny him justice: twenty merchants,
The duke himself, and the magnificoes
Of greatest port, have all persuaded with him,
But none can drive him from the envious plea
Of forfeiture, of justice, and his bond.

Jes. When I was with him I have heard him swear
To Tunis, that he would rather have Antonio's flesh,
Than twenty times the value of the sum
That he did owe him; and I know, my lord,
If law, authority, and power deny not,
It will go hard with poor Antonio.
THE MERCHANT OF VENICE.

SCENE IV.

Por. Is it your dear friend that is thus in trouble?

Bass. The dearest friend to me, the kindest man,
The best condition’d and unwearied spirit,
In doing good; and one in whom
The ancient Roman honour more appears,
Than any that draws breath in Italy.

Por. What sum owes he the Jew?

Bass. For me, three thousand ducats.

Por. What! no more?

Pay him six thousand, and deface the bond:
Doubled six thousand, and then treble that,
Before a friend of this description
Shall lose a hair through my Bassanio’s fault.
First, go with me to church, and call me wife,
And then away to Venice to your friend;
For never shall you lie by Portia’s side
With an unquiet soul. You shall have gold
To pay the petty debt twenty times over;
When it is paid, bring your true friend along.
My maid Nerissa and myself, mean time,
Will live as maids and widows. Come, away!
For you shall hence upon your wedding-day.
Bid your friends welcome, show a merry cheer;
See your ward brought, I will love you dear.

But let me hear the letter of your friend.

Bass. (Reads.) “Sweet Bassanio, my ships have all miscarried, my creditors grow cruel, my estate is very low, my bond to the Jew is forfeit; and since in paying it is impossible I should live, all debts are clerked between you and I, if I might but see you at my death. Notwithstanding, use your pleasure: if your love do not persuade you to come, let not my letter make you think I would not love you.”

Por. O love! despatch all business, and be gone.

Bass. Since I have your good leave to go away,
I will make haste; but till I come again,
No bed shall o’er be guilty of my stay;
Nor rest be interpos’d twixt us twain.  [Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—Venice. A Street.

Enter Shylock, Salanio, Antonio, and Jailor.

Shy. Jailor, look to him: tell not me of mercy.—
That is the foot that licks’ out money gratis.—
Jailor, look to him.

Ant. Hear me yet, good Shylock.

Shy. I’ll have my bond; speak not against my bond;
I have sworn an oath that I will have my bond.
You call’d me dog before thou hadst a cause,
But since I am a dog, beware my fangs.
The duke shall grant me justice.—I do wonder,
That naughty jailor, that thou art so fond
To come abroad with him at his request.

Ant. I pray thee, hear me speak.

Shy. I’ll have my bond; I will not hear thee speak;
I’ll have my bond, and therefore speak no more.
I’ll not be made a soft and dull-eyed fool,
To shake the head, relent, and sigh, and yield
To Christian intercessors. Follow not;
I’ll have no speaking: I will have my bond.

[Exit Shylock.]

Sal. It is the most impenetrable cur,
That ever kept with men.

Ant. Let him alone: I’ll follow him no more with bootless prayers.
It seeks my life; his reason well I know.
Let deliver’d from his forfeitures
May that have at times made moan to me;
Therefore he hates me.

Sal. I am sure, the duke

Will never grant this forfeiture to hold.

Ant. The duke cannot deny the course of law;
For the commodity that strangers have
With us in Venice, if it be denied;
Will much impeach the justice of the state;
Since that the trade and profit of the city
Consisteth of all nations. Therefore, go:
These griefs and losses have so ‘bated me,
That I shall hardly spare a pound of flesh
To-morrow to my bloody creditor.—

Well, jailor, on.—Pray God, Bassanio come
To see me pay his debt, and then I care not. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—Belmont. A Room in Portia’s House.

Enter Portia, Nerissa, Lorenzo, Jessica, and Balthazar.

Lor. Madam, although I speak it in your presence,
You have a noble and a true conceit
Of god-like amity; which appears most strongly
In bearing thus the absence of your lord.
But, if you knew to whom you show this honour,
How true a gentleman you send relief,
How dear a lover of my lord, your husband,
I know, you would be prouder of the work,
Than customary bounty can enforce you.

Por. I never did repent for doing good,
Nor shall not now: for in companions
That do converse and waste the time together,
Whose souls do bear an equal yoke of love,
There must be needs a like proportion
Of lineaments, of manners, and of spirit;
Which makes me think, that this Antonio,
Being the bosom lover of my lord,
Must needs be like my lord. If it be so,
How little is the cost I have bestowed,
In purchasing the semblance of my soul
From out the state of hellish cruelty!

This comes too near the praising of myself,
Therefore, no more of it: hear other things.—

Lorenzo, I commit into your hands
The husbandry and manage of my house,
Until my lord’s return: for mine own part,
I have toward heaven breath’d a sacred vow
To live in prayer and contemplation,
Only attended by Nerissa here,
Until her husband and my lord’s return.
There is a monastery two miles off,
And there we will abide. I do desire you
Not to deny this imposition,
The which my love, and some necessity,
Now lays upon you.

Lor. Madam, with all my heart:
I shall obey you in all fair commands.

Por. My people do already know my mind,
And will acknowledge you and Jessica
In place of lord Bassanio and myself.
So fare you well, till we shall meet again.

Lor. Faith, and happy hours, attend on you!
Jes. I wish your ladyship all heart’s content.

Por. I thank you for your wish, and am well-pleas’d
To wish it back on you: fare you well, Jessica.——

[Exeunt Jessica and Lorenzo.]

Now, Balthazar.

As I have ever found thee honest, true,
So let me find thee still. Take this same letter,
And use thou all the endearments of a man,
In speed to Padua: see thou render this
Into my cousin’s hand, doctor Bellario;
And, look, what notes and garments he doth give thee.

---

In the quarto, the folio: leends.
Bring them, I pray thee, with imag'rin'd speed
Unto the Tranquet, to the common ferry
Which trades to Venice. Waste no time in words,
But get thee gone: I shall be there before thee.
Balz. Madam, I go with all convenient speed. [Exit.
Por. Come on, Nerissa: I have work in hand,
That you yet know not of. We'll see our husbands,
Before they think of us.

Net. Shall they see us?
Por. They shall, Nerissa: but in such a habit,
That they shall think we are accomplished
With that we lack. I'll hold thee any wager,
When we are both accoutred like young men,
I'll prove the prettier fellow of the two,
And wear my dagger with the braver grace;
And speak between the change of man and boy,
With a reed voice; and turn two mincing steps
Into a manly stride; and speak of frays,
Like a fine bragging youth; and tell quaint lies,
How honourable ladies sought my love,
While I denying, they fell sick and died;
I could not do with 'em:—then, I'll repent,
And wish, for all that, that I had not kill'd them.
And twenty of these puny lies I'll tell,
That men shall swear, I have discontinued school
Above a twelvemonth. I have within my mind
A thousand raw tricks of these bragging Jacks,
Which I will practise.

Net. Why, shall we turn to men?
Por. Fie! what a question's that,
If thou wilt wear a Jew's interpreter.
But come: I'll tell thee all my whole device
When I am in my coach, which stays for us
At the park gate: and therefore haste away,
For we must measure twenty miles to-day. [Exeunt.

SCENE V.—The Same. A Garden.

Enter Launcelot and Jessica.

Laun. Yes, truly; for, look you, the sins of the father are to be laid upon the children; therefore, I promise you, I fear you. I was always plain with you, and so now I speak my agitation of the matter: therefore, be of good cheer; for, truly, I think, you are damned.
There is but one hope in it that can do you any good,
and that is but a kind of bastard hope neither.

Jes. And what hope is that, I pray thee?

Laun. Marry, you may partly hope that your father got you not; that you are not the Jew's daughter.

Jes. That were a kind of bastard hope, indeed: so the sins of my mother should be visited upon me.

Laun. Truly, then, I fear you are damned both by father and mother: thus when I shun Scylla, your father, I fall into Charybdis, your mother. Well, you are gone both ways.

Jes. I shall be saved by my husband; he hath made me a Christian.

Laun. Truly, the more to blame he: we were Christians enow before: 'en as many as could well live one by another. This making of Christians will raise the price of hogs: if we grow all to be pork-eaters, we shall not shortly have a rasher on the coals for money.

Enter Lorenzo.

Jes. I'll tell my husband, Launcelot, what you say:
here he comes.

Lor. I shall grow jealous of you shortly, Launcelot, if you thus get my wife into corners.

Jes. Nay, you need not fear us, Lorenzo: Launcelot and I are out. He tells me flatly, there's no mercy for me in heaven, because I am a Jew's daughter; and he says, you are no good member of the commonwealth, for in converting Jews to Christians, you raise the price of pork.

Lor. I shall answer that better to the commonwealth, than you can the getting up of the negro's belly: the Moor is with child by you, Launcelot.

Laun. It is much, that the Moor should be more than reason; but if she be less than an honest woman, she is, indeed, more than I took her for.

Lor. How every fool can play upon the word! I think, the best grace of wit will shortly turn into silence, and discourse grow commendable in none only but parrots.—Go in, sirrah: bid them prepare for dinner.

Laun. That is done, sir; they have all stomachs.

Lor. Goodly lord, what a wit-snarer are you! then, bid them prepare dinner.

Laun. That is done too, sir; only, cover is the word.

Lor. Will you cover then, sir?

Laun. Not so, sir, neither; I know my duty.

Lor. Yet more quarrelling with occasion! Wilt thou show the whole wealth of thy wit in an instant? I pray thee, understand a plain man in his plain meaning: go to thy fellows, bid them cover the table, serve in the meat, and we will come in to dinner.

Laun. For the table, sir, it shall be served in, for the meat, sir, it shall be covered; for your coming in to dinner, sir, why, let it be as humours and conceits shall govern.

[Exit Launcelot.

Lor. O, dear discretion, how his words are suited!
The fool hath planted in his memory
An army of good words; and I do know
A many fools, that stand in better place,
Garnish'd like him, that for a trickey word
Defy the matter. How cheer'st thou, Jessica?
And now, good sweet, say thy opinion;
How dost thou like the lord Bassanio's wife?

Jes. Past all expressing. It is very meet,
The lord Bassanio live an upright life,
For, having such a blessing in his lady,
He finds the joys of heaven here on earth;
And, if on earth he do not mean it, then,
In' reason he should never come to heaven.
Why, if two gods should play some heavenly match,
And on the wager lay two earthly women,
And Portia one, there must be something else
Paw'd with the other, for the poor rude world
Hath not her fellow.

Lor. Even such a husband
Hast thou of me, as she is for a wife.

Jes. Nay, but ask my opinion, too, of that.

Lor. I will anon; first, let us go to dinner.

Jes. Nay, let me praise you, while I have a stomach

Lor. No, pray thee, let it serve for table talk;
Then, however thou speakest, 'mong other things
I shall digest it.

Jes. Well, I'll set you forth. [Exeunt}
ACT IV.

SCENE I.—Venice. A Court of Justice.

Enter the Duke; the Magnificoes: Antonio, Bassanio, Gratiano, Salario, Salanio, and others.

Duke. What is Antonio here?

Ant. Ready, so please your grace.

Duke. I am sorry for thee: thou art come to answer
A many adversary, an inhuman wretch
Incapable of pity, void and empty
From any dram of mercy.

Ant. I have heard, Your grace hath taken great pains to qualify
His rigorous course; but since he stands obdurate,
And that no lawful means can carry me
Out of his envy’s reach, I do oppose
My patience to his fury, and am arm’d
To suffer with a quietness of spirit,
The very tyranny and rage of his.

Duke. Go on, and call the Jew into the court.

Sal. He’s ready at the door. He comes, my lord.

Enter Shylock.

Duke. Make room, and let him stand before our face.—

Shylock, the world thinks, and I think so too,
That thou but lead’st this fashion of thy malice
To the last hour of act; and then, ’t is thought,
Thou’lt show thy mercy and remorse, more strange
Than thy strange apparent cruelty;
And where thou now exact’st the penalty,
Which is a pound of this poor merchant’s flesh,
Thou wilt only lose the forfeiture,
But touch’d with human gentleness and love,
Receive a moiety of the principal;
Rancing an eye of pity on his losses,
That have of late so huddled on his back,
Know to press a royal merchant down,
And plight commiseration of his state
From brassy booms, and rough hearts of flint,
From stubborn Turks and Tartars, never train’d
To offices of tender courtesy.
We all expect a gentle answer, Jew.
Shy. I have possess’d your grace of what I purpose;
And by our holy Sabbath have I sworn
To have the due and forfeit of my bond:
If you deny it, let the danger light
Upon your charter, and your city’s freedom.
You’ll ask me, why I rather choose to have
A weight of carrion flesh, than to receive
The thousand ducats? I’ll not answer that:
But say, it is my humour: is it answer’d?
What if my house be troubled with a rat,
And I be pleas’d to give ten thousand ducats
To have it banish’d? What, are you answer’d yet?
Some men there are love not a gaping pig;
Some, that are mad if they behold a cat;
And others, when the bag-pipe singes i’ the nose,
Cannot contain their urine for affections.
Masters of passion away; it to the mood
What it likes, or loathes. Now, for your answer:
There is no firm reason to be render’d,
Why be cannot abide a gaping pig?

Note. * The old copies have “lose.” * The old copies have “sways.” Knight reads the passage thus:

* The old copies have “sways,” Master of passion, sways it, &c.

[fn. e. a.] The old copies have “sways,” &c. Knight reads the passage thus:

* Master of passion, sways it, &c.

You may as well use question with the wolf.
Why he hath made the ewe bleat for the lamb.

Why he, a harmless necessary cat;
Why he, a bollent bag-pipe: but of force
Must yield to such inevitable shame,
As to offend, himself being offended,
So can I give no reason, nor I will not,
More than a lodg’d hate, and a certain loathing,
I bear Antonio, that I follow thus
A losing suit against him. Are you answer’d?

Bass. This is no answer, thou unfeeling man,
To excuse the current of thy cruelty.

Shy. I am not bound to please thee with my answer.

Bass. Do all men kill the things they do not love?

Shy. Hates any man the thing he would not kill?

Bass. Every offence is not a hate at first.

Shy. What! wouldst thou make a serpent sting thee twice?

Ant. I pray thee, think you question with the Jew.
You may as well go stand upon the beach.
And bid the main flood bate his usual height;
Or e’en as well use question with the wolf,
When you behold the blear’d eye of the lamb;*
You may as well forbid the mountain pines
To wag their high tops, and to make no noise,
When they are fretten with the gusts of heaven;
You may as well do any thing most hard,
As seek to soften that (than which what’s harder?)
His Jewish heart.—Therefore, I do beseech you,
Make no more offers, use no farther means,
But with all brief and plain conveniency,
Let me have judgment, and the Jew his will.

Bass. For thy three thousand ducats here is six.

Shy. If every ducat in six thousand ducats
Were in six parts, and every part a ducat,
I would not draw them: I would have my bond.

Duke. How shall thou hope for mercy, rendering none?

Shy. What judgment shall I dread, doing no wrong?
You have among you many a purchaser’s slave,
Which, like your asses, and your dogs, and mules,
You use in abject and in slavish parts,
Because you bought them:—shall I say to you,
Let them be free; marry them to your heirs?
Why sweat they under burdens? let their beds
Be made as soft as yours, and let their palates
Be season’d with such viands? You will answer,
The slaves are ours.—So do I answer you:
The pound of flesh, which I demand of him,
Is dearly bought, ’tis mine, and I will have it.
If you deny me, fie upon your law!
There is no force in the decrees of Venice.
I stand for judgment: answer; shall I have it?

Duke. Upon my power I may dismiss this court,
Unless Bellario, a learned doctor,
Whom I have sent forth to determine this,
Come here to-day.

Salar. My lord, here stays without
A messenger with letters from the doctor,
New come from Padua.

Duke. Bring us the letters: call the messenger.

Salar. Good morrow, Antonio! What man, courage yet! The Jew shall have my flesh, blood, bones, and all,
Ere thou shalt lose for me one drop of blood.

Ant. I am a tainted weather of the flock,
Mectest for death: the weakest kind of fruit
Drops easiest to the ground, and so let me.
You cannot better be employ'd, Bassanio,
Than to live still, and write mine epitaph.

Enter Nerissa, dressed like a lawyer's clerk.

Duke. Came you from Padua, from Bellario?

Ner. From both, my lord. Bellario greeets your grace.

[Presenting a letter.

Bass. Why dost thou what thy knife so earnestly?

[SHYLOCK whets his knife.]

Sky. To cut the forfeiture from that bankrupt there.

Gra. Not on thy sole, but on thy soul, harsh Jew,
Thou mak'st thy knife keen; but no metal can
No, not the hangman's axe, bear half the keenness
Of thy sharp envy. Can no prayers pierce thee?

Sky. No, none that thou hast wit enough to make.

Gra. O, be thou damned, inexorable dog,
And for thy life let justice be accus'd! Thou knowest
Thou almost mak'st me weaver in my faith,
To hold opinion with Pythagoras,
That souls of animals infuse themselves
Into the trunks of men: thy curious spirit
Govern'd a wolf, who, hang'd for human slaughter,
Even from the gallows did his fellow soul fleet,
And whilst thou lay'st in thy unhallow'd dam,
Infus'd itself in thee; for thy desires
Are wolfish, bloody, starv'd, and ravenous.

Sky. Till thou canst rai[t] the seal from off my bond,
Thou but offend'st thy tongue to speak so loud.
Repair thy wit, good youth, or it will fall
To curseless ruin.—I stand here for law.

Duke. This letter from Bellario doth command
A young and learned doctor to our court.—
Where is he?

Ner. He attendeth here hard by,
To know your answer, whether you 'll admit him.

Duke. With all my heart:—some three or four of you,
Go give him courteous conduct to this place.—

Mean time, the court shall hear Bellario's letter.

[ Clerk reads. ] "Your grace shall understand, that at the receipt of your letter I am very sick; but in the instant that your messenger came, in loving visitation was with me a young doctor of Rome; his name is Balthazar. I acquainted him with the cause in controversy between the Jew and Antonio, the merchant: we turned o'er many books together: he is furnished with my opinion; which, better'd with his own learning, the greatness whereof I cannot enough commend, comes with him, at my importunity, to fill up your grace's request in my stead. I beseech you, let his lack of years be no impediment to let him lack a reverend estimation, for I never knew so young a body with so old a head. I leave him to your gracious acceptance, whose trial shall bettter publish his commendation."

Duke. You hear the learned Bellario, what he writes:
And here, I take it, is the doctor come.—

[Enter Portia, dressed like a doctor of laws.]

Give me your hand. Came you from old Bellario?

Por. I did, my lord.

Duke. You are welcome: take your place.
Are you acquainted with the difference
That holds this present question in the court?

Por. I am informed thoroughly of the cause.—

Which is the merchant here, and which the Jew?

Duke. Antonio and old Shylock, both stand forth.

Por. Is your name Shylock?

Sky. Shylock is my name.

Por. Of a strange nature is the suit you follow;
Yet in such rule, that the Venetian law
Cannot impugn you, as you do proceed.—
You stand within his danger, do you not? [To Antonio]

Ant. Ay, so he says.

Por. Do you confess the bond?

Ant. I do.

Por. Then must the Jew be merciful.

Sky. On what compulsion must I? tell me that.

Por. The quality of mercy is not strain'd,
It dropeth as the gentle rain from heaven
Upon the place beneath: it is twice bless'd;
It blesseth him that gives, and him that takes:
'Tis mightiest in the mightiest; it becomes
The crowned monarch better than his crown:
His sceptre shows the force of temporal power,
The attribute to awe and majesty,
Wherein doth sit the dread and fear of kings;
But mercy is above this sceptred sway:
It is enthroned in the hearts of kings,
It is an attribute to God himself,
And earthly power doth then show likest God's,
When mercy seasons justice. Therefore, Jew,
Though justice be thy plea, consider this,—
That in the course of justice none of us
Should see salvation: we do pray for mercy,
And that same prayer doth teach us all to render
The deeds of mercy. I have spoke thus much,
To mitigate the justice of thy plea,
Which if thou follow, this strict court of Venice
Must needs give sentence 'gainst the merchant there.

Sky. My deeds upon my head. I crave the law;
The penalty and forfeit of my bond.

Por. Is he not able to discharge the money?

Bass. Yes, here I tender it for him in the court;

Yes, twice the sum: if that will not suffice,
I will be bound to pay it ten times o'er,
On forfeit of my hands, my head, my heart.
If this will not suffice, it must appear
That malice bears down truth: and, I beseech you,
Wrest once the law to your authority:
To do a great right, do a little wrong.
And curb this cruel devil of his will.

Por. It must not be. There is no power in Venice
Can alter a decree established:—
'Twill be recorded for a precedent,
And many an error, by the same example,
Will rush into the state. It cannot be.

Sky. A Daniel come to judgment! yes, a Daniel!—
O, wise young judge! how I do honour thee!
Por. I pray you, let me look upon the bond.

Sky. Here 'tis, most reverend doctor; here it is;—

[Shewing it.]

Por. Shylock, there's thine thy money offer'd thee.

Sky. An oath, an oath, I have an oath in heaven:
Shall I lay perjury upon my soul?

No, not for Venice.

Por. Why, this bond is forfeit,
And lawfully by this the Jew may claim
A pound of flesh, to be by him cut off
Nearest the merchant's heart.—Be merciful;
Take thine thy money: bid me tear the bond.

Sky. When it is paid according to the tenor.—

It doth appear you are a worthy judge;
You know the law; your exposition
Hath been most sound: I charge you by the law,
Whereof you are a well-deserving pillar.
Proceed to judgment. By my soul I swear,

* Not in f. e. * f. e., in part: inexcusable. * An old phrase for being in the power of, as well as, subdued to. * Not in f. e.
THE MERCHANT OF VENICE.

There is no power in the tongue of man
To alter me. I stay here on my bond.

Act. Most heartily I do beseech the court
To give the judgment.

Por. Why, then, thus it is:—
You must prepare your bosom for his knife
Sky. O, noble judge! O, excellent ye man!
Por. For the intent and purpose of the law,
Hath full relation to the penalty,
Which here appeareth due upon the bond.
Sky. 'Tis very true. O, wise and upright judge!
How much more elder art thou than thy looks!
Por. Therefore, lay bare thy bosom.

Sky. Ay, his breast;
So says the bond:—doth it not, noble judge?—
Nearest his heart: those are the very words.
Por. It is so. Are there balance here to weigh
The flesh?

Sky. I have them ready. [Producing scales.
Por. Have by some surgeon, Shylock, on your charge,
To stop his wounds, lest he do bleed to death.
Sky. Is it so nominated in thy bond?
Por. It is not so express'd; but what of that?
T'would give you so much for charity.
Sky. I cannot find it: 'tis not in the bond.
Por. You, merchant, have you any thing to say?
Act. But little: I am arm'd, and well prepar'd.

Give me your hand, Bassanio: fare you well.
Grieve not that I am fallen to this for you,
For herein fortune shows herself more kind
Than is her custom: it is still her use
To let the wretched man out-live his wealth,
To view with hollow eye, and wrinkled brow,
An age of poverty; from which lingering penance
Of such misery doth she cut me off.

Commend me to your honourable wife:
Tell her the process of Antonio's end;
Say how I lov'd you, speak me fair in death;
And when the tale is told, bid her be judge,
Whether Bassanio had not once a lover.

Let me tell you that you shall lose your friend,
And be repaid not that he pays your debt;
For if the Jew do cut but deep enough,
I'll pay it instantly with all my heart.
Bass. Antonio, I am married to a wife,
Which is as dear to me as life itself;
In like myself, my wife, and all the world,
Are not with me esteem'd above thy life:
I would lose all, ay, sacrifice them all,
Here to this devil, to deliver you.
Por. Your wife would give you little thanks for that,
If she were by to hear you make the offer.
Gra. I have a wife, whom, I protest, I love;
I would she were in heaven, so she could
Extrem some power to change this curriish Jew.
Nor. 'Tis well you offer it behind her back;
The wish would make else an unsuited house.
Sky. These be the Christian husbands! I have a daughter:
Would I may of the stock of Barabbas;
Had been her husband, rather than a Christian!
We tribe times; I pray thee, pursue sentence.

Por. A pound of that same merchant's flesh is thine:
The court awards it, and the law doth give it.

Sky. Most rightful judge!
Por. And you must cut this flesh from off his breast:
The law allows it, and the court awards it.

Sky. Most learned judge!—A sentence! come, prepare!
[Showing the scales again.
Por. Tarry a little: there is something else;
This bond doth give thee here no jot of blood;
The words expressly are, a pound of flesh:
Take then thy bond, take thou thy pound of flesh;
But, in the cutting it, if thou dost shed
One drop of Christian blood, thy lands and goods
Are by the laws of Venice confiscate
Unto the state of Venice.
Gra. O upright judge!—Mark, Jew:—O learned judge!
Sky. Is that the law?
Por. Thyself shalt see the act;
For, as thou urggest justice, be assur'd,
Thou shalt have justice, more than thou desirest.
Gra. O learned judge!—Mark, Jew:—a learned judge!
Sky. Take his offer then: pay the bond thrice,
And let the Christian go.
Bass. Here is the money.
Por. Soft! The Jew shall have all justice;—soft!—no haste:
He shall have nothing but the penalty.
Gra. O Jew! an upright judge, a learned judge!
Por. Therefore, prepare thee to cut off the flesh.
Shed thou no blood; nor cut thou less, nor more,
But just a pound of flesh: if thou tak'st more,
Or less, than a just pound,—be it so much
As makes it light, or heavy, in the balance;
Or the division of the twentieth part
Of one poor scruple: may, if the scale do turn
But in the estimation of a hair,
Thou diest, and all thy goods are confiscate.
Gra. A second Daniel, a Daniel, Jew!
Now, incul'd, I have thee on the hip.
Por. Why doth the Jew pause? Take thy forfeiture.
Sky. Give me my principal, and let me go.
Bass. I have it ready for thee: here it is.
Por. He hath refuse'd it in the open court:
He shall have merely justice, and his bond.
Gra. A Daniel, still say I; a second Daniel!—
I thank thee, Jew, for teaching me that word.
Sky. Shall I not have barely my principal?
Por. Thou shalt have nothing but the forfeiture,
To be so taken at thy peril, Jew.
Sky. Why then the devil give him good of it.
I'll stay no longer question.
Por. Tarry, Jew:
The law hath yet another hold on you.
It is enacted in the laws of Venice,
If it be prov'd against an alien,
That by direct, or indirect attempts,
He seek the life of any citizen,
The party, 'gainst the which he doth contrive,
Shall seize one half his goods: the other half
Comes to the privy coffers of the state;
And the offender's life lies in the mercy
Of the duke only, 'gainst all other voice.
In which pred'ament, I say, thou stand'st.

Por. For it appears by manifest proceeding,
That, indirectly, and directly too,
Thou hast contriv'd against the very life
Of the defendant, and thou hast incur'd
The danger formerly by me reheard'd.
Down, therefore, and beg mercy of the duke.

Gra. Beg, that thou may'st have leave to hang thyself:

*See f. 9. * So to the quarter; the folio: "should." * The folio reads: "Come." * mod. eda. usually read: "Barrabas." * This sentence not in f. 9. * substance in f. e.
THE MERCHANT OF VENICE.

ACT IV.

And yet, thy wealth being forfeit to the state,
Thou hast not lost the value of a cord;
Therefore, thou must be hang'd at the state's charge.

Duke. That thou shalt see the difference of our spirit.
I pardon thee thy life before thou ask it.
For half thy wealth, it is Antonio's:
The other half comes to the general state,
Which humbleness may drive unto a fine.

Por. Ay, for the state; not for Antonio.

Shy. Nay, take my life and all: pardon not that:
You take my house, when you do take the prop
That doth sustain my house; you take my life,
When you do take the means whereby I live.

Por. What remedy can you render him, Antonio?

Gra. A halter gratis; nothing else, for God's sake!

Ant. So please my lord the duke, and all the court.
To quit the fine for one half of his goods,
I am content, so he will let me have
The other half in use, to render it,
Upon his death, unto the gentleman
That late stole his daughter:
Two things provided—(that, for this favour,
He presently becomes a Christian);
The other, that he do record a gift,
Here in the court, of all he dies possess'd,
Unto his son Lorenzo, and his daughter.

Duke. He shall do this, or else I do recant
The pardon, that I late pronounced here.

Por. Art thou contented, Jew? what dost thou say?
Shy. I am content.

Por. Clerk, draw a deed of gift.

Shy. I pray you, give me leave to go from hence.
I am not well. Send the deed after me,
And I will sign it.

Duke. Get thee gone, but do it.

Gra. In christening thou shalt have two godfathers:
Had I been judge, thou shoul'dst have had ten more,
To bring thee to the gallows, not the font. [Exit Shylock.

Duke. Sir, I entreat you home with me to dinner.

Por. I humbly do desire your grace of pardon:
I must away this night toward Padua,
And it is meet I presently set forth.

Duke. I am sorry, that your leisure serves you not.
Antonio, gratify this gentleman,
For, in my mind, you are much bound to him.

[Exeunt Duke, Magnificoes, and train.

Bass. Most worthy gentleman, I and my friend
Have by your wisdom been this day acquitted
Of grievous penalties; in lieu whereof,
These thousand ducats, due unto the Jew,
We freely cede your courteous pains withal.

Ant. And stand indebted, over and above,
In love and service to you evermore.

Por. He is well paid, that is well-satisfied;
And I, delivering you, am satisfied,
And therein do account myself well paid:
My mind was never yet more mercenary.
I pray you, know me, when we meet again;
I wish you well, and so I take my leave.

Bass. Dear sir, of force I must attempt you farther:
Take some remembrance of us, as a tribute,
Not as a fee. Grant me two things, I pray you;
Not to deny me, and to pardon me.

Por. You press me far, and therefore I will yield.
Give me your gloves, I'll wear them for your sake;
And, for your love, I'll take this ring from you.—
Do not draw back your hand; I'll take no more.
And you in love shall not deny me this.

Bass. This ring, good sir?—alas, it is a trifl;
I will not shame myself to give you this.

Por. I will have nothing else but only this;
And now, methinks, I have a mind to it.

Bass. There's more depends on this, than on the value.
The dearest ring in Venice will I give you,
And find it out by proclamation;
Only for this, I pray you, pardon me.

Por. I see, sir, you are in liberal offers:
You taught me first to beg, and now, methinks,
You teach me how a beggar should be answer'd.

Bass. Good sir, this ring was given me by my wife;
And when she put it on she made me vow,
That I should neither sell, nor give, nor lose it.

Por. That's true: she serves many men to save their gifts.
An if your wife be not a mad woman,
And know how well I have devis'd this ring,
She would not hold out enemy for ever,
For giving it to me. Well, peace be with you.

[Exeunt Portia and Nerissa.

Ant. My Lord Bassanio, let him have the ring,
Let his deservings, and my love withal,
Be valued against your wife's commandment.

Bass. Go, Gratiano: run and overtake him,
Give him the ring, and bring him if thou canst,
Unto Antonio's house.—Away! make haste.

[Exeunt Gratiano.

Enter. Come, you and I will thither presently,
And in the morning early will we both
Fly toward Belmont. Come, Antonio.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II. — The Same. — A Street.

Enter Portia and Nerissa.

Por. Inquire the Jew's house out, give him this deed,
And let him sign it. We'll away to-night,
And be a day before our husbands home. This deed will be well welcome to Lorenzo.

Enter Gratiano running.

Gra. Fair sir, you are well o'erta'en.

My lord Bassanio, upon more advice,
Hath sent you here this ring, and doth entreat
Your company at dinner.

Por. That cannot be.
His ring I do accept most thankfully,
And so, I pray you, tell him: furthermore,
I pray you, show my youth old Shylock's house.

Gra. That will I do.

Ner. Sir, I would speak with you.—
I'll see if I can get my husband's ring. [To Portia.
Which I did make him swear to keep for ever.

Por. Thou may'st; I warrant. We shall have old swearing.
That they did give the rings away to men;
But we'll outface them, and outwear them too.
Away! make haste: thou know'st where I will tarry.

Ner. Come, good sir; will you show me to this house?

[Exeunt.
ACT V.

SCENE I.—Belmont. The Avenue to Portia's House.

Enter Lorenzo and Jessica.

Lor. The moon shines bright.—In such a night as this,
When the sweet wind did gently kiss the trees,
And they did make no noise; in such a night,
When the demesne, mounted the Trojan walls,
And sigh’d his soul toward the Grecian tents,
Where Crossaid lay that night.
Jes. In such a night,
Did Thise fearfully o'ertrip the dew;
And saw the lion's shadow ere himself,
And ran dismay'd away.

Lor. In such a night,
Sool Dido with a willow in her hand
Ipn the wild sea-banks, and wav'd her love
To come again to Carthage.
Jes. In such a night,
Meera gather'd the enchanted herbs
That did renew old Æsop.

Lor. In such a night,
Did Jessica steal from the wealthy Jew,
And with an unbriff love did run from Venice,
As far as Belmont.

Jes. In such a night,
Did young Lorenzo swear he lov’d her well,
Selling her soul with many vows of faith,
And ne’er a true one.

Lor. In such a night,
Did pretty Jessica, like a little shrew,
Sinner her love, and he forgave it her.
Jes. I would out-night you, did no body come;
But, hark, I hear the footing of a man.

Enter Stephano.

Lor. Who comes so fast in silence of the night?
Step. A friend.

Lor. A friend? what friend? your name, I pray you?
Step. Stephano is my name; and I bring word,
My mistress will be before the break of day
Be here at Belmont: she doth strait about
By holy crosses, where she kneels and prays
For happy wedlock hours.

Jes. Who comes with her?
Step. None, but a holy hermit, and her maid.
Jes. Pray you, is my master yet return’d?
Lor. He is not; nor we have not heard from him.
But go we in, I pray thee, Jessica,
And ceremoniously let us prepare
Some welcome for the mistress of the house.

Enter Launcelet.

Laun. Sola, sola! wo ha, ho! sola, sola!
Lor. Who calls?
Laun. Sola! did you see master Lorenzo, and miss-ess Lorenzo? sola, sola!

Lor. Leave hallooing, man; here.

Laun. Sola! where? where?
Lor. Here.

Laun. Tell him, there’s a post come from my master,
Wth his horn full of good news: my master will be Here to morrow morning. [Exit.

Lor. Sweet soul, let’s in, and there expect their coming.
And yet no matter;—why should we go in?

My friend Stephano, signify, I pray you,
Within the house, your mistress is at hand;
And bring your music forth into the air.—

[Exit Stephano.

How sweet the moonlight sleeps upon this bank!
Here we will sit, and let the sounds of music
Creep in our ears: soft stillness, and the night,
Become the tomb of sweetenness, and the nurse
Of tender love: look, how the floor of heaven
Is thick inlaid with patterns of bright gold;
There’s not the smallest orb, which thou beholdest,
But in his motion like an angel sings.
Still quiring to the young-eyed cherubims:
Such harmony is in immortal souls;
But, whilst this muddy vessel of decay
Doth grossly close it in, we cannot hear it.

Enter Musicians.

Come, ho! and wake Diana with a hymn;
With sweetest touches pierce your mistress’ ear,
And draw her home with music.

Jes. I am never merry when I hear sweet music.
Lor. The reason is, your spirits are attentive:
For do—but note a wild and wanton herd,
On race of youthful and unhandled colts,
Fetching mad bounds, bellowing, and neighing loud,
Which is the hot condition of their blood,
If they but hear, perchsance, a trumpet sound,
Or any air of music touch their ears,
You shall perceive them make a mutual stand,
Their savage eyes turn’d to a modest gaze,
By the sweet power of music: therefore, the post
Did feign that Orpheus drew trees, stones, and floods,
Since nought so stockish, hard, and full of rage,
But music for the time doth change his nature.
The man that hath no music in himself,
Nor is not mov’d with concord of sweet sounds,
Is fit for treasons, and tyrannies, and spoils:
The motions of his spirit are dull as night,
And his affections dark as Erebus.
Let no such man be trusted.—Mark the music.

[Music again.]

Enter Portia and Nerissa, at a distance.

Por. That light we see is burning in my hall.
How far that little candle throws his beams!
So shines a good deed in a naughty world.
Ner. When the moon shone, we did not see the candle.
Por. So doth the greater glory dim the less:
A substitute shines bright as a king,
Until a king be by: and then his state
Empty itself, as doth an inland brook
Into the main of waters. Music! bark!
Ner. It is your music, madam, of the house.
Por. Nothing is good, I see, without respect:
Methinks, it sounds much sweeter than by day.
Ner. Silence bestows that virtue on it, madam.
Por. The crow doth sing as sweetly as the lark,
When neither is attended: and, I think,
The nightingale, if she should sing by day,
When every goose is cackling, would be thought
No better a musician than the wren.
How many things by season reason’d are
To their right praise, and true perfection!—
Peace! now the moon sleeps with Eutydym, And would not be awak’d!—

[Music ceases.

Lor. That is the voice,
Or I am much deceiv'd, of Portia.

Por. He knows me as the blind man knows the cuckoo,
By the bad voice.

Lor. Dear lady, welcome home.

Por. We have been praying for our husbands' welfare,
Which speed, we hope, the better for our words.
Are they return'd?

Lor. Madam, they are not yet; But there is come a messenger before,
To signify their coming.

Por. Go in, Nerissa; Give order to my servants, that they take
No note at all of our being absent hence;—
Nor you, Lorenzo;—Jessie, nor you.

[A tucket sound.]

Lor. Your husband is at hand: I hear his trumpet.

We are no tell-tales, madam; fear you not.

Por. This night, methinks, is but the daylight sick;
It looks a little paler: 't is a day,
Such as the day is when the sun is hid.

Enter BASSANIO, ANTONIO, GRATIANO, and their followers.

Bass. We should hold day with the Antipodes,
If you would walk in absence of the sun.

Por. Let me give light, but let me not be light;
For a light wife doth make a heavy husband,
And never be Bassanio so for me:
But God sort all:—You are welcome home, my lord.

Bass. I thank you, madam. Give welcome to my friend:

This is the man, this is Antonio,
To whom I am so infinitely bound.

Por. You should in all sense be much bound to him,
For, as I hear, he was much bound for you.

Ant. No more than I am well acquainted of.

Por. Sir, you are very welcome to our house;
It must appear in other ways than words,
Therefore, I scant this breathing courtesy.

Gra. [To Nerissa.] By yonder moon, I swear, you do me wrong;
In faith, I gave it to the judge's clerk:
Would he were gelt that had it, for my part,
Since you do take it, love, so much at heart.

Por. A quarrel, ho, already! what's the matter?

Gra. About a hoop of gold, a paltry ring
That she did give to me: whose poesy was
For all the world, like cutlers' poetry
Upon a knife: "Love me, and leave me not."

Ner. What talk you of the poesy, or the value?
You swore to me, when I did give it you,
That you would wear it till your hour of death,
And that it should lie with you in your grave:
Though not for me, yet for your vehement oaths,
You should have been respective, and have kept it.
Give it a judge's clerk! no, God's my judge,*
The clerk will ne'er wear hair on 's face, that had it.

Gra. He will, an if he live to be a man.

Ner. Ay, if a woman live to be a man.

Gra. Now, by this hand, I gave it to a youth,
A kind of boy; a little scrubbed boy,
No higher than thyself, the judge's clerk;
A prating boy, that begg'd it as a fee:
I could not for my heart deny it him.

Por. You were to blame, I must be plain with you,
To part so slightly with your wife's first gift;
A thing stuck on with oaths upon your finger,
And so riveted with faith unto your flesh.
I gave my love a ring, and made him swear

Never to part with it; and here he stands:
I dare be sworn for him, he would not leave it
Nor pluck it from his finger for the wealth
That the world masters. Now, in faith, Gratiano
You give your wife too unkind a cause of grief:
An 't were to me, I should be mad at it.

Bass. [Aside.] Why, I were best to cut my left hand
And swear I lost the ring defending it.

Gra. My lord Bassanio gave his ring away
Unto the judge that begg'd it; and, indeed,
Deserv'd it too; and then the boy, his clerk,
That took some pains in writing, he begg'd mine;
And neither man, nor master, would take aught
But the two rings.

Por. What ring, gave you, my lord?

Not that, I hope, which you receiv'd of me.

Bass. If I could add a lie unto a fault,
I would deny it; but you see, my finger
Hath not the ring upon it: it is gone.

Por. Even so void is your false heart of truth.
By heaven, I will never come in your bed
Until I see the ring.

Ner. Not in yours,
Till I again see mine.

Bass. Sweet Portia, If you did know to whom I gave the ring,
If you did know for whom I gave the ring,
And would conceive for what I gave the ring,
And how unwillingly I left the ring,
When naught would be accepted but the ring,
You would abate the strength of your displeasure.

Por. If you had known the virtue of the ring,
Or half her worthiness that gave the ring,
Or your own honour to retain the ring,
You would not then have parted with the ring.
What man is there so much unreasonable,
If you had pleas'd to have defended it
With any terms of zeal, wanted the modesty
To urge the thing held as a ceremony?

Nerissa teaches me what to believe:
I'll die for 't, but some woman had the ring.

Bass. No, by mine honour, madam, by my soul,
No woman had it; but a civil doctor,
Which did refuse three thousand ducats of me,
And begg'd the ring, the which I did deny him,
And suffer'd him to go displeas'd away,
Even he that had held up the very life
Of my dear friend. What should I say, sweet lady?
I was enforc'd to send it after him;
I was beset with shame and courtesy;
My honour would not let ingratitude
So much besmirch. Pardon me, good lady,
For, by these blessed candles of the night,
Had you been there, I think, you would have begg'd
The ring of me to give the worthy doctor.

Por. Let not that doctor e'er come near my house.
Since he hath got the jewel that I lov'd,
And that which you did swear to keep for me,
I will become as liberal as you:
I'll not deny him any thing I have;
No, not my body, nor my husband's bed.
Know him I shall, I am well sure of it:
Lie not a night from home; watch me like Argus;
If you do not, if I be left alone,
Now, by mine honour, which is yet mine own,
I'll have that doctor for my bad fellow.

Ner. And I his clerk; therefore, be well advis'd
How you do leave me to mine own protection.

Scene I.

THE MERCHANT OF VENICE.

Grat. Well, do you so: let not me take him then; For if I do, I’ll mar the young clerk’s pen.

Ant. I am the unhappy subject of these quarrels.

Por. Sir, grieve not you; you are welcome notwithstanding.

Bass. Portia, forgive me this enforced wrong; And in the hearing of these many friends I swear to thee, even by thine own fair eyes, Wherein I see myself.——

Por. Mark you but that! In both my eyes he doubly sees himself; In each eye, one:—swear by your double self, And there’s an oath of credit.

Bass. Nay, but hear me. Pardon this fault, and by my soul I swear, I never more will break an oath with thee.

Ant. I once did lend my body for his wealth, Which but for him that had your husband’s ring, Had quite miscarried: I dare be bound again, My soul upon the forfeit, that your lord Will never more break faith advisedly.

Por. Then, you shall be his surety. Give him this, And bid him keep it better than the other.

Ant. Here, lord Bassanio; swear to keep this ring.

Bass. By heaven! it is the same I gave the doctor.

Por. It had it of him:—pardon me, Bassanio, For by this ring the doctor lay with me.

Ner. And pardon me, my gentle Gratiano, For that same scrubbed boy, the doctor’s clerk, In lieu of this last night did lie with me.

Grat. Why, this is like the mending of highways In summer, when’t the ways are fair enough. What! are we cuckolded? are we have deserved it?

Por. Speak not so grumly.—You are all amaz’d: Here is a letter, read it at your leisure;

It comes from Padua, from Bellario: There you shall find, that Portia was the doctor; Nerissa there, her clerk. Lorenzo here, Still witness I set forth as soon as you,

And even but now return’d: I have not yet
Enter’d my house.—Antonio, you are welcome; And I have better news in store for you, Than you expect: unseal this letter soon; There you shall find, three of your argosies Are richly come to harbour suddenly. You shall not know by what strange accident I chanced on this letter.

Ant. I am dumb.

Bass. Were you the doctor, and I knew you not?

Gra. Were you the clerk, that is to make me cuckold?

Ner. Ay; but the clerk that never means to do it, Unless he live until he be a man.

Bass. Sweet doctor, you shall be my bedfellow: When I am absent, then, lie with my wife.

Ant. Sweet lady, you have given me life and living, For here I read for certain that my ships Are safely come to land.

Por. How now, Lorenzo? My clerk hath some good comforts, too, for you.

Ner. Ay, and I’ll give them him without a fee.— There do I give to you and Jessica, From the rich Jew, a special deed of gift, After his death, of all he dies possess’d of.

Lor. Fair ladies, you drop manna in the way Of starved people.

Por. It is almost morning. And yet, I am sure, you are not satisfied Of these events at full. Let us go in; And charge us there upon inter-gatories, And we will answer all things faithfully.

Gra. Let it be so: the first inter-gatory, That my Nerissa shall be sworn on, is, Whether till the next night she had rather stay, Or go to bed now, being two hours to day? But were the day come, I should wish it dark, Till I were couching with the doctor’s clerk. Well, while I live, I’ll fear no other thing So sore, as keeping safe Nerissa’s ring. [Exeunt.
AS YOU LIKE IT.

DRAMATIÆ PERSONÆ.

DUKE, Senior, living in exile.
FREDERICK, his Brother, usurper of his dominions.
AMIOES, Lords attending upon the exiled Duke.
JACQUES, Duke.
LE BEAU, a Courtier.
OLIVER, Sons of Sir Rowland de Bois.
JACQUES, Servants to Oliver.
ORLANDO, Son of Sir Rowland de Bois.
ADAM, Servants to Oliver.
DENIS, A Wrestler.

Lords; Pages, Foresters, and Attendants.

The SCENE lies, first, near Oliver's House; afterwards in the Usurper's Court, and in the Forest of Arden.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—An Orchard, near OLIVER's House.

Enter ORLANDO and ADAM.

Orl. As I remember, Adam, it was upon this fashion: he bequeathed me by will but a poor thousand crowns; and, as thou say'st, charged my brother on his blessing to breed me well: and there begins my sadness. My brother Jaques he keeps at school, and report speaks goldenly of his profit: for my part, he keeps me rustically at home, or, to speak more properly, stays me here at home unkept; for call you that keeping for a gentleman of my birth, that differs not from the stalling of an ox? His horses are bred better; for, besides that they are fair with their feeding, they are taught their manage, and to that end riders dearly hired: but I, his brother, gain nothing under him but growth, for which his animals on his dunghills are as much bound to him as I. Besides this nothing that he so plentifully gives me, the something that nature gave me, his countenance seems to take from me: he lets me feed with his hinds, bars me the place of a brother, and, as much as in him lies, mines my gentility with my education. This is it: Adam, that grieves me; and the spirit of my father, which I think is within me, begins to mutiny against this servitude. I will no longer endure it, though yet I know no wise remedy how to avoid it.

Adam. Yonder comes your master, your brother.

Orl. Go apart. Adam, and thou shalt hear how he will shake me up.

[ADAM RETIRES.

Enter OLIVER.

Oli. Now, sir! what make you here?

Orl. Nothing: I am not taught to make any thing.

Oli. What mar you then, sir?

Orl. Marry, sir, I am helping you to mar that which God made, a poor unworthy brother of yours, with idleness.

saries as may become a gentleman, or give me the poor allettry my father left me by testament: with that I will buy my fortunes.
Oh! And what wilt thou do? beg, when that is grat? Well, sir, get you in: I will not long be troubled with you; you shall have some part of your will.
I pray you, leave me.
Oh! I will no further offend you, than becomes me for my good.
Oh! Got you with him, you old dog.
Heem. Is old dog my reward? Most true, I have lost my teeth in your service.—God be with my old master! he would not have spoke such a word.
[Exit ORLANDO and ADAM.
Oh! Is it even so? begin you to grow upon me? I will use your ranknament, and yet give no thousand owns neither. Hola, Dennis!
[Enter DENNIS.
Deu. Calls your worship?
Oh! Was not Charles, the duke's wrestler, here to speak with me?
Deu. So please you, he is here at the door, and im-pertures access to you.
Oh! Call him in. [Exit DENNIS.]—'T will be a good say; and to-morrow the wrestling is.
[Enter CHARLES.
He. Good morrow to your worship.
[Enter Good Monsieur Charles, what's the news at the new court?
Oh! There's no news at the court, sir, but the old news: that is, the old duke is banished by his younger brother the new duke, and three or four loving lords have put themselves into voluntary exile with him, and lands and revenues enrich the new duke; therefore he gives them good leave to wander.
Oh! Can you tell, if Rosalind, the old duke's daughter, be banished with her father?
He. O! no; for the new duke's daughter, her name, so loves her, being ever from their cradles bred together, that she would have followed her exile, or die lived to stay behind her. She is at the court, and no less beloved of her uncle than his own daughter: and never two ladies loved as they do.
Oh! Where will the old duke live?
He. They say, he is already in the forest of Arden, and many merry men with him: and there they live like the old Robin Hood of England. They say, many young gentlemen flock to him every day, and feast the meat carelessly, as they did in the golden world.
Oh! What, you wrestle to-morrow before the new knight?
He. Marry, do I, sir; and I came to acquaint you with a matter. I am given, sir, secretly to understand, that your younger brother, Orlando, hath a disposition to come in disguised against me, to try a fall. Tomorrow, sir, I wrestle for my credit, and he that escapes me without some broken limb shall acquit him well.
Your brother is but young, and tender; and, for your little love, I would be loath to fill him, as I must for my own honour if he come in: therefore, out of my love to you I came hither to acquaint you withal, that other might stay him from his intend'd, or such disgrace well as he shall run into, in that thing of his own search, and altogether against my will.
Oh! Charles, I thank thee for thy love to me, which, that shall find, I will most kindly requite. I had cy-notices of my brother's purpose herein, and have, understand means, laboured to dissuade him from it; but he is resolute. I'll tell thee, Charles: it is the stubbornest young fellow of France; full of ambition, an envious emulator of every man's good parts, a secret and villainous contriver against me his natural brother: therefore, use thy discretion. I had as lief thou didst break his neck as his finger: and thou wert best look to 't; for if thou dost him any slight disgrace, or if he do not mightly grace himself on thee, he will practise against thee by poison, entrap thee by some treacherous device, and never leave thee till he hath ta'en thy life by some indirect means or other; for, I assure thee (and almost with tears I speak it) there is not one so young and so villainous this day living. I speak but brotherly of him: but should I anatomize him to thee as he is, I must blush and weep, and thou must look pale and wonder.
[Enter OLIVIER.
Cha. I am heartily glad I came hither to you. If he come to-morrow, 'twill give him his payment: if ever he go alone again, I'll never wrestle for prize more.
And so, God keep your worship! [Exit.]
Oh! Farewell, good Charles.—Now will I sit as this gamester. I hope, I shall see an end of him; for my soul, yet I know not why, hates nothing more than he:
yet he's gentle; never schooled, and yet learned; full of noble device; of all sorts enchantingly beloved, and, indeed, so much in the heart of the world, and especially of my own people, who best know him, that I am altogether misprised. But it shall not be so long; this wrestler shall clear all: nothing remains, but that I kine able the boy thither, which now I'll go about. [Exit.]

SCENE II.—A Lawn before the Duke's Palace.
[Enter ROSALIND and CELIA.
Cel. I pray thee, Rosalind, sweet my coz, be merry.
Ras. Dear Celia, I show more mirth than I am mistress of, and would you yet I were merrier? Unless you could teach me to forget a banished father, you must not learn me how to remember any extraordinary pleasure.
Cel. Herein, I see, thou lovest me not with the full weight that I love thee. If my uncle, thy banished father, had banished thy uncle, the duke my father, so thou hadst been still with me, I could have taught my love to take thy father for mine: so wouldst thou, if the truth of thy love to me were so righteously tempered, as mine is to thee.
Ras. Well, I will forget the condition of my estate, and rejoice in yours.
Cel. You know, my father hath no child but I, nor none is like to have; and, truly, when he dies, thou shalt be his heir: for what he hath taken away from thy father perforce, I will render thee again in affection: by mine honour, I will; and when I break that oath let me turn monster. Therefore, my sweet Rose, my dear Rose, be merry.
Ras. From henceforth I will, coz, and devise sports.
Let me see; what think you of falling in love?
Cel. Marry, I pray thee, do, to make sport withal; but love no man in good earnest; nor no further in sport neither, than with safety of a pure blush thou may'st in honour come off again.
Ras. What shall our sport then?
Cel. Let us sit, and mock the good housewife, Fortune, from her wheel, that her gifts may henceforth be bestowed equally.
Ras. I would, we could do so; for her benefits are mightily misplaced, and the bountiful blind woman does most mistake in her gifts to women. Cel. 'T is true, for those that she makes fair, she scares makes honest; and those that she makes honest, she makes very ill-favoured.

Ros. Nay, now you goest from fortune's office to nature's: fortune reigns in gifts of the world, not in the lineaments of nature.

Enter Touchstone.

Col. No: when nature hath made a fair creature, may she not by fortune fall into the fire?—Though nature hath given us wit to flout at fortune, hath not fortune sent in this fool to cut off the argument?

Ros. Indeed, there is fortune too hard for nature, when fortune makes nature natural the cutter off of nature's wit.

Col. Peradventure, this is not fortune's work neither, but nature's: who, perceiving our natural wits too dull to reason of such goddesses, hath sent this natural for our whetstone: for always the dulness of the fool is the whetstone of the wits.—How now, wit? whither wander you?

Touch. Mistress, you must come away to your father.

Col. Were you made the messenger?

Touch. Not, by mine honour; but I was bid to come for you.

Ros. Where learned you that oath, fool?

Touch. Of a certain knight, that swore by his honour they were good pancakes, and swore by his honour the mustard was naught: now, I'll stand to it, the pancakes were naught, and the mustard was good, and yet was not the knight forsworn.

Col. How prove you that, in the great heap of your knowledge?

Ros. Ay, marry, now unmuzzle your wisdom.

Touch. Stand you both forth now; stroke your chins, and swear by your beards that I am a knave.

Col. By our beards, if we had them, thou art.

Touch. By my knavery, if I had it, then I were; but if you swear by that which is not, you are not forsworn: no more was this knight, swearing by his honour, for he never had any; or if he had, he had sworn it away before over he saw those pancakes, or that mustard.

Col. Pr'ythee, who is 't that thou mean'st?

Touch. One that old Frederick, your father, loves.

Ros. My father's love is enough to honour him enough. Speak no more of him: you'll be whipped for taxation, one of these days.

Touch. The more pity, that fools may not speak wisely, what wise men do foolishly.

Col. By my troth, thou say'st true: for since the little wit that fools have was silenced, the little foolery that wise men have makes a great show. Here comes monsieur Le Beau.

Enter Le Beau.

Ros. With his mouth full of news.

Col. Which he will put on us, as pigeons feed their young.

Ros. Then-shall we be news-cramm'd.

Col. All the better: we shall be the more marketable.

Bonjour, monsieur Le Beau: what's the news?

Le Beau. Fair princess, you have lost much good sport.

Col. Spot? Of what colour?

Le Beau. What colour, madam? How shall I answer you?

Ros. As wit and fortune will.

Touch. Or as the destinies decree.

Col. Well said: that was laid on with a trowel.

Touch. Nay, if I keep not my rank,—

Ros. Thou losest old smell.

Le Beau. You amase4 me, ladies: I would have told you of good wrestling, which you have lost the sight of.

Ros. Yet tell us the manner of the wrestling.

Le Beau. I will tell you the beginning: and, if it please your ladyships, you may see the end, for the best is yet to do: and here, where you are, they are coming to perform it.

Col. Well,—the beginning, that is dead and buried.

Le Beau. There comes an old man, and his three sons.

Col. I could match this beginning with an old tale.

Le Beau. Three plainer young men, of excellent growth and presence—

Ros. With bills4 on their necks,—“Be it known unto all men by these presents,”—

Le Beau. The eldest of the three wrestled with Charles, the duke's wrestler; which Charles in a moment threw him, and broke three of his ribs, that there is little hope of life in him: so he served the second, and so the third. Yonder they lie, the poor old man, their father making such pitiful dole over them, that all the beholders take his part with weeping.

Ros. Alas!

Touch. But what is the sport, monsieur, that the ladies have lost?

Le Beau. Why, this that I speak of.

Touch. Thus men may grow wiser every day! it is the first time that ever I heard breaking of ribs was sport for ladies.

Col. Or I, I promise thee.

Ros. But is there any else longs to see this broken music in his sides? is there yet another dotes upon rib-breaking?—Shall we see this wrestling, cousin?

Le Beau. You must, if you stay here; for here is the place appointed for the wrestling, and they are ready to perform it.

Col. Yonder, sure, they are coming: let us now stay and see it.

Flourish. Enter Duke Frederick, Lords, Orlando, Charles, and Attendants.

Duke F. Come on: since the youth will not be entreated, his own peril on his forwardness.

Ros. Is yonder the man?

Le Beau. Even he, madam.

Col. Alas! he is too young: yet he looks successfully.

Duke F. How now, daughter, and cousin! are you crept hither to see the wrestling?

Ros. Ay, my liege, so please you give us leave.

Duke F. You will take little delight in it, I can tell you, there is such odds in the men4. In pity of the challenger's youth, I would fain dissuade him, but he will not be entreated: speak to him, ladies; see if you can move him.

Col. Call him hither, good monsieur Le Beau.

Duke F. Do so: I'll not be by. [Duke goes apart.

Le Beau. Monsieur the challenger, the princess calls for you.

Orl. I attend them with all respect and duty.

Ros. Young man, have you challenged Charles the wrestler?

Orl. No, fair princess: he is the general challenger. I come but in, as others do, to try with him the strength of my youth.

Col. Young gentleman, your spirits are too bold for your years. You have seen cruel proof of this man's strength: if you saw yourself with our4 eyes, or knew yourself with our4 judgment, the fear of your adventure would counsel you to a more equal enterprise. We

If you do keep your promises in love
But justly, as you have exceeded all promise,
Your revindictress shall be happy.

Gentleman.

Wear this for me, one out of suits with fortune,
That could give more, but that her hand lacks means.—
Shall we go, cos? —

Ay.—Fare you well, fair gentleman.

Can I not say, I thank you? — My better parts
Are all thrown down, and that which here stands up
Is but a quittance, a mere lifeless block.

He calls us back. My pride fell with my fortunes;
I'll ask him what he would.—Did you call, sir? —
Sir, you have wrestled well, and overthrown
More than your enemies.

Will you go, cos? —
Rox. Have with you.—Fare you well.

What passion hangs these weights upon my tongue?
I cannot speak to her, yet she urg'd conference.

Re-enter Le Beau.
O, poor Orlando! thou art overthrown.
Or Charles, or something weaker, masters thee.
Le Beau. Good sir, I do in friendship counsel you
To leave this place. Albeit you have deserv'd
High commendation, true applause, and love,
Yet such is now the duke's condition,
That he misconstrues all that you have done.
The duke is humorous: what he is, indeed,
More suits you to conceive, than me to speak of.

I thank you, sir; and, pray you, tell me this:
Which of the two was daughter of the duke,
That here was at the wrestling?

Le Beau. Neither his daughter, if we judge by manners;
But yet, indeed, the shorter is his daughter:
The other is daughter to the banish'd duke,
And here detain'd by her usurping uncle,
To keep his daughter company: whose loves
Are dearer than the natural bond of sisters.
But I can tell you, that of late this duke
Hath ta'en displeasure 'gainst his gentle niece,
Grounded upon no other argument,
But that the people prize her for her virtues,
And pity her for her good father's sake;
And, on my life, his malice 'gainst the lady
Will suddenly break forth.—Sir, fare you well;
Hereafter, in a better world than this,
I shall desire more love and knowledge of you.

I rest much bounden to you: fare you well.

Le Beau. Thus must I from the smoke into the smoother;
From tyrant duke, unto a tyrant brother.—
But heavenly Rosalind!

SCENE III.—A Room in the Palace.

Enter Celia and Rosalind.

Ced. Why, cousin; why, Rosalind.—Cupid have mercy!—Not a word?

Rox. Not one to throw at a dog.

Ced. No, thy words are too precious to be cast away
Upon curse; throw some of them at me: come, lame me
With reasons.

Rox. Then there were two cousins laid up, when the
One should be lamed with reasons, and the other maid
Without any.

Ced. But is all this for your father?
Ros. No, some of it for my father's child. O, how tull of brisa this working-day world!
Cel. They are but brisa, cousin, thrown upon thee in holiday frolics; if we walk not in the trodden paths, our very petticoats will catch them.
Ros. I could shake them off my coat; these brisa are in my heart.
Cel. Hem them away.
Ros. I would try, if I could cry him, and have him.
Cel. Come, come; wrestle with thy affections.
Ros. O! they take the part of a better wrestler than myself.
Cel. O, a good wish upon you! you will try in time, in despite of a fall.—But, turning these jests out of service, let us talk in good earnest. Is it possible, on such a sudden, you should fall into so strong a liking with old sir Bowland's youngest son?
Ros. The duke my father lov'd his father dearly.
Cel. Doth it therefore ensue, that you should love his son dearly? By this kind of chance, I should hate him, for my father had his father dearly; yet I hate not Orlando.
Ros. No, faith, hate him not, for my sake.
Cel. Why should I not? doth he not deserve well?
Ros. Let me love him for that; and do you love him, because I do.—

Enter Duke Frederick, with Lords.

Look, here comes the duke.
Cel. With his eyes full of anger.
Duke F. Mistress, dispatch you with your fastest haste,
And get you from our court.
Ros. Mo, uncle?
You, cousin:
Within these ten days if thou best'st found
So near our public court as twenty miles,
Thou diest for it.
Ros. I do beseech you, grace,
Let me the knowledge of my fault bear with me.
If with myself I hold intelligence,
Or have acquaintance with mine own desires,
If that I do not dream, or be not frantic,
(As I do trust I am not) then, dear uncle,
Never so much as in a thought unborn
Did I offend your highness.
Duke F. Thus do all traitors:
If their purgation did consist in words,
They are as innocent as grace itself.
Let it suffice thee, that I trust thee not.
Ros. Yet your mistrust cannot make me a traitor.
Tell me, whereon the likelihood depends.
Duke F. Thou art thy father's daughter; there's enough.
Ros. So was I when your highness took his dukedom;
So was I when your highness banish'd him.
Treason is not inherited, my lord;
Or if we did derive it from our friends,
What's that to me? my father was no traitor.
Then, good my liege, mistake me not so much,
To think my poverty is treacherous.
Cel. Dear sovereign, hear me speak.
Duke F. Ay, Celsus: we stay'd her for your sake;
Else had she with her father rang'd along.
Cel. I did not then entreat to have her stay:
It was your pleasure, and your own remorse.
I was too young that time to value her,
But now I know her. If she be a traitor,
Why so am I; we still have slept together,
Rose at an instant, learn'd, play'd, eat together;

And whereas'er we went, like Juno's swans,
Still we went coupled, and inseparable.
She is too subtle for thee; and her smooth,
Her very sight infects, and her patience,
Speak to the people, and they pity her.
Thou art a fool; she robs thee of thy name;
And thou wilt show more bright, and seem more virtuous
When she is gone. Then, open not thy lips:
Firm and irrevocable is my doom
Which I have pass'd upon her. She is banish'd.
Cel. Pronounce that sentence, then, on me, my liege:
I cannot live out of her company, [Duke F. You are a fool.—You, niece, provide yourself: If you cut-stay the time, upon mine honour,
And in the greatness of my word, you die.

[Exit] Duke Frederick and Lords.
Cel. O, my poor Rosalind! whither wilt thou go?
Wilt thou change fathers? I will give thee mine.
I charge thee, be not thou more grieved than I am.
Ros. I have more cause.
Cel. Thou hast not, cousin.
Pr'ythee, be cheerful: know'st thou not, the duke
Hath banish'd me, his daughter?
Ros. That he hath not.
Cel. No? hath not? Rosalind lacks, then, the love,
Which teacheth thee that thou and I am one.
Shall we be sooner'd? shall we part, sweet girl?
No: let my father seek another heir.
Therefore, devise with me how we may fly,
Whither to go, and what to bear with us:
And do not seek to take your change upon you,
To bear your griefs yourself, and leave me out;
For, by this heaven, now at our sorrows pale,
Say what thou canst, I'll go along with thee.
Ros. Why, whither shall we go?
Cel. To seek my uncle,
In the forest of Arden.
Ros. Alas, what danger will it be to us,
Maids as we are, to travel forth so far!
Beauty provoketh thieves sooner than gold.
Cel. I'll put myself in poor and mean attire,
And with a kind ofumber smirch my face.
The like do you: so shall we pass along,
And never stir assailants.
Ros. Were it not better,
Because that I am more than common tall,
That I did suit me all points like a man?
A gallant curtiz-ax upon my thigh,
A boar-spear in my hand; and, in my heart
Lie there what hidden woman's fear there will,
We'll have a swashing and a martial outside,
As many other mannish cowards have,
That do outface it with their semblances.
Cel. What shall I call thee, when thou art a man?
Ros. I'll have no worse name than Jove's own page
And therefore look you call me Ganymede.
But what will you be call'd?
Cel. Something that hath a reference to my state:
No longer Celsus, but Aliena.
Ros. But, cousin, what if we essay'd to steal
The clownish fool out of your father's court?
Would he not be a comfort to our travel?
Cel. He'll go along o'er the wide world with me;
Leave me alone to woo him. Let's away,
And get our jewels and our wealth together,
Devise the fittest time, and safest way
To hide us from pursuit that will be made
After my flight. Now go we in content
To liberty, and not to banishment.

[Exeunt Rosalind and Celsus.]
ACT II.

SCENE I.—The Forest of Arden.

Enter Duke, Senior, Amiens, and other Lords, like Foresters.

Duke S. Now, my co-mates, and my brothers in exile, Hath set old custom made this life more sweet.

Duke S. And did you leave him in this contemplation?

2 Lord. We did, my lord, weeping and commenting upon the sobbing deer.

Duke S. Show me the place.

I love to cope him in these sullen fits,

For then he's full of matter.

2 Lord. I'll bring you to him straight. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—A Room in the Palace.

Enter Duke Frederick, Lords, and Attendants.

Duke F. Can it be possible that no man saw them?

It cannot be: some villains of my court

Are of consent and sufferance in this.

1 Lord. I cannot hear of any that did see her.

The ladies, her attendants of her chamber,

Saw her a-bed, and in the morning early

They found the bed untreasur'd of their mistress.

2 Lord. My lord, the roynish clown, as whom so oft

Your grace was wont to laugh, is also missing.

Hesperia, the princess' gentlewoman,

Confesses that she secretly o'er-heard

Your daughter and her cousin much commend

The parts and graces of the wrestler,

And she believes, wherever they are gone,

That youth is surely in their company.

Duke F. Send to his brother: fetch that gallant hither;

If he be absent bring his brother to me,

I'll make him find him. Do this suddenly,

And let not search and inquisition quail

To bring again these foolish runaways. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Before Oliver's House.

Enter Orlando and Adam, meeting.

Orl. Who's there?

Adam. What, my young master?—O, my gentle master!

O, my sweet master! O, you memory

Of old Sir Rowland! why, what make you here?

Why are you virtuous? Why do people love you?

And wherefore are you gentle, strong, and valiant?

Why would you be so fond to overcome

The bony priser of the humorous duke?

Your praise is come too swiftly home before you.

Know you not, master, to some kind of men

Their graces serve them but as enemies?

No more do yours: your virtues, gentle master,

Are sanctified and holy traitors to you.

O, what a world is this, when what is comely

Envenoms him that bears it!

Orl. Why, what's the matter?

Adam. O, unhappy youth! Come not within these doors: beneath this roof

The enemy of all your gentle lives up

Envenoms him that bears it!

Orl. Why, what's the matter?

Adam. O, unhappy youth! Come not within these doors: beneath this roof

The enemy of all your gentle lives up

Your brother—no, no brother; yet the son—
Yet not the son— I will not call him son—
Of him I was about to call his father,—
Hath heard your praises, and this night he means
To burn the lodging where you use to lie,
And you within it: if he fail of that,
He will have other means to cut you off:
I overheard him, and his practices.
This is no place; this house is but a butchery:
Abhor it, fear it, do not enter it.
Orl. Why, whither, Adam, wouldst thou have me go?
Adam. No matter whither, so you come not here.
Orl. But! wouldst thou have me go and beg my food.
Or with a base and boisterous sword enforce
A thievish living on the common road.
This I must do, or know not what to do;
Yet this I will not do, how I can.
I rather will subject me to the malice
Of a diverted, proud, and bloody brother.
Adam. But do not so. I have five hundred crowns,
The thievish hire I saved under your father,
Which I did store, to be my fountain-house
When service should in my old limbs lie lame,
And unregarded age in corners thrown.
Take that; and He that doth the ravens feed,
Yea, providently eaters for the sparrow,
Be comfort to my age! Here is the gold:
All this I give you. Let me be your servant:
Though I look old, yet I am strong and lusty;
For in my youth I never did apply
Hot and rebellious liquors in my blood;
Nor did not with unasham’d forehead woo
The means of weakness and debility:
Therefore my age is as a lusty winter,
Frosty, but kindly. Let me go with you:
I’ll do the service of a younger man
In all your business and necessities.
Orl. O, good old man! how well in thee appears
The constant favour of the antique world,
When service sweet for duty, not for meed!
Thou art not for the fashion of these times,
Where none will sweat but for promotion,
And having that, do choke their service up
Even with the having: it is not so with thee.
But, poor old man, thou prunest a rotten tree,
That cannot so much as a blossom yield,
In lieu of all thy pains and husbandry.
But come thy ways: we’ll go along together,
And ere we have thy youthful wages spent,
We’ll light upon some settled low content.
Adam. Master, go on, and I will follow thee
To the last gasp with truth and loyalty.
From seventeen years, till now almost fourscore,
Here lived I, but now live here no more.
At seventeen years many their fortunes seek;
But at fourscore it is too late a week.
Yet fortune cannot recompense me better,
Than to die well, and not my master’s debtor. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—The Forest of Arden.

Enter Rosalind for Ganymede, Celia for Aliena, and Clown, alias Touchstone.

Ros. O Jupiter! how weary are my spirits!
Touch. I care not for my spirits, if my legs were not weary.
Ros. I could find in my heart to disgrace my man’s apparel,
And to cry like a woman; but I must comfort
The weaker vessel, as doublet and hose ought to show
Itself courageous to petticoats: therefore, courage, good Aliena.
Cel. I pray you, bear with me: I can go no farther.
Touch. For my part, I had rather bear with you
Than bear you: yet I should bear no cross, if I did bear you, for, I think, you have no money in your purse.
Ros. Well, this is the forest of Arden.
Touch. Ay, now art I in Arden; the more fool I:
When I was at home I was in a better place, but travellers must be content.
Ros. Ay, be so, good Touchstone.—Look you; who comes here? a young man, and an old, in solemn talk.

Enter Corin and Silvius.

Cor. That is the way to make her *c*orn you still.
Sil. O Corin, that thou knew’st how I do love her!
Cor. I partly guess, for I have lovd ere now.
Sil. No, Corin; being old, thou canst not guess,
Though in thy youth thou wast as true a lover
As ever sigh’d upon a midnight pillow:
But if thy love were ever like to mine,
As sure I think did never man love so,
How many actions most ridiculous
Hast thou been drawn to by thy fantasy?
Cor. Into a thousand that I have forgotten.
Sil. O! thou didst then ne’er love so heartily.
If thou remember’st not the slightest folly
That ever love did make thee run into,
Thou hast not lovd:
Or if thou hast not spake, as I do now,
Wearying thy hearer in thy mistress’ praise,
Thou hast not lovd:
Or if thou hast not broke from company,
Abruptly, as my passion now makes me,
Thou hast not lovd.
O Phoeb. Phoeb. Phoeb!
[Exeunt Silvius. Ros. Alas, poor shepherd! searching of thy wound
I have by hard adventure found mine own.
Touch. And mine. I remember, when I was in love I broke my sword upon a stone, and bid him take that for coming a-night to Jane Smile: and I remember the kissing of her charter; and the cow’s dugs that her pretty chapped hands had milked: and I remembre the wooing of a peaceodd instead of her; from whom took two cods, and, giving her them again, said with weeping tears, “Wear these for my sake.” We, the are true lovers, run into strange caspers; but as all I mortal in nature, so is all nature in love mortal in folly.
Ros. Thou speakest wiser than thou art aware of.
Touch. Nay, I shall ne’er be ware of mine own witt
Till I break my shins against it.
Ros. Love, love! this shepherd’s passion
Is much upon my fashion.
Touch. And mine; but
It grows something stale with me,
And begins to fail with me.
Cel. I pray you, one of you question yond man,
If he for gold will give us any food:
I faint almost to death.
Touch. Hollis, you clown!
Ros. Peace, fool: he’s not thy kinman.
Cor. Who calls?
Touch. Your better, sir.
Cor. Else are they very wretched.
Ros. Peace, I say.—

Good even to you, friend.
Cor. And to you, gentle sir; and to you all.
Ros. I pray thee, shepherd, if that love, or gold,
Can in this desert place buy entertainment,
Bring us where we may rest ourselves, and feed,
Here a young maid with travel much oppress’d,
And faints for succour.

Cor. Fair sir, I pity her,
And wish, for her sake more than for mine own,
My fortunes were more able to relieve her;
But I am shepherd to another man,
And do not shear the fleeces that I graze :
My master is of churlish disposition,
And little recks to find the way to heaven
By doing deeds of hospitality.
Besides, his cote, his flocks, and bounds of feed,
Are now on sale; and at our sheepepoate now,
In reason of his absence, there is nothing
That you will feed on; but what is, come see,
And in my voice most welcome shall you be.

Ros. What is he that shall buy his flock and pasture?
Cor. That young swain that you saw here but erstwhile,
That little cares for buying any thing.
Ros. I pray thee, if it stand with honesty,
But then the cottage, pasture, and the flock,
And shall have to pay for it of us.

Cor. And we will mend thy wages. I like this place,
And willingly could waste my time in it.

Cor. Assuredly, the thing is to be sold.
Go with me: if you like, upon report,
To see the soil, and this kind of life,
I will your very faithful feeder be,
And buy it with your gold right suddenly. [Exeunt.

SCENE V.—Another Part of the Forest.

Enter AMIEN, JAQUES, and others.

SONG.

AMI. Under the greenwood tree,
Who loves to lie with me,
And tune his merry note
Unto the sweet bird’s throat.
Come hither, come hither, come hither:
Here shall he see no enemy,
But winter and rough weather.

Jaq. More, more! I pr'ythee, more.
AMI. It will make you melancholy, monsieur Jaques.
Jaq. I thank it. More! More! I pr'ythee, more. I can not melancholy out of a song, as a weasel sucks eggs.
AMI. My voice is ragged ; I know I cannot please you.

Jaq. I do not desire you to please me; I do desire you to sing. Come, come; another stanza. Call you stanzas?
AMI. What you will, monsieur Jaques.
Jaq. Nay, I care not for their names; they owe me nothing. Will you sing?
AMI. More at your request, than to please myself.
Jaq. Well then, if ever I thank any man, I’ll thank you: but that they call compliment is like the en-masse of two dog-apes: and when a man thanks me vainly, methinks, I have not given him a penny, and he voices me the beggarly thanks. Come, sing, and re that will not, hold your tongues.
AMI. Well, I’ll end the song.——Sir, cover the while the duke will drink under this tree.——He hath been all this day to look you.
Jaq. And I have been all this day to avoid him.
I see too much for me: I think of as many matters as he, but I give heaven thanks, and take no boast of them. Come, warble; come.

SCENE VI.—The Same.

Enter Orlando and Adam.

Adam. Dear master, I can go no farther: O! I die for food. Here lie I down, and measure out my grave.
Farewell, kind master.

Orl. Why, how now, Adam! no greater heart in thee?
Lives a little; comfort a little; cheer thyself a little.
If this uncouth forest yield any thing savage,
I will either be food for it, or bring it for food to thee.
Thy conceit is nearer death than thy powers.
For my sake be comforted; hold death awhile at the arm’s end. I will here be with thee presently, and if I bring thee not something to eat, I will give thee leave to die; but if thou diest before I come, thou art a mock of my labour. Well said! thou look’st cheerily; and I’ll be with thee quickly.——Yet thou liest in the bleak air: come, I will bear thee to some shelter, and thou shall not die for lack of a dinner, if there live any thing in this desert. Cheerly, good Adam. [Exeunt.

SCENE VII.—The Same.

A Table set out. Enter Duke, Senior, Amiens,
Lords, and others.

Duke S. I think he be transform’d into a beast,
For I can no where find him like a man.

1 Lord. My lord, he is but even now gone hence:
Here was he merry, bearing of a song.

Duke S. If he, compact of jars, grow musical,
We shall have shortly discord in the spheres.—
Go, seek him: tell him, I would speak with him.

Enter JAQUES.

1 Lord. He saves my labour by his own approach.

Duke S. Why, how now, monsieur! what a life is this,
That your poor friends must woo your company!

What, you look merry.

Jaq. A fool, a fool!——I met a fool i’ the forest,
A motley fool: (a miserable world!) As I do live by food, I met a fool,
Who laid him down and bask’d him in the sun,
And rail’d on lady Fortune in good terms,
In good set terms,—and yet a motley fool.

"Good-morrow, fool," quoth I: "No, sir," quoth he.
"Call me not fool, till heaven hath sent me fortune.
And then he drew a dial from his poke,
And looking on it with lack-lustre eye,
Says very wisely, "It is ten o'clock:
Thus may we see," quoth he, "how the world wags:
'Tis but an hour ago since it was nine,
And after one hour more 'twill be eleven;
And so from hour to hour we ripe and ripe,
And then from hour to hour we rot and rot;
And thereby hangs a tale." When I did hear
The motley fool thus moral on the time,
My lungs began to crow like churlisher,
That fools should be so deep contemplative;
And I did laugh at the folly of civility,
An hour by his dial.—O, noble fool!
A worthy fool! Motley's the only wear.

Duke S. What fool is this?

Jaq. O, worthy fool!—One that hath been a courtier,
And says, if ladies be but young and fair,
They have the gift to know it; and in his brain;
Which is as dry as the remainder biscuit
After a voyage, he hath strange places cram'd
With observation, that which he vents
In manly forms.—O, that I were a fool! I am ambition's for a motley coat.

Duke S. Thou shalt have one.

Jaq. It is my only suit;
Provided, that you weed your better judgments
Of all opinion that grows rank in them,
That I am wise. I must have liberty
Withal, as large a charter as the wind,
To blow on whom I please; for so fools have:
The that are most galled with my folly,
They must most laugh. And why, sir, must they so?
The why is plain as way to parish church:
He, that a fool doth very wisely hit,
Doth very foolishly, although he smart,
But to seem senseless of the bob; if not,
The wise man's folly is anatomized,
Even by the squandering glances of the fool.
Invest me in my motley: give me leave
To speak my mind, and I will through and through Cleanse the foul body of th' infested world,
If they will patiently receive my medicine.

Duke S. Fie on thee! I can tell what thou wouldst do.

Jaq. What, for a counter, would I do, but good?

Duke S. Most mischievous foul sin, in chiding sin:
For thou thyself hast been a libertine,
As sensual as the brutish sting itself;
And all th' embossed sores, and headed evils,
That thou with license of free foot hast caught,
Wouldst thou disgorge into the general world.

Jaq. Why, who cries out on pride,
That can therein tax any private party?
Dost it not flow as hugely as the sea,
Till that the very means of wear do ebb?
What woman in the city do I name,
When that I say, the city-woman bears
The cost of princes on unworthy shoulders?
Who can come in, and say, that I mean her,
When such a one as she, such is her neighbour?
Or what is he of base function,
That says, his bravery is not on my cost,
Thinking that I mean him, but therein suits
His folly to the mettle of my speech?
There then; how then? what then? Let me see wherein
My tongue hath wrong'd him: if it do him right,
Then he hath wrong'd himself; if he be free,
Why then, my taxing like a wild goose flies,
Unclaim'd of any man.—But who comes here?

Enter Orlando, with his sword drawn.

Orl. Forbear, and eat no more.

Jaq. Why, I have eat none yet.

Orl. Nor shalt not, till necessity be serv'd.

Jaq. Of what kind should this cock come of?

Duke S. Art thou thus bolden'd, man, by thy dis,

Or else a rude despiser of good manners,
That in civility thou seem'st so empty?

Orl. Touch'd my vein at first: the thorny point
Of bare distress hath ta'en from me the show
Of smooth civility; yet am I unlike,
And know some nurture. But forbear, I say:
He dies, that touches any of this fruit,
Till I and my affairs are answered.

Jaq. An you will not be answered with reason,
I must die.

Duke S. What would you have? Your gentleness shall force,
More than your force move us to gentleness.

Orl. I almost die for food, and let me have it.

Duke S. Sit down and feed, and welcome to our table.

Orl. Speak you so gently? Pardon me, I pray you
I thought, that all things had been savage here,
And therefore put I on the countenance
Of stern commandment. But whate'er you are,
That, in this desert inaccessible,
Under the shade of melancholy boughs,
Lose and neglect the creeping hours of time,
If ever you have look'd on better days,
If ever been where bells have knoll'd to church,
If ever sat at any good man's feast,
If ever from your eye-lids wip'd a tear,
And know what 't is to pity and be pitied,
Let gentleness my strong enforcement be.
In the which hope I blush, and hide my sword.

Duke S. True is it that we have seen better days,
And have with holy bell been knoll'd to church,
And sat at good men's feasts, and wip'd our eyes
Of drops that sacred pitty hath engender'd; and
And therefore sit you down in gentleness,
And take, upon command, what help we have,
That to your wanting may be minister'd.

Orl. Then, but forbear your food a little while,
Whiles, like a doe, I go to find my fawn,
And give it food. There is an old poor man,
Who after me hath many a weary stop
Limp'd in pure love: till he be first suffic'd,
Oppress'd with two weak evils, age and hunger,
I will not touch a bit.

Duke S. Go find him out,
And we will nothing waste till you return.

Orl. I thank ye; and be bless'd for your good comfort! [Exit.

Duke S. Thou seest, we are not all alone unhappy:
This wide and universal theatre
Presents more woful pageants, than the scene
Wherein we play in.

Jaq. All the world's a stage,
And all the men and women merely players:
They have their exits and their entrances,
And one man in his time plays many parts,
His acts being seven ages. At first, the infant,
Mewling and puking in the nurse's arms.
Then, the whining school-boy, with his satchel,
And shining morning face, creeping like snail
Unwillingly to school. And then, the lover,
Sighing like furnace, with a woeful ballad
Made to his mistress' eye-brow. Then, a soldier,
Full of strange oaths, and bearded like the pard,
Jealous in honour, sudden and quick in quarrel,
Seeking the bubble reputation.

Even is the cannon's mouth. And then, the justice,
In fair round belly, with good capon lin'd,
With eye severe, and beard of formal cut,
Full of wise saws and modern instances;
And so he plays his part. The sixth age shifts
Into the lean and slipper'd pantaloon,
With spectacles on nose, and pouch on side;
His youthful hose, well sav'd, a world too wide
For his shins Shank, and his big manly voice,
Turning again toward childish treble, pipes
And whistles in his sound. Last scene of all,
That ends this strange eventful history,
Is second childishness, and mere oblivion;
Sans teeth, sans eyes, sans taste, sans every thing.

Re-enter Orlando, with Adam.

Duke S. Welcome. Set down your venerable burden,
And let him feed.

Orl. Sir, I thank you most for him.

Adam. So had you need; I scarce can speak to thank you for myself.

Duke S. Welcome; fall to: I will not trouble you
As yet to question you about your fortunes.
Give us some music; and, good cousin, sing.

[Confers with Orlando.]

ACT III.

SCENE I.—A Room in the Palace.

Enter Duke Frederick, Oliver, Lords and Attendants.

Duke F. Not seen him since? Sir, sir, that cannot be:
But were I not the better part made mercy,
I should not seek an absent argument
Of my revenge, thou present. But look to it:
Find out thy brother, wheresoe'er he is;
Seek him with candle: bring him, dead or living,
Within this twelvemonth, or turn thou no more
To seek a living in our territory.
Then lands and all things that thou dost call thine,
Worth seizure, do we seize into our hands,
Till thou canst quit thee by thy brother's mouth
Of what we think against thee.

Oli. O, that your highness knew my heart in this!
I never lov'd my brother in my life.

Duke F. More villain thou.—Well, push him out of doors;
And let my officers of such a nature
Make an extent upon his house and lands.
Do this expeditiously, and turn him going. [Exit.

SCENE II.—The Forest of Arden.

Enter Orlando, hanging a paper on a tree. 2

Orl. Hang there, my verse, in witness of my love:
And thou, thrice-crowned queen of night, survey
With thy chaste eye, from thy pale sphere above,
Thy hunting's name, that my full life doth away.
Rosalind! these trees shall be my books,
And in their barks my thoughts I'll character,
That every eye, which in this forest looks,
Shall see thy virtuousworth'edverywhere.
Run, run, Orlando: carve, on every tree,
The fair, the chaste, and unexpressive she. [Exit.

SONG.
Blow, blow, thou winter wind, Thou art not so unkind
As man's ingratitude;
Thy tooth is not so keen,
Because thou art not seen,
Although thy breath be rude.

Heigh, ho! sing, heigh, ho! unto the green holly:
Most friendship is spanning, most loving mere folly.
Then, heigh, ho! the holly!
This life is most jolly.
Freeze, freeze, thou bitter sky,
That dost not bite so nigh.
As benefits forgot:
Though thou the waters warp, 2
Thy sting is not so sharp,
As friend remember'd not.

Heigh, ho! sing, &c.

Duke S. If that you were the good Sir Rowland's son,
As you have whisper'd faithfully, you were,
And as mine eye doth his effigies witness
Most truly lieth, and living in your face,
Be truly welcome hither. I am the duke,
That lov'd your father. The residue of your fortune,
Go to my cave and tell me.—Good old man,
Thou art right welcome as thy master is.
Support him by the arm.—Give me your hand,
And let me all your fortunes understand. [Exit.

Enter Corin and Touchstone.

Cor. And how like you this shepherd's life, master.

Touchstone. Touch. Truly, shepherd, in respect of itself, it is a good life; but in respect that it is a shepherd's life, it is naught. In respect that it is solitary, I like it very well; but in respect that it is private, it is a very vile life. Now, in respect it is in the fields, it pleaseth me well; but in respect it is not in the court, it is tedious. As it is a spare life, look you, it fits my humour well: but as there is no more plenty in it, it goes much against my stomach. Hast any philosophy in thee, shepherd?

Cor. No more, but that I know the more one sickness, the worse at ease he is; and that he that wants money, means, and content, is without three good friends; that the property of rain is to wet, and fire to burn; that good pasture makes fat sheep, and that a great cause of the night, is lack of the sun; that he, that hath learned no wit by nature nor art, may complain of good breeding, or comes of a very dull kindred.

Touch. Such a one is a natural philosopher. Wast ever in court, shepherd?

Cor. No, truly.

Touch. Then thou art damned.

Cor. Nay, I hope,—

Touch. Truly, thou art damned, like an ill-roasted egg, all on one side.

Cor. For not being at court? Your reason.

Touch. Why, if thou never wast at court, thou never saw'st good manners; if thou never saw'st good manners, then thy manners must be wicked; and wickedness is sin, and sin is damnation. Thou art in a parlous state, shepherd.
Cor. Not a whit, Touchstone; those that are good manners at the court are as ridiculous in the country, as the behaviour of the country is most mockable in the court. You told me, you salute not at the court, but you kiss your hands; that courtesy would be uncleanly, if courtiers were shepherds.

Touch. Instance, briefly; come, instance.

Cor. Why, we are still handling our ewes, and their fella, you know, are greasy.

Touch. Why, do not your courtier's hands sweat? and is not the greasiness of a mutton as wholesome as the sweat of a man? Shallow, shallow. A better instance, I say; come.

Cor. Besides, our hands are hard.

Touch. Your lips will feel them the sooner; shallow again. A more sounder instance; come.

Cor. And they are often tarred over with the surgery of our sheep; and would you have us kiss tar? The courtier's hands are perfumed with civet.

Touch. Most shallow man! Thou worms-meat, in respect of a good piece of flesh, indeed!—Learn of the wise, and pendre; civet is of a baster birth than tar; the very uncleannily flux of a cat. Mend the instance, shepherd.

Cor. You have too courteously a wit for me: I'll rest.

Cor. Sir, I am a true labourer: I earn that I eat, get that I wear; owe no man hate, envy no man's happiness; glad of other men's good, content with my own; and the greatest of my pride is, to see my ewes graze, and my lambs suck.

Touch. That is another simple sin in you; to bring the ewes and the rams together, and to offer to get your living by the occupation of cattle; to be baw'd to a bell-wether, and to betray a she-lamb of a twelvemonth, to a crooked-pated, old, cuckoldly ram, out of all reasonable match. If thou be'st not damned for this, the devil himself will have no shepherds: I cannot see else how thou shouldst 'scape.

Cor. Here comes young master Ganymede, my new mistress's brother.

Enter Rosalind, reading a paper.

Ros. From the east to western Ind,
No jewel is like Rosalind.
Her worth, being mounted on the wind,
Through all the world bears Rosalind.
All the pictures, fairest lim'd,
Are but black to Rosalind.
Let no face be kept in mind,
But the fair of Rosalind.

Touch. I'll rhyme you so, eight years together, dinners, and suppers, and sleeping hours excepted: it is the right butter-women's rank to market.

Ros. Out, fool!

Touch. For a taste:—
"If a hart do lack a hind,
Let him seek out Rosalind.
If the cat will after kind,
So be sure, will Rosalind.
Winter garments must be lin'd,
So must slender Rosalind.
They that reap must sheaf and bind,
Then to cart with Rosalind.
Sweetest nut hath sourest rind,
Such a nut is Rosalind.
He that sweetest rose will find,
Must find love's prick, and Rosalind."

This is the very false gallop of verses: why do you infect yourself with them?

Ros. Peace! you dull fool! I found them on a tree.

Touch. Truly, the tree yields bad fruit.

Ros. I'll graft it with you, and then I shall graft it with a medlar: then it will be the earliest fruit in the country: for you'll be rotten 'er you be half ripe, and that's the right virtue of the medlar.

Touch. You have said; but whether wisely or no, let the forest judge.

Enter Celia, reading a paper.

Ros. Peace!

Here comes my sister, reading: stand aside.

Cel. Why should this a desert be?
For it is unpeopled? No;
Tongues I'll hang on every tree,
That shall civil sayings show;
Some, how brief the life of man,
Runs his erring pilgrimage,
That the stretching of a span
But ticks in his run of age.
Some, of violated vows
'Twixt the souls of friend and friend:
But upon the fairest boughs,
Or at every sentence' end,
Will I Rosalinda write;
Teaching all that read to know
The quintessence of every sprite
Heaven could in little show.
Therefore heaven Nature charge'd,
That one body should be fill'd
With all graces wide enlarg'd:
Nature presently distill'd
Helen's cheek, but not her heart,
Cleopatra's majesty,
Athalanta's better part,
Sad Lucretia's modesty.
Thus Rosalind of many parts
By heavenly sylph was devis'd,
Of many faces, eyes, and hearts,
To have the touches dearest prize'd.
Heaven would that she these gifts should have,
And I to live and die her slave.

Ros. O, most gentle Jupiter!—what tedious homily of love have you wearied your parishioners withal, and never cried, "Have patience, good people!"

Cel. How now? back, friends.—Shepherd, go off a little:—go with him, sirrah.

Touch. Come, shepherd, let us make an honourable retreat; though not with bag and baggage, yet with scrip and scrappire. [Exeunt Corin and Touchstone.]

Cel. Didst thou hear these verses?

Ros. O! yes, I heard them all, and more too; for some of them had in them more feet than the verses would bear.

Cel. That's no matter: the feet might bear the verses.

Ros. Ay, but the feet were lame, and could not bear themselves without the verse, and therefore stood lamely in the verse.

Cel. But didst thou hear without wondering, how thy name should be hanged and carried upon these trees?

Ros. I was seven of the nine days out of the wonder, before you came; for look here what I found on a palm-tree: I was never so be-rhymed since Pythagoras' time, that I was an Irish rat, which I can hardly remember.

Cel. Trow you, who hath done this?

Ros. Is it a man?
CEL. And a chain, that you once wore, about his neck? Change you colour?
R. I pr'ythee, who?
CEL. O lord, lord! it is a hard matter for friends to meet; but mountains may be removed with earthquakes, and so encounter.
ROS. Nay, but who is it?
CEL. Is it possible?
ROS. Nay; I pr'ythee, now, with most petitionary vehemence, tell me who it is.
CEL. O, wonderful, wonderful, and most wonderful wonderful! and yet again wonderful, and after that, out of all whooping!
ROS. Good my complexion! dost thou think, though I am capersion'd like a man, I have a doublet and hose in my disposition? One inch of delay more is a Southsea of discovery; I pr'ythee, tell me, who is it quickly; and speak space. I would thou couldst stammer, that thou might'st pour this concealed man out of thy mouth, as wine comes out of a narrow-mouth'd bottle, for either too much at once, or none at all. I pr'ythee take the cork out of thy mouth, that I may drink thy tidings.
CEL. So you may put a man in your belly.
ROS. Is he of God's making? What manner of man? Is his head worth a hat, or his chin worth a beard?
CEL. Nay, he hath but a little beard.
ROS. Why, God will send more, if the man will be thankful. Let me stay the growth of his beard, if thou delay me not the knowledge of his chin.
CEL. It is young Orlando, that tripp'd up the wrestler's heels and your heart, both in an instant.
ROS. Nay, but the devil take mocking; speak sad brow and true maid.
CEL. I'faith, coz, 'tis he.
ROS. Orlando?
CEL. Orlando.
ROS. Alas the day! what shall I do with my doublet and hose?—What did he, when thou saw'st him? What said he? How look'd he? Wherein went he? What makes he here? Did he ask for me? Where remains he? How parted he with thee, and when shalt thou see him again? Answer me in one word.
CEL. You must borrow me Garagnantua's mouth first:
ROS. 'tis a word too great for any mouth of this age's size. To say, ay, and no, to these particulars is more than to answer in a catechism.
ROS. But doth he know that I am in this forest, and in man's apparel? Looks he as fresh as he did the day he wrestled?
CEL. It is as easy to count atoms, as to resolve the propositions of a lover: but take a taste of my finding him, and relish it with good obser vance. I found him under a tree, like a dropped acorn.
ROS. It may well be call'd Jove's tree, when it drops forth such fruit.
CEL. Give me audience, good madam.
ROS. Proceed.
CEL. There lay he stretch'd along, like a wounded knight.
ROS. Though it be pity to see such a sight, it well becomes the ground.
CEL. Cry, holla! to thy tongue, I pr'ythee; it curvets unreasonably. He was furnish'd like a hunter.
ROS. O ominous! he comes to kill my heart.
CEL. Would sing my song without a burden: thou bring'st me out of tune.
ROS. Do you not know I am a woman? when I think, I must speak. Sweet, say on.
Enter Orlando and Jaqu.
CEL. You bring me out.—Soft! comes he not here?
ROS. 'Tis he: slink by, and note him. [Rosalind and Celia retire.
Jaq. I thank you for your company: but, good faith, I had as lief have been myself alone.
ORL. And so had I; but yet, for fashion sake, I thank you too for your society.
Jaq. Good bye, you: let's meet as little as we can.
ORL. I do desire we may be better strangers.
ROS. I pray you, mar no more trees with writing-love-songs in their barks.
ORL. I pray you mar no more of my verses with reading them ill-favouredly.
Jaq. Rosalind is your love's name?
ROS. Yes, just.
Jaq. I do not like her name.
ORL. There was no thought of pleasing you, when she was christened.
Jaq. What stature is she of?
ORL. Just as high as my heart.
Jaq. You are full of pretty answers. Have you not been acquainted with goldsmiths' wives, and conn'd them out of rings?
ROS. Not so; but I answer you right painted cloth, from whence you have studied your questions.
Jaq. You have a nimble wit: I think 'tis made of Anatolia's heels. Will you sit down with me? and we two will walk against our mistress the world, and all our misery.
ORL. I will chide no breather in the world, but myself, against whom I know most faults.
Jaq. The worst fault you have is to be in love.
ORL. 'T is a fault I will not change for your best virtue. I am weary of you.
Jaq. By my troth, I was seeking for a fool when I found you.
ORL. He is drown'd in the brook: look but in, and you shall see him.
Jaq. There I shall see mine own figure.
ORL. Which I take to be either a fool, or a cypher.
Jaq. I'll tarry no longer with you. Farewell, good signior love.
ORL. I am glad of your departure. Adieu, good monsieur melancholy.
[Exit Jaqu.—Rosalind and Celia come forward. Ros. [Aside to Celia.] I will speak to him like a saucy lackey, and under that habit play the knave with him. [To him.] Do you hear, forester?
ORL. Very well: what would you?
ROS. I pray you, what is 't o'clock?
ORL. You should ask me, what time o' day: there's no clock in the forest.
ROS. Then, there is no true lover in the forest; else sighing every minute, and groaning every hour, would detect the lazy foot of time as well as a clock.
ORL. And why not the swift foot of time? had not that been as proper?
ROS. By no means, sir. Time travels in divers paces with divers persons. I'll tell you who Time ambles withal, who Time trots withal, who Time gallops withal, and who he stands still withal.
ORL. I pr'ythee, who doth he trot withal?
ROS. Marry, he trots hard with a young maid, between the contract of her marriage, and the day it is solemnized: if the interim be but a sol'mnight, Time's

1 Serious. 2 Rabelais' giant, who swallowed five pilgrims in a salad. 3 Putte's me or. 4 In the style of the moral maxims painted in... place is so hard that it seems the length of seven years.

Oro. Who ambles Time withal?

Ros. With a priest that lacks Latin, and a rich man that hath not the gout; for the one sleeps easily, because he cannot study; and the other lives merrily, because he feels no pain: the one lacking the burden of lean and wasteful learning, the other knowing no burden of heavy tedious penury. These Time ambles withal.

Oro. Who doth he gallop withal?

Ros. With a thief to the gallows; for though he go as softly as foot can fall, he thinks himself too soon there.

Oro. Who stands he still, withal?

Ros. With lawyers in the vacation; for they sleep between term and term, and then they perceive not how time moves.

Oro. Where dwell you, pretty youth?

Ros. With this shepherdess, my sister; here in the skirts of the forest, like fringe upon a petticoat.

Oro. Are you native of this place?

Ros. As the coney, that you see dwell where she is kindled.

Oro. Your accent is something finer than you could purchase in so removed a dwelling.

Ros. I have been told so of many: but, indeed, an old religious uncle of mine taught me to speak, who was in his youth an inland man; one that knew courtship too well, for there he fell in love. I have heard him read many lectures against it: and I thank God, I am not a woman, to be touched with so many giddy offences, as he hath generally taxed their whole sex withal.

Oro. Can you remember any of the principal evils that he laid to the charge of women?

Ros. There were none principal: they were all like one another, as half-pence are; every one fault seeming monstrous, till his fellow fault came to match it.

Oro. I pray thee, recount some of them.

Ros. No; I will not cast away my physic, but on those that are sick. There is a man haunts the forest, that abuses our young plants with carving Rosalind on their barks; hangs edes upon Hawthorns, and elegies on brambles; all, forsooth, defying the name of Rosalind: if I could meet one fancy-monger I would give him some good counsel, for he seems to have the quintain of love upon him.

Oro. I am he that is love-shaked. I pray you, tell me your remedy.

Ros. There is none of my uncle’s marks upon you: he taught me how to know a man in love: in which case of rushes, I am sure, you are not prisoner.

Oro. What were his marks?

Ros. A lean cheek, which you have not: a blue eye, and sunken, which you have not: an unmeaning air, which you have not: a beard neglected, which you have not:—but I pardon you for that, for, simply, your having in beard is a younger brother’s revenue.—Then, your nose should be ungarter’d, your bonnet unbanded, your sleeve unbuttoned, your shoe untied, and every thing about you demonstrating a careless desolation. But you are no such man; you are rather point-device’d in your accoutrements; as loving yourself, than seeming the lover of any other.

Oro. Fair youth, I would I could make thee believe I love.

Ros. Me believe it? you may as soon make her that you love believe it: which, I warrant, she is apter to do, than to confess she does: that is one of the points in which women still give the lie to their consciences. But, in good sooth, are you he that hangs the verses on the trees, wherein Rosalind is so admired?

Oro. I swear to thee, youth, by the white hand of Rosalind, I am that he, that unfortunate he.

Ros. But are you so much in love as your rhymes speak?

Oro. Neither rhyme nor reason can express how much.

Ros. Love is merely a madness, and, I tell you, deserves as well a dark house, and a whip, as madmen do; and the reason why they are not so punished and cured, is, that the lunacy is so ordinary, that the whippers are in love too. Yet I profess curing it by counsel.

Oro. Did you ever cure any so?

Ros. Yes, one; and in this manner. He was to imagine me his love, his mistress, and set him every day to woo me: at which time would I, being but a moonish youth, grieve, be effeminate, changeable, longing, and liking; proud, fantastical, sly, shallow, inconstant, full of tears, full of smiles; for every passion something, and for no passion truly any thing, as boys and women are, for the most part, cattle of this colour: would now like him, now hate him; then entertain him, then forswear him; now weep for him, then spit at him: that I draw my suitor from his mad humour of love, to a loving humour of madness; which was, to forswear the full stream of the world, and to live in a nook, merely monastic. And thus I cured him; and this way will I take upon me to wash your liver as clean as a sound sheep’s heart, that there shall not be one spot of love in’t.

Oro. I would not be cured, youth.

Ros. I would show you, if you would but call me Rosalind and come every day to my cote, and woo me.

Oro. Now, by the faith of my love, I will. Tell me where it is.

Ros. Go with me to it, and I’ll show it you; and, by the way, you shall tell me where in the forest you live. Will you go?

Oro. With all my heart, good youth.

Ros. Nay, you must call me Rosalind.—Come, sister, will you go?

SCENE III.

Enter Touchstone and Audrey; Jaques behind, observing them.

Touch. Come apace, good Audrey: I will fetch up your goats, Audrey. And how, Audrey? am I the man yet? Doth my simple feature content you?

Aud. Your features? Lord warrant us! what features?

Touch. I am here with thee and thy goats, as the most capacious pool, honest Ovid, was among the Goths.

Jaq. [Aside.] O knowledge ill-inhabited! worse than Love in a thatch’d house! a Touch. When a man’s verse cannot be understood, nor a man’s good wit seconded with the forward child understanding, it strikes a man more dead than a great reckoning in a little room.—Truly, I would the gods had made thee poetical.

Aud. I do not know what poetical is. Is it honest in deed, and word? Is it a true thing?

Touch. No, truly, for the truest poetry is the most feigning; and lovers are given to poetry, and what they swear in poetry, it may be said, as lovers do feign.
As You Like It

SCENE IV.

And. Do you wish, then, that the gods had made me perfect?
Touch. I do, truly: for thou swear'st to me, thou art best: now, if thou wert a poet, I might have some hope that didst feign.
And. Would you not have me honest?
Touch. No truly, unless thou wert hard-favoured; for honesty coupled to beauty is to have honey a sugar [Aside.] A material fool.

And. Well, I am not fair, and therefore, I pray the gods make me honest!
Touch. Truly, and to cast away honesty upon a foul snare to put good meat into an unclean dish.
And. I am not a slut, though I thank the gods I am.

Touch. Well, praised be the gods for thy founlessness: swiftness may come hereafter. But be it as it may I will marry thee; and to that end, I have been with Sir Oliver Mar-text, the vicar of the next village, who hath promised to meet me in this place of the first, and to couple us.

[Aside.] I would fain see this meeting.
And. Well, the gods give us joy.

Touch. Amen. A man might, if he were of a fearful but stager in this attempt; for here we have no trap but the wood, no assembly but horn-beasts. By what though? Courage! As horns are odious, they are necessary. It is said,—many a man knows to cad of his goods: right; many a man has good base, and knows no end of them. Well, that is the way of his wife: 'tis none of his own getting. Are we here given to poor men alone?—No, no; the noblest lord hath as large as the rascal. Is the single man therefore blessed? No: as a wall'd town is more weather than a village, so is the forehead of a married man more honourable than the bare brow of a bachelor: and how much defence is better than no skill, by so much a horn more precious than to want.

Enter Sir Oliver Mar-text.

Sir Oliver. Here comes Sir Oliver.—Sir Oliver Mar-text, you are vest: will you dispatch us here under this tree, or shall we go with you to your chapel?

Sir Oliver. Is there none here to give the woman?

Touch. I will not take her on gift of any man.

Sir Oliver. Truly, she must be given, or the marriage is unlawful.

[Coming forward.] Proceed, proceed: I'll give her.

Touch. Good even, good Mr. What-ye-call't: how now sir? You are very well met: God 'laid you for your last company. I am very glad to see you;—even in hand here, air.—Nay; pray, be cover'd.

Will you be married, molity?

Touch. As the ox hath his bow, the horse his tail, and the falcon her bells, so man hath his desires; as pigeons hill, so wedlock would be nibbling.

And will you, being a man of your breeding, warmed under a bush, like a beggar? Get you to school and have a good priest that can tell you what usage is: this fellow will but join you together as two pieces; then give a shrunken hand, and like green timber, warp, warp.

Touch. I am not in the mind, but I were better to marry of him than of another: for he is not like to carry me well, and not being well married, it will be good excuse for me hereafter to leave my wife.

Go thou with me, and let me counsel thee.

Enter Corin.

Cor. Mistress, and master, you have oft inquir'd After the shepherd that complain'd of love, Who you saw sitting by me on the turf, Praising the proud disdainful shepherdess That was his mistress.

Cor. Well; and what of him?

Cor. If you will see a pageant truly play'd, Between the pale complexion of true love, And the red glow of scorn and proud disdain, Go hence a little, and I shall conduct you, If you will mark it.
Ros. O! come, let us remove:
The sight of lovers feedeth those in love.—
Bring us to this sight, and you shall say
I'll prove a busy actor in their play. [Exeunt.]

SCENE V.—Another Part of the Forest.

Enter Silvius and Phebe. Silv. Sweet Phebe, do not scorn me; do not, Phebe:
Say that you love me not; but say not so
In bitter words. The common executioner,
Whose heart th' accusation of death makes hard,
Falls not the axe upon the humbered neck,
But first begs pardon: will you sterner be
Than he that kills1 and lives by bloody drops?
Enter Rosalind, Celia, and Ortin, behind.
Phe. I would not be thy executioner:
I fly thee, for I would not injure thee.
Thou tell'st me, there is murder in mine eye:
'Tis pretty, sure, and very probable,
That eyes, that are the frail2 and softest things,
Who shut their coward gates on atomies,
Should be call'd tyrants, butchers, murderers!
Now I do frown on thee with all my heart;
And, if mine eyes can wound, now let them kill thee;
Now counterfeit to swoon; why, now fall down;
Or, if thou canst not, O, for shame, for shame!
Lie not, to say mine eyes are murderers.
Now show the wound mine eye hath made in thee:
Scratch thee but with a pin, and there remains
Some scar of it; lean but upon a rush,
The cicatrice and palpable3 impressure4
Thy palm some moment keeps; but now mine eyes,
Which I have darted at thee, hurt thee not,
Nor, I am sure, there is no force in eyes
That can do hurt.

Sil. O! dear Phebe,
If ever, (as that ever may be near)
You meet in some fresh cheek the power of fancy,
Then shall you know the wounds invisible
That love's keen arrows make.
Phe. But till that time
Come not thou near me; and when that time comes Afflict me with thy mocks, pity me not,
As till that time I shall not pity thee.

Ros. [Advancing.] And why, I pray you? Who might be your mother,
That you insult, exult, and all at once,
Over the wretched? What though you have no beauty,
As, by my faith, I see no more in you
Than without candle may go dark to bed,
Must you be therefore proud and pitiless?
Why, what means this? Why do you look on me?
I see no more in you, than in the ordinary
Of nature's sale-work:—Od's my little life!
I think she means to mingle my eyes too.
No, 'faith, proud mistresse, hope not after it:
'1 is not your inkys brows, your black-silk hair,
Your bugle eye-balls, nor your cheek of cream,
That can ename my spirits to your worship.—
You foolish shepherd, wherefore do you follow her,
Like foggy south, puffing with wind and rain?
You are a thousand times a proper man,
Than she a woman: 'tis such fools as you,
That make the world full of ill-favour'd children.
'Tis not her glass, but you, that flatters her;
And out of you she sees herself more proper,
Than any of her lineaments can show her.—
But mistress, know yourself: down on your knees,
And thank heaven fasting for a good man's love;

Phe. For I must tell you friendly in your ear,
Sell when you can: you are not for all markets.
Cry the man mercy! love him: take his offer:
Foul is most foul, being foul to be a scoffer.
So, take her to thee, shepherd.—Fare you well.
Phe. Sweet youth, I pray you, chide a year together
I had rather hear you chide, than this man woo.
Ros. He's fallen in love with your fairness, an She'll fall in love with my anger. If it be so, as far
As she answers thee with frowning looks, I'll save her with bitter words.—Why look you so unto me?
Phe. For no ill will I bear you.
Ros. I pray you, do not fall in love with me,
For I am fairer than vows made in wine:
Besides, I like you not.—If you will know my house,
'Tis at the tuft of olives, here hard by.—
Will you go, sister?—Shepherd, ply her hard.—
Come, sister.—Shepherdesse, look on him better,
And be not proud: though all the world could see,
None could be so abus'd in sight as he.
Come, to our flock.

Phe. Thou hast my love: is that not neighbourly
Sil. I would have you.
Phe. Why, that were covetous
Silvius, the time was that I hated thee,
And yet it is not that I bear thee love;
But since that thou canst talk of love so well,
Thy company, which erst was irksome to me,
I will endure, and I'll employ thee too;
But do not look for farther recompense,
Than thine own goodness that thou art employ'd.
Sil. So holy, and so perfect is my love,
And I in such a poverty of grace,
That I shall think it a most plentiful crop
To glean the broken ears after the man
That the main harvest reaps. —Jocose now and then
A scatter'd smile, and that I'll live upon.
Phe. Knowest thou the youth that spoke to me
while?
Sil. Not very well, but I have met him oft;
And he hath bought the cottage, and the bounds,
That the old carlot once was master of.
Phe. Think not I love him, though I ask for him
'Tis but a peevish boy:—yet he talks well:—
But what care I for words? yet words do well,
When he that speaks them pleases those that hear.
It is a pretty youth:—not very pretty:—
But, sure, he's proud; and yet his pride becomes k
He'll make a proper man: the best thing in him
Is his complexion; and faster than his tongue
Did make offence, his eye did heal it up.
He is not very tall; yet for his years he's tall
His leg is but so so; and yet 'tis well:
There was a pretty redness in his lip;
A little ripper, and more lusty red.
Than that mix'd in his cheek: 'twas just the differ
Between the constant red, and mingled damask.
There be some women, Silvius, had they mark'd b

1 dise: in f.s 2 capable: in f.s 3 An allusion to Marlowe and his Hero and Leander, where the quotation is to be found.
Scene I.—The Forest of Arden.

Enter Rosalind, Celia, and Jaques.

Jaq. I pray thee, pretty youth, let me be better acquainted with thee.

Ros. They say, you are a melancholy fellow.

Jaq. I am so: I do love it better than laughing.

Ros. Those that are in extremity of either are ashamed fellows, and betray themselves to every modern censure worse than drunkards.

Jaq. Why, 'tis good to be sad and say nothing.

Ros. Why then, 'tis good to be a poet.

Jaq. I have neither the scholar's melancholy, which is ennui; nor the musician's, which is fantastical; nor the courtier's, which is proud; nor the soldier's, which is ambitious; nor the lawyer's, which is politic; nor the lady's, which is nice; nor the lover's, which is all these; but it is a melancholy of mine own, composed of many simples, extracted from many objects; and, indeed, the sundry contemplation of my travels; which by frequent rumination wraps me in a most delicious sadness.

Ros. A traveller! By my faith, you have great reason to be sad. I fear, you have sold your own locks to see other men's; then, to have seen much, and to have nothing, is to have rich eyes and poor heads.

Jaq. Yes, I have gained my experience.

Enter Orlando.

Ros. And your experience makes you sad. I had rather have a fool to make me merry, than experience to make me sad. And to travel for it too!

Orl. Good day, and happiness, dear Rosalind.

Jaq. Nay then, God be wi' you, an you talk in blank verse.

Ros. Farewell, monsieur traveller: look you lisp, and wear strange suits; disable all the benefits of your own country; be out of love with your nativity, and yet chide God for making you that countenance: or, I will scarce think you have swam in a pond. Why, how now, Orlando! where have you all this while? You a lover? An you serve me for this trick, never come in my sight more. Orl. My fair Rosalind, I come within an hour of my promise.

Ros. Break an hour's promise in love! He that will divide a minute into a thousand parts, and break 'tis part of the thousandth part of a minute in the turns of love, it may be said of him, that Cupid hath dipped his dart in the shoulder, but I'll warrant him to a hole.

Orl. Pardon me, dear Rosalind.

Ros. Nay, an you be so tender, come no more in my sight. I had as lief be woo'd of a snail.

Orl. Of a snail?

But that's all one; omission is no quittance. I'll write to him a very taunting letter, and thou shalt hear it: will thou, Silvius?

Sil. Phoebe, with all my heart.

Orl. I'll write it straight.

The matter's in my head, and in my heart: I will be better with him, and passing short.

Go with me, Silvius. [Exeunt.

ACT IV.

Ros. Ay, of a snail; for though he comes slowly, he carries his house on his head, a better jointure, I think, than you make a woman. Besides, he brings his destiny with him.

Orl. What's that?

Ros. Why, horns; which such as you are fain to be beholden to your wives for: but he comes arried in his fortune, and prevents the slander of his wife.

Orl. Virtue is no horn-maker, and my Rosalind is virtuous.

Ros. And I am your Rosalind.

Orl. It pleases him to call you so; but he hath a Rosalind of a better leer than you.

Ros. Come, woo me, woo me; for now I am in a holiday humour, and like enough to consent. What would you say to me now, an I were your very very Rosalind?

Orl. I would kiss before I spoke.

Ros. Nay, you were better speak first; and when you were gravelled for lack of matter, you might take occasion to kiss. Very good orators, when they are out, they will spit; and for lovers, lacking (God warn us!) matter, the cleanliest shift is to kiss.

Orl. How if the kiss be denied?

Ros. Then she puts you to entreaty, and there begins new matter.

Orl. Who could be out, being before his beloved mistress?

Ros. Marry, that should you, if I were your mistress, or I should think my honesty rather than my wit.

Orl. What, out of my suit?

Ros. Not out of your apparel, and yet out of your suit. Am not I your Rosalind?

Orl. I take some joy to say you are, because I would be talking of her.

Ros. Well, in her person I say—I will not have you.

Orl. Then, in mine own person, I die.

Ros. No, 'tis death, die by attorney. The poor world is almost six thousand years old, and in all this time there was not any man died in his own person, seditious, in a love-cause. Troilus had his brains dashed out with a Grecian club; yet he did what he could to die before, and he is one of the patterns of love. Leander, he would have lived many a fair year, though Hero had turned nun, if it had not been for a hot midsummer night; for, good youth, he went but forth to wash him in the Hellespont, and, being taken with the cramp, was drowned, and the foolish coroners of that age found it was—Hero of Sestos. But these are all lies men have died from time to time, and worms have eaten them, but not for love.

Orl. I would not have my right Rosalind of this mind, for, I protest, her frown might kill me.

Ros. By this hand, it will not kill a fly. But come, now I will be your Rosalind in a more coming-on-disposition, and ask me what you will, I will grant it.

Rosl. Then love me, Rosalind. [all.

Rosl. Yes, faith will I; Fridays, and Saturdays, and Ori. And will thou have me?

Rosl. Ay, and twenty such.

Ori. What say'st thou now?

Rosl. Are you not good?

Ori. I hope so.

Rosl. Why, then, can one desire too much of a good thing?—Come, sister, you shall be the priest, and marry us. Give me your hand, Orlando.—What do you say, sister?

Ori. Pray thee, marry us.

Cel. I cannot say the words.

Rosl. You must begin.—"Will you, Orlando?"

Cel. Go to.—Will you, Orlando, have to wife this Rosalind?

Ori. I will.

Rosl. Ay, but when?

Ori. Why now; as fast as she can marry us.

Rosl. Then you must say,—"I take thee, Rosalind, for wife."

Ori. I take thee, Rosalind, for wife.

Rosl. I might ask you for your commission; but,—I go take thee, Orlando, for my husband. There's a girl, goes before the priest; and, certainly, a woman's thought runs before her actions.

Ori. So do all thoughts: they are winged.

Rosl. Now tell me, how long you would have her, after you have possessed her?

Ori. For ever, and a day.

Rosl. Say a day, without the ever. No, no, Orlando: men are April when they woo, December when they wed: maids are May when they are maid; I will be more jealous of thee than a Barbary cock-pigeon over his hen; more clamorous than a parrot against rain; more new-fangled than an ape; more giddy in my desires than a monkey: I will weep for nothing, like Diana in the fountain, and I will do that when you are disposed to be merry; I will laugh like a hyen, and that when thou art inclined to sleep.

Ori. But will my Rosalind do so?

Rosl. By my life, she will do as I do. Ori. O! but she is wise.

Rosl. Or else she could not have the wit to do this: the wiser, the waywarder. Make 1 the doors upon a woman's wit, and it will out at the casement; shut that, and 't will out at the key-hole; stop that, 't will fly with the smoke out at the chimney.

Ori. A man that had a wife with such a wit, he might say,—"Wit, whither will?"

Rosl. Nay, you might keep that check for it, till you met your wife's wit going to your neighbour's bed.

Ori. And what wit could wit have to excuse that?

Rosl. Marry, to say,—she came to seek you there. You shall never take her without her answer, unless you take her without her tongue. O! that woman that cannot make her fault her husband's accusing, 2 let her never nurse her child herself, for she will brood it like a fool.

Orl. For these two hours, Rosalind, I will leave thee.

Rosl. Alas! dear love, I cannot lack thee two hours. Ori. I must attend the duke at dinner: by two o'clock I will be with thee again.

Rosl. Ay, go your ways, go your ways.—I knew what you would prove; my friends told me as much, and I thought no less: that flattering tongue of yours won me:—'t is but one cast away, and so,—come, death!—Two o'clock is your hour?

Ori. Ay, sweet Rosalind.

Rosl. By my soul, and in good earnest, and so God mend me, and by all pretty oaths that are not dangerous, if you break one jot of your promise, or come one minute behind your hour, I will think you the most pathetical break-promise, and the most hollow lover, and the most unworthy of her you call Rosalind, that may be chosen out of the gross band of the unfaithful. Therefore, beware my censure, and keep your promise.

Ori. With no less religion, than if thou wert indeed my Rosalind: so, adieu!

Rosl. Well, time is the old justice that examines all such offenders, and let time try you. 3 Adieu! [Exit Orlando

Cel. You have simply misused our sex in your love-prise. We must have your doublet and hose pluck'd over your head, and show the world what the bird had done to her own nest.

Rosl. O! coz, coz, coz, my pretty little coz, that didst know how many fathom deep I am in love! But it cannot be sounded: my affection hath an unknown bottom, as the bay of Portugal.

Cel. Or rather, bottomless; that as fast as you affection in, it runs out.

Rosl. No; that same wicked bastard of Venus, the was begot of thought, conceived of spleen, and born o' madness; that blind rascally boy, that abuses ever one's eyes, because his own are out, let him be judged how deep I am in love.—I'll tell thee, Alenis, I cannot be out of the sight of Orlando. I'll go find a shadow and sigh till he come.

Cel. And I'll sleep. [Exeunt

SCENE II.—Another Part of the Forest.

Enter Jaques and Lords, like Foresters.

Jaques. Which is he that killed the deer?

Lords. Sir, he was I.

Jaques. Let's present him to the duke, like a Romans conqueror; and it would do well to set the deer's horn upon his head for a branch of victory.—Have you a song, forester, for this purpose?

Lords. Yes, sir.

Jaques. Sing it: 't is no matter how it be in tune, so make noise enough.

Song.

What shall he have that kill'd the deer?

His leather skin, and horns to wear.

Take thou no scorn to wear the horn;

It was a creat ere thou wast born.

Thy father's father score it,

And thy father bore it:

The horn, the horn, the lusty horn,

Is not a thing to laugh to scorn.

[Exeunt

SCENE III.—The Forest.

Enter Rosalind and Celia.

Rosl. How say you now? Is it not past two o'clock and here much Orlando!

Cel. I warrant you, with pure love, and trouble.

He hath ta'en his bow and arrows, and gone forth—To sleep. Look, who comes here. [Enter Silvius.

Silv. My errand is to you, fair youth.—My gentle Phoebe did bid me give you this: [Giving a letter. 4 Rns. ready.
Where in the purities of this forest stands
A sheepe-cote, fenc'd about with olive-trees?

_Cel._ West of this place, down in the neighbour bottom:

The rank of osiers, by the murmuring stream,
Left on your right hand, brings you to the place.
But at this hour the house doth keep itself;
There's none within.

_Oli._ If that an eye may profit by a tongue,
Then should I know you by description;
Such garments, and such years:—The boy is fair,
Of female form, and beards himself
Like a ripe sister: the woman low,
And browner than her brother.” Are not you
The owner of the house I did inquire for?

_Cel._ It is no boast, being ask'd to say, we are.

_Oli._ Orlando doth commend him to you both;
And to that youth, he calls his Rosalind,
He sends this bloody napkin. Are you he?

_Ros._ I am. What must we understand by this?

_Oli._ Some of my shame; if you will know of me
What man I am, and how, and why, and where
This handkerchief was stain'd.

_Cel._ I pray you, tell it.

_Oli._ When last the young Orlando parted from you,
He left a promise to return again
Within an hour; and, pacing through the forest,
Chewing the food of sweet and bitter fancy,
Lo, what befell! he threw his eye aside,
And, mark, what object did present itself!
Under an old oak, whose beoughs were mos'd with age,
And high top baid with dry antiquity,
A wretched ragged man, o'ergrown with hair,
Lay sleeping on his back: about his neck
A green and gilded snake had wreath'd itself,
Who with her head, nimble in threats, approach'd
The opening of his mouth; but suddenly,
Seeing Orlando, it unlik'd itself,
And with indented glides did slip away
Into a bush; under which bush's shade
A lioness, with udders all drawn dry,
Lay couching, head on ground, with catlike watch,
When that the sleeping man should stir; for 'tis
The royal disposition of that beast,
To prey on nothing that doth seem as dead.
This seen, Orlando did approach the man,
And found it was his brother, his elder brother.

_Cel._ O! I have heard him speak of that same brother:
And he did render him the most unnatural
That liv'd 'mongst men.

_Oli._ And well he might so do,
For well I know he was unnatural.

_Ros._ But, to Orlando.—Did he leave him there,
Food to the suck'd and hungry lioness?

_Oli._ Twice did he turn his back, and purpos'd so;
But kindness, nobler ever than revenge,
And nature, stronger than his just occasion,
Made him give battle to the lioness,
Who quickly fell before him: in which hurrying
From miserable slumber I awak'd.

_Cel._ Are you his brother?

_Ros._ Was it you he reckon'd?

_Cel._ Was't you that did so oft contrive to kill him?

_Oli._ 'T was I; but 't is not I. I do not shame
To tell you what I was, since my conversion
So sweetly tastes, being the thing I am.

_Ros._ But, for the bloody napkin?

_Oli._ By female tears.

Enter Oliver.

_Oli._ Good morrow, fair ones. Fray you, if you know,
As you like it.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—The Forest of Arden.

Enter Touchstone and Audrey.

Touch. We shall find a time, Audrey: patience, gentle Audrey.

Aud. 'Tis faith, the priest was good enough, for all the old gentleman's saying.

Touch. A most wicked sir Oliver, Audrey; a most vile Mar-text. But, Audrey; there is a youth here in the forest lays claim to you.

Aud. Ay, I know who 'tis; he hath no interest in me in the world. Here comes the man you mean.

Enter William.

Touch. It is he, sir; and drink to me to see a clown. By my troth, we that have good wits have much to answer for: we shall be flowered; we cannot hold.

Will. Good even, Audrey.

Aud. God ye good even, William.

Will. And good even to you, sir.

Touch. Good even, gentle friend. Cover thy head, cover thy head: nay, pr'ythee, be covered. How old are you, friend?

Will. Five and twenty, sir.

Touch. A ripe age. Is thy name William?

Will. William, sir.

Touch. A fair name. Wast born i' the forest here?

Will. Ay, sir, I thank God.

Touch. Thank God;—a good answer. Art rich?

Will. 'Tis faith, sir, so, so.

Touch. So, so, is good, very good, very excellent good;—and yet it is not; it is but so so. Art thou wise?

Will. Ay, sir, I have a pretty wit.

Touch. Why, thou say'st well. I do now remember a saying, "The fool doth think he is wise, but the wise man knows himself to be a fool." The heathen philosopher, when he had a desire to eat a grape, would open his lips when he put it into his mouth, meaning thereby, that grapes were made to eat, and lips to open. You do love this maid?

Will. I do, sir.

Touch. Give me your hand. Art thou learned?

Will. No, sir.

ACT V.

Cel. We'll lead you thither.—I pray you, will you take him by the arm?

Oli. Be of good cheer, youth.—You a man? You lack a man's heart.

Ros. I do so, I confess it. Ah, sirrah! a body would think this was well counterfeit. I pray you, tell your brother how well I counterfeit.—Heigh ho!—

Oli. This was not counterfeit: there is too great testimony in your complexion, that it was a passion of earnest.

Ros. Counterfeit, I assure you.

Oli. Well then, take a good heart, and counterfeit to be a man.

Ros. So I do; but, 'tis faith, I should have been a woman by right.

Cel. Come; you look paler and paler: pray you, draw homewards.—Good sir, go with us.

Oli. That will I, for I must bear answer back, How you excuse my brother, Rosalind.

Ros. I shall devise something. But, I pray you, commend my counterfeiting to him.—Will you go?

[Exeunt.

Touch. Then learn this of me. To have, is to have; for it is a figure in rhetoric, that drink, being poured out of a cup into a glass, by filling the one doth empty the other; for all your writers do consent, that 'tis he: now, you are not tires, for I am he.

Will. Which he, sir?

Touch. He, sir, that must marry this woman. There fore, you clown, abandon,—which is in the vulgar, leave, the society,—which in the boorish is, company,—of this female,—which in the common is, woman; which together is, abandon the society of this female, or, clown thou peradventure; or, to thy better understanding, diest; or, to wit, I kill thee, make thee away, translate thy life into death, thy liberty into bondage. I will deal in poison with thee, or in bastinado, or in steel: I will bandy with thee in fasting; I will over-run thee with policy; I will kill thee a hundred and fifty ways: therefore tremble, and depart.

Aud. Do, good William.

Will. God rest you merry, sir.

[Exit.

Enter Corin.

Cor. Our master and mistress seek you: come, away, away!

Touch. Trip, Audrey; trip, Audrey.—I attend, I attend.

[Touch and Audrey go.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The Same.

Enter Orlando and Oliver.

Oli. 'Tis possible, that on so little acquaintance you should like her? that, but seeing, you should love her; and, loving, woo; and, wooing, she should grant? and will you persevere to enjoy her?

Orli. Neither call the giddiness of it in question, the poverty of her, the small acquaintance, my sudden wooing, nor her sudden consenting; but say with me, I love Aliena; say with her, that she loves me; consent with both, that we may enjoy each other: it shall be to your good; for my father's house, and all the revenue that was old sir Rowland's, will I estate upon you, and here live and die a shepherd.

Oli. You have my consent.

Let your wedding be to-morrow: thither will I invite the duke, and all’s contented followers.

Enter Rosalind.

Go you, and prepare Aliens; for, look you, here comes my Rosalind.

Ros. God save you, brother.

Orl. And you, fair sister. [Exit

Ros. O ! my dear Orlando, how it grieves me to see thee wear thy heart in a scarf.

Orl. It is my arm.

Ros. I thought thy heart had been wounded with the claws of a lion.

Orl. Wounded it is, but with the eyes of a lady.

Ros. Did your brother tell you how I counterfeited to swoon, when he showed me your handkerchief?

Orl. Ay, and greater wonders than that.

Ros. O ! I know where you are,—Nay, 'tis true: there was never anything so sudden, but the fight of two rams, and Caesar's thraesalmic brag of—"I came, saw, and 'overcame!' for your brother and my sister no sooner met, but they looked; no sooner looked, but they loved; no sooner loved, but they sighed; no sooner sighed, but they asked one another the reason; no sooner knew the reason, but they sought the remedy: and in these degrees have they made a pair of each other, which they will climb incontinent, or else be inconscionable before marriage. They are in the very wrath of love, and they will together: clubs cannot part them.

Orl. They shall be married to-morrow, and I will bid the duke to the nuptial. But, O ! how bitter a thing it is to look into happiness through another man’s eyes! By so much the more shall I to-morrow be at the height of heart-beastiness, by how much I shall think my brother happy in having what he wishes for. Ros. Why then, to-morrow I cannot serve your turn for Rosalind?

Orl. I can live no longer by thinking.

Ros. I will weary you, then, no longer with idle talking. Know of me, then, (for now I speak to some purpose) that I know you are a gentleman of good content. I speak not this, that you should bear a good opinion of my knowledge, inasmuch, I say, I know you are: neither do I labour for a greater esteem than may be some little measure draw a belief from you, to do yourself good, and not to grace me. Believe then, if you please, that I can do strange things. I have, since I was three years old, conversed with a magician, most profound in his art, and yet not damnable. If you do love Rosalind so near the heart as your gesture cries it out, when your brother marries Aliena, shall you marry her. I know into what strait of fortune she is driven; and it is impossible to me, if it appear not inconsistent to you, to set her before your eyes to-morrow, human as she is, and without any danger.

Orl. Speak’st thou in sober meanings?

Ros. By my life, I do; which I tender dearly, though I say I am a magician. Therefore, put you at your best array, bid your friends, for if you will be married to-morrow, you shall, and to Rosalind, if you will.

Enter Silvius and Phoebe.

Look: here comes a lover of mine, and a lover of hers. Phoe. Youth, you have done me much ungentleness, To show the letter that I writ to you.

Ros. I care not; if I have; it is my study To see despiteful and ungentle to you. You are there follow'd by a faithful shepherd: Look upon him, love him; he worships you. Phoe. Good shepherd, tell this youth what 'tis to love. —Observe: in f. 9 Malone also suggested the change. * To be married.
Between the acres of the eye,
With a eye, and a ho, and a hey nonino,
These pretty country folks would lie,
In spring time, &c.

This carol they began that hour,
With a hey, and a ho, and a hey nonino,
How that our life was but a flower,
In spring time, &c.

And therefore take the present time,
With a hey, and a ho, and a hey nonino,
For love is crowned with the prime
In spring time, &c.

Touch. Truly, young gentlemen, though there was no great matter in the ditty, yet the note was very untimeable.

1 Page. You are deceived, sir: we kept time; we lost not our time.

Touch. By my troth, yes; I count it but time lost to hear such a foolish song. God be wi' you; and God mend your voices.—Come, Audrey. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—Another Part of the Forest.

Enter Duke Senior, Amiens, Jaques, Orlando, Oliver, and Celia.

Duke S. Doest thou believe, Orlando, that the boy Can do as well as that which he hath promised?

Orl. I sometimes do believe, and sometimes do not, As those that fear, &c. hope, and know they fear.

Enter Rosalind, Silvius, and Phoebe.

Ros. Patience, once more, whilst our compact is heard.—

[To the Duke.] You say, if I bring in your Rosalind, You will bestow her on Orlando here?

Duke S. That would I, had I kingdom to give with her.

Ros. [To Orlando.] And you say, you will have her, when I bring her?

Orl. That would I, were I of all kingdoms king.

Ros. [To Phoebe.] You say, you’ll marry me, if I be willing?

Phoe. That will I, should I die the hour after.

Ros. But if you do refuse to marry me, You’ll give yourself to this most faithful shepherd?

Phoe. So is the bargain.

Ros. [To Silvius.] You say, that you’ll have Phoebe, if she will?

Sil. Though to have her and death were both one thing.

Ros. I have promised to make all this matter even. Keep you your word, O duke! to give your daughter:—

You yours, Orlando, to receive his daughter:—

Keep you your word, Phoebe, that you’ll marry me; Or else, refusing me, to wed this shepherd:—

Keep you word, Silvius, that you’ll marry her, If she refuse me:—and hence I go, To make these doubts all even—seven so.

[Exeunt Rosalind and Celia.

Dukes S. I do remember in this shepherd-boy Some lively touches of my daughter’s favour.

Orl. My lord, the first time that I ever saw him, Methought he was a brother to your daughter: But, my good lord, this boy is forest-born, And hath been tutor’d in the rudiments Of many desperate studies by his uncle, Whom he repeals to be a great magician, Obscured in the circle of this forest.

Enter Touchstone and Audrey.

Jaq. There is sure, another flood toward, and these couples are coming to theark. Here comes a pair of very strange beasts, which in all tongues are called fools.

Touch. Salutation and greeting to you all.

Jaq. Good my lord, bid him welcome. This is the motley-minded gentleman, that I have so often met in the forest: he hath been a currier, he sweats.

Touch. If any man doubt that, let him put me to my purgation. I have trod a measure; I have flattered a lady; I have been politic with my friend, smooth with mine enemy; I have undone three tailors; I have had four quarrels, and like to have fought one.

Jaq. And how was that ta’en up?

Touch. ‘Faith, we met, and found the quarrel was upon the seventh cause.

Jaq. How the seventh cause?—Good my lord, like this fellow.

Duke S. I like him very well.

Touch. God bless you, sir; I desire you of the like. I press in here, sir, among the rest of the country coxcombatives, to swear, and to forswear, according as marriage binds, and blood breaks.—A poor virgin, sir, an ill-favoured thing, sir, but mine own: a poor humour of mine, sir, to take that that no man else will. Rich honesty dwells like a miser, sir, in a poor-house, as your pearl in your foul oyster.

Duke S. By my faith, he is very swift and sentimental.

Touch. According to the fool’s bolt, sir, and such dulcet diseases.

Jaq. But, for the seventh cause, how did you find the quarrel on the seventh cause?

Touch. Upon a lie seven times removed.—Bear your body more resembling, Audrey.—As thus, sir. I did dislike the cut of a certain courtier’s beard: he sent me word, if I said his beard was not cut well, he was in the mind it was: this is called the “revert courteous.” If I sent him word again, it was not well cut, he would send me word, he cut it to please himself: this is called the “quip modest.” If again, it was not well cut, he disabled my judgment: this is called the “reply churlish.” If again, it was not well cut, he would answer, I spake not true: this is called the “reproof valiant.” If again, it was not well cut, he would say, I lied: this is called the “countercheck quarrelsome.”—and so to the “lie circumstantial,” and the “lie direct.”

Jaq. And how oft did you say, his beard was not well cut?

Touch. I durst go no farther than the “lie circumstantial,” nor he durst not give me the “lie direct,” and so we measured swords, and parted.

Jaq. Can you nominate in order now the degrees of the lie?

Touch. O sir, we quarrel in print, by the book, as you have books for good manners: I will name you the degrees. The first, the revert courteous; the second, the quip modest; the third, the reply churlish; the fourth, the reproof valiant; the fifth, the countercheck quarrelsome; the sixth, the lie with circumstance; the seventh, the lie direct. All these you may avoid, but the lie direct; and you may avoid that too, with an if. I knew when seven justices could not take up a quarrel; but when the parties were met themselves, one of them thought but of an if; as If you say so, then I said so; and they shook hands and swore brothers. Your if is the only peace-maker; much virtue in if.

Jaq. Is not this a rare fellow, my lord? he’s as good at any thing, and yet a fool.

1 untimeable: in f. e. 2 they: in f. e. 3 ung’d: in f. e. 4 These two words are not in f. e. 5 Yield.
Duke S. He uses his folly like a travelling-horse, and under the presentation of that he shoots his wit.

Enter HYMN, leading ROSALIND in woman's clothes;

and CELLIA.

Still Music.

Hymn. Then is there mirth in heaven,
When earthly things made even Allone together.

Good duke, receive thy daughter, hymn from heaven brought her;

Yes, brought her hither.

That thou mightst join her hand with his,

Whose heart within her bosom is.

Ros. [To DUKER S.] To you I give myself, for I am yours.

[To ORLANDO.] To you I give myself, for I am yours.

Duke S. If there be truth in sight, you are my daughter.

Oth. If there be truth in sight, you are my Rosalind.

Oth. If sight and shape be true,

Why then, my love adieu!

Ros. [To DUKER S.] I'll have no father, if you be no not he.

[To ORLANDO.] I'll have no husband, if you be not he.

[To PHÈRE.] Nor ne'er wed woman, if you be not she.

Oth. Peace, ho! I bar confusion.

'Tis I must make conclusion,

Of these most strange events:

Here's sight that must take hands,

To join in Hymn's bands;

If truth holds true contents.

[To ORLANDO and ROSALIND.] You and you

no cross shall part:

[To OLIVER and CELIA.] You and you are heart in heart:

[To PHÈRE.] To you his love must accord,

Or have a woman to your lord:

[To TOUCHSTONE and AUDREY.] You and you are sure together,

As the winter to foul weather,

While a wedlock-hymn we sing,

Feed yourselves with questioning,

That reason wonder may diminish,

How thus we met, and thus we finish.

SONG.

Wedding is great Juno's crown;

O, blessed bond of board and bed!

'Tis Hymen peoples every town;

High wedlock, then, be honoured:

Hence, high honour, and renown,

To Hymen, god in every town!

Duke S. O, my dear niece! welcome thou art to me;

Even daughter, welcome in no less degree.

Phè. [To Silius.] I will not eat my word, now thou art mine;

Thy faith my fancy to thee doth combine.

Enter Second Brother.

Bro. Let me have audience for a word or two.

I am the second son of old Sir Rowland,

That brings these tidings to this fair assembly.—

Duke Frederick, hearing how that every day

Men of great worth resorted to this forest,

Address'd a mighty power, which were on foot

In his own conduct, purposely to take

His brother here, and put him to the sword.

And to the skirts of this wild wood he came,

Where, meeting with an old religious man,

After some question with him, was converted

Both from his enterprise, and from the world;

His crown bequeathing to his banish'd brother,

And all their lands restor'd to them again,

That were with him exil'd. This to be true,

I do engage my life.

Duke S. Welcome, young man

Thou offer'st fairly to thy brothers' wedding:

To one, his lands withheld; and to the other,

A land itself at large, a potent dukedom.

First, in this forest, let us do those ends

That here were well begun, and well begot;

And after, every of this happy number,

That have endured shrewd days and nights with us,

Shall share the good of our returned fortune,

According to the measure of their states.

Meantime, forget this new-fall'n dignity,

And fall into our rustic revelry.—

Play, music! and you brides and bridgrooms all,

With measure heap'd in joy, to the measures fall.

Jaq. Sir, by your patience.—If I heard you rightly,

The duke hath put on a religious life,

And thrown into neglect the pompous court?

Bro. He hath.

Jaq. To him will I: out of these convertites

There is much matter to be heard and learn'd.—

You [To Duke S.] to your former honour I beseech;

Your patience, and your virtue, well deserve it:—

You [To ORLANDO] to a love, that your true faith doth merit:—

You [To OLIVER] to your land, and love, and great allies:—

You [To Silius] to a long and well deserved bed:—

And you [To TOUCHSTONE] to wrangling; for thy loving voyage

Is but for two months victual'd.—So, to your pleasures:

I am for other than for dancing measures.

Duke S. Stay, Jaques, stay.

Jaq. To see no pasture, I:—what you would have,

I'll stay to know at your abandon'd cave. [Exit.

Duke S. Proceed, proceed: we will begin these rites,

As we do trust they'll end, in true delights.

EPilogue.

Ros. It is not the fashion to see the lady the Episome; but it is no more unhandsome, than to see the Prologue. If it be true, that good wine weds no bush, 'tis true that a good play needs no

Epilogue; yet to good wine they do use good bushes, and good plays prove the better by the help of good troubadours. What a case am I in, then, that am neither an epilogue, nor can insinuate with you in the breath of a good play? I am not furnished like a beginner; therefore to beg will not become me: my way is to bewitch you; and I'll begin with the women.

O women! for the love you bear to men.

I charge you, O women! for the love you bear to men.

to like as much of this play as please you: and I charge you, O men! for the love you bear to women,

(as I perceive by your simpering none of you hate them) that between you and the women, the play may please. If I were a woman, I would kiss as many of you as had beards that pleased me, compliances that liked me, and breaths that I defied not; and, I am sure, as many as have good beards, or good faces, or sweet breaths, will, for my kind offer, when I make courtsey, bid me farewell. [Exit.]

Phè. [To Silius.] I will not eat my word, now thou art mine;

EVEN daughter, welcome in no less degree.

TAMING OF THE SHREW.

DRAMATIS PERSONÆ.

A Lord.
Baptista, a rich gentleman of Padua.
Vincenzo, an old Gentleman of Pisa.
Lucenzo, Son to Vincenzo.
Petruchio, a Gentleman of Verona.
Grumio, Suiter to Bianca.
Hortensio, Servants to Lucentio.
Tranio, Servants to Lucentio.
Biondello, Servants to Petruchio.
Grumio, Petruchio.
Curtez, The Pedant.
Katharina, Daughters to Baptista.
Bianca, Widow.

Tailor, Haberdasher, and Servants attending on Baptista and Petruchio.

SCENE, sometimes in Padua; and sometimes in Petruchio’s House in the Country.

INDUCTION.

SCENE I.—Before an Alehouse on a Heath.

Enter Hostess and CHRISTOPHER Sly.

Sly. I’ll cheese1 you, in faith.
Host. A pair of stocks, you rogue!
Sly. Y’are a baggage: the Slys are no rogues; look in the chronicles, we came in with Richard Conqueror. Therefore, pauca pallabris; let the world slide. Sessa!2 Host. You will not pay for the glasses you have burst?
Sly. No, not a denier. Go by, Jeromey;3 go to thy cold bed, and warm thee.4
Host. I know my remedy; I must go fetch the headborough.5

Exit.

Sly. Third, or fourth, or fifth borough, I’ll answer him by law; I’ll not budge an inch, boy: let him come, and kindly.6 Lies down, and falls asleep.

Wind horns. Enter a Lord from hunting, with Huntsmen and Servants.

Lord. Huntsman, I charge thee, tender well my hounds:
Bracht Merriman,—the poor cur is embossed,7 And couple Clower by with the deep-mouth’d brach.
Saw’st thou not, boy, how Silver made it good At the hedge corner, in the coldest fault?8 I would not lose the dog for twenty pound.

1 Hun. Why, Belman is as good as he, my lord; He cried upon it at the merest loss, And twice to-day pick’d out the dullest scent: Trust me, I take him for the better dog.

Lord. Thou art a fool: if Echo were as fleet, I would esteem him worth a dozen such. But sup them well, and look unto them all: To-morrow I intend to hunt again.

1 Hun. I will, my lord.

Lord. What’s here? one dead, or drunk? See, doth he breathe?

2 Hun. He breathes, my lord. Were he not warm’d with ale,
This were a bad but cold to sleep so soundly.

Lord. O, monstrous beast! how like a swine he lies Grim death, how foul and loathsome is thine image! Sirs, I will practise on this drunken man.

What think you, if he were convey’d to bed;

Wrap’d in sweet clothes, rings put upon his fingers, A most delicious banquet by his bed, And brave attendants near him when he wakes, Would not the beggar then forget himself?

1 Hun. Believe me, lord, I think he cannot choose.

2 Hun. It would seem strange unto him when he wak’d.

Lord. Even as a flattering dream, or worthless fancy Then take him up, and manage well the jest.

Carry him gently to my fairest chamber, And hang it round with all my wanton pictures; Balm his foil head with warm distilled waters, And burn sweet wood to make the lodging sweet: Procure me music ready when he wakes, To make a dulcet and a heavenly sound;
And if he chance to speak, be ready straight, And, with a low submissive reverence, Say,—what is it your honour will command?

Let one attend him with a silver bason, Full of rose-water, and bestrew’d with flowers; Another bear the ewer, the third a diaper, And say,—will’t please your lordship cool your hands? Some one be ready with a costly suit, And ask him what apparel he will wear; Another tell him of his hounds and horse, And that his lady mourns at his disease.

Persuade him that he hath been lunatic; When he says what he is,9 say that he dreams, For he is nothing but a mighty lord.

1 A common word in the west of England, where it means to chastise, assemble.—Gifford. 2 Cass, case. 3 f. e. says Jeromey. Go by Jeromey—from Thomas Kyd’s Spanish Tragedy, often quoted in derision, and as a cant phrase, by the writers of the day. 4 This is also a quotation from the same play. 5 Contende; it is usually altered to thurborough. 6 A bound. 7 Sounds at the mouth from fatigue. 8 And when he says he is: in f. e. 9 e.
TAMING OF THE SHREW.

This do, and do it kindly, gentle sirs;
It will be pastime passing excellent,
If it be husbanded with modesty.

1 Hang. My lord, I warrant you, we will play our part,
As he shall think, by our true diligence,
He is no less than what we say he is.

Lord. Take him up gently, and to bed with him,
And each one to his office when he wakes.—

[Exit湍具t. A trumpet sounds.

Sirrah, go see what trumpet ‘tis that sounds.—

[Exit湍具t.

Reiks, some noble gentleman, that means,
Travelling some journey, to reposes him here.—

Re-enter湍具t.

Hew now? who is ’t?

Serv. An ’t please your honour, players
That offer humble service to your lordship.

Lord. Bid them come near.

Enter four or six Players.

Players. We thank your honour.

Serv. Do you intend to stay with me to-night?

2 Play. So please your lordship to accept our duty.

Lord. With all my heart.—This fellow I remember,
Since once he play’d a farmer’s eldest son:
’T was where you woo’d the gentlewoman so well.
I have forgot your name; but, sure, that part
Was aptly fitted, and naturally perform’d.

1 Play. I think, ’t was Soto that your honour means.
Lord. ’T is very true: thou didst it excellent.
Well, you are come to me in happy time,
The rather for I have some sport in hand,
Wherein your cunning can assist me much.
There is a lord will hear you play to-night;
But I am doubtful of your modesties,
Lost, ever-eyeing of his odd behaviour,
(For yet his honour never heard a play)
You break into some merry passion,
And so offend him; for I tell you, sirs,
If you should smile he grows impatient.

1 Play. Fear not, my lord: we can contain ourselves,
Wes be the veriest antics in the world.

Lord. Go, sirrah, take them to the battery,
And give them friendly welcome every one;
Let them want nothing that my house affords.—

[Exeunt Servant and Players.

Sirrah, go you to Bartholomew, my page, [To a Servant.
And see him dress’d in all suits like a lady:
That done, conduct him to the drunkard’s chamber;
And call him madam, do him obeisance;
Tell him from me, as he will win my love,
He bear himself with honourable action,
Such as he hath observ’d in noble ladies
Into their lords by them accomplished:
Such duty to the drunkard let him do,
With soft low tongue, and lowly courtesy;
And say,—what is ’t your honour will command,
Wherein your lady, and your humble wife
May show her duty, and make known her love?
And then, with kind embraces, tempting kisses,
And with declining head into his bosom,
Bid him shed tears, as being overjoy’d
To see her noble lord restor’d to health.
Who for this seven years hath esteem’d him
No better than a poor and loathsome beggar.
And if the boy have not a woman’s gift,
To rain a shower of commanded tears,
As onion will do well for such a shift,

Which, in a napkin being close convey’d,
Shall in despite enforce a watry eye.
See this despatch’d with all the haste thou canst:
Amon ’I’ll give thee more instructions. [Exit Servant
I know, the boy will well usurp the grace,
Voice, gait, and action of a gentlewoman:
I long to hear him call the drunkard husband,
And how my men will stay themselves from laughter
When they do homage to this simple peasant.
I’ll in to counsel them: haply, my presence
May well abate their over-merry spleens,
Which otherwise would grow into extremes. [Exeunt

SCENE II.—A Bedchamber in the Lord’s House.

SLY is discovered, with Attendants; some with apparel, others with bason, ewer, and appurtenances. Enter Lord, dressed like a Servant.

SLY. For God’s sake, a pot of small ale.

Serv. Will ’t please your lordship drink a cup of sack?

SLY. Will ’t please your honour taste of these conserve?

Serv. What raiment will your honour wear to-day?

SLY. I am Christopher Sly; call not me honour, nor lordship: I ne’er drank sack in my life; and if you give me any conserve, give me conserves of beef.
Ne’er ask me what raiment I will wear, for I have no more doublets than backs, no more stockings than legs, no more shoes than feet; nay, sometime, more feet than shoes, or such shoes as my toes look through the overleather. [honour

Lord. Heaven cease this evil! humour in your
O! that a mighty man, of such descent,
Of such possessions, and so high esteem,
Should be infused with so foul a spirit!

SLY. What! would you make me mad? Am not I Christopher Sly, old Sly’s son, of Burton-heath, by father a pedlar, by education a card-maker, by trans-mutation a bear-herd, and now by present profession a inker? Ask Marian Hacket, the fat allewife of Wincot, if she know me not: if she say I am not fourteen pence on the score for Warwickshire ale, score me up for the lying’st knave in Christendom. What! I am not beastraught. Here’s—

1 Serv. O! this it is that makes your lady mourn.

3 Serv. O! this it is that makes your servants droop.

Lord. Hence comes it that your kindred shun your house,
As beaten hence by your strange lunacy.
O, noble lord! bethink thee of thy birth;
Call home thy ancient thoughts from banishment,
And banish hence those abject lowly dreams.
Look how thy servants do attend on thee,
Each in his office ready at thy beck:
Wilt thou have music? harp! Apollo plays, [Music.
And twenty caged nightingales do sing:
Or wilt thou sleep? we’ll have thee to a couch,
Softer and sweeter than the lustful bed
On purpose trimmit’d up for Semiramis.
Say thou wilt walk, we will bestrew the ground:
Or wilt thou ride, thy horses shall be trapp’d,
Their harness studded all with gold and pearl.
Dost thou love hawkings? thou hast hawks will soar
Above the morning lark: or wilt thou hunt?
Thy hounds shall make the welkin answer them,
And fetch shrill echoes from the hollow earth.

1 Serv. Say thou wilt course, thy greyhounds are as swift

[Note: In f. e. A Note: in f. e. Not in f. e. Enter Players: in f. e. Idle: in f. e. Burton-on-the-Heath, a village in Warwickshire, is supposed to be referred to. A place about four miles from Stratford. Sheer: in f. e. Disheartned, Distracted.
As breathed stage, ay, fleeter than the roe.

2 Serv. Dost thou love pictures? we will fetch thee straight
Adonis painted by a running brook,
And Cytherea all in hedges hid,
Which seem to move and wanton with her breath,
Even as the waving sedges play with wind.

Lord. We’ll show thee Io as she was a maid,
And how she was beguiled and surpris’d,
As lively painted as the deed was done.

3 Serv. Or Daphne roaming through a thorny wood,
Serpleting her leg, till one bold branch she breaks;
And at that sight shall And Apollo weep.
So workmanly the blood and tears are drawn.

Lord. Thou art a lord, and nothing but a lord:
Thou hast a lady, far more beautiful
Than any woman in this waning age.

1 Serv. And, till the tears that she hath shed for thee,
Like envious floods, o’er-ran her lovely face,
She was the fairest creature in the world;
And yet she is inferior to none.

Sly. Am I a lord? and have I such a lady?
Or do I dream? or have I dream’d till now?
I do not sleep; I see, I hear, I speak:
I smell sweet savours, and feel soft things.—
Upon my life, I am a lord, indeed,
And not a tinker, nor Christopher Sly.—
Well, bring the lady hither to our sight;
And once again, a pot o’ the smallest ale.

2 Serv. Will’t please your mightiness to wash your hands?

[Servants present an ever, basin, and napkin.
O, how we joy to see your wits restored!]
O, that once more, you knew but what you are!
These fifteen years you have been in a dream,
Or, when you wak’d, so wak’d as if you slept.

Sly. These fifteen years! by my fay, a goodly nap.
But did I never speak of all that time?

1 Serv. O! yes, my lord, but very idle words;
For though you lay here in this goodly chamber,
Yet would you say, ye were beaten out of door,
And rail upon the hostess of the house.
And say you would present her at the least,
Because she brought stone juggs, and not seal’d quart.
Sometimes you would call out for Cicely Hacket.

Sly. Ay, the woman’s maid of the house. [maid,

3 Serv. Why, sir, you know no house, nor so such Nor so such men, as you reckond’ up,
As Stephen Sly, and old John Naps of Greece,
And Peter Tuff, and Henry Pimpernell,
And twenty more such names and men as these,
Which never were, nor no man ever saw.

Sly. Now, Lord be thanked for my good amends!
All. Amen.

Sly. I thank thee; thou shalt not lose by it.

Enter the Page, as a Lady, with Attendants.

Page. How fares my noble lord?

Sly. Marry, I fare well; for here is cheere enough.

Where is my wife?

Page. Here, noble lord: what is thy will with her?

Sly. Are you my wife, and will not call me husband?
My men should call me lord: I am your good-man.

Page. My husband and my lord, my lord and husband.

I am your wife in all obedience.

Sly. I know it well.—What must I call her?

Lord. Madam.

Sly. Al’oe madam, or Joan madam?

Lord. Madam, and nothing else: so lords call ladies.

Sly. Madam wife, they say that I have dream’d,
And slept about’ some fifteen year and more.

Page. Ay, and the time seems thirty unto me,
Being all this time abandon’d from your bed.

Sly. ‘Tis much.—Servants, leave me and her alone.—
Madam, undress you, and come now to bed.

Page. Thrice noble lord, let me entreat of you
To pardon me yet for a night or two;
Or if not so, until the sun be set,
For your physicians have expressly charg’d,
In peril to incur your former malady,
That I should yet absent me from your bed.
I hope this reason stands for my excuse.

Sly. Ay, it stands so, that I may hardly tarry so long;
but I would be loth to fall into my dreams again:
I will therefore tarry, in despite of the flesh and the blood.

Enter a Servant.

Serv. Your honour’s players, hearing your amendment,
Are come to play a pleasant comedy;
For your doctors hold it very meet,
Seeing too much sadness hath congeal’d your blood,
And melancholy is the nurse of frenzy:
Therefore, they thought it good you hear a play,
And frame your mind to mirth and merriment,
Which bars a thousand harms and lengths life.

Sly. Marry, I will; let them play it. Is not a com-mony a Christmas gambol, or a tumbling-trick?

Page. No, my good lord: it is more pleasing stuff.

Sly. What, household stuff?

Page. It is a kind of history.

Sly. Well, we’ll see’t. Come, madam wife, sit by my side,
We shall ne’er be younger, and let the world slide.

---

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Padua. A Public Place.

Enter Luciento and Tranio.

Luc. Tranio, since, for the great desire I had
To see fair Padua, nursery of arts,
I am arriv’d for fruitful Lombardy,
The pleasant garden of great Italy;
And, by my father’s love and leave, I am arriv’d
With his good will, and thy good company,
My truncheons staid, well equipped in all,
Here let us breathe, and haply institute

---

A course of learning, and ingenious studies.
Piss, renowned for grave citizens,
Gave me my being; and my father, first
A merchant of great traffic through the world,
Vincentio, comes of the Bentivoli.
Vincentio’s son, brought up in Florence,
It shall become, to serve all hopes conceiv’d,
To deck his fortune with his virtuous deeds:
And therefore, Tranio, for the time I study
Virtue, and that part of philosophy
Will I apply, that treats of happiness
TAMING OF THE SHREW.

By virtue specially to be achiev'd,
Tell me thy mind; for I have Pisa left
And am to Padua come, as he that leaves
A shallow pond, to plunge him in the deep,
And with satiety seeks to quench his thirst.

Tru. Mi perdimate, gentle master mine,
I am in all affected as yourself,
Glad that you thus continue your resolve,
To seek the sweets of sweet philosophy;
Only, good master, while we do admire
This virtue, and this moral discipline,
Let's be no stoics, nor no stocks, I pray;
the more to Aristotle's Ethics,
As Ovid be an outcast quite abjur'd.
Talk logic with acquaintance that you have,
And practise rhetoric in your common talk:
Mist and poesy used to quicken you:
The mathematics, and the metaphysics,
Fall to them as you find your stomach serves you.
No profit grows, where is no pleasure taken:
In brief, sir, study what you most affect.

Luc. Gramercies, Tranio, well said thou advise.
If Rosaline now were* come ashore,
We could at once put us in readiness,
And take a lodging fit to entertain
Such friends as time in Padua shall beget.
But stay awhile; what company is this?
Tru. Master, some show to welcome us to town.

Enter Baptista, Katharina, Bianca, Gremio, and Hortensio.

Bap. Gentlemen, importune me no farther,
For now I firmly am resolv'd you know;
That is, not to bestow my youngest daughter,
Before I have a husband for the elder.
If either of you both love Katharina,
Because I know you well, and love you well,
Love shall you have to court at your pleasure.

Grem. To court her rather: she's too hard for me.

Tru. There, Hortensio, will you any wife?

Kath. [To Bap.] I pray you, sir, is it your gracious' will
To make a stale of me amongst these mates?

Hort. Mates, maid! how mean you that? no mates
for you,
Unless you were of gentler, milder mood.
Kath. I faith, sir, you shall never need to fear:
I was it not half way to her heart;
But if it were, doubt not her care should be
To comb your nookle with a three-legged stool,
And paint your face, and use you like a fool.

Hor. From all such devils, good Lord, deliver us!

Grem. And me too, good Lord!

Tru. Hush, master! here is some good pastime toward:
That trough is stark mad, or wonderful froward.

Luc. But in the other's silence do I see
Mad's mild behaviour, and sobriety.

Per. Tranio.

Tru. Well said, master: mum! and gaze your fill.

Bap. Gentlemen, that I may soon make good
What I have said.—Bianca, get you in:
And let it not displeas thee, good Bianca,
For I will love thee ne'er the less, my girl.

Kath. A pretty peat! it is best
Put fagger in the eye,—an she knew why.

Bian. Sister, content you in my discontent.—Sir, to your pleasure humbly I subscribe:

My books, and instruments, shall be my company,
On them to look, and practise by myself.

Luc. Hark, Tranio! thou may'st hear Minerva speak.

Hor. Signior Baptista, will you be so strange?
Sorry am I, that our good will effects
Bianca's grief.

Grem. Why, will you mew her up,
Signior Baptista, for this fiend of hell,
And make her bear the penceance of her tongue?
Bap. Gentlemen, content ye; I am resolv'd.—
Go in, Bianca. [Exit Bianca.

And for I know, she taketh most delight
In music, instruments, and poetry,
Schoolmasters will I keep within my house,
Fit to instruct her youth.—If you, Hortensio,
Or signior Gremio, you, know any such,
Prefer them hither; for to cunning men
I will be very kind, and liberal
To mine own children in good bringing-up;
And so farewell. Katharina, you may stay,
For I have more to converse with Bianca. [Exit.

Kath. Why, and I trust, I may go too; may I not?
What! shall I be appointed hours, as though, belike,
I knew not what to take, and what to leave? Ha! [Exit.

Grem. You may go to the devil's dam: your gifts are so good, here's none will hold you. This* love is not so great, Hortensio, but we may blow our nailing together, and fast it fairly out: our cake's dough on both sides.

Tru. Farewell; yet, for the love I bear my sweet Bianca, if I can by any means light on a fit man to teach her that wherein she delights, I will wish* him to her father.

Hor. So will I, signior Gremio: but a word, I pray.
Though the nature of our quarrel yet never brook'd parle, know now upon advice, it toucheth us both, that we may yet again have access to our fair mistres, and be happy rivals in Bianca's love, to labor and effect one thing specially:

Grem. What 's that, I pray?
Hor. Marry, sir, to get a husband for her sister.

Grem. A husband! a devil.

Hor. I say, a husband.

Grem. I say, a devil. Think'st thou, Hortensio, though her father be very rich, any man is so vor
a fool to be married to hell?

Hor. Tush, Gremio! though it pass your patience, and mine, to endure her loud alarums, why, man, there be good followers in the world, an a man could light on them, would take her with all faults, and money enough.

Grem. I cannot tell, but I had as lief take her dowry with this condition,—to be whipped at the high-cross every morning.

Hor. 'Faith, as you say, there's small choice in rotten apples. But, come; since this bar in law makes us friends, it shall be so far forth friendly maintained, till by helping Baptista's eldest daughter to a husband, we set his youngest free for a husband, and then have to 't aresh. Sweet Bianca!—Happy man be his dose! He that runs fastest gets the ring. How say you, signior Gremio?

Grem. I am agreed: and 'would I had given him the best horse in Padua to begin his wooing, that would thoroughly woo her, wed her, and bed her, and ride the house of her. Come on.

Exeunt Gremio and Hortensio.

Tru. [advancing.] I pray, sir, tell me, is it possible
That love should of a sudden take such hold?

Luc. O, Tranio! till I found it to be true,
I never thought it possible, or likely.
But see! while idly I stood looking on,
I found the effect of love in idleness;
And now in plainness do confess to thee,
That art to me as secret, and as dear,
As Anna to the Queen of Carthage was,
Tranio, I burn, I pine; I perish, Tranio,
If I achieve not this young modest girl.
Counsel me, Tranio, for I know thou canst:
Assist me, Tranio, for I know thou wilt.
Tran. Master, it is no time to chide you now;
Affection is not rated from the heart:
If love have touch'd you, nought remains but so,— Redime te captum, quam quaeas minimo. 1
Luc. Gramercies, lad; go forward: this content;
The rest will comfort, for thy counsel's sound.
Tra. Master, you look'd so longly on the maid,
Perhaps you mark'd not what 's the pith of all.
Luc. O! yes, I saw sweet beauty in her face,
Such as the daughter of Agemon's race; 2
That is worth a great sum, and she will come to hand,
When with his knees he kiss'd the Cretan strand.
Tra. Saw you no more? mark'd you not, how her heart
Began to scold, and raise up such a storm,
That mortal ears might scarce endure the din?
Luc. Tranio, I saw her coral lips to move,
And with her breath she did perfume the air:
Sacred, and sweet, was all I saw in her.
Tra. Nay, then, 'tis time to stir him from his trance—
I pray, awake, sir! if you love the maid,
Bend thoughts and wits to achieve her. Thus it stands:
Her elder sister is so court and shrewd,
That, till the father rid his hands of her,
Master, your love must live a maid at home;
And therefore has he closely mew'd her up,
Because she will not be annoy'd with suitors.
Luc. Ah, Tranio, what a cruel father's he!
But art thou not advis'd, he took some care
To get her cunning masters to instruc't her?
Tra. Ay, marry am I, sir; and now 'tis plotted.
Luc. I have it, Tranio.
Tra. Master, for my hand,
Both our inventions meet and jump in one.
Luc. Tell me thine first.
Tra. You will be schoolmaster.
And undertake the teaching of the maid:
That's you device.
Luc. Tra. Not possible; for who shall bear your part,
And be in Padua, here, Vincentio's son;
Keep house, and ply his book; welcome his friends:
Visit his countrymen, and banquet them?
Luc. Basta; content thee; for I have it full.
We have not yet been seen in any house,
Nor can we be distinguish'd by our faces,
For man, or master: then, it follows thus;
Thou shalt be master, Tranio, in my stead,
Keep house, and port, and servants, as I should.
I will some other be; some Florentine,
Some Neapolitan, or meaner man of Pisa.
'T is hatch'd; and shall be so—Tranio, at once
Uncase thee; take my colour'd hat and cloak:
When Biondello comes, he waits on thee,
But I will charm him first to keep his tongue.
Tra. So had you need. [They exchange habits.
Be brief, then, sir, 3 sithe your pleasure is,
And I am tied to be obedient;
(For so your father charg'd me at our parting;

"Be serviceable to my son," quoth he,
Although, I think, 't was in another sense,
I am content to be Lucentio,
Because so well I love Lucentio.
Luc. Tranio, be so, because Lucentio loves,
And let me be a slave, 't achieve that maid
Whose sudden sight hath thrill'd my wond'ring eye.

Enter Biondello.
Here comes the rogue.—Sirrah, where have you been?
Bion. Where have I been? Nay, how now? where Master, has my fellow Tranio stol'n your clothes,
Or you stol'n his, or both? pray, what's the news?
Luc. Sirrah, come hither: 't is no time to jest,
And therefore frame your manners to the time.
Your fellow Tranio, here, to save my life,
Puts my apparel and my countenance on,
And I for my escape have put on his;
For in a quarril, since I came ashore,
I kill'd a man, and fear I was deserv'd.
Wait you on him, I charge you, as becomes,
While I make way from hence to save my life.
You understand me?
Bion.
I, sir? ne'er a whit.
Luc. And not a jot of Tranio in your mouth:
Tranio is chang'd into Lucentio.
Bion. The better for him; 'twould I were so too!
Tra. So would I, faith, boy, to have the next wish after,
That Lucentio, indeed, had Baptista's youngest daughter.
But, sirrah, not for my sake, but your master's, I advise
You use your manners discreetly in all kind of companies:
When I am alone, why, then I am Tranio;
But in all places else, your master, Lucentio.
Luc. Tranio, let's go.—
One thing more rests, that thyself execute;
To make one among these wooers: if thou ask me why,
Sufficeth, my reasons are both good and weighty.

[Exeunt.

1 Serv. My lord, you nod; you do not mind the play.
Sly. Yes, by saint Anne, do I. A good matter, surely: comes there any more of it?
Page. My lord, 't is but begun.
Sly. 'Tis a very excellent piece of work, madam lady;
would 't were done!

SCENE II.—The Same. Before Hortensio's House.

Enter Petruchio and Grumio.

Pet. Verona, for a while I take my leave,
To see my friends in Padua; but, of all,
My best beloved and approved friend,
Hortensio; and, I trow, this is his house.—
Here, sirrah Grumio! knock, I say.
Grum. Knock, sir! whom should I knock? is there any man has rebused your worship?
Pet. Villain, I say, knock me here soundly.
Grum. Knock you here, sir? why, sir, what am I, sir, that I should knock you here, sir?
Pet. Villain, I say, knock me at this gate;
And rap me well, or I'll knock your knave's pate.
Grum. My master is grown quarrelsome.—I should knock you first,
And then I know after who comes by the worst.
Pet. Will it not be?
'Faith, sirrah, an you'll not knock, I'll wring it: I'll try how you can sol. fa, and sing it.
[His singing.

"He voyrge Graumio by the ears"
Scene II.

Taming of the Shrew.

Grumio. Help, masters, help! my master is mad.

Enter Hortensio.

Hortensio. How now! what's the matter?—My old friend Grumio, and my good friend Petruchio!—How do you all at Verona?

Petruchio. Signior Hortensio, come you to part the fray?

Hortensio. Can tutto il core ben trovato, may I say.

Petruchio. Adamo nostro cava ben venuto, molto honorato Signior Grumio! E all' arminta, Signor Petruchio?

Grumio. Come, Grumio, rise: we will compound this quarrel.

Petruchio. [Rising] Nay, 'tis no matter, sir, what he keeps in Latin—If this be not a lawful cause for me to leave his service,—Look you, sir,—he bid me knock him, and rap him soundly, sir:

Grumio. Well, was it fit for a servant to use his master so;

Being, perhaps, [for aught I see] two thirty, and—a pipe me?

Where, good God, I had well knock'd at first,

Then I took Grumio come by the worst.

Petruchio. A senseless villain!—Good Hortensio, I bade the rascal knock upon your gate,

And could not get him for, my heart to do it.

Grumio. Knock at the gate?—O heavens! Spake you not these words plain,—'Sirrah, knock me here; rap me here, knock me well, and knock me soundly?'

And come you now with knocking at the gate?

Petruchio. Sirrah, be gone, or talk not, I advise you. And, I say, Petruchio, patience: I am Grumio's pledge. Why this? a heavy chance 'twixt him and you;

Your ancient, trusty, pleasant servant Grumio,

And tell me now, sweet friend, what happy gale blows you to Padua, here, from old Verona?

Petruchio. Such wind as scatters young men through the world,

To seek their fortunes farther than at home,

Where small experience grows. But in a few:

Signior Hortensio, thus it stands with me:

Antonio, my father, is deceased,

And I have thrust myself into this maze,

Haply to wife, and thrive, as best I may.

Cressida in my purse I have, and goods at home,

And so am come abroad to see the world.

Petruchio. Shall I then come roundly to thee,

And wist thee to a shrewd ill-favoured wife?

Thou'dst thank me but a little for my counsel;

And yet I'll promise thee she shall be rich,

And very rich:—but thou'rt too much my friend,

And I'll not wish thee to her.

Petruchio. Signior Hortensio, 'twist such friends as we

Few words suffice; and therefore, if thou know

Our rich enough to be Petruchio's wife,

[As wealth is barthorn of my woolen dancing]

Be she as foul as was Florentius' love,

As old as Sybil, and as curt and shrewd

As Socrates' Xantippa, or even worse,

She moves me not, or not removes, at least,

Petruchio. Her motion in me. Were she as rough

As are the swelling Adriatic seas,

I come to wive it wealthily in Padua;

I wealthy, then happily in Padua.

Grumio. Nay, look you, sir, he tells you flatly what his is: why, give him gold enough and marry him a poptet, or an aglet-baby:—or an old trot with ne'er

so much in her head, though she have as many diseases

as two and fifty horses. Why, nothing comes amiss, nay, comes withal.

Hor. Petruchio, since we are stepp'd thus far in,

I will continue that I broach'd in jest.

—He, Petruchio, help thee to a wife

With wealth enough, and young, and beauteous;

Brought up, as best becomes a gentlewoman:

Her only fault, and that is faults enough,

Is, that she is intolerable curst,

And shrewd, and froward; so beyond all measure,

That, were my state far worse than it is,

I would not wed her for a mine of gold.

Petruchio. Hortensio, peace! thou know'st not gold's effect.—

Tell me her father's name, and 'tis enough,

For I will board her, though she chide as loud

As thunder, when the clouds in Autumn crack.

Hor. Her father is Baptista Minola,

An affable and courteous gentleman:

Her name is Katharina Minola,

Renown'd in Padua for her soolding tongue.

Petruchio. I know her father, though I know not her,

And he knew my deceased father well.

I will not sleep, Hortensio, till I see her;

And therefore let me be thus bold with you,

To give you over at this first encounter,

Unless you will accompany me thither.

Petruchio. I pray you, sir, let him go while the humour lasts. O my word, an she knew him as well as I do,

She would think soolding would do little good upon her.

She may, perhaps, call him half a score knaves or so; why, that's nothing: an he begin once, he'll rail in his rope-tricks. I'll tell you what, sir,—an she stand him but a little, he will throw a figure in her face, and so disfigure her with it, that she shall have no more eyes to see withal than a cat. You know

Hortensio. him not, sir.

Petruchio. Tarry, Petruchio, I must go with thee,

For in Baptista's keep my treasure is:

He hath the jewel of my life in hold,

His youngest daughter, beautiful Bianca,

And her withholds from me, and other more

Suitors to her, and rivals in my love;

Supposing it a thing impossible,

For those defects I have before rehearsed,

That ever Katharina will be wooo'd:

Therefore this order hath Baptista ta'en,

That none shall have access unto Bianca,

Till Katharine the curst have got a husband.

Petruchio. Katharine the curst!

A title for a maid of all titles the worst.

Now shall my friend Petruchio do me grace,

And offer me, disguis'd in sober robes,

To old Baptista, as a schoolmaster

Well seen in music, to instruct Bianca;

That so I may by this device, at least

Have leave and leisure to make love to her,

And unsuspected court her by herself.

Enter Grumio, and Lucentio disguised, with books under his arm.

Petruchio. Here's no knavery? See, to beguile the old fOLKS how the young folks lay their heads together!

Master, master, look about you: who goes there? ha!

Hor. Peace, Grumio; 'tis the rival of my love.

Petruchio, stand by a while.

Petruchio. A proper stripling, and an amorous!

[They retire.

Petruchio. O! very well; I have perus'd the note.

Hark you, sir; I'll have them very fairly bound:

All books of love, see that at any hand,

1Not in C.  2 out: in C.  3 The story is in Gower's Confessio Amantis.  4 An aglet was a point or tag to the string of a dress, and was shaped like a human form.
And see you read no other lectures to her.
You understand me.—Over and beside Signor Baptista's liberality,
I'll mend it with a largess.—Take your papers, too,
And let me have them very well perfum'd,
For she is sweeter than perfume itself,
To whom they go.¹ What will you read to her?
Luc. Whate'er I read to her, I'll plead for you,
As your patron; stand you so, sir, and
As firmly as yourself were still in place:
Yes, and perhaps with more successful words
Than you, unless you were a scholar, sir.
Gre. O, this learning, what a thing it is!
Gru. O, this woodcock, what an ass it is!
Pet. Peace, sirrah!
Hor. Grumio, mum!—[Coming forward.]—God save you, signior Gremio!
Gre. And you are well met, signior Hortensio.
Trow you, whither I am going?—To Baptista Minola.
I promis'd to inquire carefully
About a master for the fair Bianca:
And, by good fortune, I have lighted well
On this young man; for learning and behaviour,
Fit for her turn; well read in poetry,
And other books—good ones, I warrant ye.
Hor. 'Tis well: and I have met a gentleman
Hath promis'd me to help me to another,
A fine musician to instruct our mistress:
So shall I no whit be behind in duty
To fair Bianca, so belov'd of me.
Gre. Belov'd of me, and that my deeds shall prove.
Gru. And that his bags shall prove.
Hor. Gremio, 'tis now no time to vent our love.
Listen to me, and if you speak me fair,
I'll tell you news indifferent good for either.
Here is a gentleman, whom by chance I met,
Upon agreement from us to his liking,
Will undertake to woo our fair Katharine;
Yes, and to marry her, if her dowry please.
Gre. So said, so done, is well.—
Hortensio, have you told him all her faults?
Pet. I know, she is an irksome, brawling soold:
If that be all, masters, I hear no harm.
Gre. No, say'st me so, friend? What countryman?
Pet. Born in Verona, old Antonio's son:
My father dead, my fortune lives for me;
And do hope good days, and long, to see.
Gre. O sir, such a life with such a wife were strange;
But if you have a stomach, to 't o' God's name:
You shall have me assisting you in all.
But will you woo this wild cat?
Pet. Will I live?
Gru. Will he woo her? ay, or I'll hang her.
Pet. Why came I hither, but to that intent?
Think you, a little din can daunt mine ears?
Have I not in my time heard lions roar?
Have I not heard the bell, puff'd up with winds,
Rage like an angry boar, chased with sweat?
Have I not heard great ordinance in the field,
And heaven's artillery thunder in the skies?
Have I not in a pitched battle heard
Loud 'larums, neighing steeds, and trumpets' clang?
And do you tell me of a woman's tongue,
That gives not half so great a blow to hear,
As will a chestnut in a farmer's fire?
Vush! vush! fear boys with huge²
Gru.
Gre. Hortensio, hark.
This gentleman is happily arriv'd,
My mind presumes, for his own good, and ours.²
Hor. I promis'd we would be contributors,
And bear his charge of wooing, whatsoever.
Gre. And so we will, provided that he win her.
Gru. I would, I were as sure of a good dinner.
Enter Tranio, bravely apparell'd; and Biondello.
Tra. Gentlemen, God save you! If I may be bold
Tell me, I beseech you, which is the readiest way
To the house of signior Baptista Minola?
Bion. He that has the two fair daughters—is't you mean?
Tra. Even he, Biondello.
Gre. Hark you, sir: you mean not her to—
Pet. Perhaps, him and her, sir: what have you to do?
Tra. Not her that chides, sir, at any hand, I pray.
Gre. I love no chiders, sir.—Biondello, let 's a'way.
Hor. Sir, a word ere you go.
Are you a suitor to the maid you talk of, yes, or no?
Tra. An if I be, sir, is it any offence?
Gre. No; if without more words you will get you hence.
Pet. Why, sir, I pray, are not the streets as free
For me, as for you?
Gre. But se is not she.
Tra. For what reason, I beseech you?
Gre. For this reason, if you'll know,
That she's the choice love of signior Gremio.
Hor. That she's the chosen of signior Hortensio.
Tra. Softly, my masters! if you be gentlemen,
Do me this right; hear me with patience.
Baptista is a noble gentleman,
To whom my father is not all unknown;
And were his daughter fairer than she is,
She may more suitors have, and me for one.
Fair Leda's daughter had a thousand wooers;
Then, well one more may fair Bianca have,
And so she shall. Lucentio shall make one,
Though Paris came in hope to speed alone.
Gre. What! this gentleman will out-talk us all.
Luc. Sir, give him head: I know, he'll prove a jade:
Pet. Hortensio, to what end are all these words?
Hor. Sir, let me be so bold as ask you,
Did you yet ever see Baptista's daughter?
Tra. No, sir; but hear I do, that he hath two,
The one as famous as we see her to be,
As is the other for beauteous modesty.
Pet. Sir, sir, the first's for me; let her go by.
Gre. Yes, leave that labour to great Hercules,
And let it be more than Alcides' twelve.
Pet. Sir, understand you this of me: insooth,
The youngest daughter, whom you hearken for,
Her father keeps from all access of suitors,
And will not promise her to any man,
Until the elder sister first be wed;
The younger them is free, and not before.
Tra. If it be so, sir, that you are the man
Must steady us all, and me among the rest;
And if you break the ice, and do this feat³,
Achieve the elder, set the younger free
For our access, whose hap shall be to have her
Will not so graceless be to be ingratitude.
Hor. Sir, you say well, and well you do conceive;
And since you do profess to be a suitor,
You must, as we do, gratify this gentleman,
To whom we all rest generally beholding.
Tra. Sir, I shall not be slack: in sign whereof,
Scene I.—The Same. A Room in Baptista's House.

Enter Katharine and Bianca.

Bian. Good sister, wrong me not, nor wrong yourself
To make a bondmaid, and a slave of me:
That I disdain; but for these other gards,
I bid my hands, I'll put them off myself,
Yet all my raiment, to my petitcoat;
Or what you will command me will I do,
So well I know my duty to my elder.
Kath. Of all thy sisters, here I charge thee, tell
When thou lovest best: see thou dissemble not.
Bian. Believe me, sister, of all the men alive,
I never yet beheld that special face
Which I could fancy more than any other.
Kath. Minion, thou licest. Is't not Hortensio?
Bian. If you affect him, sister, here I swear,
I'll plead for you myself, but you shall have him.
Kath. O! then, belike, you fancy riches more:
You will have Gremio to keep you fair.
Bian. Is it for him you do envy me so?
 Nay then, you jest; and now I well perceive,
You have but jested with me all this while.
Pray thee, sister Kate, untie my hands.
Kath. If that be jest, then all the rest was so. [Strikes
Enter Baptista.

Bap. Why, how now, dame! whence grows this insolence?
Bianca, stand aside:—poor girl! she weeps.
Go ply thy needle; meddle not with her.
For shame, thou hiding* of a devilish spirit,
Why dost thou wrong her that did ne'er wrong thee?
Was she did cross thee with a bitter word?
Kath. Her silence flouts me, and I'll be reveng'd.

[Flies after Bianca.]

Bap. [Holding her.] What! in my sight?—Bianca, get thee in. [Exit Bianca.

Kath. What! will you not suffer me? Nay, now I see,
She is your treasure, she must have a husband;
She must dance barefoot on her wedding-day,
And for your love to her lead apes in hell.
Tilt not to me: I will go sit and weep.

I can find occasion of revenge. [Exit Katharine.

Bap. Was ever gentleman thus groved as I?
But who comes here?

Enter Gremio, with Lucentio in a mean habit; Petruceno, with Hortensio as a Musician; and Tranio, and Biondello bearing a lute and books.

Grem. Good-morrow, neighbour Baptista.

Bap. Good-morrow, neighbour Gremio. God save you, gentlemen.

Pet. And you, good sir. Pray, have you not a daughter,
Call'd Katharina, fair, and virtuous?

Bap. I have a daughter, sir, call'd Katharina.

Grem. You are too bluent: go to it orderly.

Pet. You wrong me, signior Gremio: give me leave.—
I am a gentleman of Verona, sir.
That hearing of her beauty, and her wit,
Her safabilities, and bashful modesty,
Her woman's qualities, and mild behaviour,
Am bold to show myself a forward guest
Within your house, to make mine eye the witness
Of that report which I so oft have heard.
And, for an entrance to my entertainment,
I do present you with a man of mine,

[Presenting Hortensio: Cunning in music, and the mathematics, To instruct her fully in those sciences, Whereof, I know, she is not ignorant.

Accept of him, or else you do me wrong:
His name is Licio, born in Mantua.

Bap. You're welcome, sir, and he, for your good sake.
But for my daughter Katharine, this I know,
She is not for your turn; the more my grief.

Pet. I see, you do not mean to part with her,
Or else you like not of my company.

Bap. Mistake me not: I speak but as I find.
Whose are you, sir? what may I call your name?

Pet. Petruccio is my name, Antonio's son;
A man well known throughout all Italy.

Bap. I know him well: you are welcome for his sake.

Gre. Saving your tale, Petruccio, I pray,
Let us, that are poor petitioners, speak too.

Bap. Backare*: you are marvellous forward.

Pet. O! pardon me, signior Gremio: I would fain be doing.

Gre. I doubt it not, sir; but you will curse your wooing.—

Neighbour, this is a gift very grateful, I am sure of it. To express the like kindness myself, that have been more kindly beholding to you than any, I freely give unto you this young scholar, [Presenting Lucentio] that hath been long studying at Rheims; as cunning in Greek, Latin, and other languages, as the other in music and mathematics. His name is Cambio; pray accept his service.

Bap. A thousand thanks, signior Gremio: welcome, good Cambio.—But, gentle sir, [To Tranio] methinks, you walk like a stranger: may I be so bold to know the cause of your coming?

Tra. Pardon me, sir, the boldness is mine own,
That, being a stranger in this city here,
Do make myself a suitor to your daughter,
Unto Bianca, fair, and virtuous.
Nor is your firm resolve unknown to me,
In the preferment of the eldest sister.
This liberty is all that I request,—
That, upon knowledge of my parentage,
I may have welcome amongst the rest that woo,
And free access and favour as the rest:
And, toward the education of your daughters,
I here bestow a simple instrument,
And this small packet of Greek and Latin books.
If you accept them, then their worth is great.

Bap. Lucentio is your name? of whom, I pray?

Tra. Of Pisa, sir; son to Vincentio.

Bap. A mighty man of Pisa: by report
I know him well. You are very welcome, sir.---

---The Latin censure, pause or speech. • goods: in f. o. • goods: in f. o. • Not in f. o. • wondrous: in f. o. • A word often used; it was stand back.
Take you [To Hec.] the lute, and you [To Luc.] the set of books; you shall go see your pupils presently, Holia, within! Enter a Servant.

Sirrah, lead these gentlemen to my daughters; and tell them both, these are their tutors: bid them use them well.

[Exit Servant, with Hortensio, Luciento, and Biondello.]

We will go walk a little in the orchard, and then to dinner. You are passing welcome. And so I pray you all to think yourselves.

Pet. Signior Baptista, my business asketh haste, and every day I cannot come to woo. You know my father well, and in him, me, left solely heir to all his lands and goods, which I have better'd rather than decreased: then, tell me,—if I get your daughter's love, what dowry shall I have with her to wife? Bap. After my death, the one half of my lands, and in possession twenty thousand crowns.

Pet. And, for that dowry, I'll assure her of her widowswoof, be it that she survive me, in all my lands and leases whatsoever. Let specialties be therefore drawn between us, that covenants may be kept on either hand.

Bap. Ay, when the special thing is well obtain'd, that is her love; for that is all in all.

Pet. Why, that is nothing; for I tell you, father, I am as peremptory, as she proud-minded; and where two raging fires meet together, they do consume the thing that feeds their fury. Though little fires grow great with little wind, yet extreme gusts will blow out fire and all; so I to her, and so she yields to me, for I am rough, and woo not like a babe.

Bap. Well may'st thou woo, and happy be thy speed! But be thou arm'd for some unhappy words.

Pet. Ay, to the proof: as mountains are for winds, that shak not, though they blow perpetually.

Re-enter Hortensio, with his head broken.

Bap. How now, my friend! why dost thou look so pale? Hor. Fo' fear, I promises you, if I look pale.

Bap. What, will my daughter prove a good musician? Hor. I think, she'll sooner prove a soldier: iron may hold with her, but never lutes.

Bap. Why, then thou canst not break her to the lute? Hor. Why no, for she hath broke the lute to me. I did but tell her she mistook her frets, and bow'd her hand to teach her fingering. Whet, with a most impatient, devilish spirit, [them:]

"Frets, call you these?" quoth she: "I'll fume with and with that word she struck me on the head, and through the instrument my pate made way; and there I stood amazed for a while, as on a pillion looking through the lute, while she did call me rascal fiddler, and twangling Jack, with twenty such vile terms, as she had studied to misuse me so.

Pet. Now, by the world, it is a lusty wench! I love her ten times more than ever I did: O, how I long to have some chance of her! Bap. Well, go with me, and be not so discomforted: Proceed in patience with your younger daughter; she's apt to learn, and thankful for good turns.—Signior Petruchio, will you go with us, or shall I send my daughter Kate to you? Pet. I pray you do; I will attend her here,
Pet. A combless cock; so Kate will be my hen.

Kate. No cock of mine; you crow too like a craven.

Pet. Nay, come, Kate, come; you must not look so

Kate. It is my fashion when I see a crab.

Pet. Why, here's no crab, and therefore look not sour.

Kate. There is, there is.

Pet. Then show it me.

Kate. Had I a glass I would.

Pet. What, you mean my face?

Kate. Well aim'd of such a young one.

Pet. Now, by Saint George, I am too young for you.

Kate. Yet you are wither'd,

Pet. 'Tis with cares.

Kate. I care not.

Pet. Nay, bear you, Kate: in sooth, you 'scape not so.

Kate. I chase you, if I tarry: let me go.

[Holdings her.]

Pet. No, not a whit: I find you passing gentle.

Kate. Was told me, you were rough, and coy, and sullen.

Pet. And now I find report a very liar;

For art pleasant, gamesome, passing courteous,

So skilful in speech, yet sweet as spring-time flowers.

Two cannot frown, thou canst not look askance,

Nor bite the lip, as angry wenches will.

Nor hast thou pleasure to be cross in talk;

But thou with mildness entertain'st thy wooers,

With gentle conference, soft and affable.

Way does the world report that Kate doth limp?

A dangerous world! Kate, like the hazel-twigs,

Is straight, and slender; and as brown in hue

As hazel nuts, and sweeter than the kernels.

O! let me see thy walk: thou dost not halt.

Kate. Go, fool, and whom thou keep'st command.

Pet. Did ever Dian so become a grove.

As Kate this chamber with her princely gait?

O! be thou Dian, and let her be Kate,

And then let Kate be chaste, and Dian sportful.

Kate. Where did you study all this soundly speech?

Pet. It is extempore, from my mother-wit.

Kate. A witty mother! witless else her son.

Pet. Am I not wise?

Kate. Yeas; keep you warm.

Pet. Marry, so I mean, sweet Katharine, in thy bed.

And therefore, setting all this chat aside,

This is plain terms:—your father hath consented

That you shall be my wife; your dowry 'greed on,

And will, nill you, I will marry you.

Now, Kate, I am a husband for your turn;

For by this light, whereby I see thy beauty,

The beauty that doth make me like thee well,

The must be married to no man but me:

For I am, be born to tame you, Kate,

And bring you from a wild Kate to a Kate

Comformable, as other household Kate.

But come thy father: never make denial;

And I will have Katharine to my wife.

Kate. Re-enter BAPTISTA, Gremio, and TRanio.

Bap. Now, signior Petruchio, how speed you with your daughter?

Pet. How but well, sir? how but well?

If impossible I should speed amiss.

Bap. Why, how now, daughter Katharine! in your dumps?

Kate. Call you me, daughter? now, I promise you,

You have show'd a tender fatherly regard,

To wish me wed to one half lutean;

A laid-cap ruffian, and a swearing Jack,

That thinks with oaths to face the matter out.
ACT III.

SCENE I.—A Room in Baptista’s House.

Enter LUCENTIO, HORTENSIO, and BIANCA.

Luc. Fiddler, forbear: you grow too forward, sir.
Have you so soon forgot the entertainment
Her sister Katharine welcom’d you withal?

Hor. Tut, wrangling pedant! I avouch, this is
The patroness of heavenly harmony:
Then, give me leave to have prerogative;
And when in music we have spent an hour,
Your lecture shall have leisure for as much.
Luc. Preposterous ass, that never read so far
To know the cause why music was ordain’d!
Was it not to refresh the mind of man,
After his studies, or his usual pain?
Then, give me leave to read Philosophy,
And while I pause serve in your harmony.

Hor. Sirrah, I will not bear these braves of thine.

Bian. Why, gentlemen, you do me double wrong,
To strive for that which resteth in my choice.
I am no breachering scholar in the schools;
I’ll not be tied to hours, nor ‘pointed times,
But learn my lessons as I please myself.
And, to cut off all strife, here sit we down:
Take you your instrument, play you the whiles;
His lecture will be done, ere you have tun’d.

Hor. You’ll leave his lecture when I am in tune?

[HORTENSIO RETIRES.

Bian. That will be never:—tune your instrument.

Luc. Here, madam:—

Hac ibat Simeo; hic est Sigeia tellus;
Hic steterat Priamus regis celsa senis.

If you like me, she shall have me and mine.

Tru. Why, then, the maid is mine from all the world.

By your firm promise: Gremio is cut-vied.

Bap. I must confess your offer is the best;
And, let your father make her the assurance,
She is your own; else, you must pardon me:
If you should die before him, where’s her dowry?

Tru. That’s but a cavil: he is old, I young.

Gre. And may not young men die, as well as old?

Bap. Well, gentlemen, I am thus resolv’d.—On Sunday next, you know,
My daughter Katharine is to be married:
Now, on the Sunday following shall Bianca
Be bride to you, if you make this assurance:
If not, to signior Gremio:
And so I take my leave, and thank you both.
[Exe

Gre. Adieu, good neighbour. Now I fear thee not Sirrah, young gamester, your father were a fool
To give thee all, and, in his waning age,
Set foot under thy table. Tut, a toy!

An old Italian fox is not so kind, my boy.

[Tru. A vengeance on your crafty wittcher’d hide! Yet I have faced it with a card of ten.

’Tis in my head to do my master good:—
I see no reason, but suppose’d Lucentio
Must get a father, call’d—suppose’d Vincentio;
And that’s a wonder: fathers, commonly,
Do get their children; but in this case of winning,
A child shall get a sire, if I fail not of my cunning.

TAMING OF THE SHREW.

Bion. Master, master! news, and such old news as you never heard of!
Bap. Is it new and old too? how may that be?
Bion. Why, is it not news to hear of Petruchio's coming?
Bap. Is he come?
Bion. Why, no, sir.
Bap. What then?
Bion. He is coming.
Bap. When will he be here?
Bion. When he stands where I am, and see you there.

Tut. But, say, what is thine old news?
Bion. Why, Petruchio is coming, in a new hat, and an old jerkin; a pair of old breeches, thrice turned; a pair of boots that have been candle-cases, one buckled, another laced; an old rusty sword ta'en out of the town armoury, with a broken hilt, and chapeless; with two broken points: his horse heaped with an old motley saddle, and stirrups of no kindred: besides, possessed with the glanders, and like to mose in the chine; troubled with the lampass, infected with the fashions, full of wind-galleys, sped with spavins, rayed with the yellos, past cure of the fives, stark spoiled with the staggerers, bognaun with the bots; swayed in the back, and shoulder-shotten; ne'er-legged before, and with a half-cheeked bit, and a head stall of sheep's-leather; which, being restrained to keep him from stumbling, had been often bust, and now repaired with knots: one girth six times pierced, and a woman's crupper of velvets, which hath two letters for her name fairly set down in studs, and here and there pieced with pac- thread.

Bap. Who comes with him?
Bion. O, sir! his lackey, for all the world caparisoned like the horse; with a linen stock on one leg, and a kersey boot-hose on the other, gartered with a red and blue list; an old hat, and "the amours or forty farces" pricked in't for a feather: a monster, a very monster in apparel, and not like a Christian footboy, or a genteelman's lackey.

Tut. 'Tis some odd humour pricks him to this fashion;
Yet oftentimes he goes but mean apparell'd.

Bap. I am glad he is come, howso'ever he comes.
Bion. Why, sir, he comes not.
Bap. Didst thou not say, he comes?
Bion. Who? that Petruchio came?
Bap. Ay, that Petruchio came.
Bion. No, sir; I say, his horse comes, with him on his back.

Bap. Why, that's all one.
Bion. Nay, by St. Jamy, I hold you a penny, a horse and a man is more than one,
And yet not many.

Enter PETRUCHIO and Gremio, strangely apparell'd.

Pet. Come, where be these gallants? who is at home?
Bap. You are welcome, sir.
Pet. And yet I come not well.
Bap. And yet you halt not.

As I wish you were.

Pet. Were it much better, I should rush in thus.
But where is Kate? where is my lovely bride?
How does my father?—Gentles, methinks you frown.
And wherefore gaze this goodly company,
"Ay, by gogs-wouns," quoth he; and swore so loud,
That, all-an'az'd, the priest let fall the book,
And, as he stoop'd again to take it up,
This mad-brain'd bridegroom took him such a cuff,
That down fell priest and book, and book and priest:
"Now take them up," quoth he, "if any liet."

Tru. What said the wench when he arose again?

Gre. Trembled and shook; for why, he stamp'd, and swore,
As if the vicer meant to eazon him.

But after many ceremonies done,
He calls for wine:—"A health!" quoth he; as if
He had been about, carousing to his mates,
After a storm:—quaff'd off the muscadel,
And threw the sops all in the sexton's face;
Having no other reason,
But that his beard grew thin and hungrely,
And seem'd to ask him sops as he was drinking.
This done, he took the bride about the neck,
And kiss'd her lips with such a clamorous smack,
That, at the first sight, all the church did echo;
And I, seeing this, came thence for very shame;
And after me, I know, the rout is coming:
Such a mad marriage never was before.

Hark, hark! I hear the minstrels play.
[Music]

Enter Petruchio, Katharina, Bianca, Baptista, Hortensio, Grumio, and Train.

Pet. Gentlemen and friends, I thank you for your pains.
I know, you think to dine with me to-day,
And have prepar'd great store of wedding cheer;
But, so it is, my haste doth call me hence;
And therefore here I mean to take my leave.

Bap. Is't possible you will away to-night?

Pet. I must away to-day, before night come.

Make it no wonder: if you knew my business,
You would entreat me rather go than stay,—
And, honest company, I thank you all,
That have beheld me give away myself.

To this most patient, sweet, and virtuous wife:
Dine with my father, drink a health to me,
For I must hence; and farewell to you all.

Tru. Let us entreat you stay till after dinner.

Pet. It may not be.

Gre. Let me entreat you.

Pet. It cannot be.

Kath. Let me entreat you.

Pet. I am content.

Kath. Are you content to stay?

Pet. I am content you shall entreat me stay,
But yet not stay, entreat me how you can.

Kath. Now, if you love me, stay.

Gre. Ay, sir, they be ready: the oats have eates the horses.

Kath. Nay, then,
Do what thou canst, I will not go to-day;

No, nor to-morrow, not till I please myself.

The door is open, sir, there lies your way;

You may be jogging whiles your boots are green;

For me, I'll not be gone, till I please myself.—

'Tis like you'll prove a jolly early groom,

That take it on you at the first so roundly.

Pet. O, Kath! content thee: pr'ythee, be not angry.

Kath. I will be angry. What hast thou to do?

Father, be quiet; he shall stay my leisure.

Gre. Ay, marry, sir, now it begins to work.

Kath. Gentlemen, forward to the bridal dinner.
TAMING OF THE SHREW.

I see, a woman may be made a fool, if she had not a spirit to resist.

Pd. They shall go forward, Kate, at thy command.—

They the bride, you that attend on her:

Go to the feast, revel and dominate,

Carouse full measure to her maidenhead,

Be mad and merry, or go hang yourselves.

But for my bonny Kate, she must with me.

Nay, look not big, nor stamp, nor stare, nor fret;

I will be master of what is mine own.

She is my goods, my chattels; she is my house,

My household-stuff, my field, my barn,

My horse, my ox, my ass, my any thing:

And here she stands; touch her whoever dare;

I'll bring mine action on the proudest he

That stops my way in Padua.—Grumio,

Drew forth thy weapon; we're beset with thieves:

Become thy mistress, if thou be a man.—

Fear not, sweet wench; they shall not touch thee, Kate:

I'll buckler thee against a million.

[Exeunt Petruchio, Katharina, and Grumio.

Bap. Nay, let them go, a couple of quiet ones.

Gra. Went they not quickly, I should die with laughing.

Tru. Of all mad matches never was the like.

Luc. Mistress, what's your opinion of your sister?

Bias. That, being mad herself, she's madly mated.

Gra. I warrant him, Petruchio is Kated.

Bap. Neighbours and friends, though bride and bridegroom wants

For to supply the places at the table,

You know, there wants no junkete at the feast —

Lucentio, you shall supply the bridegroom's place,

And let Bianca take her sister's room.

Tru. Shall sweet Bianca practise how to bride it?

Bap. She shall, Lucentio.—Come, gentlemen; let's go.

[Exeunt

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—A Hall in Petruchio's Country House.

Enter Grumio.

Gra. Fie, fie, on all tired jades, on all mad masters,

And all foul ways! Was ever man so bested? was ever man so rayless? was ever man so weary? I am set before to make a fire, and they are coming after to warm them. Now, were not I a little pot, and soon but my very lips might freeze to my teeth, my tongue to the roof of my mouth, my heart in my belly, ere I should come by a fire to thaw me; but, I, with blowing the fire, shall warm myself, for, considering the weather, a taller man than I will take cold. Holla, hoa! Curtis!

[Enter Curtis.

Cur. Who is that, calls so coldly?

Gra. A piece of ice: if thou doubt it, thou may'st slide from my shoulder to my heel, with no greater a run but my head and my neck. A fire, good Curtis.

Cur. Is my master and his wife coming, Grumio?

Gra. O! ay, Curtis, ay; and therefore fire, fire: cast on no water.

Cur. Is she so hot a shrew as she's reported?

Gra. She was, good Curtis, before this frost; but thou know'st, winter tames man, woman, and beast, for it hath tamed my old master, and my new mistress, and thyself, fellow Curtis.

Cur. Away, you three-inch fool! I am no beast.

Gra. Am I but three inches? why, thy horn is a foot: and so long am I at the least. But wilt thou make a fire, or shall I complain on thee to our mistress, whose hand (she being now at hand) thou shalt soon feel, to thy cold comfort, for being slow in thy hot office?

Cur. I pr'ythee, good Grumio, tell me, how goes the world? pray tell.

Gra. A cold world, Curtis, in every office, but thine; and, therefore, fire. Do thy duty, and have thy duty, for my master and mistress are almost frozen to death.

Cur. There's fire ready; and therefore, good Grumio, the news.

Gra. Why, "Jack, boy! ho boy!" and as much news as thou wilt.

Cur. Come, you are so full of coney catching.

Gra. Why, therefore, fire: for I have caught extreme cold. Where's the cook? is supper ready, the house trimm'd, rushes strewd, cobwebs swept; the serving-men in their new fustian, their white stockings, and every officer his wedding-garment on? Be the Jacks fair within, the Jills' fair without, the carpets laid, and every thing in order?

Cur. All ready; and therefore, I pray thee, news?

Gra. First, know, my horse is tired; my master and mistress fallen out.

Cur. How?

Gra. Out of their saddles into the dirt; and thereby hangs a tale.

Cur. Let's ha', good Grumio.

Gra. Lend thine ear.

Cur. Here.

Gra. There.

Cur. This 'tis to feel a tale, not to hear a tale.

Gra. And therefore 'tis called, a sensible tale; and this cuff was but to knock at your ear, and beseech listening. Now I begin: Imprisim, we came down a foul hill, my master riding behind my mistress.

Cur. Both of one horse?

Gra. What's that to thee?

Cur. Why, a horse.

Gra. Tell thou the tale;—but hadst thou not crossed me, thou shouldst have heard how her horse fell, and she under her horse; thou shouldst have heard, in how miry a place; how she was bemoiled; how he left her with the horse upon her; how he beat me because her horse stumbled; how she waded through the dirt to pluck him off me; how he swore; how she prayed, that never prayed before; how I cried; how the horses ran away; how her bride was burst; how I lost my crupper;—with many things of worthy memory, which now shall die in oblivion, and thou return unexperienced to thy grave.

Cur. By this reckoning he is more shrew than she.

Gra. Ay; and that thou and the proudest of you all shall find, when he comes home. But what talk of this?—Call forth Nathaniel, Joseph, Nicholas, Philip, Walter, Sugarsop, and the rest: let their heads be sleekly combed, their blue coats brushed, and their garters of an indifferent knit: let them curtsey with their left legs, and not presume to touch a hair of my master's horse-tail, till they kiss their hands. Are they all ready?

Cur. They are.

Gr. Call them forth.

Cur. Do you hear? ho! you must meet my master, to countenance my mistress.

Gr. Why, she hath a face of her own.

Cur. Who knows not that?

Gr. Thou, it seems, that callest for company to countenance her.

Cur. I call them forth to credit her.

Gr. Why, she comes to borrow nothing of them.

Enter several Servants.

Nath. Welcome home, Grumio.

Phil. How now, Grumio?

Jos. What, Grumio!

Nick. Fellow Grumio!

Nath. How now, old lad?

Gr. Welcome, you;—how now, you;—what, you;—fellow, you;—and thus much for greeting. Now, my spruce companions, is all ready, and all things meet?

Nath. All things is ready. How near is our master?

Gr. E’en at hand, alighted by this; and therefore be not,—Cock’s passion, silence!—I hear my master.

[All servants frightened.]

Enter Petruchio and Katherina.

Pet. Where be these knaves? What! no man at the door, To hold my stirrup, nor to take my horse. Where is Nathaniel, Gregory, Philip?

[All Serv. Here, here, sir; here, sir.

Pet. Here, sir! here! sir! here! sir! here, sir! sir?

You logger-headed and unpolish’d grooms! What, no attendance? no regard? no duty?— Where is the foolish knave I sent before?

Gr. Here, sir; as foolish as I was before.

Pet. You peasant swain! you worty mail-horse drudge!

Did I not bid thee meet me in the park, And bring along these rascal knaves with thee?

Gr. Nathaniel’s coat, sir, was not fully made, And Gabriel’s pumps were all unpink’d i’ the heel; There was no link to colour Peter’s hat, And Walter’s dagger was not come from sheathing: There were none fine, but Adam, Ralph, and Gregory: The rest were ragged, old, and beggarly; Yet, as they are, here are they come to meet you.

Pet. Go, rascals, go, and fetch my supper in.— [Exeunt some of the Servants.

"Where is the life that late I led?"—[Sings. Where are those?— Sit down, Kate, and welcome.

Soud, soud, soud, soud!

Re-enter Servants, with supper.

Why, when, I say?—Nay, good sweet Kate, be merry. Off with my boots, you rogues! you villains, when?

"It was the friers of orders grey; [Sings. As he forth walked on his way."—

Out, you rogue! you pluck my foot away: Take that, and mend the plucking of the other.—[Kicks him.

Be merry, Kate:—some water, here; what, ho!— Enter Servant, with water.

Where’s my spanyel Troilus?—Sirrah, get you hence, And bid by cousin Ferdinand come hither:— [Exeunt Servant.

One, Kate, that you must kiss, and be acquainted with. Where are my slippers?—Shall I have some water?

[A basin is presented to him.

Come, Kate, and wash, and welcome heartily.

You whoreson villain! will you let it fall? [Strikes him. Kath. Patience, I pray you; ’tis a fault unwilling.

Come, Kate, sit down; I know you have a stomach. Will you give thanks, sweet Kate, or else shall I?— What’s this? mutton? A y.

1 Serv. I.

Pet. I Serv. 1 Serv. I. Pet. ’T is burnt; and so is all the meat. What dogs are these?—Where is the rascal cook? How durst you, villains, bring it from the dresser, And serve it thus to me that love it not? There, take it to you, trenchers, cupes, and all. [Throws the meat, &c. all about.

You needless jolthead, and unmanner’d slaves! What! do you grumble? ’I’ll be with you straight.

Kath. I pray you, husband, be not so disquiet: The meat was well, if you were so contented. Pet. I tell thee, Kate, ’tis burnt and dried away, And I expressly am forbid to touch it; For it engenders choler, planteth anger: And better ’t were, that both of us did fast, Since, of ourselves, ourselves are cholerie, Than feed it with such over-roasted flesh. Be patient: to-morrow ’t shall be mended, And for this night we’ll fast for company. Come, I will bring thee to thy bridal chamber.

Nath. Peter, didst ever see the like?

Pet. He kills her in her own humour.

Re-enter Curt.

Gr. Where is he?

Curt. In her chamber.

Making a sermon of ceremony to her; And rail, and swear, and rate, that she, poor soul, Knows not which way to stand, to look, to speak, And sits as one new-risen from a dream.

Away, away! for he is coming hither. [Exeunt, running.

Re-enter Petruchio.

Pet. Thus have I politely begun my reign, And ’tis my hope to end successfully. My falcon now is sharp, and passing empty, And, till she stoop, she must not be full-gorg’d, For then she never looks upon her lure. Another way I have to man my haggard, To make her come, and know her keeper’s call; That is, to watch her, as we watch those kites, That hate, and best, and will not be obedient. She ate no meat to-day, nor none shall eat; Last night she slept not, nor to-night shall she not: As with the meat, some undeserved fault I’ll find about the making of the bed, And here I’ll fling the pillow, there the bolster, This way the coverlet, another way the sheets:— Ay, and amid this hurly, I intend; That all is done in reverence of her; And, in conclusion, she shall watch all night: And, if she chance to nod, I’ll rail, and bawl, And with the clamour keep her still awake. This is the way to kill a wife with kindness; And thus I’ll curb her mad and headstrong humour, He that knows better how to tame a shrew, Now let him speak: ’tis charity to shew.

[Exit.

SCENE II.—Padua. Before Baptista’s House.

Enter Tranio and Hortensio.

Tran. Is’t possible, friend Licio, that mistress Bianca
Enter Bianca and Lucietto.

Luc. Now, mistresse, profit you in what you read?
Bia. What, master, read you? first resolve me that.

Luc. I read that I profess, the Art to Love,
Bia. And may you prove, sir, master of your art?
Luc. While you, sweet dear, prove mistress of my heart.

Her. [Coming forward.] Quick proceeded, marry! Now, tell me, I pray,
You that durst swear that your mistress Bianca
Lived none in the world so well as Lucietto.

Tra. O, despiteful love! unconstant womankind!—
Tell thee, Lucio, this is wonderful.

Her. Mistake no more: I am not Lucio,
Nor a musician, as I seem to be,
But one that scorns to live in this disguise,
For such a one, as leaves a gentleman,
And makes a god of such a cullion.

Know, sir, that I am call'd Hortensio.

Tra. Signior Hortensio, I have often heard
Of your entire affection to Bianca;
And since mine eyes are witness of her lightness,
I will with you, if you be so contented,
Forwear Bianca, and her love for ever.

Her. See, how they kiss and court!—Signior Lucentio,
Here is my hand, and here I firmly vow
Never to woo her more; but do forwear her,
As free unworthy all the former savours
That I have fondly flatter'd her withal.

Tra. And here I take the like unfeigned oath,
Never to marry her, though she entreats.²
Be so her! see, how beastly she doth court him.

Her. Would all the world, but he, have quite for-sworn her!³
For me, that I may surely keep mine oath,
I will be married to a wealthy widow,
Ere three days pass, which hath as long lov'd me,
As I have lov'd this proud, disdainful haggard.

And so farewell, signior Luciento.—
Kindness in women! not their beautiful looks,
Shall win my love:—and so I take my leave,
In resolution as I swore before.

[Exit Hortensio.—Lucientio and Bianca advance.]

Tra. Mistress Bianca, bless you with such grace,
As length to a lover's blessed case!
Say, I have ta'en you napping, gentle love
And have forsworn you, with Hortensio.

Bia. Tranio, jest. But have you both for-sworn me?

Tra. Mistress, we have.

Luc. Then we are rid of Lucio.

Tra. 'Faith, he'll have a lusty widow now,
That shall be woo'd and wedded in a day.

Bia. God give him joy!

Tra. Ay, and he'll tame her.

Bia. He says so, Tranio.

Tra. 'Faith, he is gone unto the taming-school.

Bia. The taming-school! what is, there is such a place?

Tra. Ay, mistresse, and Petruchio is the master;
That teacheth tricks eleven and twenty long,
To tame a shrew, and charm her chattering tongue.

Enter Biondello, running.

Bion. O master, master! I have watch'd so long
That I'm dog-weiary: but at last I spied
An ancient ambler⁴ coming down the hill,
Will serve the turn.

Tra. What is he, Biondello?

Bion. Master, a miserata, or a pedlar, I know not what; but formal in apparel,
In gait and countenance surely like a father.

Luc. And what of him, Tranio?

Tra. If he be credulous, and trust my tale,
I'll make him glad to seem Vincentio,
And give assurance to Baptista Minoia,
As if he were the right Vincentio.

Take in your love, and then let me alone.

[Exeunt Lucientio and Bianca.

Enter a Pedant.

Ped. God save you, sir! And, you, sir: you are welcome.
Travel you far on, or are you at the farthest?

Ped. Sir, at the farthest for a week or two;
But then up farther, and as far as Rome,
And so to Tripoli, if God lend me life.

Tra. What countryman, I pray?

Ped. Of Mantua.

Tra. Of Mantua, sir?—marry, God forbid!
And come to Padua, careless of your life?

Ped. 'T is death for any one in Mantua
To come to Padua. Know you not the cause?
Your ships are stay'd at Venice; and the duke,
For private quarrel 'twixt your duke and him,
Hath publish'd and proclaim'd it openly.
'T is marvell; but that you are but newly come,
You might have heard it else proclaim'd about.

Ped. Alas, sir! it is worse for me than so;
For I have bills for money by exchange
From Florence, and must here deliver them.

Tra. Well, sir, to do you courtesy
This will I do, and this I will advise you—
First, tell me, have you ever been at Pisa?

Ped. Ay, sir, in Pisa have I often been;
Pisa, renowned for grave citizens.

Tra. Among them, know you one Vincentio?

Ped. I know him not, but I have heard of him:
A merchant of incomparable wealth.

Tra. He is my father, sir; and, sooth to say,
In countenance somewhat doth resemble you.

Bion. [Aside.] As much as an apple doth an oyster,

Ped. O! sir, I do; and will repute you ever
The patron of my life and liberty.

Tra. Then go with me, to make the matter good.
This, by the way, I let you understand:
My father is here look'd for every day,
To pass assurance of a dower in marriage
'Twixt me and one Baptista's daughter here:
In all these circumstances I'll instruct you.

Go with me, to clothe you as becomes you.

[Exeunt.}
SCENE III.—A Room in Petruchio’s House.

Enter Katharina and Grumio.

Gru. No, no, forsooth; I dare not, for my life.

Kath. The more you wrong, the more his spite appears.

What, did he harm me to famish me?

Beggars, that come unto my father’s door

Upon entreaty, have a present alms;

If not, elsewhere they meet with charity:

But, I, who never knew how to entreat,

Nor never needed, that I should entreat,

Am staid for meat, giddy for lack to sleep;

With oaths kept waking, and with brawling fed.

And that which spites me more than all these wants,

He does it under name of perfect love;

As who should say, if I should sleep, or eat,

’T were deadly sickness, or else present death.

I pr’ythee go, and get me some repast;

I care not what, so it be wholesome food.

Gru. What say you to a neat’s foot?

Kath. ’Tis passing good: I pr’ythee let me have it.

Gru. I fear, it is too choleric a meat.

How say you to a fat tripe, finely broil’d?

Kath. I like it well: good Grumio fetch it me.

Gru. I cannot tell: I fear, ’tis choleric.

What say you to a piece of beef, and mustard?

Kath. A dish that I do love to feed upon.

Gru. Ay, but the mustard is too hot a little.

Kath. Why, then the beef, and let the mustard rest.

Gru. Nay, that I will not: you shall have the mustard.

Or else, you get no beef of Grumio.

Kath. Then both, or one, or any thing thou wilt.

Gru. Why then, the mustard without the beef.

Kath. Go, get thee gone, thou false deluding slave.

[Beats him.]

That feed’st me with the very name of meat.

Sorrow on thee, and all the pack of you,

That triumph thus upon my misery!

Go: get thee gone, I say.

Enter Petruchio with a dish of meat. and Hortensio.

Petr. How fares my Kate? What, sweeting, all am I?

Hort. Mistress, what cheer?

Kath. ’Faith, as cold as can be.

Pet. Pluck up thy spirits: look cheerfully upon me.

Here, love; thou see’st how diligent I am,

To dress thy meat myself, and bring it thee:

[Sets the dish on a table.]

I am sure, sweet Kate, this kindness merits thanks.

What! not a word? Nay then, thou lov’st it not,

And all my pains is sort to no proof. —

Here, take away this dish.

Kath. I pray you, let it stand.

Pet. The poorest service is repaid with thanks,

And so shall mine, before you touch the meat.

Kath. I thank you, sir.

Hort. Signior Petruchio, feo! you are to blame.

Come, mistress Kate, I’ll bear you company. —[me.—

Pet. [Aside.] Eat it up all, Hortensio, if thou lov’st [To her.] Much good do it unto thy gentle heart!

Kate, eat space. —And now, my honey love,

Willst thou return unto thy father’s house,

And revel it as bravely as the best,

With silk’en coats, and caeps, and golden rings,

With ruffs, and cuffs, and farthingales, and things;

With scarfs, and fans, and double change of bravery,

With amber bracelets, beads, and all this knavery.

What! hast thou din’d? The tailor stays thy leisure,

To deck thy body with his rufling treasure.

1 Dispirited. 2 Approach, approbation. 3 The crust of a pie was so called.
TAMING OF THE shrew.

SCENE IV.

TAI. I have.

GRA. Face not me: thou hast braved many men; have not me: I will neither be faced nor braved. I bid the master cut out the gown; but did not bid him cut it to pieces: ergo, thou liest.

TAI. Why, here is the note of the fashion to testify.

Pet. Read it.

GRA. The note lies in 's throat, if he say I said so.

TAI. "Imprimis, a loose-bodied gown."

GRA. Master, if ever I said loose-bodied gown, sew me in the skirts of it, and beat me to death with a bottom of brown thread: I said, a gown.

TAI. "With a small compassed cape."

GRA. I confess the cape.

TAI. "With a trunk sleeve."

GRA. I confess two sleeves.

TAI. The sleeves curiously cut."

Pet. Ay, there's the villainy.

GRA. Error i' the bill, sir; error i' the bill. I commanded the sleeves should be cut out, and sewed up again; and that I'll prove upon thee, though thy little face be armed in a thimble.

TAI. This is true, that I say: an I had thee in place where thou shouldst know it.

GRA. I am for thee straight: take thou the bill, give me thy meate-yard, and spare not me.

Her. God-a-mercy, Grumio; then he shall have no odds.

Pet. Well, sir, in brief, the gown is not for me.

GRA. You are i' the right, sir: 'tis for my mistress.

Pet. Go, take it up unto thy master's use.

GRA. Villain, not for thy life! Take up my mistress' gown for thy master's use?

Pet. Why, sir, what's a your consent in that?

GRA. O, sir, the consent is deeper than you think for. Take up my mistress' gown to his master's use?

O, fie, fie, fie!

Pet. [Aside.] Hortensio, say thou wilt see the tailor paid.

TAI. Go take it once; be gone, and say no more.

Her. Tailor, I'll pay thee for thy gown to-morrow: Take so unkindness of his hasty words.

Away, I say; commend me to thy master.

[Exeunt Tailor and Haberdasher.

Pet. Well, come, my Kate; we will unto thy father's,

E'en in these honest means habiliments.

Our purses shall be proud, our garmentes poor:

For to the mind that makes the body rich;

And as the sun breaks through the darkest clouds,

So honour peereth in the meanest habitation.

What is the jay more precious than the lark,

Because his feathers are more beautiful?

He is theadder better than the cob,

Because his painted skin contents the eye?

O, no, Kate; neither art thou the worse

For this poor furniture, and mean array.

If thou account'st it shame, lay it on me;

And therefore frolic: we will henceforth with

To jest and sport us at thy father's house:

Go call my men, and let us straight to him;

And bring our horses unto Long-lane end,

There will we mount, and thither walk on foot.

Let's see; I think 'tis now some seven o'clock,

And well we may come there by dinner time.

Kath. I dare assure you, sir; 'tis almost two,

And will be supper time, ere you come there.

Pet. It shall be seven, ere I go to horse.

Look, what I speak, or do, or think to do,

You are still crossing it.—Sirs, let's alone:

I will not go to-day; and, ere I do,

It shall be what oracle I say it is.

Hor. Why, so this gallant will command the sun.

[Exeunt.

Enter Tranio, and the Pedant booted* and dressed like Vincentio.

TRA. Sir, this is the house: please it you, that I call?

Pet. Ay, what else? and, but I be deceived,

Signior Baptista may remember me,

Near twenty years ago, in Genoa,

Where we were lodgers at the Pegasus.

TRA. 'Tis well; and hold your own, in any case,

With such austerity as longeth to a father.

Enter Biondello.

Ped. I warrant you. But, sir, here comes your boy; 'T were good, he were school'd.

TRA. Fear you not him. Sirrah, Biondello,

Now to your duty thoroughly. I advise you:

Imagine 't were the right Vincentio.

BION. Tut! fear not me.

TRA. But hast thou done thy errand to Baptista?

BION. I told him, that your father was at Venice,

And that you look'd for him this day in Padua.

TRA. Thou 'rt a tall fellow: hold thee that to drink.

Here comes Baptista.—Set your countenance, sir.—

Enter Baptista and Lucentio.

Signior Baptista, you are happily met.—

SIR, this is the gentleman I told you of—

I pray you, stand good father to me now,

Give me Bionta for my patrimony.

Ped. Soft, son!—

SIR, by your leave: having come to Padua

To gather in some debts, my son, Lucentio,

Made me acquainted with a weighty cause

Of love between your daughter and himself:

And, for the good report I hear of you,

And for the love he beareth to your daughter,

And she to him, to stay him not too long,

I am content, in a good father's ear,

To have him match'd; and, if you please to like

No worse than I, upon some agreement,

Me shall you find ready and willing

With one consent to have her so bestow'd;

For curious* I cannot be with you,

Signior Baptista, of whom I hear so well.

BAP. Sir, pardon me in what I have to say:

Your plainness, and your shortness, please me well.

Right true it is, your son Lucentio, here,

Doth love my daughter, and she loveth him,

Or both ensemble deeply their affections;

And, therefore, if you say no more than this,

That like a father you will deal with him,

And pass my daughter a sufficient dower,

The match is made, and all is happily done:

Your son shall have my daughter with consent.

TRA. I thank you, sir. Where, then, do you hold* best,

We be affixed, and such assurance ta'en,

As shall with either part's agreement stand?

BAP. Not in my house, Lucentio; for, you know,

Pitchers have ears, and I have many servants.

Besides, old Gremio is hearkening still,

And, happily, we might be interrupted.

--- *"Seruery was the old word for _finery_."  *An old weapon like a pike.  *This word not in i.s.  *Particulare.  *This word not in i.s.  *原来是"a"。 TAMING OF THE SREHW. AOT IV.

Tra. Then, at my lodging, an it like you: There doth my father lie, and there this night We’ll pass the business privately and well. Send for your daughter by your servant here; My boy shall fetch the scrivener presently. The worst is this,—that, at so slender warning, You’re like to have a thin and slender pittance. Bap. It likes me well:—Cambio, hie you home, And bid Bianca make her ready straight; And, if you will, tell what hath happened: Lucentio’s father is arrived in Padua, And how she’s like to be Lucentio’s wife. Luc. I pray the gods she may with all my heart. Tra. Dally not with the gods, but get thee gone. Signior Baptista, shall I lead the way? Welcome: one messis is like to be your cheer. Come, sir; we will better it in Pisa. Bap. I follow you.

Enter TRAMIDO, PEDANT, AND BAPTISTA.

Bion. Cambio! Luc. What say’st thou, Biondello? Bion. You saw my master wink and laugh upon you. Luc. Biondello, what of that? Bion. ’Faith nothing; but he has left me here behind, to expound the meaning or moral of his signs and tokens. Luc. I pray thee, moralize them. Bion. Then thus. Baptista is safe, talking with the deceiving father of a deceitful son. Luc. And what of him? Bion. His daughter is to be brought by you to the supper. Luc. And then?—

Bion. The old priest at St. Luke’s church is at your command at all hours. Luc. And what of all this? Bion. I cannot tell; except, while they are busied about a counterfeit assurance, take you assurance of her, cum privilegio ad impressionem solium. To the church!—take the priest, clerk, and some sufficient honest witnesses. If this be not that you look for, I have no more to say, But bid Bianca farewell for ever and a day.

Luc. Hear’st thou, Biondello?

Bion. I cannot tarry: I knew a wench married in an afternoon as she went to the garden for parsley to stuff a rabbit; and so may you, sir; and so adieu, sir. My master hath appointed me to go to St. Luke’s, to bid the priest be ready to come against you come with your appendix. [Exit.

Luc. I may, and will, if she be so contented: She will be pleased, then wherefore should I doubt? What hap may I, I’ll roundly go about her: It shall go hard, if Cambio go without her. [Exit.

SCENE V.—A public road.

Enter PETRUCHIO, KATHARINA, AND HORTENSIO.

Pet. Comma on, o’ God’s name: once more toward our father’s. Good lord! how bright and goodly shines the moon. Kath. The moon! the sun: it is not moonlight now. Pet. I say, it is the moon that shines so bright. Kath. I know, it is the sun that shines so bright. Pet. Now, by my mother’s son, and that’s myself, It shall be moon, or star, or what I list. Or ere I journey to your father’s house,— Go one,1 and fetch our horses back again.— Evermore cross’d, and cross’d; nothing but cross’d. Hor. Say as he says, or we shall never go.

1 expect: in f. e. * Not in f. s. * on: in f. e * so: in f. e.
ACT V.

Enter on one side Biondello, Lucentio, and Bianca; Gremio walking on the other side.

Bion. Softly and swiftly, sir, for the priest is ready.

Luc. I fly; Biondello; but they may chance to need thee at home; therefore, leave us.

Bos. Nay, faith, I’ll see the church o’ your back; and then come back to your master as soon as I can.

[Exeunt Lucentio, Bianca, and Biondello.

Gru. I marvel Cambio comes not all this while.

Enter Petruccio, Katharina, Vincentio, and Attendants.

Petr. Sir, here’s the door; this is Lucentio’s house:
My father’s bears more toward the market place;
Tucker must I, and here I leave you, sir.

Vin. You shall not choose but drink before you go.

Pet. I think I shall command your welcome here.

And, by all likelihood, some cheer is toward. [Knocks.

Gru. They’re busy within; you were best knock louder.

Enter Pedant above, at a window.

Pet. What’s he, that knocks as he would beat down the gate?

Vin. Is signior Lucentio within, sir?

Pet. He’s within, sir, but not to be spoken withal.

Vin. What, if a man bring him a hundred pounds or thr to make merry withal?

Pet. Keep your hundred pounds to yourself: he shall need none, so long as I live.

Petr. Nay, I told you, your son was beloved in Padua.

Do you hear, sir? to leave frivolous circumstances, I pray you, tell signior Lucentio, that his father is come from Pisa, and is here at the door to speak with him.

Pet. Thou liest: his father is come from Pisa, and here sitting out at this window.

Vin. Art thou his father?

Petr. Ay, sir; so his mother says, if I may believe her.

Pet. Why, how now, gentleman? [To Vincentio.] Why, this is flat knavery, to take upon you another man’s name.

Re-enter Biondello.

Bion. I have seen them in the church together: Go send ‘em good shipping!—But who is here? mine old master, Vincentio! now we are undone, and brought to nothing.

Bion. I hope I may choose, sir.

Vin. Come hither, you rogue. What, have you forgot me?

Bion. Forgot you? no, sir: I could not forget you, if I never saw you before in all my life.

Vin. What, you notorious villain, didst thou never set thy master’s father, Vincentio?

Bion. What, my old, worshipful old master? yes, marry, sir: see where he looks out of the window.

Hor. Well; Petruccio, this has put me in heart. Have to my widow; and if she be froward,
Then hast thou taught Hortensio to be untoward. [Exit.

Vin. Is’t so, indeed? [Beats Biondello.

Bion. Help, help, help! here’s a madman will murder me. [Exit.

Ped. Help, son! help, signior Bapista! [Exit, from the window.

Pet. Pr’ythee, Kate, let’s stand aside, and see the end of this controversy. [They retire.

Re-enter Petant, below: Bapista, Tranio, and Servants.

Tra. Sir, what are you, that offer to beat my servant?

Vin. What am I, sir? nay, what are you, sir?—O, immortal Gods! O, fine villain! A silken doubliet! a velvet hose! a scarlet cloak! and a capstan hat!—O, I am undone! I am undone! while I play the good husband at home, my son and my servant spend all at the university.

Tra. How now! what’s the matter?

Bap. What, is the man lunatic?

Tra. Sir, you seem a sober ancient gentleman by your habit, but your words show you a madman. Why, sir, what ‘cerns it you if I wear pearl and gold? I thank my good father, I am able to maintain it.

Vin. Thy father? O, villain! he is a sail-maker in Bergamo.

Bap. You mistake, sir: you mistake, sir. Pray, what do you think is his name?

Vin. His name? as if I knew not his name: I have brought him up ever since he was three years old, and his name is Tranio.

Ped. Away, away, mad ass! his name is Lucentio; and he is mine only son, and heir to the lands of me, signior Vincentio.

Vin. Lucentio! O! he hath murdered his master.

—Lay hold on him, I charge you, in the duke’s name.

—O, my son, my son!—tell me, thou villain, where is my son Lucentio?

Tra. Call forth an officer.

Enter one, with an Officer.

Carry this mad knave to the jail.—Father Bapista, I charge you see that he be forthcoming.

Vin. Carry me to the jail!

Gru. Stay, officer: he shall not go to prison.

Bap. Talk not, signior Gremio. I say, he shall go to prison.

Gru. Take heed, signior Bapista, lest you be conveyed in this business. I dare swear this is the right Vincentio.

Pet. Swear, if thou darest.

Gru. Nay, I dare not swear it.

Tra. Then thou wert best say, that I am not Lucentio.

Gru. Yes, I know thee to be signior Lucentio.

Bap. Away with the dotard! to the jail with him! Vin. Thus strangers may be handled and abused.—

O, monstrous villain! Re-enter Biondello with Lucentio, and Bianca.

Bion. O, we are spoild! and yonder he is; deny him, forewarn him, or else we are all undone.

Luc. Pardon, sweet father. [Kneeling.

Bian. Pardon, dear father, [Kneeling.]
Bap. How hast thou offended?—

Where is Lucentio?

Luc. Here’s Lucentio,
Right son to the right Vincenzo;
That have by marriage made thy daughter mine,
While counterfeit supposes bare’d thine eye.

Gre. Here’s packing, with a witness, to deceive us all!

Vin. Where is that damned villain, Tranio,
That fac’d and brav’d me in this matter so?

Bap. Why, tell me, is not this my Cambio?

Bian. Cambio is chang’d into Lucentio.

Luc. Love wrought these miracles. Bianca’s love
Made me exchange my state with Tranio,
While he did bear my countenance in the town;
And happily I have arrived at the last
Unto the wished haven of my bliss.

What Tranio did, myself enforce’d him to;
Then pardon him, sweet father, for my sake.

Vin. I’ll slit the villain’s nose, that would have sent me to the wall.

Bap. [To Lucentio.] But do you hear, sir? Have you married my daughter without asking my good will?

Vin. Fear not, Baptist; we will content you: go to;
but I will in, to be revenged for this villany. [Exit.

Bap. And I, to sound the depth of this knavery. [Exit.

Luc. Look not pale, Bianca; thy father will not frown.

[Exeunt Luc. and Bia.

Gre. My cake is dough; but I’ll in among the rest,
Out of hope of all, but my share of the feast. [Exit.

PETRUCHIO AND KATHARINA advance.

Kath. Husband, let’s follow, to see the end of this ado.

Pet. First kiss me, Kate, and we will.

Kath. What, in the midst of the street?

Pet. What! art thou ashamed of me?

Kath. No, sir, God forbid; but ashamed to kiss.

Pet. Why, then, let’s home again.—Come, sirrah, let’s away.

Kath. Nay. I will give thee a kiss: now pray thee, love, stay.

Pet. Is not this well?—Come, my sweet Kate: Better ones than never, for never too late. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—A Room in Lucentio’s House.

A Banquet set out; Enter Baptista, Vincentio, Gre-mo, the Podant; Lucentio, Bianca, Petruchio, Kather-a, Hortensio, Tranio, Biondello, Grumio, and others, attending.

Luc. At last, though long, our jarring notes agree:
And time it is, when raging war is gone;[1]
To smile at ‘scapes and perils overthrown.—
My fair Bianca. bid my father welcome,
While I with selfsame kindness welcome thine.—
Brother Petruchio,—sister Katharina,—
And thou, Hortensio, with thy loving widow,
Feast with the best, and welcome to my house:
My banquet is to clothe our stomachs up,
After our great good cheer. Pray you, sit down; For now we sit to chat, as well as eat. [They sit at table.

Pet. Padua affords nothing but what is kind.

Hor. For both our sakes I would that word were true.

Pet. Now, for my life, Hortensio fears his widow.

Wild. Then, never trust me, if I be afraid.

Pet. You are very sensible, and yet you miss my

I mean, Hortensio is afeard of you.

1 done: in f. e. 2 This word is not in f. e.

Wid. He that is giddy thinks the world turns round.

Kath. Mistresse, how mean you that?

Wid. Thus I conceive by him.

Pet. Conceives by me!—How likes Hortensio that?

Hor. My widow says, thus she conceives her tale.

Pet. Very well mended. Kiss him for that, good widow.

Kath. He that is giddy thinks the world turns round:—

I pray you, tell me what you meant by that.

Wid. Your husband, being troubled with a shrew,

Measures my husband’s sorrow by his woe.

And now you know my meaning.

Kath. A very mean meaning.

Wid. Right, I mean you.

Kath. And I am mean, indeed, respecting you.

Pet. To her, Kate! Hor. To her, widow!

Pet. A hundred marks, my Kate does put her down.

Hor. That’s my office.

Pet. Spoke like an officer:—Here’s to thee, lad. [Drinks to Hortensio.

Bap. How likes Gremio these quick-witted folks?

Gre. Believe me, sir, they butt together well.

Bian. Head and butt? an hasty-witted body

Would say, your head and butt were head and horn.

Vin. Ay, mistresse bride, hath that awaken’d you?

Bian. Ay, but not frightened me: therefore, I’ll sleep again.

Pd. Nay, that you shall not; since you have begun,

Have at you for a better jest or two.

Bian. Am I your bird? I mean to shift my bush.

And then pursue me as you draw your bow.—

You are welcome all. [Exeunt Bianca, Katharina, and Widow.

Pet. She hath prevented me.—Here, signior Tranio;

This bird you aim’d at, though you hit her not;

Therefore, a health to all that shot and miss’d.

Tra. O sir! Lucentio slipp’d me, like his greyhound,

Which runs himself, and catches for his master.

Pet. A good swift simile, but something curriish.

Tra. ’Tis well, sir, that you hunted for yourself:

’Tis thought, your deer does hold you at a bay.

Bap. O ho, Petruchio! Tranio hits you now.

Luc. I thank thee for that gird, good Tranio.

Hor. Confess, confess, hath he not hit you here?

Pet. ‘A has a little gall’d me, I confess;

And, as the jest did glance away from me,

’Tis ten to one it main’d you two outright.

Bap. Now, in good sadness, son Petruchio,

I think thou hast the veriest shrew of all.

Pet. Well, I say no: and therefore, for assurance,

Let’s each one send unto his several wife,

And he, whose wife is most obedient

To come at first when he doth send for her,

Shall win the wager which we will propose.

Hor. Content. What is the wager?

Luc. Twenty crowns.

Pet. Twenty crowns!

I’ll venture so much of my hawk, or hound,

But twenty times so much upon my wife.

Luc. A hundred then.

Hor. Content.

Pet. A match! ’t is done.

Hor. Who shall begin?

Luc. That will I.

Go, Biondello, bid your mistrees come to me.

Bian. I go. [Exeunt.

What duty they do owe their lords and husbands.

Wid. Come, come, you're mocking; we will have no telling.

Pet. Come on, I say; and first begin with her.

Wid. She shall not.

Pet. I say, she shall;—and first begin with her.

Kath. Fie, fie! unkin that threatening unkind brow
And dart not scornful glances from those eyes,
To wound thy lord, thy king, thy governor:
It bolts thy beauty, as frosts do bite the meads,
Confounds thy fame, as whirlwinds shake fair buds,
And in no sense is meet, or amiable.
A woman mov'd is like a fountain troubled,
Muddy, ill-seeming, thick, bereft of beauty;
And, while it is so, none so dry or thirsty
Will deign to sip, or touch one drop of it.
Thy husband is thy lord, thy life, thy keeper,
Thy head, thy sovereign; one that cares for thee,
And for thy maintenance; commits his body
To painful labour, both by sea and land,
To watch the night in storms, the day in cold,
Whilst thou liest warm at home, secure and safe;
And craves no other tribute at thy hands,
But love, fair looks, and true obedience,
Too little payment for so great a debt.
Such duty as the subject owes the prince,
Even such a woman oweth to her husband;
And when she's froward, peevish, sullen, sour,
And not obedient to his honest will,
What is she but a foul contending rebel,
And graceless traitor to her loving lord?
I am ashamed that women are so simple
To offer war where they should kneel for peace,
Or seek for rule, supremacy, and sway,
When they are bound to serve, love, and obey.
Why are our bodies soft, and weak, and smooth,
Unapt to toil and trouble in the world,
But that our soft conditions, and our hearts,
Should well agree with our external parts?
Come, come, you froward and unable worms,
My mind hath been as big as one of yours,
My heart as great, my reason, haply, more
To bandy word for word, and frown for frown;
But now I see our lanes are but straws,
Our strength as weak, our weakness past compare,
That seeming most, which we indeed least are.
Then, vail your stomachs, for it is no boot.
And place your hands below your husband's foot:
In token of which duty, if he please,
My hand is ready, may it do him ease.

Pet. Why, there's a witch!—Come on, and kiss me, Kate.

Luc. Well, go thy ways, old lad, for thou shalt ha'.
Pin. 'Tis a good hearing, when children are toward.
Luc. But a harsh hearing, when women are froward.
Pet. Come, Kate, we'll to bed.—
We three are married, but you two are sped.
'Twas I won the wager, though you hit the white;
(To LUCENTIO.)
And, being a winner, God give you good night.

[Exeunt PETRUCHIO and KATH.

Hor. Now go thy ways, thou hast tam'd a curt shrew.

Luc. 'Tis a wonder, by your leave, who will be tam'd so.

[Exeunt.

Lafteu, an old Lord.
Parolles, a Follower of Bertram.
French Envoy, serving with Bertram.
French Gentleman, also serving with Bertram.
Rivaldo, Steward to the Countess of Rousillon.
Clown, in her household.
A Page.

Countess of Rousillon, Mother to Bertram.
Helena, a Gentlewoman protected by the Countess.
A Widow of Florence.
Diana, Daughter to the Widow.
Violanta, Neighbours and Friends to the Widow.
Marina.

Lords, attending on the King; Officers, Soldiers, &c., French and Florentine.

SCENE, partly in France, and partly in Tuscany.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Rousillon. A Room in the Countess’s Palace.

Enter Bertram, the Count of Rousillon, Helena, and Lafteu, all in black.

Count. In delivering my son from me, I bury a second husband.
Ber. And I, in going, madam, weep o’er my father’s death anew; but I must attend his majesty’s command, to whom I am now in ward, evermore in subjection.
Laf. You shall find of the king a husband, madam;—you, sir, a father. He that so generally is at all times good, must of necessity hold his virtues to you, whose worthiness would stir it up where it wanted, rather than lack it where there is such abundance.

Count. What hope is there of his majesty’s amendment?
Laf. He hath abandoned his physicians, madam; under whose practices he hath persecuted time with hope, and finds no other advantage in the process, but only the loathing of hope by time.

Count. This young gentlewoman had a father,—O, that had! how and a passage ’tis—whose skill, almost as great as his honesty, had it stretched so far would have made nature immortal, and death should have play for lack of work. Would, for the king’s sake, he were living! I think it would be the death of the king’s disease.

Laf. How called you the man you speak of, madam?
Count. He was famous, sir, in his profession, and it was his great right to be so.—Gerard de Narbon.
Laf. He was excellent, indeed, madam: the king very lately spoke of him, admiringly and mournfully. He was skilful enough to have lived still, if knowledge could be set up against mortality.
Ber. What is it, my good lord, the king languishes of?
Laf. A fistula, my lord.
Ber. I heard not of it before.

Laf. I would it were not notorious.—Was this gentlewoman the daughter of Gerard de Narbon?

Count. His sole child, my lord; and bequeathed to my overlocking. I have those hopes of her good that her education promises: her dispositions she inherits, which make fair gifts fairer; for where an unclean mind carries virtuous qualities, there commendations go with pity; they are virtues and traits too: in her they are the better for their simplicity; she derives her honesty, and achieves her goodness.

Laf. Your commendations, madam, get from her tears.
Count. ’T is the best brine a maiden can season her praise in. The remembrance of her father never approaches her heart, but the tyranny of her sorrows takes all livelihood from her cheek.—No more of this. Helena: go to, no more; lest it be rather thought you affect a sorrow, than to have.
Hel. I do affect a sorrow, indeed; but I have it too.
Laf. Moderate lamentation is the right of the dead, excessive grief the enemy to the living.

Count. If the living be enemy to the grief, the excess makes it soon mortal.
Ber. Madam, I desire your holy wishes.
Laf. How understand we that?
Count. Be thou blest, Bertram; and succeed thy father
In manners, as in shape! thy blood, and virtue,
Contend for empire in thee; and thy goodness
Share with thy birth-right! Love all, trust a few,
Do wrong to none: be able for thine enemy
Rather in power than use; and keep thy friend
Under thy own life’s key: be check’d for silence,
But never tax’d for speech. What heaven more will,
That thee may furnish, and my prayers pluck down,
Fall on thy head!—Farewell, my lord:
’Tis an unseason’d courtier: good my lord, Advise him.
Laf. He cannot want the best
That shall attend his love.

Count. Heaven bless him!—Farewell, Bertram.

Exit Countess.

1 Heirs of large estates were during their minority, wards of the king. 2 s. a. insert tore.
ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL

Scene I.

Ber. [To Helena.] The best wishes that can be given your thoughts be servants to you! Be commparable to my mother, your mistress, and make much do her.

Hel. Farewell, pretty lady: you must hold the credit of your father.

[Exit Bertram and Lafeye.]

Hel. O, were that all!—I think not on my father; and these great tears grace his remembrance more than those I shed for him. What was he like?

I have forgot him: my imagination
Carries so favour in 't, but only Bertram's.

I am undue: there is no living, none,
If Bertram be away.... It were all one,
That I should love a bright particular star,
And think to wed it, he is so above me:
Is his bright radiance and collateral light
Must be comforted, not in his sphere.

'T is ambition in my love thus plagues itself.
The thing that would be mated by the lion,
Must die for love. 'T was pretty, though a plague,
To see him every hour; to sit and draw
His asked brows, his hawking eye, his curls,
In my heart's table; heart, too capable
Of every line and trick of his sweet favour:
But now he's gone, and my idolatrous fancy
Must sanctify his relics. Who comes here?

Enter Parolles.

Par. That goes with him: I love him for his sake,
And yet I know him a notorious liar,
That him a great way fool, solely a coward;
To these fix'd evils sit so fit in him,
That this fine place, when virtue's steely bones
Look bleak in the cold wind: withal, full oft we see
Cold wisdom waiting on superfluous folly.

Par. Save you, fair queen.

Hel. And you, monarch.*

Par. No.

Hel. And so.

Par. Are you meditating on virginity?

Hel. Ay. You have some stain of soldier in you;
I must ask you a question: man is enemy to virginity;
be not too hard by it against him.

Par. Keep him out.

Hel. But he assails; and our virginity, though valiant in the defence, yet is weak. Unfold to us some warrant resistance.

Par. There is none: man, sitting down before you, will undermine you, and blow you up.

Hel. Bless our poor virginity from underminers, and blowers up!—Is there no military policy, how virgins might blow up men?

Par. Virgins being blown down, man will quicklier be blown up: marry, it, blowing him down again, with the breach yourself you made you lose your city. It is so politic in the commonwealth of nature to preserve virginity. Loss of virginity is rational increase; and there was never virgin got, till virginity was first lost.
That you were made of is metal to make virgins. Virmyn, by being once lost, may be ten times found:
being ever kept, it is ever lost. 'T is so cold a company away with 't.

Hel. I must stand for 't a little, though therefore I be a virgin.

Par. There's little can be said in 't: 't is against the rule of nature. To speak on the part of virginity is to serve your mothers, which is most infallible disobedience. He that hangs himself is a virgin: virginity endures itself, and should be buried in highways, out all sacrificed limit, as a desperate offender against so thou wilt be capable of a courtier's counsel, and understand what advice shall thrust upon thee; else thou diest in thine unthankfulness, and thine ignorance makes thee away: farewell. When thou hast leisure, say thy prayers; when thou hast none, remember thy friends. Get thee a good husband, and use him as he uses thee: so farewell.

[Exit.]

Her. Our remedies oft in ourselves do lie, Which we ascribe to heaven: the fated sky Gives us free scope; only, doth backward pull Our slow designs, when we ourselves are dull. What power is 't that mounts my love so high? That makes me see, and cannot feed mine eye? The mightiest space in nature fortune brings To join like likes, and kiss like native things. Impossible be strange attempts to those That weigh their pains in sense; and do suppose, What hath been cannot be. Who ever strove To show her merit, that did miss her love? The king's disease—my project may deceive me; But my intents are fix'd, and will not leave me. [Exit.

SCENE II.—Paris. A Room in the King's Palace.

Flourish of cornets. Enter the King of France, with letters; Lords and others attending.

King. The Florentines and Senovys are by th'ears; Have fought with equal fortune, and continue A braving war.

1 Lord. So 'tis reported, sir.

King. Nay, 'tis most credible: we here receive it A certainty, vouch'd from our cousin Austria. With caution, that the Florentine will move us For speedy aid; wherein our dearest friend Prejudicates the business, and would seem To have us make denial.

2 Lord. His love and wisdom, Approv'd so to your majesty, may plead For amplest credence.

King. He hath arm'd our answer, And Florence is denied before he comes: Yet, for our gentlemen, that mean to see The Tuscan service, freely have they leave To stand on either part.

2 Lord. It may well serve A nursery to our gentry, who are sick For breathing and exploit.

King. What's he comes here?

Enter Bertram, Lafeu, and Parolles.

1 Lord. It is the count Rousson, my good lord, Young Bertram.

King. Youth, thou bear'st thy father's face; Frank nature, rather curious than in haste, Hath well composed thee. Thy father's moral parts May'st thou inherit too! Welcome to Paris.

Ber. My thanks and duty are your majesty's.

King. I would I had that corporeal soundness now, As when thy father, and myself, in friendship First tried our soldiery. He did look far Into the service of the time, and was Discipled of the bravest: he lasted long; But on us both did haggish age steal on, And wore us out of act. It much repairs me To talk of your good father. In his youth He had the wit, which I can well observe To-day in your young lords; but they may jest, Till their own scorn return to them unnoted, Ere they can hide their levity in honour: So like a courtier, contempt nor bitterness Were in his pride, or sharpness; if they were, 1 fortune nature brings: Is f. e. 2 The people of Sienna. 3 To be married.

His equal had awak'd them: and his honour, Clock to itself, knew the true minute when Exception bid him speak, and at this time His tongue obey'd his hand: who were below him He us'd as creatures of another place, And bow'd his eminent top to their low ranks, Making them proud of his humility, In their poor praise he humbled. Such a man Might be a copy to these younger times, Which, follow'd well, would demonstrate them now But goe backward.

Ber. His good remembrance, sir, Lies richer in your thoughts, than on his tomb: So in approv'd lives not his epitaph, As in your royal speech.

King. 'Would I were with him! He would always say, (Methinks, I hear him now; his plausive words He scatter'd not in ears, but grafted them, To grow there, and to bear.)—"Let me not live,"— Thus has good melancholy oft began On the catastrophe and heel of pastime, When it was out, "let me not live," quoth he, "After my flame lacks oil, to be the snuff Of younger spirits, whose apprehensive senses All but new things disdain: whose judgments are Mere fathers of their garments; whose constancies Expire before their fashions."—This he wish'd: I, after him, do after him wish too, Since I nor wax nor honey can bring home, I quickly were dissolved from my hive, To give some labourers room.

2 Lord. You are lov'd, sir; They, that least lend it you, shall lack you first.

King. I fill a place, I know 't. How long is 't, count, Since the physician at your father's died? He was much fam'd.

Ber. Some six months since, my lord.

King. If he were living, I would try him yet:— Lend me an arm:—the rest have worn me out With several applications: nature and sickness Debate it at their leisure. Welcome, count; My son's no dearer.

Ber. Thank your majesty. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Rousson. A Room in the Countess's Palace.

Enter Countess, Steward, and Clown.

Count. I will now hear; what say you of this gentlewoman?

Ste. Madam, the care I have had to even your content, I wish might be found in the calendar of my past endeavours; for then we wound our modesty, and make foul the clearness of our deservings, when of ourselves we publish them.

Count. What does this knave here? Get you gone, sirrah: the complaints I have heard of you, I do not all believe: 't is my slowness, that I do not; fo' I know you lack not folly to commit them, and have ability enough to make such knaverys yours.

Clo. 'Tis not unknown to you, madam, I am a poor fellow.

Count. Well, sir.

Clo. No, madam; 't is not so well, that I am poor, though many of the rich are damned. But, if I may have your ladyship's good-will to go to the world, label, the woman, and I will do as we may.

Count. Wilt thou needs be a beggar?

Clo. I do beg your good-will in this case.
Count. In what case?

Cl. In label’s case, and mine own. Service is no barriage; and, I think, I shall never have the blessing of God till I have issue of my body, for they say, bairns are blessings.

Count. Tell me thy reason why thou wilt marry.

Cl. My poor body, madam, requires it: I am driven as by the flesh, and he must needs go that the devil drives.

Count. Is this all your worship’s reason?

Cl. Faith, madam, I have other holy reasons, such as they are.

Count. May the world know them?

Cl. I have been, madam, a wicked creature, as you and all flesh and blood are; and, indeed, I do marry that I may repent.

Count. Thy marriage, sooner than thy wickedness.

Cl. I am out of friends, madam; and I hope to have friends for my wife’s sake.

Count. Such friends are thine enemies, knave.

Cl. You are shallow, madam; e’en great friends for the knaves come to do that for me, which I am weary of. He, that earns my land, spares my team, and gives me leave to inn the crop: if I be his cuckold, he’s my drudge. He that comforts my wife is the cherisher of my flesh and blood; he that cherishes my flesh and blood, loves my flesh and blood; he that loves my flesh and blood is my friend; ergo, he that kisseth my wife is my friend. If men could be content to be what they are, there were no fear in marriage: for young Charbon the puritan, and old Poyssat the atheist, have sworn their hearts are severed in religion, their heads are both one; they may joll horns together, like any deer i’ the herd.

Count. Wilt thou ever be a foul-mouthed and calumny knave?

Cl. A prophet I, madam; and I speak the truth the next way:

For I the ballad will repeat.
Which men full true shall find;
Your marriage comes by destiny,
Your cuckoo sings by kind.

Count. Get you gone, sir: I’ll talk with you more anon.

See. May it please you, madam, that he bid Helen come to you? of her I am to speak.

Count. Sirrah, tell my gentlewoman, I would speak with her: Helen, I mean.

Cl. Was this fair face, quoth she, the cause,
Why the Grecians sacked Troy?
Fond done, done fond, good sooth it was;
Was this King Priam’s joy?
With that she sighed as she stood;
And gave this sentence then;
Among nine bad if one be good,
There’s yet one good in ten.

Count. What! one good in ten? you corrupt the sons, sirrah.

Cl. One good woman in ten, madam, which is a purifying of the song, and mending of the sex. Would God would save the world so all the year! we’d find so fault with the tithe-woman if I were the parson.

One in ten, quoth ’tis! an we might have a good woman born—but one—every blazing star, or an earthquake, ’twould mend the lottery well: a man may draw his heart out, ere he pluck one.

Cl. You’ll be gone, sir knave, and do as I command you?

Count. That man should be at woman’s command, and yet no hurt done!—Though honestly be no puritan, yet it will do no hurt; it will wear the surplice of humility over the black gown of a big heart.—I am going, forsooth: the business is for Helen to come hither. [Exit.]

Count. Well, now.

Stew. I know, madam, you love your gentlewoman entirely.

Count. Faith, I do: her father bequeathed her to me; and she herself, without other advantage, may lawfully make title to as much love as she finds: there is more owing her than is paid, and more shall be paid her than she’ll demand.

Stew. Sir, I was very late more near her than, I think, she wished me: alone she was, and did communicate to herself, her own words to her own ears; she thought, I dare vow for her, they touched not any stranger sense. Her matter was, she loved your son: for why she said, I knew no goddess, that had put such difference between their two estates; love, no god, that would not extend his might, only where qualities were level: Diana, no queen of virgins, that would suffer her poor knight to be surprised, without rescue, in the first assault, or ransom afterward. This she delivered in the most bitter touch of sorrow, that e’er I heard virgin exclaim in; which I held my duty speedily to acquaint you withal, sithence in the loss that may happen it concerns you something to know it.

Count. You have discharged this honestly: keep it to yourself. Many likelihoods informed me of this before, which hung so trottering in the balance, that I could neither believe, nor misdoubt. Pray you, leave me: stall this in your bosom, and I thank you for your honest care. I will speak with you farther, anon.

[Exit Steward.]

Count. Even so it was with me, when I was young:
If ever we are nature’s, these are ours; this thorn
Both to our rose of youth rightly belong;
Our blood to us, this to our blood is born:
It is the show and seal of nature’s truth.
Where love’s strong passion is impressed youth.

Enter Helena. 10

By our remembrances of days foregone
Search we out faults, for then we thought them none.
Her eye is sick on ‘t: I observe her now.

Hel. What is your pleasure, madam?

Count. You know, Helen, I am a mother to you.

Hel. Mine honourable mistress.

Count. Nay, a mother.

Hel. Why not a mother? When I said a mother,
Methought you saw a serpent: what’s in mother,
That you start at it? I say, I am your mother,
And put you in the catalogue of those
That were enwombed mine. ’Tis often seen,
Adoption strives with nature; and choice breeds
A native slip to us from foreign seeds:
You ne’er oppress’d me with a mother’s groan,
Yet I express to you a mother’s care:
God’s mercy, many a man does it, and by blood,
To say, I am thy mother? What’s the matter,
That this distemper’d messenger of wet,
The many-colour’d Iris, rounds thine eye?
Why, that are my daughter?

Hel. That I am not.

1 The old copies: in. 2 Nearost. 3 the cause, quoth she: in f. e. 4 Foolishly. 5 The rest of this line is not in f. e. 6 These lines repeated in f. e. 7 The rest of this sentence not in f. e. 8 are: in f. e. 9 This stage direction is given six lines above: in f. e. 10 Such in our facsimile; or, &c., in f. e.
Count. I say, I am your mother.

Hel. Pardon, madam; The count Roussillon cannot be my brother; I am from humble, he from honour'd name; No note upon my parents, his all noble: My master, my dear lord he is; and I His servant live, and will his vassal die.' He must not be my brother.

Count. Nor I your mother?

Hel. You are my mother, madam: would you were (So that my lord, your son, were not my brother) Indeed, my mother!—or were you both our mothers, I care no more for, than I do for heaven, So I were not his sister. Can't no other, But, I your daughter, he must be your brother? Count. Yes, Helen, you might be my daughter-in-law. God shield, you mean it not! daughter, and mother, So strive upon your pulse. What, pale again? My fear hath catch'd your fondness: Now I see The mystery of your loneliness, and find Your salt tears' head. Now to all sense 'tis gross, You love my son: invention is asham'd Against the proclamation of thy passion, To say, thou dost not: therefore, tell me true; But tell me then, 'tis so —for, look, thy cheeks Confess it, th' one to the other; and thine eyes See it so grossly shown in thy behaviour, That in their kind they speak it: only sin, And hollow obstinacy thy tongue, That truth should be suspected. Speak, is 't so? If it be so, you have wound a goodly clue; If it be not, foreshow 't: how'er, I charge thee, As heaven shall work in me for thine avail, To tell me truly.

Hel. Good madam, pardon me. Count. Do you love my son?

Hel. Your pardon, noble mistress. Count. Love you my son?

Hel. Do not you love him, madam? Count. Go not about: my love hath in't a bond, Whereof the world takes note. Come, come, disclose The state of your affection, for your passions Have to the full affect'd.

Hel. Then, I confess, [Kneeling.] Here on my knee, before high heaven and you, That before you, and next unto high heaven, I love your son. [Rising.] My friends were poor, but honest; so's my love: Be not offended, for it hurts not him, That he is lov'd of me. I follow him not By any token of presumptuous suit; Nor would I have him, till I do deserve him, Yet never know how that desert should be. I know I love in vain, strive against hope; Yet, in this capricious and intemperate siege, I still pour in the waste of my love, And lack not to lose still. Thus, Indian-like, Religious in mine error, I adore The sun, that looks upon his worshipper,

But knows of him no more. My dearest madam, Let not your hate encounter with my love, For loving where you do: but, if yourself, Whose aged honour cites a virtuous youth, Did ever, in so true a flame of liking, Wish chastely, and love dearly, that your Dian Was both herself and love, O! then, give pity To her, whose state is such, that cannot choose But lend and give where she is sure to lose; That seeks not to find that her search implies, But, riddle-like, lives sweetly where she dies.

Count. Had you not lately an intent, speak truly, To go to Paris?

Hel. Madam, I had.

Count. Wherefore? tell true.

Hel. I will tell truth, by grace itself I swear. You know, my father left me some prescriptive Of rare and prov'd effects, such as his reading, And manifold experience had collected For general sovereignty; and that he will'd me In needfulst reservation to bestow them, As notes, whose faculties inclusive were More than they were in note. Amongst the rest, There is a remedy approv'd, set down To cure the desperate languishings whereof The king is render'd lost.

Count. This was your motive For Paris, was it? speak.

Hel. My lord, your son, made me to think of this; Else Paris, and the medicine, and the king, Had, from the conversation of my thoughts, Happily been abstained then.

Count. But think you, Helen, If you should tender your supposed aid, He would receive it? he and his physicians Are of a mind; he; that they cannot help him, They, that they cannot help. How shall they credit A poor unlearned virgin, when the schools, Embowell'd of their doctrine, have left off The danger to itself?

Hel. There's something in 't, More than my father's skill, which was the greatest Of his profession, that his good receipt Shall, for my legacy, be sanctified By the luckiest stars in heaven: and, would your honour But give me leave to try success, I'd venture The well-lost life of mine on his grace's cure, By such a day, and hour.

Count. Dost thou believe 't?

Hel. Ay, madam, knowingly.

Count. Why, Helen, thou shalt have my leave, and love, Means, and attendants, and my loving greetings To those of mine in court. I'll stay at home, And pray God's blessing unto thy attempt. Be gone to-morrow; and be sure of this, What I can help thee to thou shalt not miss. [Exeunt.

King. Farewell, young lords. These warlike principles

After well-enter'd soldiers, to return
And find your grace in health.

King. No, no, it cannot be; and yet my heart
Will not confess he owes the malady
That doth my life besiege. Farewell, young lords;
Whether I live or die, be you the sons
Of worthy Frenchmen: let higher Italy
Those hated, that inherit but the fall
Of the last monarchy] see, that you come
Not to woo honour, but to wed it: when
The bravest questant shrinks, find what you seek.
That same may cry you loud. I say farewell.

2 Lords. Health, at your bidding, serve your majesty!

King. Those girls of Italy, take heed of them.

They say, our French lack language to deny,
If they demand: beware of being captives,
Before you serve.

Both. Our hearts receive your warnings.

King. Farewell. —Come hither to me.

[The King retires to a couch.

1 Lord. O, my sweet lord, that you will stay be- hind us!

Par. 'Tis not his fault, the spark.

2 Lord. O, 'tis brave wars!

Par. Most admirable: I have seen those wars.

Ber. I am commanded here, and kept a coil with "Too young," and "the next year," and "'tis too early."

Par. As thy mind stand to 't, boy, steal away bravely.

Ber. I shall stay here the foremost to a smock,

Creating my shoes on the plain masonry,

Till honour be bought up, and no sword worn,

But one to dance with. By heaven! I'll steal away.

1 Lord. There's honour in the theft.

Par. Commit it, count.

2 Lord. I am your accessory: and so farewell.

Ber. I grew to you, and our parting is a tortured body.

1 Lord. Farewell. Captain.

2 Lord. Sweet monsieur Parolles!

Par. Noble heroes, my sword and yours are kin.

Good sparks, and lustrous, a word, good metals — you shall find in the regiment of the Spinij, one captain

Spino, with his cinctures, an emblem of war, here on his master check: it was this very sword entrapped it: to say him, I live, and observe his reports of me.

1 Lord. We shall, noble captain. [Exeunt Lords.

Par. Marry dote on you for his novices! — What will you do?

Ber. Stay; the king —

Par. Use a more spacious ceremony to the noble lords; you have restrained yourself within the lists of two cold an audience: be more expressive to them; for they wear themselves in the cap of the time: there do under true gait; eat, speak, and move under the influence of the most received; and though the foul lead the measure, such are to be followed. After them, and take a more dilated farewell.

Ber. And I will do so.

Par. Worthy fellows, and to prove most sinewy

[Enter Bastard and Parolles. Exit Laser.

Laf. Pardon, my lord, for me and for my tidings.

[Kneeling.

King. I'll see thee to stand up.

Laf. Then here, a man stands, that has brought his pardon.

[Rising.

I would, you had kneel'd, my lord, to ask me mercy, that, at my bidding, you could so stand up.

King. I would I had; so I had broke thy pate,

And ask'd thee mercy for 't.

Laf. Goodfaith, aches. But, my good lord, 'tis thus.

Will you be curb'd of your infirmity?

King. No.

Laf. O! will you eat no grapes, my royal fox?

Yes, but you will, ay, noble grapes, an if

My royal fox could reach them. I have seen

A medicine that's able to breathe life into a stone,

Quicken a rock, and make you dance canary

With sprightly fire and motion; whose simple touch

Is powerful to upraise' king Pepin, nay,

To give great Charlemaine a pen in 'a hand,

To write to her a letter-line.

King. What her is this?

Laf. Why, doctor she. My lord, there's one arrive'd,

If you will see her: —now, by my faith and honour,

If seriously I may convey my thoughts

In this my light deliverance, I have spoke

With one, that in her sex, her years, profession,

Wisdom, and constancy, hath sam'd me more

Than I dare blame my weakness. Will you see her,

[For that is her demand] and know her business?

That done, laugh well at me.

King. Now, good Lasue, bring in the admiration, that we with thee

May spend our wonder too, or take off thine

By wondering how thou took'st it.

Laf. Nay, I'll fit you, and not be all day neither.

[Exeunt Lasue. King. Thus he his special nothing ever prologues.

Enter Lasue, with Helena.

Laf. Nay, come your ways.

King. This haste hath wings, indeed.

Laf. Nay, come your ways.

This is his majesty, say your mind to him:

A traitor you do look like; but such traitors

His majesty seldom fears. I am Crescuit's uncle,

That dare leave two together. Fare you well.

[Exeunt. King. Ay, my good lord. Gerard de Narbon was my father.

What did he profess well found.

King. I knew him.

Hel. The rather will I spare my praises towards him;

Knowing him, is enough. On's bed of death

Many receipts he gave me; chiefly one

Which, as the dearest issue of his practice,

And of his old experience th' only darling,

He bad me store up as a triple eye,

Safer than mine own two, more dear. I have so;

And, hearing your high majesty is touch'd

With that malignant cause, wherein the honour

Of my dear father's gift stands chief in power,

I come to tender it, and my appliance,

With all bound humbleness.

King. We thank you, maiden.

But may not be so credulous of cure:

When our most learned doctors leave us, and

The congregated college have concluded

That labouring art can never ransom nature

From her inebriate estate, I say, we must not

So stain our judgment, or corrupt our hope,

To prostitute our past-cure malady

To empiricks; or to dis pense so

Our great self and our credit, to esteem

A senseless help, when help past sense we deem.

Hel. My duty, then, shall pay me for my pains:

I will no more enforce mine office in you;

Humbly entreating from your royal thoughts
A modest one, to bear me back again.

King. I cannot give thee less, to be call'd grateful.

Thou thought'st to help me, and such thanks I give
As one near death to those that wish him live;
But what at all I know thou know'st no part,
I knowing all my peril, thou no art.

Hel. What I can do, can do no hurt to try,
Since you set up your rest 'gainst remedy.
He that of greatest works is finisher,
Oft does them by the weakest minister:
Holy writ in babes hath judgment shown,
Where judges have been wise, but mad, and mad have flown.
From simple sources; and great seas have dried.
When miracles have by the greatest been denied.
Oft expectation fails, and most oft there
Where most it promises; and oft it hits,
Where hope is coldest, and despair most fits.

King. I must not hear thee: fare thee well, kind maid.
Thy pains, not us'd, must by thyself be paid:
Profers, not took, reap thanks for their reward.

Hel. Labor and meritor so by breath is barr'd.
It is not so with him that all things knows.
As 'tis with us that square our guess by shows;
But most it is presumption in us,
The help of heaven we count the act of men.
Dear sir, to my endeavours give consent;
Of heaven, not me, make an experiment.
I am not an impostor, that proclaim
Myself against the level of mine aim;
But know I think, and think I know most sure,
My art is not past power, nor you past cure.

King. Art thou so confident? Within what space
Hop'st thou my cure?

Hel. The greatest grace lending grace,
Ere twice the horses of the sun shall bring
Their fiery torcher his diurnal ring;
Ere twice in merr' and occidental damp
Moist Hesperus hath quench'd his sleepy lamp;
Or four and twenty times the pilot's glass
Has told the thievish minutes how they pass.
What is inform from your seat, parts shall fly,
Health shall live free, and sickness freely die.

King. Upon thy certainty and confidence,
What dar'st thou venture?

Hel. Tax of impudence,
A strumpet's boldness, a divulged shame,
 Traduced by odios ballade; my maiden's name
Sear'd otherwise; as worse of worst extended,
With vilest torture let my life be ended.

[Speak. King. Methinks, in thee some blessed spirit doth
His powerful sound within an organ weak;
And what impossibility would say
In common sense, sense saves another way.
Thy life is dear; for all, that life can rate
Worth name of life, in thee hath estimate;
Youth, beauty, wisdom, courage, honour; all
That happiness in prime can happy call:
Thou this to hazard, needs must intimate
Skill infinite, or monstrous desperate.
Sweet practiser, thy physic I will try,
That minister's thine own death, if I die.

Hel. If I break time, or dinch in property
Of what I spoke, unpitied let me die;
And well deserv'd. Not helping, death's my fee;
But, if I help, what do you promise me?

King. Make thy demand.

Hel. But will you make it even?

King. Ay, by my sceptre, and my hopes of heaven.

Hel. Then shall thou give me with thy kingly hand

What husband in thy power I will command:
Exempted be from me the arrogance
To choose from forth the royal blood of France,
My low and humble name to propagate
With any branch or image of thy state;
But such a one, thy vassal, whom I know
Is free for me to ask, thee to bestow.

King. Here is my hand; the premises observ'd
Thy will by my performance shall be serv'd:
So make the choice of thy own time; for I,
Thy resolv'd patient, on thee still rely.

[More should I question thee, and more I must,
Though more to know could not be more to trust,
From whence thou cam'st, how tended on; but rest
Unquestion'd welcome, and undoubted blest.—
Give me some help here, ho!—If thou proceed
As high as word, my deed shall match thy deed.

[Flourish. Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Rousillon. A Room in the Countess's Palace.

Enter Countess and Clown.

Count. Come on, sir: I shall now put you to the height of your breeding.

Clo. I will show myself highly fed, and lowly taught.
I know my business is but to the court.

Count. To the court! why, what place make you special, when you put off with that such contempt? But to the court!

Clo. Truly, madam, if God have lent a man any manners, he may easily put it off at court: he that cannot make a leg, put off a cap, kiss his hand, and say nothing, has neither leg, hands, lip, nor cap; and, indeed, such a fellow, to say precisely, were not for the court. But, for me, I have an answer will serve all men.

Count. Marry, that's a bountiful answer, that fits all questions.

Clo. It is like a barber's chair, that fits all buttocks; the pin-buttock, the quach-to buttock, the browne-buttock, or any buttock.

Count. Will your answer serve fit to all questions?

Clo. As fit as ten groats is for the hand of an attorney, as your French crown for your tassata punk, as Tit's rush for Tom's forefinger, as a pancake for Shrove-Tuesday, a morris for May-day, as the nail to his hole, the cuskold to his horn, as a scolding quan to a wrangling knife, as the nun's lip to the friar's mouth; nay, as the pudding to his skin.

Count. Have you, I say, an answer of such fitness for all questions?

Clo. From below your dukes, to beneath your constable, it will fit any question.

Count. It must be an answer of most monstrous size, that must fit all demands.

Clo. But a trifle neither, in good faith, if the learned should speak truth of it. Here it is, and all that belongs to it: ask me, if I am a courtier; it shall do you no harm to learn.

Count. To be young again, if we could. I will be a fool in question, hoping to be the wiser by your answer. I pray you, sir, are you a courtier?

Clo. O Lord, sir!—there's a simple putting off.—More, more, a hundred of them.

Count. Sir, I am a poor friend of yours, that loves you.

Clo. O Lord, sir!—Thick, thick, spare not me.

Count. I think, sir, you can eat none of this homely maid the better, whilst I have a tooth in my head. Why, he's able to lead her a coranto.
Par. Mort du vinagre ! Is not this Helen?
Laf.  Fore God, I think so.
King. Go, call before me all the lords in court. —

[Exit an Attendant.

Sit, my preserver, by thy patient's side;
And with this healthful hand, whose banish'd sense
Thou hast repeal'd, a second time receive The confirmation of my promise'd gift,
Which but attends thy naming.

Enter several Lords.

Fair maid, send forth thine eye: this youthful parcell
Of noble knights stand at my bestowing,
O'er whom both sovereign's power and father's voice
I have to use: thy frank election make.
Thou hast power to choose, and they none to forsake.

Hel. To each of you one fair and virtuous mistress
Fall, when love please!—marry, to each, but one.
Laf. I'd give bay curtal, and his furniture,
My mouth no more were broken' than these boys';
And with as little beard.

King. Persue them well:
Not one of those but had a noble father.

Hel. Gentlemen,

Heaven hath through me restor'd the king to health.
All. We understand it, and thank heaven for you.

Hel. I am a simple maid; and therein wealthiest,
That, I protest, I simply am a maid. —
Please it your majesty, I have done already:
The bluses in my cheeks thus whisper me,
"We blush, that thou shouldst choose; but, be resd'
Let the white death sit on thy check for ever:
We'll ne'er come there again."

King.

Make choice, and see;
Who shuns thy love, shuns all his love in me.

Hel. Now, Dian, from thy altar do I fly,
And to imperial Love, that god most high,
Do my sighs steam—Sir, will you hear my suit?

1 Lord. And grant it.

Hel. Thanks, sir: all the rest is mute.
Laf. I had rather be in this choice, and throw amesce* for my life.

Hel. The honour, sir, that flames in your fair eyes,
Before I speak, too threateningly replies:
Love make your fortunes twenty times above
Her that so wishes, and her humble love!

2 Lord. No better, if you please.

Hel. My wish receive,
Which great Love grant! and so I take my leave.

Laf. Do ail they deny her? An they were sons of mine, I'd have them whipped, or I would send them to the Turk to make enuchs of mine.

Hel. [To 3 Lord.] Be not afraid that I your hand should take;
I'll never do you wrong for your own sake:
Blessing upon your vows! and in your bed
Find fairer fortune, if you ever wed!
Laf. Thes' boys are boys of ice, they'll none have her: sure, they are bastards to the English; the French never got them.

Hel. You are too young, too happy, and too good,
To make yourself a son out of my blood.

4 Lord. Fair one, I think not so.
Laf. There's one grape yet:—I am sure, thy father drank wine. —But if thou be'st not an ass, I am a youth of fourteen: I have known thee already. [I give Hel. [To Bertram.] I dare not say I take you; but

Common. 9 The word came in use from Holland, about 1600.  a A lively dance.  b sovereign: in f. a.  c Except one.  d A docked ear. 1 I had lost no more teeth.  2 writ: in f. a.  3 Both acres; an expression for ill luck.
Me, and my service, ever whilst I live, into your guiding power.—This is the man.

King. Why then, young Bertram, take her; she's thy wife. [BERTRAM draws back.]

Ber. My wife, my liege! I shall beseech your highness, in such a business give me leave to use the help of mine own eyes.

King. Know'st thou not, Bertram, what she has done for me?

Ber. Yes, my good lord;
But never hope to know why I should marry her.

King. Thou know'st, she has rais'd me from my sickly bed.

Ber. But follows it, my lord, to bring me down must answer for your raising? I know her well: She had her breeding at my father's charge. A poor physician's daughter my wife?—Diadain Bather concept me!

King. 'Tis only title thou disdain'st in her, the which I can build up. Strange is it, that our bloods, of colour, weight, and heat, pour'd all together, would quite confound distinction, yet stand off in differences so mighty. If she be all that is virtuous, (save what thou dislik'st, a poor physician's daughter) thou dislik'st of virtue for the name; but do not so: From lowest place when virtuous things proceed, the place is dignified by the door's deed: Where great additions swell'st, and virtue none, it is a dropped honour: good alone is good, without a name; vileness is so: The property by what it is should go, not by the title. She is young, wise, fair; in these to nature she's immediate heir, and these breed honour: that is honour's scorn, which challenges itself as honour's born, and is not like the sire: honours thrive, when rather from our acts we them derive, than our foregoers. The mere word is a slave, Debauch'd on every tomb; on every grave, a lying trophy, and as oft is dumb, where dust, and damned oblivion, is the tomb of honour'd bones indeed. What should be said? if thou canst like this creature as a maid, I can create the rest. Virtue, and she is her own dower; honour, and wealth from me. Ber. I cannot love her, nor will strive to do't.

King. Thou wrong'st thyself, if thou shouldst strive to choose.

Hel. That you are well restored, my lord, I am glad. Let the rest go.

King. My honour's at the stake, which to defend, I must produce my power. Here, take her hand, proud scornful boy, unworthy this good gift, that dost in vile misprision shake up my love, and her desert; that cannot not dream, we, poisoning us in her defective scale, shall weigh thee to the beam; that wilt not know, it is in us to plant thine honour, where we please to have it grow. Check thy contempt: Obey our will, which travels in thy good: Believe not thy disdain, but presently do thine own fortune that obdient right, which both thy duty owes, and our power claims, or I will throw thee from my care for ever into the staggers, and the careless lapse of youth and ignorance; both my revenge and hate, loosing upon thee in the name of justice, without all terms of pity. Speak: thine answer.

Ber. Pardon, my gracious lord, for I submit my fancy to your eyes. When I consider what great creation, and what dole of honour, flies where you bid it, I find that she, which late was in my nobler thoughts most base, is now the praised of the king; who, so ennobled, is, as 'twere, born so.

King. Take her by the hand, and tell her, she is thine; to whom I promise a counterpoise, if not to thy estate, a balance more replete.

Ber. I take her hand.

King. Good fortune, and the favour of the king, smile upon this contract; whose ceremony shall seem expedient on the now born brief, and be perform'd to-night: the solemn feast shall more attend upon the coming space, expecting absent friends. As thou lovest her, thy love's to me religious, else, does err.

[Exeunt King, Bertram, Helena, Lords, and Attendants.

Laf. Do you hear, monsieur? a word with you.
Par. Your pleasure, sir?
Laf. Your lord and master did well to make his recantation.
Par. Recantation!—My lord? my master?
Laf. Ay; is it not a language I speak?
Par. A most harsh one, and not to be understood without bloody succeeding. My master?
Laf. Are you companion to the Count Roussillon?
Par. To any count; to all counts; to what is man.
Laf. To what is count's man: count's master is of another style.
Par. You are too old, sir; let it satisfy you, you are too old.
Laf. I must tell thee, sirrah, I write man; to which title age cannot bring thee.
Par. What I dare too well do, I dare not do.
Laf. I did think thee, for two ordinaries, to be a pretty wise fellow: thou didst make tolerable vent of thy travel: it might pass; yet the scarfs, and the bannerets about thee, did manifoldly dissuade me from believing thee a vessel of too great a burden. I have now found thee: when I lose thee again, I care not; yet art thou good for nothing but taking up, and that thou're scarce worth.
Par. Hadst thou not the privilege of antiquity upon thee?
Laf. Do not plunge thyself too far in anger, lest thou hasten thy trial; which if—Lord have mercy on thee for a her! So, my good window of lattice, fare thee well: thy casement I need not open, for I look through thee. Give me thy hand.
Par. My lord, you give me most egregious indignity.
Laf. Ay, with all my heart; and thou art worthy of it.
Par. I have not, my lord, deserved it.
Laf. Ye, good faith, every drachm of it; and I will not hate thee a scruple.
Par. Well, I shall be wiser.
Laf. Even as soon as thou canst, for thou hast to pull at a smack o' the contrary. If ever thou be'st bound in thy scarf, and beaten, thou shalt find what it is to be proud of thy bondage. I have a desire to hold my acquaintance with thee, or rather my knowledge, that I may say, in the default, he is a man I know.
Par. My lord, you do me most insupportable vexation.
Laf. I would it were hell-pains for thy sake, and my
Scene IV.

ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL.

pro doeing eternal: for doing I am past, as I will by you, in what motion age will give me leave. [Exit.
Par. Well, thou hast a son shall take this disgrace of me, scurvy, old, filthy, scurvy lord!—Well I must be patient; there is no footering of authority. I'll beat him by my life, if I can meet him with any convenience, an he be double and double a lord. I'll have no more pity of his age, than I would have of—[I'll beat him: as if I could but meet him again.

Re-enter LAFEU.

Laf. Sirrah, your lord and master's married: there's new for you; you have a new mistress.
Par. I most unfeignedly beseech your lordship to take some reservation of your wrongs: he is my good knot: whom I serve above is my master.
Laf. Who? God?
Par. Ay, sir.
Laf. The devil it is, that's thy master. Why dost dost thou gather up thy arms o' this fashion? dost make hose di' thy sleeves, or do other servants so? Thou wert best set by lower part where thy nose stands. By mine honor, if I were but two hours younger I'd beat thee;
nothing can art a general offence, and every man should beat thee. I think, thou wast created for men to breathe themselves upon thee.
Par. This is hard and undeserved measure, my lord.
Laf. Go to, sir; you were beaten in Italy for picking the kernel out of a pomegranate: you are a vagabond, and true traveller. You are more saucy with lords and honourable personages, than the condition of your knight and virtue gives you hardness. You are not worth another word, else I'd call you knave. I leave you.

[Exit.

Enter BERTRAM.

Par. Good, very good; it is so then:—good, very good. Let it be concealed a while.
Ber. Undone, and forfeited to cares for ever!
Par. What is the matter, sweetheart?
Ber. Although before the solemn priest I have sworn,
I will not bed her.
Par. What? what, sweet heart?
Ber. O, my Parolles, they have married me!
Laf. To the Tuscan wars, and never bed her.
Par. France is a dog-hole, and it no more merits the tread of a man's foot. To the wars!
Ber. These are letters from my mother: what the import is,
I know not yet.
Par. Ay, that would be known. To the wars, my boy! to the wars!
He bears his honour in a box, unseen,
That hogs his kick-why, willy here at home,
Spending his manly narrow in the arms
That should sustain the bound and high curvet
Of Mars's fiery steed. To other regions!
France is a stable; we, that dwell in 't, jades;
Therefore, to the wars!
Ber. It shall be so: I'll send her to my house,
Acquaint my mother with my hate to her,
And wherefore I am fled; write to the king
That which I durst not speak. His present gift
Shall furnish me to those Italian fields,
Where noble fellows strike. War is no strife
'T is the house, and the tested wife.
Will this capriccio hold in thee, art sure?
Ber. Go with me to my chamber, and advise me.
I'll send her straight away: to-morrow
I'll to the wars, to her single sorrow.

Par. Why, these balls bound, there's noise in it;
't is hard.
A young man married is a man that's marr'd:
Therefore away, and leave her: bravely go;
The king has done you wrong; but, hush! 't is so.

[Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—The Same. Another Room in the Same.

Enter HELENA and CLODON.

Hel. My mother greets me kindly: is she well?
Clo. She is not well; but yet she has her health:
she's very merry; but yet she is not well: but thanks be given, she's very well, and wants nothing i' the world; but yet she is not well.
Hel. If she be very well, what does she say, that she is not very well?
Clo. Truly, she's very well indeed, but for two things.
Hel. What two things?
Clo. One, that she's not in heaven, whither God send her quickly! the other, that she's in earth, from whence God send her quickly!

Enter PAROLLES.

Par. Bless you, my fortunate lady!
Hel. I hope, sir, I have your good will to have mine own good fortunes.
Par. You had my prayers to lead them on; and to keep them on, have them still.—O, my knave! How does my old lady?
Clo. So that you had her wrinkles, and I her money,
I would she did as you say.
Par. Why, I say nothing.
Clo. Marry, you are the wiser man: for many a man's tongue shakes out his master's undoing. To say nothing, to do nothing, to know nothing, and to have nothing, is to be a great part of your title, which is within a very little of nothing.
Par. Away! thou'rt a knave.
Clo. You should have said, sir, before a knave thou'rt a knave; that is, before me thou'rt a knave: this had been truth, sir.
Par. Go to, thou art a witty fool: I have found thee.
Clo. Did you find me in yourself, sir, or were you taught to find me?
Par. Go to, I say: I have found thee: no more; I found thee, a witty fool.'

Clo. The search, sir, was profitable; and much fool may you find in you, even to the world's pleasure, and the increase of laughter.

Par. A good knave, i' faith, and well fed.—
Madam, my lord will go away to-night;
A very serious business calls on him.
The great prerogative and rite of love,
Which as your due time claims, he does acknowledge,
But puts it off to a compell'd restraint:
Whose want, and whose delay, is strew'd with sweets,
Which they distil now in the curbed time
To make the coming hour o'erflow with joy,
And pleasure drown the brim.

Hel. "What's his will else?"
Par. That you will take your instant leave o' the king,
And make this haste as your own good proceeding,
Strengthen'd with what apology you think
May make it probable need.

Hel. "What more commands he?"
Par. That having this obtain'd, you presently
Attend his further pleasure.
Hel. In every thing I wait upon his will.
Par. I shall report it so.

Hel. I pray you.—Come, sirrah. [Exeunt.
SCENE V.—Another Room in the Same.

Enter LAFAYET and BERTRAM.

Laf. But, I hope, your lordship thinks not him a soldier.

Ber. Yes, my lord, and of very valiant approob.

Laf. You have it from his own deliverance.

Ber. And by other warranted testimony.

Laf. Then my dial goes not true. I took this lark for a hunting.

Ber. I do assure you, my lord, he is very great in knowledge, and accordingly valiant.

Laf. I have then sinned against his experience, and transgressed against his valour; and my state that way is dangerous, since I cannot yet find in my heart to repent. Here he comes. I pray you, make us friends: I will pursue the amity.

Enter PAROLLES.

Par. [To BERTRAM.] These things shall be done, sir.

Laf. Pray you, sir, who’s his tailor?

Par. Sir?

Laf. O! I know him well. Ay, sir; he, sir, is a good workman, a very good tailor.

Ber. [Aside to Parolles.] Is she gone to the king?

Par. She is.

Ber. Will she away to-night?

Par. As you ’ll have her.

Ber. I have writ my letters, caskets my treasure, Given order for our horses; and to-night, When I should take possession of the bride, End ere I do begin.

Laf. A good traveller is something at the latter end of a dinner; but one that lies three-thirds and uses a known truth to pass a thousand nothing with, should be once heard, and thrice beaten.—God save you, captain.

Ber. Is there any unkindness between my lord and you, monsieur?

Par. I know not how I have deserved to run into my lord’s displeasure.

Laf. You have made shift to run into ’t, boots and spurs all and, like him that leaped into the custard, and out of it you ’ll run again, rather than suffer question for your residence.

Ber. It may be, you have mistaken him, my lord.

Laf. And shall do so ever, though I took him at his prayers. Fare you well, my lord; and believe this of me, there can be no kernel in this light nut; the soul of this man is his clothes: trust him not in matter of heavy consequence; I have kept of them tame, and know their natures.—Farewell, monsieur: I have spoken better of you, than you have or will deserve at my hand: but we must do good against evil. [Exit.

Par. An idle lord, I swear.

Ber. I think so.

Par. Why, do you not know him?

Ber. Yes, I do know him well; and common speech Gives him a worthy pass. Here comes my clog.

Enter HELENA.

Hel. I have, sir, as I was commanded from you, Spoke with the king, and have procur’d his leave For present parting; only he desires Some private speech with you.

Ber. I shall obey his will.

You must not marvel, Helen, at my course, Which holds not colour with the time, nor does The ministration and required office On my particular: prepar’d I was not For such a business; therefore am I found So much unsettled. This drives me to entreat you, That presently you take your way for home; And rather muse than ask why I entreat you, For my respects are better than they seem; And my appointments have in them a need, Greater than shows itself, at the first view, To you that know them not. This to my mother. [Giving a letter.

’T will be two days ere I shall see you: so,

I leave you to your wisdom.

Hel. Sir, I can nothing say,

But that I am your most obedient servant.

Ber. Come, come, no more of that.

Hel. And ever shall With true observance seek to eke out that, Wherein toward me my homely stars have fail’d To equal my great fortune.

Ber. Let that go:

My haste is very great. Farewell: hie home.

Hel. Pray, sir, your pardon.

Ber. Well, what would you say?

Hel. I am not worthy of the wealth I owe; Nor dare I say, ’t is mine, and yet it is,

But, like a timorous thief, most fear I would steal What law does vouch mine own.

Ber. What would you have?

Hel. Something, and scarce so much—nothing, indeed,—

I would not tell you what I would, my lord—faith, yes—

Strangers and foes do sunder, and not kiss.

Ber. I pray you stay not, but haste to haste.

Hel. I shall not break your bidding, good my lord.

Where are my other men? monsieur, farewell. [Exit.

Ber. Go thou toward home; where I will never come, Whilst I can shake my sword, or hear the drum.— Away! and for our flight.

Par. Bravely, coraggio! [Exeunt.

ACT III.

Flourish. Enter the Duke of Florence, attended; two Frenchmen and Soldiers.

Duke. So that, from point to point, now have you heard The fundamental reasons of this war, Whose great decision hath much blood let forth, And more thirsts after.

I Lord. Holy seems the quarrel. Upon your grace’s part; black and fearful On the opposite.

Duke. Therefore we marvel much our cousin France Would, in so just a business, shut his bosom Against our borrowing prayers.

SCENE II.—Rousillon. A Room in the Countess’s Palace.

Enter Countess and Clown.

Count. It hath happened all as I would have had it, so that he comes not along with her.

Clown. By my troth, I take my young lord to be a very melancholy man.

Count. By what observance, I pray you?

Clown. Why, he will look upon his boot, and sing; read his ruff, and sing; ask questions, and sing; pick his teeth, and sing. I know a man that had this trick of melancholy, sold a goodly manor for a song.

Count. Let me see what he writes, and when he means to come.

Opening a letter.

Clown. I have no mind to Isabel, since I was at court. Our old ling and our labels o’ the country are nothing like your old ling and your labels o’ the court; the reins of my Cupid’s knocked out, and I begin to love, as an old man loves money, with no stomach.

Count. What have we here?

Clown. ’Eke that you have there. [Exit.

Count. [Reads.] “I have sent you a daughter-in-law; she hath recovered the king, and undone me. I have wedded her, not bedded her; and sworn to make the eternal. You shall hear, I am run away: know it before the report come. If there be breadth enough in the world, I will hold a long distance. My duty to you.”

“Your unfortunate son, “BERTRAM.”

This is not well: rash and unbridled boy, To fly the favours of so good a king! To pluck his indignation on thy head, By the misprizing of a maid, too virtuous For the contempt of empire!

Re-enter Clown.

Clown. O madam! yonder is heavy news within, between two soldiers and my young lady.

Count. What is the matter?

Clown. Say I, madam, if he run away, as I hear he do: the danger is in standing to ’t; that’s the loss of men, though it be the getting of children. Here they come will tell you more; for my part, I only hear your son was run away. [Exit Clown.

Enter Helena and two French Gentlemen.

Fr. Env. Save you, good madam.

Hel. Madam, my lord is gone; for ever gone.

Fr. Gen. Do not say so.

Count. Think upon patience.—Pray you, gentlemen,—

I have felt so many quirks of joy and grief, That the first face of neither, on the start, Can woman make unto ’t:—where is my son, I pray you?

Fr. Gen. Madam, he’s gone to serve the duke of Florence.

Count. We met him thitherward; for thence we came, And, after some despatch in hand at court, Thither we bend again.

Hel. Look on his letter, madam: here’s my passport.

[Reads.] “When thou canst get the ring upon my finger, which never shall come off, and show me a child begotten of thy body, that I am father to, then call me husband: but in such a case I write a never!”

This is a dreadful sentence.

Count. Brought you this letter, gentlemen?

Fr. Env. Ay, madam; and for the contents’ sake, are sorry for our pains.

Count. I pr’ythee, lady, have a better cheer; If thou engrossest all the griefs as a thine, Thou robb’st me of a moiety. He was my son, But I do wash his name out of my blood, And thou art all my child.—Towards Florence is he?

Fr. Gen. Ay, madam.

Count. And to be a soldier?

Fr. Gen. Such is his noble purpose; and, believe ’t, The duke will lay upon him all the honour That good convenience claims.

Count. Return you thither?

Fr. Env. Ay, madam, with the swiftest wing of speed.

Hel. [Reads.] “Till I have no wife, I have nothing in France.”

’Tis bitter.

Count. Find you that there?

Hel. Ay, madam.

Fr. Env. ’T is but the boldness of his hand, haply, Which his heart was not consenting to.

Count. Nothing in France, until he have no wife! There’s nothing here that is too good for him, But only she; and she deserves a lord, That twenty such rude boys might lend upon, And call her hourly mistress. Who was with him?

Fr. Env. A servant only, and a gentleman Which I have some time known.

Count. Paroles, was it not?

Fr. Env. Ay, my good lady, he.

Count. A very tainted fellow, and full of wickedness.

My son corrupts a well-derived nature With his inducement.

Fr. Env. Indeed, good lady.

The fellow has a deal of that too much, Which ’ MOVE ’ him much to leave.

Count. ’ Y are welcome, gentlemen.

I will entreat you, when you see my son, To tell him, that his sword can never win The honour that he loses: more I’ll entreat you Written to bear along.

Fr. Gen. We serve you, madam, in that and all your worthiest affairs.

Count. Not so, but as we change our courtesies.

Will you draw near?

[Exeunt Countess and French Gentlemen.

1The top of the loose boot which turned over was called the ruff, or ruffe. * Old copies: hol; which Knight explains, understanding "s" as the tenure by which it was held. 2 are: in f. e. 3 holds: in f. e. 4 have: in f. e. 5
Hel. "Till I have no wit, I have nothing in France."
Nothing in France, until he has no wife!
Thou shalt have none, Rouillon; none in France;
Then hast thou all again. Poor lord! is it!
That chase thee from thy country, and expose
Those tender limbs of thine to the event
Of the non-sparing war? and is it
That drive thee from the sportive court, where thou
Wast shot at with fair eyes, to be the mark
Of smoky muskets? O! you leaden messengers,
That ride upon the 'volant' speed of fire,
Fly with false aim, wound the still-piercing' air
That sings with piercing, do not touch my lord!
Whoever shoots at him, I set him there;
Whoever charges on his forward breast,
I am the catiff that do hold him to it;
And, though I kill him not, I am the cause
His death was so effect'd. Better 't were,
I met the ravening' lion when he roar'd
With sharp constraint of hunger; better 't were
That all the miseries which nature owes
Were mine at once. No, come thou home, Rouillon,
Whence honour but of danger wins a scar,
As oft it loses all: I will be gone.
My being here it is that holds thee hence:
Shall I stay here to do 't? no, no, although
The air of paradise did fan the house,
And angels offic'd all: I will be gone,
That pitiful rumour may report my flight,
To consolate thine ear. Come, night: end, day;
For with the dark, poor thief, I'll steal away. [Exit."

Flourish. Enter the Duke of Florence, Bertram, Parolles, Lords, Officers, Soldiers, and others.

Duke. The general of our horse thou art; and we,
Great in our hope, lay our best love and credence
Upon thy promised fortune.

Ber. Sir, it is
A charge too heavy for my strength; but yet
We'll strive to bear it for thy worthy sake,
To th' extreme edge of a hazard.

Duke. Then go thou forth,
And fortune play upon thy prosperous helm,
As thy auspicious mistress!

Ber. This very day,
Great Mars, I put myself into thy file:
Make me but like my thoughts, and I shall prove
A lover of thy drum, hater of love. [Exit.

SCENE IV. Rouillon. A Room in the Countess's Palace.

Enter Countess and her Steward.

Count. Alas! and would you take the letter of her?
Might you not know, she would do as she has done,
By sending me a letter? Read it again.

Stew. [Reads.] "I am Saint Jaques' pilgrim, thither gone.
Ambitious love hath so in me offended,
That bare-foot plod I the cold ground upon,
With stained vow my faults to have amended.
Write, write, that from the bloody course of war,
My dearest master, your dear son, may be:
Bless him at home in peace, whilst I from far
His name with zealous fervour sanctify.
His taken labours bid him me forgive:
I, his despiteful Juno, sent him forth
From courtly friends, with camping foes to live,
Where death and danger do the heels of worth:
He is so good and fair for death and me,
Whom I myself embrace, to set him free.
"Count. Ah, what sharp stings are in her mildest words!"
Rinaldo, you did never lack advice so much,
As letting her pass so: had I spoke with her,
I could have well diverted her intents,
Which thus she hath prevented.

Stew. Pardon me, madam:
If I had given you this at over-night,
She might have been o'errash'd; and yet she writes,
Putrid would be but vain.

Count. What angel shall Bless this unworthy husband? he cannot thrive,
Unless her prayers, whom heaven delights to hear,
And loves to grant, reprieve him from the wrath
Of greatest justice.—Write, write, Rinaldo,
To this unworthy husband of his wife:
Let every word weigh heavy of her worth,
That he does weigh too light: my greatest grief,
Though little he do feel it, set down sharply.

Despatch the most convenient messenger.

When, haply, he shall hear that she is gone,
He will return: and hope I may, that she,
Hearing so much, will speed her foot again,
Led hither by pure love. Which of them both
Is dearest to me, I have no skill or sense
To make distinction.—Provide this messenger.—
My heart is heavy, and mine age is weak;
Grief would have tears, and sorrow bids me weep.

[Exeunt."

SCENE V.—Without the Walls of Florence.

A tucket afar off. Enter an old Widow of Florence,\nDiana, Violenta, Marianna, and other Citizens.

Wid. Nay, come; for if they do approach the city we shall lose all the sight.

Diz. They say, the French count has done most honourable service.

Wid. It is reported that he has taken their greatest commander, and that with his own hand he slew the Duke's brother. We have lost our labour; they are gone contrary way: hark! you may know by their trumpets.

Mar. Come: let's return again, and suffice ourselves with the report of it. Well, Diana, take heed of this French earl: the honour of a maid is her name, and no legacy is so rich as honesty.

Wid. I have told my neighbour, how you have been solicited by a gentleman his companion.

Mar. I know that knave; hang him! one Parolles: a filthy officer he is in those suggestions' for the young earl.—Beware of them. Diana; their promises, entertainments, oaths, tokens, and all these engines of lust, are not the things they go under: many a maid hath been seduced by them; and the misery is, example, that so terrible shows in the wreck of maidenhead, cannot for all that disuade succession, but that they are lined with the twigs that threaten them. I hope, I need not to advise you further; but I hope, your own grace will keep you where you are, though there were no farther danger known, but the modesty which is so lost.

Diz. You shall not need to fear me.

Enter Helena in the dress of a Pilgrim.

Wid. I hope so.—Look, here comes a pilgrim: I know she will lie at my house; thither they send one another.

I'll question her.—God save you, pilgrim! Whither are you bound?
To Saint Jaques le Grand.

Where do the palmers lodge, I do beseech you?

At the Saint Francis here, beside the port.

Is this the way?

Ay, marry, is't.—Hark you! [A march afar off.

They come this way.—

If you will tarry, holy pilgrim,

Let all the troops come by,

I will conduct you where you shall be lodg'd;

The rather, for I think I know your hostess

As well as myself.

Is it yourself?

If you shall please so, pilgrim.

I thank you, and will stay upon your leisure.

You came, I think, from France?

I did so.

Here you shall see a countryman of yours,

That has done worthy service.

His name, I pray you.

The Count Roussillon: know you such a one?

But by the ear, that hears most nobly of him:

I face I know not.

Whatsoe'er he is,

He's bravely taken here. He stole from France,

As is reported, for the king had married him

Against his liking. Think you it is so?

Ay, surely, mere the truth: I know his lady.

There is a gentleman, that serves the count,

But not so well as of her.

What's his name?

Monsieur Parolles.

O! I believe with him,

Is argument of praise, or to the worth.

Of the great count himself, she is too mean

To have her name repeated: all her deserving

Is a reserved honesty, and that

I have not heard examin'd.

Alas, poor lady!

'Tis a hard bondage, to become the wife

Of a detesting lord.

I write good creature: where'soe'er she is,

For heart weighs sadly. This young maid might do her

A shrewd turn, if she pleas'd.

How do you mean?

My liege, the amorous count solicits her

In the unlawful purpose.

He does, indeed;

All treaties with all that can in such a suit,

Correct the tender honour of a maid:

But she is arm'd for him, and keeps her guard,

In honest defence.

Enter with drum and colours, a party of the Florentine army, Bertram, and Parolles.

Mer. The gods forbid else!

So, now they come.—

That is Antonio, the Duke's eldest son;

That Escalus.

Hol. Which is the Frenchman?

He;

That with the plume: 'tis a most gallant fellow;

I would be lov'd his wife. If he were honest,

He were much goodlier; is't not a handsome gentleman?

I like him well.

'Tis pity, he is not honest. Yond's that same

Knife, that leads him to these places: were I his lady,

I would poison that vile rascal.

Which is he!

That jackanapes with scarfs. Why is he melancholy?

Porchence he's hurt it the battle.

Par. Lose our drum! well.

Mar. He's shrewdly vexed at something. Look, he has spied us.

Marry, hang you!

And your courtesy, for a ring-carrier!

[Exeunt Bertram, Parolles, Officer, and Soldiers.

Wid. The troop is past. Come, pilgrim, I will bring you

Where you shall host: of enjoin'd penitents

There's four or five, to great Saint Jaques bound,

Already at my house.

I humbly thank you.

Please it this matron, and this gentle maid,

To eat with us to-night, the charge and thank

Shall be for me; and, to requite you farther,

I will bestow some precepts of this virgin,

Worthy the note.

We'll take your offer kindly. [Exeunt.

SCENE VI.—Camp before Florence.

Enter Bertram, and the two Frenchmen.

Fr. Env. Nay, good my lord, put him to't: let him have his way.

Fr. Gent. If your lordship find him not a hilding, hold me no more in your respect.

Fr. Env. On my life, my lord, a bubble.

Ber. Do you think I am so far deceived in him?

Fr. Env. Believe it, my lord: is mine own direct knowledge, without any malice, but to speak of him as my kinsman, he's a most notable coward, an infinite and endless liar, an hourly promise-breaker, the owner of no one good quality, worthy your lordship's entertainment.

Fr. Gent. It were fit you know him, lest reposing too far in his virtue, which he hath not, he might, at some great and trusty business in a main danger, fail

you.

Ber. I would I knew in what particular action to try him.

Fr. Gent. None better than to let him fetch off his drum, which you hear him so confidently undertake to do.

Fr. Env. I, with a troop of Florentines, will suddenly surprise him: such I will have, whom, I am sure, he knows not from the enemy. We will bind and hoodwink him so, that he shall suppose no other but that he is carried into the leaguer of the adversaries, when we bring him to our own tents. Be but your lordship present at his examination, if he do not, for the promise of his life, and in the highest compulsion of base fear, offer to betray you, and deliver all the intelligence in his power against you, and that with the divine forfeit of his soul upon oath, never trust my judgment in any thing.

Fr. Gent. O! for the love of laughter, let him fetch off his drum: he says he has a stratagem for't. When your lordship sees the bottom of his success in't, and to what metal this counterfeit lump of ore* will be melted, if you give him not John Drum's entertainment, your inclining cannot be removed. Here he comes.

Enter Parolles.

Fr. Env. O! for the love of laughter, hinder not the honour of his design: let him fetch off his drum in any hand.

Ber. How now, monsieur? this drum sticks sorely in your disposition.

Fr. Gent. A pox 'o't! let it go: 'tis but a drum.

Par. But a drum! Is 't but a drum? A drum so lost!—There was an excellent command, to charge in with our horse upon our own wings, and to rend our own soldiers!

Fr. Gent. That was not to be blamed in the command of the service: it was a disaster of war that Cæsar himself could not have prevented, if he had been there to command.

Ber. Well, we cannot greatly condemn our success: some dishonour we had in the loss of that drum; but it is not to be recovered.

Par. It might have been recovered.

Ber. It might: but it is not now.

Par. It is to be recovered. But that the merit of service is seldom attributed to the true and exact performer, I would have that drum or another, or his jaquet.

Ber. Why, if you have a stomach to 't, monsieur, if you think your mystery in stratagem can bring this instrument of honour again into his native quarter, be magnanimous in the enterprise, and go on; I will grace the attempt for a worthy exploit: if you speed well in it, the Duke shall both speak of it, and extend to you what farther becomes his greatness, even to the utmost syllable of your worthiness.

Par. By the hand of a soldier, I will undertake it.

Ber. But you must not now slumber in it.

Par. I'll about it this evening: and I will presently pen down my dilemma, encourage myself in my certainty, put myself into my mortal preparation, and by midnight look to hear farther from me.

Ber. May I be bold to acquaint his grace you are gone about it?

Par. I know not what the success will be, my lord; but the attempt I vow.

Ber. I know thou art valiant, and to the possibility of thy soldieryship will subscribe for thee. Farewell.

Par. I love not many words. [Exit.

Fr. Env. No more than a fish loves water.—Is not this a strange fellow, my lord, that so confidently seems to undertake this business, which he knows is not to be done, dams himself to do, and dares better be damned than to do 't?

Fr. Gent. You do not know him, my lord, as we do: certain it is, that he will steel himself into a man's favour, and for a week escape a great deal of discoveries: but when you find him out, you have him ever after.

Ber. Why, do you think, he will make no deed at all of this, that so seriously he does address himself unto?

Fr. Env. None in the world, but return with an invention, and clap upon you two or three probable lies. But we have almost embossed him, you shall see his fall to-night; for, indeed, he is not for your lordship's respect.

Fr. Gent. We'll make you some sport with the fox, ere we case him. He was first smoked by the old lord Lafaen: when his disguise and he is parted, tell me what a sprat you shall find him, which you shall see this very night.

Fr. Env. I must go look my twigs: he shall be caught.

Ber. Your brother, he shall go along with me.

Fr. Gent. A'nt please your lordship?

Fr. Env. I'll leave you. [Exit.

Ber. Now will I lead you to the house, and show you the lane I spoke of.

Fr. Gent. But, you say, she's honest.

Ber. That's all the fault. I spoke with her but once, and found her wondrous cold; but I sent to her, by this same coxcomb that we have i' the wind, tokens and letters which she did re-send; and this is all I have done. She's a fair creature. Will you go see her?

Fr. Gent. With all my heart, my lord. [Exit.

SCENE VII.—Florence. A Room in the Widow's House.

Enter Helena and Widow.

Hel. If you mistrust me that I am not she, I know not how I shall assure you farther, but I shall lose the grounds I work upon.

Wid. Though my estate be fall'n, I was well born, nothing acquainted with these businesses, and would not put my reputation now in any staining act.

Hel. Nor would I wish you. First, give me trust, the count he is my husband, and what to your sworn counsel I have spoken, is so, from word to word; and then you cannot, by the good aid that I of you shall borrow, err in bestowing it.

Wid. I should believe you; for you have show'd me that, which well approves you are great in fortune.

Hel. Take this purse of gold, and let me buy your friendly help thus far, which I will over-pay, and pay again, when I have found it. The count he woos you daughter, lays down his wanton siege before her beauty, resolved to carry her: let her, in fine, consent, as we'll direct her how 't is best to bear it. Now, his important blood will nought deny that she'll demand: a ring the county wears, that downward hath succeeded in his house from son to son, some four or five descended since the first father wore it: this ring he holds in most rich choice; yet, in his idle fire to buy his will, it would not seem too dear, Howe'er repeated after.

Wid. Now I see the bottom of your purpose.

Hel. You see it lawful then. It is no more, but that your daughter, ere she seems as won, desires this ring; appoints him an encounter; in fine, delivers me to fill the time, herself most chastely absent. After this, to marry her, I'll add three thousand crowns to what is past already.

Wid. I have yielded. Instruct my daughter how she shall persever, that time and place, with this deceit so lawful, may prove coherent. Every night he comes, with musics of all sorts, and songs compos'd to her unworthiness: it nothing steds us, to oblige him from our eaves, for he persists as if his life lay on 't.

Hel. Why then, to-night let us assay our plot; which, if it speed, is wicked meaning in a lawful deed, and lawful meaning in a lawful act; where both not sin, and yet a sinful fact. But let's about it. [Exit.
ACT IV.

SCENE I.—Without the Florentine Camp.

Enter French Envoys, with five or six soldiers in ambush.

Fr. Env. He can come no other way but by this belee corner. When you sally upon him, speak what Vere bledge language you will: though you understand it not yourselves, no matter; for we must not seem to understand him, unless some one among us, whom we have provided for an interpreter.

1 Sold. Good captain, let me be the interpreter.

Fr. Env. Art not acquainted with him? knows he not thy voice?

1 Sold. No, sir, I warrant you.

Fr. Env. But what linen-wooly hast thou to speak out again?

1 Sold. Even such as you speak to me.

Fr. Env. He must think us some band of strangers to the adversary's entertainment. Now, he hath a masteck of all neigbouring languages; therefore, we must every one be a man of his own fancy, not to know what we speak to one to another; so we seem to know things straight to our purpose: chough's language, gabble enough, and good enough. As for you, interpreter, you must seem very politic. But cough, ho! here he comes, to beguile two hours in a sleep, and then to roar and swear the lies he forges. [They stand back.]

Enter PAROLLES.

Par. Ten o'clock: within these three hours 'twill be time enough to go home. What shall I say I have done? It must be a very plausible invention that carrieth them. They begin to smoke me, and disgraces have of late knocked too often at my door. I find, myarge is too foolhardy; but my heart hath the fear of Mars before it, and of his creatures, not daring the secrets of my tongue.

Fr. Env. [Aside.] This is the first truth that 'er the sun, my tongue was guilty of.

Par. What the devil should move me to undertake the recovery of this drum, being not ignorant of the impossible, and knowing I had no such purpose? I was give myself some hurts, and say, I got them in effect. Yet slights on will not carry it: they will say, 'Came you off with so little!' and great ones I dare not give. Wherefore? What's the instance? Lone, I must put you into a butter-woman's mouth, and buy myself another of Bajazet's male, if you enter me into these errors.

Fr. Env. [Aside.] Is it possible, he should know what he is, and be that he is?

Par. I would the cutting of my garments would serve the turn; or the breaking of my Spanish sword.

Fr. Env. [Aside.] We cannot afford you so.

Par. Or the baring of my beard; and to say, it was in stragyment.

Fr. Env. [Aside.] 'T would not do.

Par. Or to drown my clothes, and say I was stripped.

Fr. Env. [Aside.] Hardly serve.

Par. Though I swore I leaped from the window of the citadel—

Fr. Env. [Aside.] How deep?

Par. Thirty fathom.

Fr. Env. [Aside.] Three great oaths would scarce make that be believed.

Par. I said I had any drum of the enemy's: I would swear I recovered it.

SCENE II.—Florence. A Room in the Widow's House.

Enter BERTRAM and DIANA.

Ber. They told me that your name was Fontibell.

Dis. No, my good lord, Diana.

Ber. Titled goddess, And worth it, with addition! But, fair soul, In your fine frame hath love no quality? If the quick fire of youthful light not your mind, You are no maiden, but a monument: When you are dead, you should be such a one As you are now, for you are cold and stone;* And now you should be as your mother was, When your sweet self was got.

Dis. She then was honest.

Ber. I should. So should you be.

Dis. No:

[Exeunt.]
My mother did but duty; such, my lord, As you now owe to your wife.
Ber.  No more o' that:
I pr'ythee, do not strive against my vows.
I was compell'd to her; but I love thee
By love's own sweet constraint, and will for ever
Do thee all rights of service.
Dia.  Ay, so you serve us,
Till we serve you; but when you have our roses,
You barely leave our thorns to prick ourselves,
And mock us with our barreness.
Ber.  How have I sworn?
Dia. 'Tis not the many oaths that make the truth,
But the plain single vow, that is vow'd true.
What is not holy, that we swear not by,
But take the highest to witness: then, pray you, tell me,
If I should swear by Jove's great attributes,
I lov'd you dearly, would you believe my oaths,
When I did love you ill? this has no holding,
To swear by him, whom I protest to love,
That I will work against him. Therefore, your oaths
Are words, and poor conditions, but unseal'd,
At least, in my opinion.
Ber.  Change it, change it.
Be not so holy-cruel: love is holy,
And my integrity ne'er knew the crafts,
That you do charge men with. Stand no more off,
But give thyself unto my sick desires,
Who then recover: say, thou art mine, and ever
My love, as it begins, shall so persever.
Dia.  I see, that men make hopes in such a suit;
That we'll forsake ourselves. Give me that ring.
Ber.  I'll lend it thee, my dear; but have no power
To give it from me.
Dia.  Will you not, my lord?
Ber.  It is an honour longing to our house,
Bequeathed down from many ancestors,
Which were the greatest obloquy 't the world
In me to lose.
Dia.  Mine honour 's such a ring:
My chastity's the jewel of our house,
Bequeathed down from many ancestors,
Which 't were the greatest obloquy 't the world
In me to lose. Thus, your own proper wisdom Brings in the champion, honour, on my part
Against your vain assault.
Ber.  Here, take my ring:
My house, mine honour, yes, my life be thine,
And I'll be bid by thee.
Dia.  When midnight comes, knock at my chamber window:
I'll order take my mother shall not hear.
Now will I charge you in the band of truth,
When you have conquer'd my yet maiden bed,
Remain there but an hour, nor speak to me.
My reasons are most strong; and you shall know them,
When back again this ring shall be deliver'd:
And on your finger, in the night, I'll put Another ring: that what in time proceeds
May token to the future our past deeds.
Adieu, till then; then, fail not. You have won
A wife of me, though there my hope be none.
Ber. A heaven on earth I have won by wooing thee.
[Exeunt.
Dia. For which live long to thank both heaven and me!
You may so in the end,
My mother told me just how he would woo,
As if she sat in 't heart: she says, all men
Have the like oaths. He had sworn to marry me,
When his wife's dead; therefore I'll lie with him,
When I am buried. Since Frenchmen are so braid;
Marry that will, I live and die a maid:
Only, in this disguise, I think 't no sin,
To cozen him, that would unjustly win.
[Exeunt.
SCENE III.—The Florentine Camp.
Enter the two Frenchmen, and two or three Soldiers.
Fr. Gent. You have not given him his mother's letter.
Fr. Env. I have delivered it an hour since: there is something in 't that stings his nature, for on the reading it he changed almost into another man.
Fr. Gent. He has much worthy blame laid upon him, for shaking off so good a wife, and so sweet a lady.
Fr. Env. Especially he hath incurred the everlasting displeasure of the king, who had even turned his bounty to sing happiness to him. I will tell you a thing, but you shall let it dwell darkly within you.
Fr. Gent. When you have spoken it, 't is dead, and I am the graver of it.
Fr. Env. He hath perverted a young gentlewoman, here in Florence, of a most chaste renown, and this night he flushes his will in the spoil of her honour: he hath given her his monumental ring, and thinks him self made in the uncomplaisant composition.
Fr. Gent. Now, God delay our rebellion: as we are ourselves, what things are we!
Fr. Env. Merely our own traitors: and as in the common course of all treasons, we still see them reveal themselves, till they attain to their abhorred ends. so be that in this action contrives against his own nobility, in his proper stream o'erflows himself.
Fr. Gent. Is it not most damnable in us, to be trumpeters of our unlawful intents? We shall not then have his company to night.
Fr. Env. Not till after midnight, for he is dictated to his hour.
Fr. Gent. That approaches space: I would gladly have him see his companion anonymized, that he might take a measure of his own judgment, wherein so curiously he had set this counterfeit.
Fr. Env. We will not meddle with him till he come for his presence must be the whip of the other.
Fr. Gent. In the mean time, what hear you of these wars?
Fr. Env. I hear there is an overture of peace.
Fr. Gent. Nay, I assure you, a peace concluded.
Fr. Env. What will count Rousillon do then?
will he travel higher, or return again into France?
Fr. Gent. I perceive by this demand you are no altogether of his council.
Fr. Env. Let it be forbid, sir; so should I be a great deal of his act.
Fr. Gent. Sir, his wife some two months since fled from his house; her pretence is a pilgrimage to see Jaques le Grand, which holy undertaking with most astere sanctimony she accomplished; and, there re siding, the tenderness of her nature became as a prey to her grief; in fine, made a groan of her last breath and now she sings in heaven.
Fr. Env. How is this justified?
Fr. Gent. The stronger part of it by her own letters which make her story true, even to the point of his death: her death itself, which could not be her office to say, is some, and faithfully confirmed by the recto of the place.
Fr. Env. Hath the count all this intelligence?
Fr. Gent. Ay, and the particular confirmations, point by point, to the full arming of the army.
Fr. Env. I am heartily sorry that he'll be glad of this.
Fr. Gent. How mighty, sometimes, we make us ourselves of our losses.
Fr. Env. And how mightily, some other times, we Upon our gain in tears. The great dignity, that his virtue hath here acquired for him, shall at home be encountered with a shame as ample.
Fr. Gent. The web of our life is of a mingled yarn; good and ill together: our virtues were to be proud, if our faults whipped them not; and our crimes would be happy, if they were not cherished by our virtues.
Enter a Servant.
How now? where's your master?
Serv. He met the duke in the street, sir, of whom he hath taken a solemn leave: his lordship will next morning for France. The duke hath offered him letters of commendations to the king.
Fr. Env. They shall be no more than needful there, if they were more than they can commend.
Enter Bertram.
Fr. Gent. They cannot be too sweet for the king's ears. Here's his lordship now.—How now, my lord! is't not after midnight?
Ber. I have to-night despatched sixteen businesses, a month's length a-piece, by an abstract of success: I have consp'd with the duke, done my adieu with his nearest, buried a wife, mourned for her, writ to my last mother I am returning, entertained my convoy; set between these main parcelles of despatch effectually made needs: the last was the greatest, but that I have not ended yet.
Fr. Env. If the business be of any difficulty, and the morning your departure hence, it requires haste of your lordship.
Ber. I mean the business is not ended, as fearing to bear it hereafter. But shall we have this dialogue between the fool and the soldier? Come, bring forth his counterfeitt medal: he has received me, like a simple, meaning prosphere.
Fr. Env. Bring him forth. [Exeunt Soldiers.] He has al the stocks all night, poor gallant knave.
Ber. No matter; his heales have deserved it, in usurping his spurs so long. How does he carry himself?
Fr. Env. I have told your lordship already; the stocks carry him. But, to answer you as you would be understood, he weepes, like a wench that had shed her milk. He hath confessed himself to Morgan, whom he supposes to be a friar, from the time of his remembrance, to this very instant disaster of his sitting 't the rock, and what think you he hath confessed?
Ber. Nothing of me, has he?
Fr. Env. His confession is taken, and it shall be read to his face: if your lordship be in't, as I believe you are, you must have the patience to hear it.
Re-enter Soldiers, with Paroles.
Serv. He calls for the tortures: what will you say about 'em?
Fr. Env. I will confess what I know without constraint: I pinch me like a pastry, I can say no more.
1 Sold. Bosko chimurko.
Fr. Gent. Bobbilingo chicurmuco.
1 Sold. You are a most merciful general.—Our general will answer to you what I shall ask you out of a note.
Par. And truly, as I hope to live.
1 Sold. "First, demand of him how many horse the duke is strong." What say you to that?
Par. Five or six thousand; but very weak and unserviceable: the troops are all scattered, and the commanders very poor rogues, upon my reputation and credit, and as I hope to live.
1 Sold. Shall I set down your answer so?
Par. Do: I'll take my sacrament on't, how and which way you will.
1 Sold. All's one to him.
Ber. What a past-saving slave is this!
Fr. Gent. Y are deceived, my lord: this is monsieur Paroles, the gallant militarist, (that was his own phrase) that had the whole theorick of war in the knot of his scarf, and the practice in the chape' of his dagger.
Fr. Env. I will never trust a man again for keeping his sword clean; nor believe he can have every thing in him by wearing his apparel neatly.
1 Sold. Well, that's set down.
Par. Five or six thousand horse, I said,—I will say true,—or thereabouts, set down,—for I'll speak truth. Fr. Gent. He's very near the truth in this.
Ber. But I con's to him no thanks for't, in the nature he delivers it.
Par. Poor rogues, I pray you, say.
1 Sold. Well, that's set down.
Par. I humbly thank you, sir. A truth 's a truth: the rogues are marvellous poor.
1 Sold. "Demand of him, of what strength they are a-foot." What say you to that?
Par. By my troth, sir, if I were to live this present hour, I will tell true. Let me see: Spurio a hundred and sixty, Sebastian so many, Columbus so many, Jaques so many; Guiltian, Cosmo, Lodowick, and Gratiu, two hundred fifty each; mine own company, Chitopher, Vaumond, Bentii, two hundred fifty each: so that the muster-flie, rotten and sound, upon my life, amounts not to fifteen thousand poll; half of the which dare not shake the snow from off their cascocks, lest they shake themselves to pieces.
Ber. What shall be done to him?
Fr. Gent. Nothing, but let him have thanks.—Demand of him my condition, and what credit I have with the duke.
1 Sold. Well, that's set down. "You shall demand of him, whether one captain Dumatine be i' the camp, a Frenchman: what his reputation is with the duke, what his valour, honesty, and expertness in war; or whether he thinks, it were not possible with well-weighing sums of gold to corrupt him to a revolt." What say you to this? what do you know of it?
Par. I beseech you, let me answer to the particular of the interrogatories: demand them singly.
1 Sold. Do you know this captain Dumatine?
Par. I know him: he was a butcher's prentice in Paris, from whence he was whipped for getting the sheriff's fool with child; a dumb innocent, that could not say him, nay. [Dumatine lifts up his hand in anger.
Ber. Nay, by your leave, hold your hands; though, I know, his brains are forfeit to the next tile that falls.
1 Sold. Well, is this captain in the duke of Florence's camp?
Par. Upon my knowledge he is, and lousy.
Fr. Gent. Nay, look not so upon me; we shall hear of your lordship anon.
1 Sold. What is his reputation with the duke?
Par. The duke knows him for no other but a poor officer of mine, and writes to me this other day to turn him out o' the band: I think, I have his letter in my pocket.

1 Sold. Marry, we'll search.

Par. In good sadness, I do not know: either it is there, or it is upon a file, with the duke's other letters, in my tent.

1 Sold. Here 'tis; here 's a paper: shall I read it to you?

Par. I do not know if it be it, or no.

Ber. Our interpreter does it well.

Fr. Gent. Excellent.

1 Sold. [Reads.] "Dian, the count's a fool, and full of gold,--"

Par. That is not the duke's letter, sir: that is an advertisement to a proper maid in Florence, one Diana, to take heed of the allurement of one count Roussillon, a foolish idle boy, but, for all that, very ruttish. I pray you, sir, put it up again.

1 Sold. Nay, I'll read it first, by your favour.

Par. My meaning in 't, I protest, was very honest in the behalf of the maid; for I knew the young count to be a dangerous and lascivious boy, who is a whale to virginity, and devours up all the fry it finds.

Ber. Damnable, both-sides rogue!

1 Sold. [Reads.] "When he swears oaths, bid him drop gold, and take it; after he scores, he never pays the score; half-won is match well made; match, and well make it; he never pays after debts; take it before, and say, a soldier, Dian, told thee this.

Men are to meli' with, boys are not to kiss: for count of this, the count's a fool, I know it, who pays before, but not where he does owe it.

"Thine, as he vow'd to thee in thine ear, "Paroles."

Ber. He shall be whipped through the army, with this rhyme in his forehead.

Fr. Ewe. This is your devoted friend, sir; the manifold linguist, and the armipotent soldier.

Ber. I could endure any thing before but a cat, and now he's a cat to me.

1 Sold. I perceive, sir, by our general's looks, we shall be fain to hang you.

Par. My life, sir, in any case! not that I am afraid to die; but that, my offences being many, I would repent out the remainder of nature. Let me live, sir, in a dungeon, 't the stocks, or any where, so I may live.

1 Sold. We'll see what may be done, so you confess freely: therefore, once more to this captain Dumaine. You have answered to his reputation with the duke, and to his valour: what is his honesty?

Par. He will steal, sir, an egg out of a cloister: for rapes and ravishments he parrells Nessus. He professes not keeping of oaths; in breaking them he is stronger than Hercules. He will lie, sir, with such volubility, that you would think truth were a fool. Drunkenness is his best virtue; for he will be swine-drunk, and in his sleep he does little harm, save to his bed-clothes about him; but they know his conditions and lay him in straw. I have but little more to say, sir, of his honesty: he has every thing that an honest man should not have; what an honest man should have, he has nothing.

Fr. Gent. I begin to love him for this.

Ber. For this description of thine honesty? A pox upon him! for me he is more and more a cat.

1 Sold. What say you to his expertness in war?

Par. Faith, sir, he has led the drum before the English tragedians—to belis him, I will not, and more of his soldierhood I know not; except, in that country, he had the honour to be the officer at a place there called Mile-end, 4 to instruct for the doubling of files: I would do the man what honour I can, but of this I am not certain.

Fr. Gent. He hath out-villain'd villany so far, that the rarity redeems him.

Ber. A pox on him! he's a cat still.

1 Sold. His qualities being at this poor price, I need not ask you, if gold will corrupt him to revolt.

Par. Sir, for a quart d'ecus 5 he will sell the fee-simple of his salvation, the inheritance of it; and cut the entail from all remainders, and a perpetual succession for it perpetually.

1 Sold. What's his brother, the other captain Dumaine?

Fr. Ewe. Why does he ask of him of me?

1 Sold. What's he?

Par. E'en a crow o' the same nest; not altogether so great as the first in goodness, but greater a great deal in evil. He excels his brother for a coward, yet his brother is reputed one of the best that is. In a retreat he out-runs any lackey; marry, in coming on he has the cramp.

1 Sold. If your life be saved, will you undertake to betray the Florentine?

Par. Ay, and the captain of his horse, count Roussillon.

1 Sold. I'll whisper with the general, and know his pleasure.

Fr. [Aside.] I'll no more drumming; a plague of all drums! Only to seem to deserve well, and to beguile the supposition of that lascivious young boy the count, have I run into this danger. Yet who would have suspected an ambush, where I was taken?

1 Sold. There is no remedy, sir, but you must die. The general says, you, that have so traitorously discovered the secrets of your army, and made such pestiferous reports of men very nobly held, can serve the world for no honest use: therefore you must die. Come, headsmen; off with his head.

Par. O Lord, sir; let me live, or let me see my death!

1 Sold. That shall you; and take your leave of all your friends.

[Unmuffling his weapon.

So, look about you: know you any here?

Ber. Good-morrow, noble captain.

Fr. Ewe. God bless you, captain Paroles.

Fr. Gent. God save you, noble captain.

Fr. Ewe. Captain, what greeting will you to my lord Lafeu? I am for France.

Fr. Gent. Good captain, will you give me a copy of the sonnet you write to Diana in behalf of the count Roussillon? an I were not a very coward, I'd compel it of you; but fare you well.

[Exit Bertram.

1 Sold. You are undone, captain; all but your scarf, that has a knot on 't yet.

Par. Who cannot be crushed with a plot?

1 Sold. If you could find out a country where but women were, that had received so much shame, you might begin an impudent nation. Fare you well, sir; I am for France too: we shall speak of you there. [Exit.

Par. Yet am I thankful: if my heart were great, 't would burst at this. Captain I'll be no more; But I will eat, and drink, and sleep as soft As captain shall; simply the thing I am. Shall I see in my grave? Who knows himself a bragget, Let him fear this; for it will come to pass,
Laf. 't was a good lady, 't was a good lady: we may pick a thousand salads, ere we light on such another herb.

Clo. Indeed, sir, she was the sweet marjoram of the salad, or, rather the herb of grace.

Laf. They are not pot-herbs, you knave; they are nose-herbs.

Clo. I am no great Nebuchadnezzar, sir; I have no much skill in grass.

Laf. Whether dost thou profess thyself, a knife, or a fool?

Clo. A fool, sir, at a woman's service, and a knife at a man's.

Laf. Your distinction?

Clo. I would choose the man of his wife, and do his service.

Laf. So you were a knife at his service, indeed.

And I would give his wife my bubble, sir, to do her service.

Clo. I will subscribe for thee, thou art both knave and fool.

Laf. At your service.

Clo. No, no, no.

Laf. Why, sir, if I cannot serve you, I can serve as great a prince as you are.

Clo. Who's that? a Frenchman?

Laf. Faith, sir, a' has an English name; but his phrenology is more hotter in France, than there.

Clo. What prince is that?

Laf. The black prince, sir; alias, the prince of darkness; alias, the devil.

Laf. Hold thee, there's my purse. I give thee not this to suggest thee from thy master thou talkest of: serve him still.

Clo. I am a woodland fellow, sir, that always loved a great fire: and the master I speak of, ever keeps a good fire. But, sure, he is the prince of the world; let the nobility remain in's court. I am for the house with the narrow gate, which I take to be too little for pomp to enter: some, that humble themselves, may; but the many will be too chill and tender, and they'll be for the flowery way, that leads to the broad gate, and the great fire.

Laf. Go thy ways, I begin to be a-woary of thee; and I tell thee so before, because I would not fall out with thee. Go thy ways: let my horses be well looked to, without any tricks.

Clo. If I put any tricks upon 'em, sir, they shall be jades' tricks, which are their own right by the law of nature.

[Exeunt.

SCENE V.—Rousillon. A Room in the Countess's Palace.

Enter Countess, LAFU, and Clown.

Laf. No, no, no; your son was mied with a snipta lady there, whose villainous saffron would have made all the unbacked and doughty youth of a taince in his colour: your daughter-in-law had been are at this hour, and your son here at home, more strung by the king, than by that red-tailed humble-bee I speak of.

Clo. I would I had not known him. It was the death of the most virtuous gentlewoman, that ever I had praise for conceiving: if she had partaken of her flesh, and cost me the dearest groans of a mother, I should not have owed her a more rooted love.

Laf. I have in f. *; revives in f. *; * Saffron was used to color starch, a yellow hue being then fashionable in dress. It was also used in f. *; * a short stick, with a fool's head, or a small figure, at the end of it. An inflated bladder was

ACT V.

SCENE I.—Marseilles. A Street.

Enter HELENA, Widow, and DIANA, with two Attendants.

Hel. But this exceeding posting, day and night,
Must wear your spirits low: we cannot help it;
But, since you have made the days and nights as one,
To wear your gentle limbs in my affairs,
Be bold, you do so grow in my requital,
As nothing can unroot you. In happy time,
Enter a Gentleman, a Stranger.1

This man may help me to his majesty’s ear,
If he would spend his power.—God save you, sir.
Gent. And you.
Hel. Sir, I have seen you in the court of France.
Gent. I have been sometimes there.
Hel. I do presume, sir, that you are not fallen
From the report that goes upon your goodness;
And therefore, goaded with most sharp occasions
Which lay nice manners by, I put you to
The use of your own virtues, for the which
I shall continue thankful.
Gent. What’s your will?
Hel. That it will please you
To give this poor petition to the king,
And aid me with that store of power you have,
To come into his presence. [Giving it to him.
Gent. The king’s not here.
Hel. Not here, sir?
Gent. Not, indeed:
He hence removal last night, and with more haste
Than is his use.

Hel. Lord, how we lose our pains!
Hel. All’s well that ends well yet,
Though time seem so adverse, and means unfruitful.—
I do beseech you, whither is he gone?
Gent. Marry, as I take it, to Roussillon;
Whether I am going.
Hel. I do beseech you, sir,
Since you are like to see the king before me,
Commend the paper to his gracious hand;
Which, I presume, shall render you no blame,
But rather make you thank your pains for it.
I will come after you, with what good speed
Our means will make us means.

Gent. This I’ll do for you.
Hel. And you shall find yourself to be well thankful;
What’s or falls more.—We must to horse again:—
Go, go, provide. [Exeunt.

1 a gentle Stranger: in f. o 2 This word is not added in f. o.
Scene III.

All's well that ends well.

Par. It lies in you, my lord, to bring me in some great, for you did bring me out.

Laf. Out upon thee, knave! dost thou put upon me a one both the office of God and the devil? one knave thee in grace, and the other brings thee out.

[Trumpets sound.] The king's coming; I know by his trumpets. Sirrah, inquire farther after me: I had talk of you last night. Though you are a fool and a knave, you shall eat: go to, follow.

Par. I praise God for you.

[Exeunt.

Scene III. — The same. A room in the Countess's

Flourish. Enter King, Countess, Lafeu, Lords,

Gentlemen, Guards, &c.

King. We lost a jewel of her, and our esteem
Was made much poorer by it; but your son,
Is mad in folly, lack'd the sense to know
Her estimation home.

Cost. 'Tis past, my liege;
And I beseech your majesty to make it
Natural, done i' the blase[1] of youth;
When oil and fire, too strong for reason's force,
O'ersets it, and burns on.

King. My honour'd lady,
I have forgiven and forgotten all,
Though my revenge was high bent upon him,
And watch'd the time to shoot.

Laf. This I must say,—
But first I beg my pardon,—the young lord
Did to his majesty, his mother, and his lady,
Ones of mighty note, but to himself
The greatest wrong of all: he lost a wife,
Whose beauty did astonish the survey
Of newest eyes; whose words all ears took captive;
Whose dear perfection hearts that scorn'd to serve
Humbly call'd mistress.

King. Praising what is lost
Makes the remembrance dear. — Well, call him hither.

We are reconcil'd, and the first view shall kill
All repetition.—Let him not ask our pardon:
The nature of his great offence is dead,
And deeper than oblivion we do bury
The increasing relics of it: let him approach,
A stranger, no offender: and inform him,
Sirs, we will or he should.

Cost. I shall, my liege. [Exit Gentleman

King. What says he to your daughter? have you spoken?

Laf. All that he is hath reference to your highness.

King. Then shall we have a match. I have letters sent me.

I set him high in fame.

Enter Bertram.

Laf. He looks well on't.

King. I am not a day of season,
For I mayst see a sunshine and a hail
In me at once; but to the brightest beams
Dotted clouds give way: so stand thou forth;
The time is fair again.

My high repented blame,
Your sovereign, pardon to me.

Ber. All is whole;
Yet we word more of the consumed time.
Let's take the instant by the forward top,
For we are old, and on our quickst decrees

Th' inaudible and noiseless foot of time
Steals, are we can effect them. You remember
The daughter of this lord.

Ber. Admiringly.

My liege, at first
I stuck my choice upon her, ere my heart
Durst make too bold a herald of my tongue:
Where the impression of mine eye infusing,
Contempt his scornful perspective did lend me,
Which warp'd the line of every other favour,
Scorn'd a fair colour, or express'd it stolen,
Extended or contracted all proportions,
To a most hideous object. Thence it came,
That she, whom all men praise'd, and whom myself,
Since I have lost, have lov'd, was in mine eye
The dust that did offend it.

King. Well excuse'd:
That thou didst love her strikes some score away
From the great compt. But love, that comes too late,
Like a remorseful pardon slowly carried,
To the great sender turns a sore[2] offence,
Crying, that's good that's gone. Our rash faults
Make trivial price of serious things we have,
Not knowing them, until we know their grave:
Oft our displeasures, to ourselves unjust,
Destroy our friends, and after weep their dust;
Our own love, waking, cries to see what's done,
While shameful hate sleeps out the afternoon.
Be this sweet Helen's smell, and now forget her.
Send forth your amorous token for fair Mundina:
The main consents are had; and here we'll stay
To see our widower's second marriage-day.

Laf. Which better than the first, O dear heaven,

Or, are they meet, in me, O nature, cease[3].

Come on, my son, in whom my house's name
Must be digested, give a favour from you,
To sparkle in the spirits of my daughter,
That she may quickly come. By my old beard,
And every hair that's on 't, Helen, that's dead,
Was a sweet creature: such a ring as this,
The last time ere she took her leave at court,
I saw upon her finger.

Ber. Hers it was not.

King. Now, pray you, let me see it; for mine eye,
While I was speaking, oft was fasten'd to 't.

This ring was mine; and, when I gave it Helen,
I bade her, if her fortunes ever stood
Necessity to help, that by this token
I would relieve her. Had you that craft to reave her
Of what should steal her most?

Ber. My gracious sovereign,

Hower' it please you to take it so,
The ring was never hers.

Count. Son, on my life,

I have seen her wear it; and she reckon'd it
At her life's rate.

Laf. I am sure I saw her wear it.

Ber. You are deceiv'd: my lord, she never saw it.

In Florence was it from a casket thrown me,
Wrapp'd in a paper, which contain'd the name
Of her that threw it. Noble she was, and thought
I stood engag'd; but when I had subscrib'd
To mine own fortune, and inform'd her fully
I could not answer in that course of honour
As she had made the overtire, she cease'd,
In heavy satisfaction, and would never Receive the ring again.
King. Plutus himself,
That knows the tint and multiplying medicine,
Hath not in nature’s mystery more science,
Than I have in this ring: ’t was mine, ’t was Helen’s,
Whoever gave it you. Then, if you know
That you are well acquainted with ’t yourself,
Confess ’t was hers, and by what rough enforcement
You got it from her. She call’d the saints to surety,
That she would never put it from her finger,
Unless she gave it to yourself in bed,
Where you have never come, or sent it us
Upon her great disaster.

Ber. She never saw it.

King. Thou speak’st it falsely, as I love mine honour,
And mak’st conjunctural fears to come into me,
Which I would fain shut out. If it should prove
That thou art so inhuman,—’t will not prove so;—
And yet I know not:—thou didst hate her deadly,
And she is dead,—which nothing, but to close
Her eyes myself, could win me to believe,
More than to see this ring.—Take him away.

[Guards seize BERTRAM.]

My fore-passed proofs, however the matter fall,
Shall tax my fears of little vanity,
Having vainly fear’d too little.—Away with him! We’ll sift this matter farther.

Ber. If you shall prove
This ring was ever hers, you shall as easily
Prove that I husbanded her bed in Florence,
Where yet she never was. [Exit BERTRAM, guarded.

Enter the Gentleman, a Stranger.*

King. I am wrapp’d in dismal thoughts.

Genl. Gracious sovereign,
Whethir I have been to blame, or no, I know not:
Here’s a petition from a Florentine,
Who hath, for four or five removes, come short
To tender it herself. I undertook it,
Vanquish’d thereto by the fair grace and speech
Of the poor supplicant, who by this, I know,
Is here attending: her business looks in her
With an importing visage; and she told me,
In a sweet verbal brief, it did concern
Your highness with herself.

King. [Reads.] “Upon his many protestations to marry me, when his wife was dead, I blush to say it, he won me. Now is the count Rousillon a widower: his vows are forfeited to me, and your honour ‘paid to him. He stole from Florence, taking no leave, and I follow him to his country for justice. Grant it me, O king! in you it best lies; otherwise a seducer flourishes, and a poor maid is undone.” “DIANA CAPILET.”

Laf. I will buy me a son-in-law in a fair, and toll him: for this, I’ll none of him.

King. The heavens have thought well on thee, Lafou,
To bring forth this discovery.—Seek these suitors.—
Go speedily, and bring again the count.

[Exit Gentleman, and some Attendants.

I am afraid, the life of Helen, lady,
Was foully snatch’d.

Count. Now, justice on the doors!

Re-enter BERTRAM, guarded.

King. I wonder, sir, for, wives are monsters to you,∗
And that you fly them as you swear them lordship,
Yet you desire to marry.—What woman’s that?

Re-enter Gentleman, with Widow, and DIANA.

Dia. I am, my lord, a wretched Florentine.

Derived from the ancient Capleti.

Kneeling.*
KING. Who lent it you?
DIA. It was not lent me neither.
KING. Where did you find it then?
DIA. I found it not.
KING. If it were yours by none of all these ways,
How could you give it him?
DIA. I never gave it him.
LAF. This woman's an easy glove, my lord: she Sells off and on at pleasure.
KING. This ring was mine: I gave it his first wife.
DIA. It might be yours, or hers, for aught I know.
KING. Take her away: I do not like her now.
To prison with her; and away with him. —
Unless thou tell'st me where thou hast this ring,
Thou diest within this hour.
DIA. I'll never tell you.
KING. Take her away.
DIA. I'll put in bail, my liege.
KING. I think thee now some common customer.
DIA. By Jove, if ever I knew man, 'twas you.
KING. Wherefore hast thou accused him all this while?
DIA. Because he's guilty, and he is not guilty.
He knows I am no maid, and he 'll swear to 't:
I 'll swear I am a maid, and he knows not.
Great king, I am no strumpet, by my life!
I am either maid, or else this old man's wife.
[Pointing to LAFÉL.
KING. She does abuse our ears. To prison with her!
DIA. Good mother, fetch my bail.—[Exit Widow.

Stay, royal sir:
The jeweller that owes the ring, is sent for,
And he shall surety me. But for this lord,
Who hath abus'd me, as he knows himself,
Though yet he never harm'd me, here I quit him.
He knows himself my bed he hath defil'd,
And at that time he got his wife with child:
Dead though she be, she feels her young one kick:
So there's my riddle, one that's dead is quick;
And now behold the meaning.

KING. Re-enter Widow, with HElENA.

KING. Is there no exorcist
Beguiles the truer office of mine eyes?
Is 't real, that I see?
HEL. So, my good lord:
'Tis but the shadow of a wife you see;
The name, and not the thing.
BER. Both, both! O, pardon! [Kneeling.
HEL. O! my good lord, when I was like this maid,
I found you wondrous kind. There is your ring;
And look you, here's your letter: this it says:
"When from my finger you can get this ring,
And are by me with child," &c.—This is done.
Will you be mine, now you are doubly won?
BER. If she, my liege, can make me know this clearly, [Rising.
I'll love her dearly, ever, ever dearly.
HEL. If it appear not plain, and prove untrue,
Deadly divorce step between me and you! —
O! my dear mother, do I see you living?
LAF. Mine eyes smell onions, I shall weep anon. —
Good Tom Drum, [To PAROLLES] send me a handkerchief: so, I thank thee. Wait on me home, I'll make sport with thee: let thy courtesies alone, they are scurrvy ones.
KING. Let us from point to point this story know,
To make the even truth in pleasure flow.
ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL.

[To Diana.] If thou be'st yet a fresh uncropped flower,
Choose thou thy husband, and I'll pay thy dower;
For I can guess, that by thy honest aid
Thou keepest a wife herself, thyself a maid.—

Of that, and all the progress, more and less,
Resolvedly more leisure shall express:
All yet seems well; and if it end so meet,
The bitter past, more welcome is the sweet.

[Flourish]

EPILOGUE BY THE KING.

The king's a beggar, now the play is done.
All is well ended, if this suit be won,
That you express content; which we will pay,

With strife to please you, day exceeding day:
Ours be your patience then, and yours our parts;
Your gentle hands lend us, and take our hearts.

TWELFTH-NIGHT: OR, WHAT YOU WILL.

DRAMATIS PERSONÆ.

OSSINO, Duke of Illyria.
SEBASTIAN, Brother to Viola.
ANTONIO, a Sea Captain, Friend to Sebastian.
A Sea Captain, Friend to Viola.
VALENTINE, Gentlemen attending on the Duke.
CURIOS.
Sir TOBY BELCH, Uncle to Olivia.
SIR ANDREW AUE-CHEEK.

MALVOLIO, Steward to Olivia.
FABIAN, Servants to Olivia.
Clown,

OLIVIA, a rich Countess.
VIOLA, in Love with the Duke.
MARIA, Olivia's Woman.

Lords, Priests, Sailors, Officers, Musicians, and Attendants.

SCENE, a City in Illyria; and the Sea-coast near it.

ACT I.

Enter Duke, Curio, Lords. Music playing. 1

Duke. If music be the food of love, play on:
Give me excess of it; that, surfeiting,
The appetite may sicken, and so die.
That strain again;—it had a dying fall:
0, it came o'er my ear like the sweet south,
That breathes upon a bank of violets,
Soothing, and giving odour,—Enough! no more:

[Music ceases. 2

'Tis not so sweet now, as it was before.
0 spirit of love! how quick and fresh art thou,
I. notwithstanding thy capacity
Receiv'd as the sea, nought enters there,
0! what validity 3 and pitch so'ere;
But falls into abatement and low price,
Like as a vixen in a minute! so full of shapes is fancy,
But that alone is high-fantastical.
Cur. Will you go hunt, my lord?
Duke. What, Curio?
Cur. The hart.
Duke. Why, so I do, the noblest that I have.
0! when mine eyes did see Olivia first,
I thought she purg'd the air of pestilence:
That instant was I turn'd into a hart,
And my desires, like fell and cruel hounds,
Encircled pursuit me.—How now! what news from her?

Enter Valentine.

Val. So please my lord, I might not be admitted,
But from her handmaid do return this answer:—
The element itself, till seven years' heat,
Shall not behold her face at ample view;
But, like a cloisteress, she will veiled walk,
And water once a day her chamber round
With eye-offending brine: all this, to season
A brother's dead love, which she would keep fresh
And lasting in her sad remembrance.

Duke. 0! she that hath a heart of that fine frame,

To pay this debt of love but to a brother,
How will she love, when the rich golden shaft
Hath kill'd the flock of all affections else
That live in her: when liver, brain, and heart,
These sovereign thrones, are all supplied, and fill'd,
(He sweet perfections) with one self king.—
Away, before me to sweet beds of flowers;
Love-thoughts lie rich, when canopied with bowers.

[Exeunt

SCENE II.—The Sea-coast.

Enter Viola, Captain, and Sailors.

Vio. What country, friends, is this?
Cap. This is Illyria, lady Viola. And what should I do in Illyria?
My brother he is in Elysium.
Perchance, he is not drown'd:—what think you, sailors?
Cap. It is perchance that you yourself were sav'd.
Vio. O, my poor brother! and so, perchance, may he be.
Cap. True, madam: and, to comfort you with chance
Assure yourself, after our ship did split,
When you, and those poor number saved with you,
Hung on our driving boat, I saw your brother,
Most provident in peril, bind himself
( Courage and hope both teaching him the practice)
To a strong mast, that lived upon the sea;
Whereby, like Arian on the dolphin's back,
I saw him hold acquaintance with the waves
So long as I could see.

Vio. For saying so there's gold.
Mine own escape unfoldeth to my hope,
Whereto thy speech serves for authority,
The like of him. Know'st thou this country?
Cap. Ay, madam, well; for I was bred and born,
Not three hours' travel from this very place.
Vio. Who governs here?
Cap. A noble duke, in nature

As in name.

1 Musicians attending: in f. e. 2 The old copies read: sound; Pope made the change. 3 Not in f. e. 4 Value. 5 My thoughts execrate poison to my death. —Daniel's Delia," 1562.
Vio. What is his name?

Cap. Orsino.

Vio. Orsino! I have heard my father name him: He was a bachelor then.

Cap. And so is now, or so was very late;
For but a month ago I went from hence,
And then 't was fresh in murmur, (as, you know,
What great ones do the less will prattle of)
That he did seek the love of fair Olivia.

Vio. What's she?

Cap. A virtuous maid, the daughter of a count
That died some twelvemonth since; then leaving her
In the protection of his son, her brother,
Who shortly also died: for whose dear love,
They say, she hath abjur'd the company,
And sight1 of men.

Vio. O! that I serv'd that lady,
And might not be delivered to the world,
Till I had made mine own occasion mellow,
What my estate is.

Cap. That were hard to compass,
Because she will admit no kind of suit,
No, not the duke's.

Vio. There is a fair behaviour in thee, captain,
And though that nature with a beauteous wall
Doth oft close in pollution, yet of thee
I will believe, thou hast a mind that suits
With this thy fair and outward character.
I pray thee, (and I'll pay thee bounteously)
Conceal me what I am, and be my friend
For such disguise as haply shall become
The form of my intent. I'll serve this duke:
Thou shalt present me as an eunuch to him.
It may be worth thy pains; for I can sing,
And speak to him in many sorts of music,
That will allow me very worth his service.
What else may hap to time I will commit;
Only, shape thou thy silence to my wit.

Cap. Be you his eunuch, and your mute I'll be:
When my tongue blazes, then let mine eyes not see.

Vio. I thank thee. Load me on. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—A Room in OLIVIA's House.

Enter Sir TOBY BELCH, and MARIA.

Sir To. What a plague means my niece, to take the death of her brother thus? I am sure care's an enemy to life.

Mar. By my troth, sir Toby, you must come in earlier o' nights: your cousin, my lady, takes great exceptions to your ill hours.

Sir To. Why, let her exempt before excepted.

Mar. Ay, but you must confine yourself within the modest limits of order.

Sir To. Confine? I'll confine myself no fitter than I am. These clothes are good enough to drink in, and so be these boots too: an they be not, let them hang themselves in their own straps.

Mar. That quaffing and drinking will undo you: I heard my lady talk of it yesterday, and of a foolish knight, that you brought in one night here to be her wooer.

Sir To. Who? Sir Andrew Ague-check?

Mar. Ay, he.

Sir To. He's as tall a man as any's in Illyria.

Mar. What's that to the purpose?

Sir To. Why, he has three thousand ducats a year.

Mar. Ay, but he'll have but a year in all these ducats: he's a very fool, and a prodigal.

Sir To. Fie, that you'll say so! he plays o' the viol-de-gamboys, and speaks three or four languages word for word without book, and hath all the good gifts of nature.

Mar. He hath, indeed,—all most natural; for, besides that he's a fool, he's a great quarreller; and, but that he hath the gift of a coward to alay the gust he hath in quarrelling, 'tis thought among the prudent he would quickly have the gift of a grave.

Sir To. By this hand, they are soundrels, and substracters that say so of him. Who are they?

Mar. They that add, moreover, he's drunk nightly in your company.

Sir To. With drinking healths to my niece. I'll drink to her, as long as there is a passage in my throat, and drink in Illyria. He's a coward, and a coistrel,2 that will not drink to my niece, till his brains turn o' the toe like a parish-top.3 What, wench! Castigliano vulgo,4 for here comes Sir Andrew Ague-face.

Enter Sir ANDREW AGUE-CHEEK.

Sir And. Sir Toby Belch! how now, sir Toby Belch?5 Sir To. Sweet sir Andrew.

Sir And. Bless you, fair shrew.

Mar. And you too, sir.

Sir To. Acceot, sir Andrew, acceot.

Sir And. What's that?

Sir To. My niece's chamber-maid.

Sir And. Good mistresses Acceot, I desire better acquaintance.

Mar. My name is Mary, sir.

Sir And. Good mistresses Mary Acceot,—

Sir To. You mistake, knight: acceot is front her, board her, woo her, assail her.

Sir And. By my troth, I would not undertake her in this company. Is that the meaning of acceot?

Mar. Fare you well, gentlemen.

Sir To. An thou let her's part so, sir Andrew, would thou mights' never draw sword again!

Sir And. An you part so, mistresses, I would I might never draw sword again. Fair lady, do you think you have fools in hand?

Mar. Sir, I have not you by the hand.

Sir And. Marry, but you shall have here's my hand.

Mar. Now, sir, thought is free. I pray you, bring your hand to the buttery-bar, and let it drink.

Sir And. Wherefore, sweet heart? what's your metaphor?

Mar. It's dry, sir.

Sir And. Why, I think so: I am not such an ass, but I can keep my hand dry. But what's your jest?

Mar. A dry jest, sir.

Sir And. Are you full of them?

Mar. Ay, sir; I have them at my fingers' ends: marry, now I let go your hand, I am barren. [Exit MARIA]

Sir To. O knight! thou lack'st a cup of canary
When did I see thee so put down?

Sir And. Never in your life, I think; unless you see canary put me down. Methinks, sometimes I have no more wit than a Christian, or an ordinary man has; but I am a great eater of beef, and, I believe, that does harm to my wit.

Sir To. No question.

Sir And. An I thought that, I'd forewear it. I'll ride home to-morrow, sir Toby.

---

1 Old eds.: right, and company. 2 Fine, brave. 3 From berzel, a mongrel kind of hawk. 4 A large top was formerly kept in parishes or towns, for the use of the public. 5 Sir Toby's mistake, says Verplanck, for colic—Put on a grave face. 6 This word is not in f.o. 7 That was considered a sign of debility.
TWELFTH-NIGHT: OR, WHAT YOU WILL.

Sir To. Pourquoi, my dear knight?

Sir And. What is pourquoi? do or not do? I would have bestowed that time in the tongues, that I have a fencing, dancing, and bear-baiting. O, had I but allowed the arts!

Sir To. Then hadst thou an excellent head of hair.

Sir And. Why, would that have mended my hair?

Sir To. The past question; for, thou seest, it will not be by nature.

Sir And. But it becomes me well enough, does't not?

Sir To. Excellent: it hangs like flax on a distaff, and I hope to see a housewife take thee between her legs, and spin it off.

Sir And. 'Faith, I'll home to-morrow, Sir Toby: your niece will not be seen; or, if she be, it's four to one she'll none of me. The count himself, here hard by, won her.

Sir To. She'll none o' the count: she'll not match there degree, neither in estate, years, nor wit; I have heard her swear it. Tut, there's life in 't, man.

Sir And. I'll stay a month longer. I am a fellow of the strongest mind in the world: I delight in masques and revels sometimes altogether.

Sir To. Art thou good at those kick-shaws, knight?

Sir And. As any man in Illyria, whatsoever he be, under the degree of my betters: and yet, I will not come over with an old man.

Sir To. What is thy excellence in a galliard, knight?

Sir And. 'Faith, I can cut a caper.

Sir To. And I can cut the mutton to 't.

Sir And. And, I think, I have the back-trick, simply as strong as any man in Illyria. [Dances fantastically.] Wherefore are these things hid? wherefore have these gifts a curtain before them? are they like to a dark dust, like Mistress Malts's picture? why dost thou get to church in a galliard, and come home in a trance? My very walk should be a jig; I would see as much as make water, but in a sink-a-space. What dost thou mean? is it a world to hide virtues in? I think, by the excellent constitution of thy leg, it was formed under the star of a galliard.

Sir And. Ay, 'tis strong, and it does indifferent well in a musco-red stock. Shall we set about some revels?

Sir To. What shall we do else? were we not born with Taurus?

Sir And. Taurus? that's sides and heart.

Sir To. No, sir, it is legs and thighs. Let me see the caper. [Sir AND. dances again.] Ha! higher: ska! ska! — excellent!

SCENE IV.—A Room in the Duke's Palace.

Enter VALENTINE, and VIOLA in man's attire.

Val. If the duke continue these favours towards you, Cesario, you are like to be much advanced: he hath loved you but three days, and already you are no stranger.

Vi. You either fear his humour or my negligence, or you call in question the continuance of his love.

Val. Inconstant, sir, in his favours?

Vi. No, believe me.

Enter Duke, CURIO, and Attendants.

Duc. I thank you. Here comes the count.

Cur. Who saw Cesario, ho?

Duc. On your attendance, my lord; here.

Cur. Stand you awhile afoot. [Curio, &c. retire.]

Cesario.

Thou know'st all no less but all. I have uncles'd
To thee the book even of my secret soul;
Therefore, good youth, address thy gait unto her:
Be not denied access, stand at her doors,
And tell them, there thy fixed foot shall grow,
Till thou have audience.

Vio. Sure, my noble lord,
If she be so abandon'd to her sorrow,
As it is spoke, she never will admit me.

Duc. Be clamorous, and leap all civil bounds,
Rather than make unprompted return.

Vio. Say I do speak with her, my lord, what then?

Duc. O! then unfold the passion of my love;
Surprise her with discourse of my dear faith:
It shall become thee well to act my woes;
She will attend it better in thy youth,
Than in a mimic of more grave aspect.

Vio. I think not so, my lord.

Duc. Dear lad, believe it,
For they shall yet belie thy happy years,
That say thou art a man: Diana's lip
Is not more smooth, and rubious; thy small pipe
As is the maiden's organ, shrill, and sound,
And all is semblative a woman's part.
I know, thou constellation is right apt
For this affair.—Some four, or five, attend him;
All, if you will, for I myself am best,
When least in company—Prosper well in this,
And thou shalt live as freely as thy lord
To call his fortunes thine.

Vio. I'll do my best,
To woo your lady: [Aside.] yet, O, [barful] strife!
Whoe'er I woo, myself would be his wife. [Exeunt.

SCENE V.—A Room in OLIVIA's House.

Enter MARIA, and CLOWN.

Mar. Nay; either tell me where thou hast been, or I will not open my lips so wide as a bristle may enter in way of thy excuse. My lady will hang thee for thy absence.

Clo. Let her hang me: he that is well hanged in this world needs to fear no colours.

Mar. Make that good.

Clo. He shall see none to fear.

Mar. A good lenient answer. I can tell thee where that saying was born; of, I fear no colours.

Clo. Where, good Mistress Mary?

Mar. In the wars: and that may you be bold to say in your foole.

Clo. Well, God give them wisdom, that have it; and those that are fools, let them use their talents.

Mar. Yet you will be hanged for being so long absent: or, to be turned away, is not that as good as a hugging to you?

Clo. Many a good hanging prevents a bad marriage; and for turning away, let summer bear it out.

Mar. You are resolute, then?

Clo. Not so neither; but I am resolved on two points. [Bar. That, if one break, the other will hold; or, if both break, your gaskins fall.]

Clo. Apt, in good faith; very apt. Well, go thy way: if sir Toby would leave drinking, thou wert as witty a piece of Eve's flesh as any in Illyria.

Mar. Peace, you rogue, no more o' that. Here comes my lady: make your excuse wisely; you were best.

[Exit.]
Enter Olivia, and Malvolio.

Clo. Wit, an't be thy will, put me into good fooling! Those wise, that think they have thee, do very oft prove fools; and, I that am sure I lack thee, may pass for a wise man: for what says Quinapalus? Better a witty fool, than a foolish wit.—God bless thee, lady!

Oli. Take the fool away.

Clo. Do you not hear, fellows? Take away the lady.

Oli. Go to, you're a dry fool; I'll no more of you: besides, you grow dishonest.

Clo. Two faults, madonna, that drink and good counsel will amend: to give the dry fool drink, then is the fool not dry; bid the dishonest man mend himself, if he mend, he is no longer dishonest: if he cannot, let the betcher mend him. Any thing that's mended is but patched: virtue that transgresses is but patched with sin; and sin that amends is but patched with virtue. If that this simple syllogism will serve, so; if it will not, what remedy? As there is no true cuckold but calamity, so beauty's a flower. —The lady bade take away the fool; therefore, I say again, take her away.

Oli. Sir, I bade them take you away.

Clo. Misprision in the highest degree!—Lady, cucullus non facit monachum: that 's as much as to say, I wear not motley in my brain. Good madonna, give me leave to prove you a fool.

Oli. Can you do it?

Clo. Dexterously, good madonna.

Oli. Make your proof.

Clo. I must catechize you for it, madonna. Good my mouse of virtue, answer me.

Oli. Well, sir, for want of other idlenees I 'll bide your proof.

Clo. Good madonna, why mourn'st thou?

Oli. Good fool, for my brother's death.

Clo. I think, his soul is in hell, madonna.

Oli. I know his soul is in heaven, fool.

Clo. The more fool, madonna, to mourn for your brother's soul being in heaven. —Take away the fool, gentleman.

Oli. What think you of this fool, Malvolio? doth he not mend?

Mal. Yes; and shall do, till the pangs of death shake him: infirmity, that decays the wise, doth ever make the better fool.

Clo. God send you, sir, a speedy infirmity, for the better increasing your folly! Sir Toby will be sworn that I am no fox, but he will not pass his word for two-pence that you are no fool.

Oli. How say you to that, Malvolio?

Mal. I marvel your ladyship takes delight in such a barren rascal: I saw him put down the other day with an ordinary fool, that has no more brain than a stone. Look you now, he's out of his guard already: unless you laugh and minister occasion to him, he is gagged. I protest, I take these wise men, that crow so at these set kind of fools, to be no better than the fools' zanies.

Oli. O, you are sick of self-love, Malvolio, and taste with a distempered appetite. To be generous, guiltless, and of free disposition, is to take those things for bird-bolts, that you deem cannon-bullets. There is no slander in an allowed fool, though he do nothing but rail; nor no railing in a known discreet man, though he do nothing but reprove.

Clo. Now, Mercury entend thee with leasing, for thou speakest well of fools.

Re-enter Maria.

Mar. Madam, there is at the gate a young gentle- man much desires to speak with you.

Oli. From the count Orsino, is it?

Mar. I know not, madam: 'tis a fair young man, and well attended.

Oli. Who of my people hold him in delay?

Mar. Sir Toby, madam, your kinsman.

Oli. Fetch him off, I pray you; he speaks nothing but madman. Pie on him! [Exit Maria.] Go you, Malvolio: if it be a suit from the count, I am sick, or not at home; what you will, to dismiss it. [Exit Mal- volio.] Now you see, sir, how your fooling grows old, and people dislike it.

Clo. Thou hast spoke for us, madonna, as if thy eldest son should be a fool, whose skull Jove eran with brains; for here comes one of thy kin, that has a most weak pie mater.

Enter Sir Toby Belch.

Oli. By mine honour, half drunk.—What is he at the gate, cousin?

Sir To. A gentleman.

Oli. A gentleman! What gentleman?

Sir To. 'T is a gentleman here.—A plague o' these pickie-herries!—How now, sot?

Clo. Good sir Toby—

Oli. Cousin, cousin, how have you come so early by this lathargy?

Sir To. Lechery! I defy lechery. There's one at the gate.

Oli. Ay, marry; what is he?

Sir To. Let him be the devil, an he will, I care not give me faith, say I. Well, it's all one. [Exit.]

Oli. What's a drunken man like, fool?

Clo. Like a drown'd man, a fool, and a madman one draught above heat makes him a fool, the seco- nds makes him, and a third drowns him.

Oli. Go thou and seek the coroner, and let him si- m'ly our, for he's in the third degree of drink; he' drownd: go, look after him.

Clo. He is but mad yet, madonna; and the fool shall look to the madman. [Exit Cloes.]

Re-enter Malvolio.

Mal. Madam, yond' young fellow swears he will speak with you. I told him you were sick: he take on him to understand so much, and therefore comes I speak with you. I told him you were asleep: he seem to have a fore-knowledge of that too, and therefore comes to speak with you. What is to be said to him lady? he's fortified against any denial.

Oli. Tell him, he shall not speak with me.

Mal. He has been told so; and he says, he'll stand at your door like a sheriff's post, or be the support to a bench, but he'll speak with you.

Oli. What kind of man is he?

Mal. Why, of man kind.

Oli. What manner of man?

Mal. Of very ill manner: he'll speak with you, wi young or no.

Oli. Of what personage, and years is he?

Mal. Not yet old enough for a man, nor young enough for a boy; as a squab1 is before 'tis a peacock or a codling when 'tis almost an apple: 'tis with his e'en standing water, between boy and man. He very well-favoured, and he speaks very shrivishly one would think, his mother's milk were scarce out o' him.

TWELFTH-NIGHT: OR, WHAT YOU WILL.

Scene V.

Re-enter Maria.

Oli. Give me my veil: come, throw it o'er my face.

_i'll once more hear Orsino's embassy._

Enter Viola.

Vio. The honourable lady of the house, who is she?

Oli. Speak to me; I shall answer for her. Your will?

Vio. Most radiant, exquisite, and unmatchable beauty—I pray you, tell me, if this be the lady of the house, for I never saw her: I would be loath to cast even a speck of scorn on her: besides, it is excellently well pleased, I have taken great pains to con it. Good women, let me sustain no scorn; I am very compellable to the least sinister usage.

Oli. Whence came you, sir?

Vio. I can say little more than I have studied, and this question's out of my part. Good gentle one, give me modest assurance if you be the lady of the house, as I may proceed in my speech.

Oli. Are you a comedian?

Vio. No, my profound heart; and yet, by the very force of malice I swear, I am not that I play. Are you the lady of the house?

Oli. If I do not usurp myself, I am.

Vio. Most certain, if you are she, you do usurp yourself; for what is yours to bestow, is not yours to receive. But this is from my commission. I will on with my speech in your praise, and then show you the best of my message.

Oli. Come to what is important in't: I forgive you the praise.

Vio. Alas! I took great pains to study it, and 'tis past recall.

Oli. It is the more like to be feigned: I pray you, keep it in. I heard, you were saucy at my gates, and showed your approbation, rather to wonder at you than to hear you. If you be not mad, be gone; if you have been but brief; 'tis not that time of moon with me to make one in so skipping a dialogue.

Mist. Will you hoist sail, sir? here lies your way.

Vio. No, good swabber; I am to hull here a little hauger—Some mollification for your giant's, sweet lady. Tell me your mind: I am a messenger.

Oli. Sure, you have some hideous matter to deliver, with the courtesy of it is so fearful. Speak your piece.

Vio. It alone concerns your ear. I bring no overcharge of war, no tax of homage. I hold the olive in my hand; my words are as full of peace as matter.

Oli. Yet you began rudely. What are you? what would you?

Vio. The rudeness that hath appear'd in me, have I learnt from my entertainment. What I am, and what I would, are as secret as maidenhead: to your own divinity; to any other's, profanation.

Oli. Give us the place alone. We will hear this divinity. [Exit Maria.] Now, sir; what is your letter?

Vio. Most sweet lady,—

Oli. A comfortable doctrine, and much may be said on where lies your text?

Vio. In Orsino's bosom.

Oli. Is his bosom! In what chapter of his bosom?

Vio. To answer by the method, in the first of his heart.

Oli. O! I have read it: it is hereby. Have you no other to say?

Vio. Good madam, let me see your face.

Oli. Have you any commissary from your lord to negotiate with my face? you are now out of your text: but we will draw the curtain, and show you the picture. Look you, sir; such a one I am at this present: 'tis not well done? [Unveiling.]

Vio. Excellent done, if God did all.

Oli. 'Tis in grain, sir: 'twill endure wind and weather.

Vio. 'Tis beauty truly blunt, whose red and white Nature's own sweet and cunning hand laid on. Lady, you are the cruellest she alive, if you will lead these graces to the grave, and leave the world no copy.

Oli. O! sir, I will not be so hard-hearted. I will give out divers schedules of my beauty: it shall be inventoried, and every particle, and utensil, labelled to my will; an, item, two tops indifferently red; item, two grey eyes with lids to them; item, one neck, one chin, and so forth. Were you sent hither to praise me?

Vio. I see what you are: you are too proud; but, if you were the devil, you are fair. My lord and master loves you: O! such love should be but recompen'd, though you were crown'd Not the superlative of beauty!

Oli. How does he love me?

Vio. With adorations, fertile tears, with groans that thunder love, with sighs of fire.

Oli. Your lord does know my mind; I cannot love him:

Yet suppose him virtuous, know him noble, Of great estate, of fresh and stainless youth; In voices well divulg'd, free, learn'd, and valiant, And in dimension, and the shape of nature, A gracious person; but yet I cannot love him. He might have took his answer long ago.

Vio. If I did love you in my master's flame, With such a suffering, such a deadly life, In your denial I would find no sense: I would not understand it.

Oli. Why, what would you?

Vio. Make me a willow cabin at your gate, And call upon my soul within the house; Write loyal cantons of contemned love, And sing them loud even in the dead of night; Halloo your name to the reverberate hills, And make thebabbling gossip of the air Cry out, Olivia! O! you should not rest Between the elements of air and earth, But you should pity me.

Oli. You might do much. What is your parentage?

Vio. Above your fortunes, yet my state is well:

I am a gentleman.

Oli. Get you to your lord: I cannot love him. Let him send no more, Unless, perchance, you come to me again, To tell me how he takes it. Fare you well: I thank you for your pains. Spend this for me.

[Offering her purse.*

Vio. I am no fool'd post, lady; keep your purse:

My master, not myself, lacks recompen'se,

Love make his heart of flint that you shall love,

And let your fervour, like my master's, be

Plac'd in contempt! Farewell, fair cruelty. [Exit.]

Oli. What is your parentage?

"Above my fortunes, yet my state is well:

I am a gentleman."—I'll be sworn thou art:

Thy tongue, thy face, thy limbs, actions, and spirit,

Do give thee five-fold blazon.—Not too fast.—soft! soft!

TWELFTH-NIGHT: OR, WHAT YOU WILL.

ACT II.

UNLESS THE MASTER WERE THE MAN.—HOW NOW?
Even so quickly may one catch the plague.
Methinks, I feel this youth's perfections,
With an invisible and subtle stealth,
To creep in at mine eyes. Well, let it be.—
What, ho! Malvolio.—

Mal. Here, madam, at your service.

Oli. Run, after that same peevish messenger,
The county's man: he left this ring behind him,
Would I, or not: tell him, I'll none of it.
Desire him not to flatter with his lord,
Nor hold him up with hopes: I am not for him.
If that the youth will come this way to-morrow,
I'll give him reasons for't. Hee thee, Malvolio.

Mal. Madam, I will.

Exit.

Oli. If I do know not what, and fear to find
Mine eye too great a flatterer for my mind.
Fare you well; this force: ourselves we do not owe;
What is decreed must be, and be this so!

ACT II.

SCENE I.—The Sea-coast.

Enter Antonio and Sebastian.

Ant. Will you stay no longer? nor will you not, that I go with you?

Seb. By your patience, no. My stars shine darkly over me: the malignity of my fate might, perhaps, deter temper your; therefore, I shall crave of you your leave, that I may bear my evils alone. It were a bad recompense for your love, to lay any of them on you.

Ant. Let me yet know of you, whether you are bound.

Seb. No, 'sooth, sir. My determinate voyage is mere extravagancy; but I perceive in you so excellent a touch of modesty, that you will not extort from me what I am willing to keep in: therefore, it charges me in manners the rather to express myself. You must know of me then, Antonio, my name is Sebastian, which I must call Rodrigo. My father was that Sebastian of Messaline, whom, I know, you have heard of: he left behind him, myself, and a sister, both born in an hour. If the heavens had been pleased, would we had so ended! but, you, sir, altered that; for some hour before you took me from the breach of the sea was my sister drowned.

Ant. Alas, the day!

Seb. A lady, sir, though it was said she much resembled me, was yet of many accounted beautiful: but, though I could not with self-estimation wander so far to believe that: yet thus far I will boldly publish her—she bore a mind that envy could not but call fair. She is drowned already, sir, with salt water, though I seem to drown her remembrance again with more.

Ant. Pardon me, sir, your bad entertainment.

Seb. O, good Antonio! forgive me your trouble.

Ant. If you will not murder me for love, let me be your servant.

Seb. If you will not undo what you have done, that is, kill him whom you have recovered, desire it not. Fare ye well at once: my bosom is full of kindness; and I yet as near the manners of my mother, that upon the least occasion more, mine eyes will tell tales of me. I am bound to the count Orinno's court: farewells.

Ant. The gentleness of all the gods go with thee! I have many enemies in Orinno's court, else would I very shortly see thee there; but, come what may, I do adore thee so, that danger shall seem sport, and I will go.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—A Street.

Enter Viola; Malvolio following.

Mal. Were not you even now with the countess Olivia?

Viola. Even now, sir: on a moderate pace I have since arrived but hither.

Mal. She returns this ring to you, sir: you might have saved me my pains, to have taken it away yourself. She adds, moreover, that you should put your lord into a desperate assurance she will none of him. And one thing more; that you be never so hardy to come again in his affairs, unless it be to report your lord's taking of this: receive it so.

Mal. Come, sir; you peevishly threw it to her, and her will is, it should so be returned: if it be worth stooping for, there it lies in your eye; if not, be it his that finds it.

[Exit.

Viola. I left no ring with her: what means this lady? Fortune forbid my outside have not charm'd her! She made good view of me; indeed, so much, that, methought, her eyes had lost her tongue, for she did speak in starts distractedly. She loves me, sure: the cunning of her passion invites me in this churlish messenger. None of my lord's ring? why he sent her none. I am the man:—if it be so, as 'tis, poor lady, she were better love a dream. Disguise, I see, thou art a wickedness, whereon the pregnant enemy does much. How easy is it, for the proper false in women's waken hearts to set their forms! Alas! for so much we are made, such as we be. How will this fadge? My master loves her dearly; and I, poor monster, fond as much on him; and she, mistaken, seems to dote on me. What will become of this? As I am man, my state is desperate for my master's love; as I am woman, now, alas the day! What thriftless sighs shall poor Olivia breathe! O time! thou must untangle this, not I; it is too hard a knot for me to untie.

SCENE III.—A Room in Olivia's House.

Enter Sir Toby Belch, and Sir Andrew Ague-cheek.

Sir Toby. Approach, sir Andrew: not to be a bed after midnight is to be up betimes, and diluculo surgere, thou know'st.—

Sir And. Nay, by my troth, I know not; but I know, to be up late, is to be up late.

Sir Toby. A false conclusion: I hate it as an unskillful can. To be up after midnight, and to go to bed, is early; so that, to go to bed after midnight, is to go to bed betimes. Does not our life consist of the four elements?

1 Foolish. 2 Own. 3 with much estimate. wonder over far believes that: in s. 4 in s. 5 Self. 6 diluculo surgere: Hebrew word set. As edges quoted in Lilli's Latin Grammar.
TWELFTH-NIGHT: OR, WHAT YOU WILL.

Sir And. 'Faith, so they say; but, I think, it rather goes to eating and drinking.

Sir To. Thou art a scholar; let us therefore eat and drink—Marian, I say!—a stoop of wine!

Enter Clown.

Sir And. Here comes the fool, 1 faith.

Clo. How now, my hearts! Did you never see the picture of we three? 2

Sir To. Welcome, ass. Now let's have a catch.

Sir And. By my troth, the fool has an excellent head. 3 I had rather forty shilling I had such a one; and to sweep a breath to sing, as the fool has. In such, thou wert in my good graces last night, when thou spokst of Pigmegromitus, of the Vapians passing the equinoctial of Quenuhis: 't was very good, faith. I sent thee sixpence for thy lemon; hast it?

Clo. I did impetiseth thy gratuity; for Malvolio's nose is no whipstock: my lady has a white hand, and the Myrmidons are no bottle-ale houses.

Sir And. Excellent! Why this is the best fooling, when all is done. Now, a song.

Sir To. Come on: there's sixpence for you; let's have a song.

Sir And. There's a testril of me, too: if one knight give away sixpence so will I give another: go, to a song. 4

Clo. Would you have a love-song, or a song of good life?

Sir To. A love-song, a love-song.

Sir And. Ay, ay; I care not for good life.

Clo. O, mistress mine! where are you roaming? O! stay, for here's your true love's coming; That can sing both high and low; Trium far forth, pretty sweeting; Journeys end in lovers' meeting; Every wise man's son doth know.

Sir And. Excellent good, 1 faith.

Sir To. Good, good.

Clo. What is love? 't is not hereafter; Present mirth hath present laughter; What's to come is still unsure: In delay there lies no plenty; Then come kiss me, sweet and twenty; Youth's a stuff will not endure.

Sir And. A mellifluous voice, as I am true knight.

Sir To. A contagious breath.

Sir And. Very sweet and contagious, 1 faith.

Sir To. To hear by the nose, it is dulce in contum. But shall we make the wilkin dance indeed? Shall we reuse the night-owl in a catch, that will draw three souls out of one weaver? shall we do that?

Sir And. An you love me, let's do't: I am a dog at a catch.

Clo. By 'r lady, sir, and some dogs will catch well.

Sir And. Most certain. Let our catch be, 'Thou know.' 13

Clo. 'Hold thy peace, thou know,' 14 knight? I shall be constrain'd in't to call the knave, knight.

Sir And. 'Tis not the first time I have constrain'd thee to call me knave. Begin, fool: it begins, 'Hold thy peace.'

Clo. I shall never begin, if I hold my peace.

Sir And. Good 1 faith. Come, begin. [They sing a catch

Enter MARIA.

Mar. What a catterwauling do you keep here! If my lady have not called up her steward, Malvolio, and bid him turn you out of doors, never trust me.

Sir To. My lady's a Catalian: we are politicians; Malvolio's a Peg-a-Ramsey, 5 and 'Three merry men be we.' 6 Am not I consanguineous? am I not of her blood? Tilly-valley, lady! 7 There dwelt a man in Babylon, lady, lady! 8

[Singing.

Clo. Beehwre me, the knight's in admirable footing.

Sir And. Ay, he does well enough, if he be disposed, and so do I too: he does it with a better grace, but I do it more natural.

Sir To. 'O! the twelfth day of December.'—

[Singing.

Mar. For the love o' God, peace!

Enter MALVOLIO.

Mal. My masters, are you mad? or what are you? Have you no wit, manners, nor honesty, but to guggle like tinkers at this time of night? Do ye make an alehouse of my lady's house, that ye squeak out your coxiers' catches without any mitigation or remorse of voice? Is there no respect of place, persons, nor time, in you?

Sir To. We did keep time, sir, in our catches.

Snick up. 9

Mal. Sir Toby, I must be round with you. My lady bade me tell you, that though she harbours you as her kineman, she's nothing allied to your disorders. If you can separate yourself and your misdemeanours, you are welcome to the house; if not, an it would please you to take leave of her, she is very willing to bid you farewell.

Sir To. Farewell, dear heart, since I must needs be gone. 10

[Singing. 11

Mar. Nay, good sir Toby.

Clo. 'His eyes do show his days are almost done.'

[Singing. 12

Mal. Is't even so?

Sir To. But I will never die.

Clo. Sir Toby, there you lie.

Mal. This is much credit to you.

Sir To. Shall I bid him go? 13

Clo. What an if you do? 14

Sir To. Shall I bid him go, and spare not? 15

Clo. 'O! no, no, no, you dare not.'

Sir To. Out o' tane! 16—Sir, ye lie. Art any more than a steward? Dost thou think, because thou art virtuous, there shall be no more cakes and ale? 17

Clo. Yes, by saint Anne; and ginger shall be hot 1 i' the mouth too.

Sir To. Thou 'rt i' the right.—Go, sir: rub your chain with crumbs! 18.—A stoop of wine, Maria!

Mal. Mistress Mary, if you prized my lady's favour at anything more than contempt, you would not give means for this uncivil rule: she shall know of it, by this hand.

[Exeunt.

Mar. Go shake your ears.

Sir And. 'T were as good a deed as to drink when a man's a-hungry, to challenge him to the field, and then, to break promise with him, and make a fool of him.

Sir To. Do 't, knight: I'll write thee a challenge, or I'll deliver thy indignation to him by word of mouth.

Mar. Sweet sir Toby, be patient for to-night. Since thou and thy countess was to-day with my lady, she is much out of quiet. For monsieur Malvolio, let me alone with him: if I do not gull him into a nowary, and make him a common recreant, do not think I have wit enough to lie straight in my bed. I know, I can do it. [him.

Sir To. Possess us, possess us: tell us something of

Mar. Marry, sir, sometimes he is a kind of Puritan.

Sir And. O! if I thought that, I'd beat him like a dog.

Sir To. What! for being a Puritan? thy exquisite reason, dear knight?

Sir And. I have no exquisite reason for 't, but I have reason good enough.

Mar. The devil a Puritan 't he is, or any thing constantly, but a time pleaser; an affected a ass, that cons state without book, and utters it by great swarth: the best persuaded of himself; so crammed, as he thinks, with excellencies, that it is his ground of faith, that all that look on him love him; and on that vice in him will my revenge find notable cause to work.

Sir To. What wilt thou do?

Mar. I will drop in his way some obscure epistles of love; wherein, by the colour of his beard, the shape of his leg, the manner of his gait, the expression of his eye, forehead, and complexion, he shall find himself most feelingly personated. I can write very like my lady, your niece; on a forgotten matter we can hardly make distinction of our hands.

Sir To. Excellent! I smell a device.

Sir And. I have 't in my nose, too.

Sir To. He shall think, by the letter that thou wilt drop, that it comes from my niece, and that she is in love with him.

Mar. My purpose is, indeed, a horse of that colour.

Sir And. And your horse, now, would made him an ass.

Mar. Ass I doubt not.

Sir And. O! 't will be admirable.

Mar. Sport royal, I warrant you: I know, my physic will work with him. I will plant you two, and let the fool make a third, where he shall find the letter: observe his construction of it. For this night, to bed, and dream on the event. Farewell.

Sir To. Good night, Pentheusel.

Sir And. Before me, she's a good wench.

Sir To. She's a beagle, true-bred, and one that adores me: what 't that?

Sir And. I was adored once too.

Sir To. Let's to bed, knight.— Thou hast need send for more money.

Sir And. If I cannot recover your niece, I am a foul way out.

Sir To. Send for money, knight: if thou hast her not i' the end, call me cut.

Sir And. If I do not, never trust me; take it how you will.

Sir To. Come, come: 't ill go burn some sack, 't is too late to go to bed now. Come, knight; come, knight. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—A Room in the Duke's Palace.

Enter Duke, Viola, Curio, and others.

Duke. Give me some music. [Music.]—Now, good morrow, friends.—

Now, good Cesario, but that piece of song,
That old and antique song, we heard last night;
 Methought, it did relieve my passion much,
 More than light airs, and recollected terms,
 Of these most brisk and giddy-paced tunes:—
 Come; beat the verse.

Cur. He is not here, so please your lordship, that should sing it.

Duke. Who was it?

Cur. Feste, the jester, my lord: a fool, that the lady
Olivia's father took much delight in. He is about the house.

Duke. Seek him out, and play the tune the while.

[Exit Curio.—Music again.]

Come hither, boy: if ever thou shalt love, [To Viola.]
In the sweet pangs of it remember me;
For such as I am all true lovers are:
Unstaid and skittish in all motions else,
Save in the constant image of the creature
That is beloved.—How dost thou like this tune?

Vio. It gives a very echo to the seat
Where Love is thron'd.

Duke. Thou dost speak masterly.

My life upon't, young though thou art, thine eye
Hast stay'd upon some favour it that loves;
Hast it not, boy?

Vio. A little, by your favour.

Duke. What kind of woman is it?

Vio. Of your complexion.

Duke. She is not worth these, then. What years i' faith?

Vio. About your years, my lord.

Duke. Too old, by heaven. Let still the woman take
An older than herself; so wears she to him,
So away she level in her husband's heart:
For, boy, however we do praise ourselves,
Our fancies are more giddy and uniform:
More longing, wavering, sooner lost and won,
Than women's are.

Vio. I think it well, my lord.

Duke. Then, let thy love be younger than thyself,
Or thy affection cannot hold the bent;
For women are as roses, whose fair flower,
Being once display'd, doth fall that very hour.

Vio. And so they are; alas! that they are so;
To die, even when they to perfection grow!

Re-enter Curio, and Clown.

Duke. O, fellow! come, the song we had last night.—
Mark it, Cesario; it is old, and plain:
The spinsters and the knitters in the sun,
And the free maids, that weave their thread with bones,
Do use to chant it: it is silly sooth, dailles with the innocence of love,
Like the old age.

Clo. Are you ready, sir?

THE SONG.

Clo. Come away, come away, death,
And in sad Cypress let me be laid;
Fly away, fly away, breath;
I am slain by a fair cruel maid.
My shroud of white, all web with yew
O! prepare it...
My part of death no one so true
Did share it.
Not a flower, not a flower sweet,
On my black coffin let there be strown;
TWELFTH-NIGHT: OR, WHAT YOU WILL.

Act V.

Not a friend, not a friend greet
My poor corpse, where my bones shall be thrown:
A thousand thousand sighs to save,
Lay me, O! where
Sad true lover never find my grave,
To sleep there.

Duke. I'll pay thy pleasure then.
Clo. Truly, sir, and pleasure will be paid, one time or another.
Duke. I give thee now leave to leave me.
Clo. Now, the melancholy god protect thee, and the tailor make thy doublet of changeable taffeta, for thy mind is a very opal!—I would have men of such constancy put to sea, that their business might be everything, and their intent everywhere; for that's it, that always makes a good voyage of nothing.—Farewell.

[Exit Clown.]

Duke. Let all the rest give place.—[Exit Curio and Attendants.]

Once more, Cesario,
Get thee to yond' same sovereign cruelty:
Tell her, my love, more noble than the world,
Prizes not quantity of dirty lands:
The parts that fortune hath bestow'd upon her,
Tell her, I hold as giddily as fortune;
But 'tis that miracle, and queen of gems,
That assure pranks her in, attracts my soul.
Vio. But, if she cannot love you, sir?
Duke. I cannot be so answer'd.

Vio. Sooth, but you must.
Say, that some lady, as perhaps there is,
Hath for your love as great a pang of heart
As you have for Olivia: you cannot love her;
You tell her so; must she not then be answer'd?
Duke. There is no woman's side
Can hide the beating of so strong a passion
As love doth give my heart; no woman's heart
So big to hold so much: they lack retention.
Alas! their love may be call'd appetite,
No motion of the liver, but the palate,
That suffers surfeit, collymony, and revolt;
But mine is all as hungry as the sea,
And can digest as much. Make no compare
Between that love a woman can bear me,
And that I owe Olivia.

Vio. Ay, but I know,—

Duke. What dost thou know?

Vio. Too well what love women to men may owe:
In faith, they are as true of heart as we.
My father had a daughter lov'd a man,
As it might be, perhaps, were I a woman,
I should your lordship.

Duke. And what's her history?

Vio. A blank, my lord. She never told her love,—
But let conceit, like a worm, eat in the bud,
Feed on her damask cheek: she pin'd in thought:
And, with a green and yellow melancholy,
She sat like patience on a monument,
Sailing at grief. Was not this love, indeed?
We men may say more, swear more; but, indeed,
Our shows are more than will, for still we prove
Mush in our vows, but little in our love.

Duke. But died thy sister of her love, my boy?
Vio. I am all the daughters of my father's house, had all the brothers too; and yet I know not.—

Duke. Shall I to this lady?
Vio. Ay, that's the theme.

Enter Sir Toby Belch, Sir Andrew Ague-cheek, and Fabian.

Sir To. Come thy ways, signior Fabian. Fab. Nay, I'll come: if I lose a scruple of this sport, let me be boiled to death with melancholy. Sir To. Wouldst thou not be glad to have the niggarly, rascally sheep-biter come by some notable shame? Fab. I would exult, man: you know, he brought me out of favour with my lady about a bear-baiting here. Sir To. To anger him, we'll have the bear again, and we will fool him black and blue;—shall we not, sir Andrew?

Sir And. An we do not, it is pity of our lives.

Enter Maria.

Sir To. Here comes the little Villain.—How now, m'ny metal of India?" Maria. Get ye all three into the box-tree. Malvolio's coming down this walk: he has been yonder i' the sun, practising behaviour to his own shadow, this half hour. Observe him, for the love of mockery; for, I know, this letter will make a contemptible idiot of him. Close, in the name of jesting! [The men hide themselves.] Lie thou there; [drops a letter] for here comes the trout that must be caught with tickling. [Exit Maria.]

Enter Malvolio.

Mal. 'Tis but fortune; all is fortune. Maria once told me, she did affect me; and I have heard herself come thus near, that, should she fancy, it should be one of my complexion. Besides, she uses me with a more exalted respect than any one else that follows her. What should I think on't?
Sir To. Here's an over-weening rogue! Fab. O, peace! Contemplation makes a rare turkey-cock of him: how he jets under his advanced plumes!

Sir And. 'Slight, I could so beat the rogue.—

Sir To. Peace! I say.
Mal. To be count Malvolio.—
Sir To. Ah, rogue!
Mal. Sir And. Pistol him, pistol him.
Sir To. Peace! peace!
Mal. There is example for 't: the lady of the Strachy married the yeoman of the wardrobe.

Sir And. Fie on him, Jezebel.

Fab. O, peace! now he's deep in: look, how imagination blows him.
Mal. Having been three months married to her, sitting in my state,—

Sir To. O, for a stone bow* to hit him in the eye!
Mal. Calling my officers about me, in my branched velvet gown, having come from a day-bed, where I have left Olivia sleeping.

Sir To. Fire and brimstone!

Fab. O, peace! peace! peace!
Mal. And then to have the honour* of state; and after a demure travel of regard,—telling them, I know my place, as I would they should do theirs,—to ask for my kinsman Toby—
Sir To. Bolts and shackles!

Fab. O, peace, peace, peace! now, now.

Mal. Seven of my people, with an obedient state, make out for him. I frown the while; and, perchance, wind up my watch, or play with my—some rich jewel. Toby approaches; court'sie there to me.
Sir To. Shall this fellow live?

Fab. Though our silence be drawn from us by thy ears, yet peace!

Mal. I extend my hand to him thus, quenching my familiar smile with an austere regard of control.

Sir To. And does not Toby take you a blow on the lips then?

Mal. Saying, "Cousin Toby, my fortunes, having cast me on your niece, give me this prerogative of speech."

Sir To. What, what?

Mal. "You must amend your drunkenness."

Sir To. Out, scab!

Fab. Nay, patience, or we break the sinews of our plot.

Mal. "Besides, you waste the treasure of your time with a foolish knight."

Sir And. That's me, I warrant you.

Mal. "One sir Andrew."

Sir And. I knew 't was I; for many do call me fool.

Mal. [Reading.] What employment have we here?

Fab. Now is the woodcock near the gin.

Sir To. O, peace! and the spirit of humour intimate reading aloud to him!

Mal. [Reading.] By my life, this is my lady's hand! these be her very C's, her U's, and her T's; and thus makes she her great P's. It is, in contempt of question, her hand.

Sir And. Her C's, her U's, and her T's: Why that's Mal. [Reading.] "To the unknown beloved, this, and my good wishes;" her very phrases! — By your leave, wax — Soft! — and the impressure her Lucrece, with which she uses to seal: it is my lady. To whom should this be?

Fab. This wins him, liver and all.

Mal. [Reading.] "Jove knows, I love; But who? Lips do not move: No man must know."

"No man must know." — What follows? the number's altered. — "No man must know." — if this should be thee, Malvolio?

Sir To. Marry, hang thee, brock!*

Mal. [Reading.] "I may command, where I adore; But silence, like a Lucrece knife, With bloodless stroke my heart doth gore: M. O, A, I, doth sway my life!"

Fab. A fustian riddle.

Sir To. Excellent wench, say I.

Mal. "M, O, A, I, doth sway my life." — Nay, but, first, let me see, — let me see, — let me see.

Fab. What a dish of poison has she dressed him! — Sir To. And with what wing the stannymel checks at it!

Mal. "I may command where I adore." Why, she may command me: I serve her; she is my lady. Why, this is evident to any formal capacity. There is no obstruction in this. — And the end, — what should that alphabetical position portend? if I could make that resemble something in me, — Softly! — M, O, A, I —

Sir To. O! ay, make up that. He is now at a cold scent.

Fab. Sowter will cry upon 't, for all this, though it be not as rank as a fox.

Fab. Did not I say, he would work it out? the curse is excellent at faults.

Mal. M., — But then there is no consonancy in the sequel; that suffers under probation: A should follow, but O does.

Fab. And O! shall end, I hope.

Sir To. Ay, or I'll edge him, and make him cry, O! Mal. And then I comes behind.

Fab. Ay, an you had any eye behind you, you might see more detriment at your heels, than fortunes before you.

Mal. M., O, A, I — this simulation is not as the former; — and yet, to crush this a little, it would bow to me, for every one of these letters are in my name. Soft! here follows prose. — [Reading.] "If this fall into thy hand, revolve. In my stars I am above thee; but be not afraid of greatness: some are born great, some achieve greatness, and some have greatness thrust upon them. Thy fates open their hands; let thy blood and spirit embrace them. And, to inure thyself to what thou art like to be, cast thy humble slough, and appear fresh. Be opposite with a kinman, surely with servants: let thy tongue tang arguments of state: put thyself into the trick of singularity. She thus advises thee, that sighs for thee. Remember who commended thy yellow stockings, and wished to see thee ever cross-gartered: I say, remember. Go to, thou art made, if thou dostest to be so; if not, let me see thee a steward still, the fellow of servants, and not worthy to touch fortune's fingers. Farewell. She that would alter services with thee, — The fortunate-unhappy." Day-light and champaign discovers not more: this is open. I will be proud, I will read political authors, I will baffle sir Toby, I will wash off gross acquaintance, I will be point-device — the very man. I do not now fool myself, to let imagination jade me, for every reason excites to this, that my lady loves me. She did commend my yellow stockings of late; she did praise my leg being cross-gartered; and in this she with a kind of induction drives me to these habits of her liking. I thank my stars I am happy. I will be strange, stout, in yellow stockings, and cross-gartered, even with the swiftness of putting on. Jove, and my stars be praised! — Here is yet a postscript. — [Reading.] "Thou canst not choose but know who I am. If thou entertainest my love, let it appear in thy smiling: thy smiles become thee well; therefore in my presence still smile, dear my sweet, I pr'ythee." — Jove, I thank thee. — I will smile: I will do every thing that thou wilt have me.

[Exit.]

Fab. I will not give my part of this sport for a pension of thousands to be paid from the Sophy.

Sir To. I could marry this wench for this device.

Sir And. So could I too.

Sir To. And ask no other dowry with her, but such another jest.

Sir And. Nor I neither.

[Enter MARIA.]

Fab. Here comes my noble gull-catcher.

Sir To. Wilt thou set thy foot o' my neck?

Sir And. Or o' mine either?

Sir To. Shall I play my freedom at tray-trip, and become thy bond-slave?

Sir And. I' faith, or I either.

Sir To. Why, thou hast put him in such a dream, that when the image of it leaves him he must run mad.

Mar. Nay, but say true: does it work upon him?

Sir To. Like aqua-vite with a midwife.

Mar. If you will then see the fruits of the sport,
Scene I.—Olivia’s Garden.

Enter Viola, and Clown playing on pipe and tabor.

Vi. Save thee, friend, and thy music. Dost thou live by thy tabor?

C. No, sir; I live by the church.

Vi. Art thou a churchman?

C. No such matter, sir: I do live by the church; for I do live at my house, and my house doth stand by the church.

Vi. So thou may’st say, the king lives by a beggar, if a beggar dwell near him; or, the church stands by thy tabor, if thy tabor stand by the church.

C. You have said, sir.—To see this age!—A sentence is but a cheverell’s glove to a good wit: how quickly the wrong side may be turned outward!

Vi. Nay, that’s certain: they, that dally nicely with words, may quickly make them wanton.

C. I would, therefore, my sister had had no name.

Vi. Why, man?

C. Why, sir, her name’s a word; and to dally with that word, might make my sister wanton. But, indeed, words are very rascals, since bonds disgrace them.

Vi. Thy reason, man?

C. Troth, sir, I can yield you none without words; and words are grown so false, I am loath to proove reason with them.

Vi. I warrant thou art a merry fellow, and carest for nothing.

C. Not so, sir, I do care for something: but in my conscience, sir, I do not care for you: if that be to care for nothing, sir, I would it would make you invisible.

Vi. Art not thou the lady Olivia’s fool?

C. No, indeed, sir; the lady Olivia has no folly. She will keep no fool, sir, till she be married; and fools are as like husbands, as pitchers are to herring, the husband’s the bigger. I am, indeed, not her fool, but her corrupter of words.

Vi. I saw thee late at the count Orsino’s.

C. Foolery, sir, does walk about the orb, like the rain: it shines everywhere. I would be sorry, sir, but the fool should be as oft with your master, as with my mistress: I think I saw your wisdom there.

Vi. Nay, an thou passest upon me, I’ll no more with thee. Hold, there’s expenses for thee. [Giving money.

C. Now Jove, in his next commodity of hair, send thee a beard.

Vi. By my troth, I’ll tell thee: I am almost sick for one, though I would not have it grow on my chin. Is thy lady within?

C. Would not a pair of these have bred, sir?

Vi. Yes, being kept together, and put to use.

C. I would play lord Pandarus of Phrygia, sir, to bring a Cressida to this Troilus.

Vi. I understand you, sir: ’tis well begg’d.

[Giving more.

Scene II.

C反倒. The matter, I hope, is not great, sir, begging but a beggar: Cressida was a beggar. My lady is within, sir: I will construe to them whence you come; who you are, and what you would, are out of my walkin: I might say element, but the word is overworn.

Vio. This fellow’s wise enough to play the fools, and to do that well craves a kind of wit: He must observe their mood on whom he jests, the quality of persons, and the time, Not like the haggard; check at every feather That comes before his eye. This is a practice As full of labour as a wise man’s art; For folly, that he wisely shows, is fit, But wise men’s folly fall’n quite taint’d their wit.

Enter Sir Toby Belch and Sir Andrew Ague-cheek.

S. T. Save you, gentleman.

Vio. And you, sir.

S. A. Dieu vous garde, monsieur.

V. Et vous aussi; votre serviteur.

S. A. I hope, sir, you are; and I am yours.

S. T. Will you encounter the house? my niece is desirous you should enter, if your trade be her.

Vio. I am bound to your niece, sir: I mean she is the list’ of my voyage.

S. T. Taste your legs, sir: put them to motion.

Vio. My legs do better understand me, sir, than I understand what you mean by bidding me taste my legs.

S. T. I mean, to go, sir, to enter.

Vio. I will answer you with gait and entrance. But we are prevented.

Enter Olivia and Maria.

S. A. Most excellent accomplished lady, the heavens rain odours on you!

S. T. That youth’s a rare courtier. “Rain odours!” well.

Vio. My matter hath no voice, lady, but to your own most pregnant and vouchsafed ear.

S. A. “Odours,” “pregnant,” and “vouchsafed!”—I’ll get ’em all three all ready.

[Writing in his table-book.

Oli. Let the garden door be shut, and leave me to my hearing. [Exeunt Sir Toby, Sir Andrew, and Maria.

Give me your hand, sir.

Vio. My duty, madam, and most humble service.

Oli. What is your name?

Vio. Cesario is your servant’s name, fair princess. Oli. Your servant, sir? ’T was never merry world, Since lowly boating was called compliment. You’re servant to the count Orsino, youth.

Vio. And he is yours, and his must needs be yours: Your servant’s servant is your servant, madam.

Oli. For him, I think not on him: for his thoughts, Would they were blanks, rather than fill’d with me! Vio. Madam, I come to what your gentle thoughts On his behalf.—

Oli. O! by your leave, I pray you: I bade you never speak again of him; But, would you undertake another suit, I had rather hear you to solicit that, Than music from the spheres.

Vio. Dear lady,—

Oli. Give me leave, beseech you. I did send, After the last enchantment you did here, A ring in chase of you: so did I abuse Myself, my servant, and, I fear me, you. Under your hard construction must I sit, To force that on you, in a shamefaced cunning, Which you knew none of yours: what might-you think? Have you not set mine honour at the stake, And bated it with all th'unmuzzled thoughts Tiring that tyrannous heart can think? To one of your receiving— Enough is shown; a cyrus², not a bosom, Hides my heart. So, let me hear you speak. Vio. I pity you.

Oli. That's a degree to love.

Vio. No, not a grace; for 'tis a vulgar proof, That very oft we pity enemies.

Oli. Why, then, methinks, 'tis time to smile again. O world, how apt the poor are to be proud! If one should be a prey, how much the better To fall before the lion, than the wolf? [Clock strikes. The clock upbraids me with the waste of time.— Be not afraid, good youth, I will not have you; And yet, when wit and youth is come to harvest, Your wife is like to reap a proper man. There lies your way, due west.

Vio. Then westward ho! Grace, and good disposition 'tend your ladyship. You 'll nothing, madam, to my lord by me?

Oli. Stay: I pray thee, tell me, what thou think'st of me.

Vio. That you do think you are not what you are. Oli. If I think so, I think the same of you.

Vio. Then think you right: I am not what I am. Oli. I would, you were as I would have you be! Vio. Would it be better, madam, than I am? I wish it might; for now I am your fool. Oli. O! what a deal of scorn looks beautiful In the contempt and anger of his lip! A murderous guilt shows not itself more soon Than love that would seem hid: love's night is noon. Cessario, by the rose of the spring, By maidhood, honour, truth, and every thing, I love thee so, that, maugre all my pride, Nor wit, nor reason, can my passion hide. Do not exert thy reasons from this clause, For, that I woo, thou therefore hast no cause; But rather, reason thus with reason fitter: Love sought is good, but given unsought is better. Vio. By innocence I swear, and by my youth, I have one heart, one bosom, and one truth. And that no woman has; nor never none Shall mistress be of it, save I alone. And so adieu, good madam: never more Will I my master's tears to you deplore.

Oli. Yet come again: for thou, perhaps, may'st move That heart, which now abhors, to like his love. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—A Room in Olivia's House.

Enter Sir Toby Belch, Sir Andrew Ague-cheek, and Fabian.

Sir And. No faith, I'll not stay a jot longer.

Sir To. Thy reason, dear venom: give thy reason.

Fab. You must needs yield your reason, sir Andrew. Sir And. Marry, I saw your niece do more favours to the count's serving man, than ever she bestowed upon me: I saw 't is the orchard.

Sir To. Did she see thee the while, old boy? tell me that.

Sir And. As plain as I see you now.

Fab. This was a great argument of love in her toward you.

Sir And. 'Slight! will you make an ass o' me? Fab. I will prove it legitimate, sir, upon the oaths of judgment and reason.

Sir To. And they have been grand jury-men since before Noah was a sailor.

Fab. She did show favour to the youth in your sight only to exasperate you, to awake your dormouse valour, to put fire in your heart, and brimstone in your liver. You should then have acquitted her, and with some excellent jests, fire-new from the mint, you should have banged the youth into dullness. This was looked for at your hand, and this was baulked: the double gift of this opportunity you let time wash off, and you are now sailed into the north of my lady's opinion; where you will hang like an icicle on a Dutchman's beard, unless you do redeem it by some laudable attempt, either of valour, or policy.

Sir And. An't be any way, it must be with valour, for policy I hate: I had as lief be a Brownist⁴ as a politician.

Sir To. Why then, build me thy fortunes upon the basis of valour: challenge me the count's youth to fight with him; hurt him in eleven places: my niece shall take note of it; and assure thyself, there is no love-broker in the world can more prevail in man's commendation with woman, than report of valour.

Fab. There is no way but this, sir Andrew.

Sir And. Will either of you bear me a challenge to him?

Sir To. Go, write it in a martial hand; be curt and brief; it is no matter how witty, so it be eloquent, and full of invention: taunt him with the license of ink: if thou thou'lt him some thribe, it shall not be amiss; and as many lies as will lie in thy sheet of paper, although the sheet were big enough for the bed of Ware in England, set 'em down. Go, about it. Let there be gall enough in thy ink, though thou write with a goose-pen, no matter. About it.

Sir And. Where shall I find you?

Sir To. We'll call thee at the cubiculo. Go.

[Exeunt Sir Andrew.

Fab. This is a dear manakin to you, sir Toby.

Sir To. I have been dear to him, lad; some two thousand strong, or so.

Fab. We shall have a rare letter from him; but you'll not deliver it.

Sir To. Never trust me then: and by all means stir on the youth to an answer. I think, oaths and wainscopes cannot hate them together. For sir Andrew, if he were opened, and you find so much blood in his liver as will ogle the foot of a fleas, I'll eat the rest of the anatomy.

Fab. And his opposite, the youth, bears in his visage no great preface of cruelty.

Enter Maria.

Sir To. Look, where the youngest wren of nine comes.

Mar. If you desire the spleen, and will laugh yourselves into stitches, follow me. Yond' gull Malvolio is

---

¹ shamefaced: in f. e. ² A will of cyrus or cypra. ³ Step. ⁴ A common phrase, used by the Thames watermen. ⁵ A sort (afterwards be independent) much ridiculed by the writers of the time.
TWELFTH-NIGHT: OR WHAT YOU WILL.

Sc. I'll be your purse-bearer, and leave you for an hour.

Ant. To the Elephant.—

Sc. I do remember. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—Olivia’s Garden.

Enter Olivia and Maria.

Oli. I have sent after him: he says, he’ll come. How shall I feast him? what bestow’t on him? For youth is bought more oft, than begg’d, or borrow’d. I speak too loud.—

Where is Malvolio?—he is sad, and civil. And suite well for a servant with my fortunes.—

Where is Malvolio?

Mar. He’s coming, madam; but in very strange manner. He is sure possess’d, madam.

Oli. Why, what’s the matter? does he rave?

Mar. No, madam; he does nothing but smile: your ladyship were best to have some guard about you, if he come, for sure the man is tainted in ’s wits.

Oli. Go call him hither. [Exit Maria.]—I am as mad as he,

If sad and merry madness equal be.—

Enter Malvolio and Maria.

How now, Malvolio? how fares sweet lady, ha, ha! [Smiles ridiculously.

Sc. Smil’st thou? I sent for thee upon a sad occasion.

Mar. Sad, lady? I could be sad. This does make some obstruction in the blood, this cross-gartering; but what of that? if it please the eye of one, it is with me as the very true sonnet hath it, “I please one, and please all.”

Oli. Why, how dost thou, man? what is the matter with thee?

Mar. Not black in my mind, though yellow in my legs. It did come to his hands, and commands shall be executed: I think we do know the sweet Roman hand.

Oli. Wilt thou go to bed, Malvolio?

Mar. To bed? ay, sweet-heart, and I’ll come to thee. Oli. God comfort thee! Why dost thou smile so, and kiss thy hand so oft?

Mar. How do you, Malvolio?

Mar. At your request! Yes; nightingales answer dams.

Mar. Why appear you with this ridiculous boldness before my lady?

Mar. “Be not afraid of greatness.”—T was well writ.

Oli. What meanest thou by that, Malvolio?

Mar. “Some are born great,”—

Oli. Ha?

Mar. “Some achieve greatness,”—

Oli. What sayst thou?

Mar. “And some have greatness thrust upon them.”

Oli. Heaven restore thee!

Mar. “Remember, who commendeth thy yellow stockings;”—

Oli. Thy yellow stockings?

Mar. “And wished to see thee cross-gartered.”

Oli. Cross-gartered?

Mar. Go to: thou art made, if thou desirest to be so.”

Oli. Am I made?

Mar. “If not, let me see thee a servant still.”

Oli. Why, this is very midsummer madness.

A map engraved for Linnæus’s Voyages, a translation of which was published in 1696. A portion, showing its many lines, is as true in the "Knight’s Pictorial Shakespeare." The words, "still thanks," are not in s. (s; “vow” in s. 4; worth; in f. 4. On some and formal. Not in s. 4 Enter Malvolio: in f. s. There was an old ballad-tune, called "Black and Yellow."

Enter Servant.

Ser. Madam, the young gentleman of the count Orsino's is returned. I could hardly entreat him back: he attends your ladyship's pleasure.

Oli. I'll come to him. [Exit Servant.] Good Maria, let this fellow be looked to. Where's my cousin Toby? Let some of my people have a special care of him. I would not have him miscarry for the half of my dowry.

[Exeunt Olivia and Maria.]

Mal. Oh, ho! do you come near me now? how worse man than sir Toby to look to me? This concurs directly with the letter; she sends him on purpose, that may appear stubborn to him; for she invites me to that in the letter. "Cast thy humble obloquy,"—she says:—"be opposite with a kinsman, surly with servants,—let thy tongue tang with arguments of state,—put thyself into the trick of singularity:"—and consequently sets down the manner how; as, a sad face, a reverent carriage, a slow tongue, in the habit of some sir of note, and so forth. I have limed her; but it is Jove's doing, and Jove make me thankful. And when she went away now, "Let this fellow be looked to!" fellow, not Malvolio, nor after my degree, but fellow. Why, every thing adjoins together, that no dram of a scruple, no scruple of a scruple, no obstacle, no incredulous or unsafe circumstance,—What can be said? Nothing that can be can come between me, and the full prospect of my hopes. Well, Jove, not I, is the doer of this, and he is to be thanked.

Re-enter Maria, with Sir Toby Belch, and Fabian.

Sir To. Which way is he, in the name of sanctity? If all the devils in hell be drawn in little, and Legion himself possess him, yet I'll speak to him.

Fab. Here he is, here he is. How is 't with you, sir? how is 't with you, man?

Mal. Go off; I discard you: let me enjoy my privacy: go off.

Mar. Lo, how hollow the fiend speaks within him! did not I tell you?—SIR Toby, my lady prays you to have a care of him.

Mal. Ah, ha! does she so?

Sir To. Go to, go to: peace! peace! we must deal gently with him: let me alone.—How do you, Malvolio? how is 't with you? What, man! defy the devil: consider, he's an enemy to mankind.

Mal. Do you know what you say?

Mar. La, you! an you speak ill of the devil, how he takes it at heart. Pray God, he be not bewitched!

Fab. Carry his water to the wise woman.

Mar. Marr'y, and it shall be done to-morrow morning, if I live. My lady would not lose him for more than I'll say.

Mal. How now, mistress?

Mar. O lord!

Sir To. Pr'ythee, hold thy peace: this is not the way. Do you not see you move him? let me alone with him.

Fab. No way but gentleness; gently, gently: the fiend is rough, and will not be roughly used.

Sir To. Why, how now, my bawcock? how dost thou, chuck?

Mal. Sir!

Sir To. Ay, Biddy, come with me. What, man! 't is not for gravity to play at cherry-pit* with Satan. Hang him, foul collier!

Mar. Get him to say his prayers; good sir Toby, get him to pray.

Mal. My prayers, minx!

Mar. No, I warrant you; he will not hear of godliness.

Mal. Go, hang yourselves all! you are idle shallow things: I am not of your element. You shall know more hereafter. [Exeunt.]

Sir To. Is't possible?

Fab. If this were played upon a stage now, I could condemn it as an improbable fiction.

Sir To. His very genius hath taken the infection of the device, man.

Mar. Nay, pursue him now, lest the device take air, and taint.

Fab. Why, we shall make him mad, indeed.

Mar. The house will be the quieter.

Sir To. Come, we'll have him in a dark room, and bound. My niece is already in the belief that he's mad: we may carry it thus, for our pleasure, and his penance, till our very pastime, tired out of breath, prompts us to have mercy on him; at which time, we will bring the device to the bar, and crown thee for a finder of madmen. But see, but see.

Enter Sir Andrew Ague-Cheek.

Fab. More matter for a May morning.

Sir And. Here's the challenge; read it: I warrant, there's not a word of pepper in 't.

Fab. Is't so saucy?

Sir And. Ay, is't, I warrant him: do but read.

Sir To. Give me. [Reads.] "Youth, whatsoever thou art, thou art but a scurvy fellow."

Fab. Good, and valiant.

Sir To. "Wonder not, nor admire not in thy mind, why I do call thee so, for I will show thee no reason for't."

Fab. A good note, that keeps you from the blow of the sword.

Sir To. "Thou comest to the lady Olivia, and in my sight she uses thee kindly: but thou liest in thy throat; that is not the matter I challenge thee for."

Fab. Very brief, and to exceeding good sense-less.

Sir To. "I will way-lay thee going home; where, if it be thy chance to kill me,"—

Fab. Good.

Sir To. Thou killest me like a rogue and a villain."

Fab. Still you keep o' the worse side of the law: good Sir and Fair these well; and God have mercy upon one of our souls! He may have mercy upon mine; but my hope is better, and so look to thyself. Thy friend, as thou usest him, and thy sworn enemy: ANDREW AGUE-CHEEK." If this letter move him not, his legs cannot. I'll give him 't.

Mar. You may have very fit occasion for 't: he's now in some commerce with my lady, and will by and by depart.

Sir To. Go to, sir Andrew; scot out for him at the corner of the orchard, like a bum-bailie. So soon as ever thou seest him, draw, and, as thou drawest, swear horrible; for it comes to pass oft, that a terrible oath, with a swaggering accent, sharply twanged off, gives manhood more approbation than ever proof itself would have earned him. Away!

Sir And. Nay, let me alone for swearing. [Exeunt.]

Sir To. Now, will not I deliver his letter; for the behaviour of the young gentleman gives him out to be of good capacity and breeding: his employment between my niece confirmes no less; therefore this letter, being so excellently ignorant, will breed no terror in the youth: he will find it comes from a clodpole. But, sir, I will deliver his challenge by word of mouth; set upon Ague-cheek a notable report of valour, and drive the gentleman, as, I know, his youth will adly receive it into a most hideous opinion of his rage.
TWELFTH-NIGHT: OR, WHAT YOU WILL.

Sir To. I will do so. Signior Fabian, stay you by this gentleman till my return. [Exit Sir Tony.

Vio. Pray you, sir, do you know of this matter?

Sir To. I know, the knight is incensed against you, even to a mortal arbitrement, but nothing of the circumstance more.

Vio. I beseech you, what manner of man is he?

Sir To. Nothing of that wonderful promise, to read him by his form, as you are like to find him in the proof of his valour. He is, indeed, sir, the most skilful, bloody, and fatal oppositor that you could possibly have found in any part of Illyria. Will you walk towards him? I will make your peace with him, if I can.

Vio. I shall be much bound to you for 't: I am one, that would rather go with sir priest, than sir knight: I care not who knows so much of my mettle. [Exit.

Sir To. Why, man, he's a very devil, I have not seen such a firago. I had a pass with him, rapier, sword, and all, and he gives me the stuck in, with such a mortal motion, that it is inevitable; and on the answer, he pays you as surely as your feet hit the ground they step on. They say, he has been fencer to the Sophy.

Sir And. Vox on 't, I'll not meddle with him.

Sir To. Ay, but he will not now be pacified: Fabian can scarce hold him yonder.

Sir And. Plague on 't; an I thought he had been valiant, and so cunning in fence, I'd have seen him damned ere I'd have challenged him. Let him let the matter slip, and I'll give him my horse, grey Capulet.

Sir To. I'll make the motion. Stand here; make a good show on 't. This shall end without the perdition of souls. [Aside.] Marry, I'll ride your horse as well as I ride you.

Re-enter FABIAN and VIOLA, unwillingly.

I have his horse [To Fab.] to take up the quarrel. I have persuaded him, the youth 's a devil.

Sir To. He is as horribly conceited of him; [To Sir Tony] and pants, and looks pale, as if a bear were at his heels.

Sir To. There 's no remedy, sir: [To Viola] he will fight with you for 's oath sake. Marry, he hath better betheathed him of his quarrel, and he finds that now scarce to be worth talking of: therefore, draw for the supportance of his vow: he protests, he will not hurt you.

Vio. [Aside.] Pray God defend me! A little thing would make me tell them how much I lack of a man.

FAB. Give ground, if you see him furious.

Sir To. Come, sir Andrew, there 's no remedy: the gentleman will, for his honour's sake, have one bout with you: he cannot by the duello avoid it; but he has promised me, as he is a gentleman and a soldier, he will not hurt you. Come on; to 't.

Sir And. Pray God, he keep his oath!

Vio. Do assure you, 't is against my will. [They draw, and go back from each other.]

Enter ANTONIO.

ANT. Put up your sword.—If this young gentleman Have done offence, I take the fault on me:

If you offend him, I for him defy you. [Drawing.

Sir To. You, sir? why, what are you?

ANT. One, sir, that for his love dares yet do more, Than you have heard him brag to you he will.
Sir To. Nay, if you be an undertaker, I am for you. [Drawing.

Enter Officers.

Fab. O, good sir Toby, hold! here come the officers. Sir To. I’ll be with you anon. Vio. Pray, sir; put your sword up, if you please. Sir And. Marry, will I, sir; and, for that I promised you, I’ll be as good as my word. He will bear you easily, and reins well.

1 Off. This is the man: do thy office. 2 Off. Antonio, I arrest thee at the suit Of count Orino.

Ant. You do mistake me, sir.

1 Off. No, sir, no jot: I know your favour well, Though now you have no sea-cap on your head.—

Take him away: he knows, I know him well.

Ant. I must obey.—[To VIOLA.] This comes with seeking you; But there’s no remedy: I shall answer it. What will you do? Now my necessity Makes me to ask you for my purse. It grieves me Much more for what I cannot do for you, Than what befalls myself. You stand amaz’d, But be of comfort.

2 Off. Come, sir, away.

Ant. I must entreat of you some of that money. Vio. What money, sir?

For the fair kindness you have show’d me here, And part, being prompted by your present trouble, Out of my lean and low ability, I’ll lend you something. My having is not much: I’ll make division of my present with you. Hold, there’s half my coffer. Ant. Will you deny me now?

Is’t possible, that my deserts to you Can lack persuasion? Do not tempt my misery, Lest that it make me so unsound a man, As to upbraid you with those kindnesses That I have done for you.

Vio. I know of none; Nor know I you by voice, or any feature. I hate ingratitude more in a man, Than lying vaineusness, babbling drunkenness, Or any taint of vice whose strong corruption Inhabits our frail blood.

Ant. O, heavens themselves!

2 Off. Come, sir: I pray you, go. [see here, Ant. Let me speak a little. This youth, that you I snatch’d one half out of the jaws of death; Reliev’d him with such sanctity of love, And to his image, which, methought, did promise Most veritable1 worth, did I devotion. 1 Off. What’s that to us? The time goes by: away! Ant. But, O, how vile an idol proves this god!— Thou hast, Sebastian, done good feature shame. In nature there’s no blemish, but the mind; None can be call’d deform’d, but the unkind: Virtue is beauty; but the courteous evil Are empty trunks, o’erfurnished by the devil. 1 Off. The man grows mad: away with him! Come, come, sir.

Ant. Lead me on. [Exit Officers, with ANTONIO. Vio. Methinks, his words do from such passion fly, That he believes himself: so do not I. Prove true, imagination, O! prove true, That I, dear brother, be now ta’en for you! Sir To. Come hither, knight; come hither, Fabian. we’ll whisper o’er a couplet or two of most sage saws.

Vio. He nam’d Sebastian: I my brother know Yet living in my glass: even such, and so, In favour was my brother; and he went Still in this fashion, colour, ornament, For him I imitate. O! if it prove, Tempesta are kind, and salt waves fresh in love! [Exit Sir To. A very dishonest paltry boy, and more coward than a hare. His dishonesty appears, in leaving his friend here in necessity, and denying him; for I his cowardship, ask Fabian.

[It Fab. A coward, a most devout coward: religious it Sir And. Slid, I’ll after him again, and beat him. Sir To. Do; cuff him soundly, but never draw thy sword.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—The Street before OLIVIA’S House.

Enter SEBASTIAN and Clown.

Clo. Will you make me believe that I am not sent for you?

Seb. Go to, go to; thou art a foolish fellow: Let me be clear of thee.

Clo. Well held out, i’ faith! No, I do not know you; nor I am not sent to you by my lady to bid you come speak with her; nor your name is not master Cesario: nor this is not my nose neither.—Nothing, that is so, is so.

Seb. I pr’ythee, vent thy folly somewhere else: Thou know’st not me!

Clo. Vent my folly! He has heard that word of some great man, and now applies it to a fool. Vent my folly! I am afraid this great lubbery world will prove a cockney. I pr’ythee now, unird thy strange-ness, and tell me what I shall vent to my lady. Shall sake him, if there be any law in Illyria. Though I should him first; yet it's no matter for that.

Sir. Lo, thy hand.

Sir To. Come, sir, I will not let you go. Come, my young soldier, put up your iron: you are well fleeshed.

Clo. [Within.] I will be free from thee. What wouldst thou now? [Breaking away.] If thou dar'st tempt me farther, draw thy sword.

Sir To. What, what! Nay then, I must have an share or two of this malapert blood from you.

[They draw and fence.]

Enter OLIVIA.

Oli. Hold, Toby! on thy life, I charge thee, hold!

Sir To. Madam—

Oli. Will it be ever thus? Ungracious wretch! For the mountains, and the barbarous caves, Where manners ne'er were preach'd. Out of my right!—

Be not offended, dear Cesario.—

Easby. be gone!—I pr'ythee, gentle friend,
[Exeunt Sir Toby, Sir Andrew, and Fabian.]

Let thy fair wisdom, not thy passion, away.

Is this meekness, and unjust extenuate.

Amidst thy peace. Go with me to my house;

And hear thou there how many fruitless pranks

This affianc'd bo'tch'd up, that thou thereby

Marry smile at this. Thou shalt not choose but go:

Do not deny. Behearw his soul for me,

He earned one poor heart of mine in thee.

Sé. What relish is in this? how runs the stream?

Or I am mad, or else this is a dream.

Let fancy still my sense in Letha steep;

If's tis'to dream, still let me sleep.

Oli. Nay, come, pr'ythee. Would thou'rt be ru'd by me?

Sé. Madam, I will.

Oli. O! say so, and so be. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—A Room in OLIVIA's House.

Enter MARIA and Clown.

Mar. Nay, I pr'ythee, put on this gown, and this head: make him believe thou art sir Topas, the cura-do: it quickly; 'tll call sir Toby the whilst.

[Sing.]

[Enter MARIA.

CLO. Well, I'll put it on, and I will dissemble myself; and I would I were the first that ever dissembled in such a gown. [Putting it on.*] I am not well enough to become the function well, nor leas eough to be thought a good student; but to be said as being honest man, and a good housekeeper, goes as fairly as a s'ry careful man, and a great scholar. The competitors enter.

Enter SIR TONY BELCH and MARIA.

Sir To. Jove bless thee, master parson.

[Enter. Sir TONY BELCH and MARIA.]

CLO. Bonas dis, sir Toby: for as the old hermit of Fraque, that never saw pen and ink, very wittily said a niece of king Gorboth, "That, that is, is;" so I, being master parson, am master parson,—for what is that but that? and is, but is?

Sir To. To him, sir Topas.

CLO. What, ho! I say.—Peace in this prison.

[Opening a door.]

SIR TO. The knave counterfeits well; a good knave.

CLO. Sir Topas, the curate, who comes to visit Mul-

[Within.] Who calls there?

Mal. Sir Topas, sir Topas, good sir Topas, go to my lady.

Clo. Out, hyperbolical fiend! how vexes thou this man. Talkest thou nothing but of ladies?

Sir To. Well said, master parson.

Mal. Sir Topas, never was man thus wronged.—

Good sir Topas, do not think I am mad: they have laid me here in hideous darkness.

Clo. Fie, thou dishonest Saturn! I call thee by the most modest terms: for I am one of those gentle ones, that will use the devil himself with courtesy. Say'st that house is dark?

Mal. As hell, sir Topas.

Clo. Why, it hath bay-windows transparent as barricades, and the clear stories towards the soul-of-north are lustrous as ebony; and yet complainest thou of obstruction?

Mal. I am not mad, sir Topas. I say to you, this house is dark.

Clo. Madman, thou err'st: I say there is no darkness but ignorance, in which thou art more puzzled than the Egyptians in their fog.

Mal. I say, this house is as dark as ignorance, though ignorance were as dark as hell; and I say, there was never man thus cursed. I am no more mad than you are; make the trial of it in any constant question.

Clo. What is the opinion of Pythagoras concerning wild-fowl?—

Mal. That the soul of our grandam might haply inhabit a bird.

Clo. What thinkst thou of his opinion?—

Mal. I think nobly of the soul, and so way approve his opinion.

Clo. Fare thee well: remain thou still in darkness.

Thou shalt hold the opinion of Pythagoras, or I will allow of thy wits, and fear to kill a woodcock, lest thou dispossess the soul of thy grandam. Fare thee well. [Closing the door.]

Mal. Sir Topas! sir Topas!—

Sir To. My most exquisite sir Topas.

Clo. Nay, I am for all waters.

Mar. Thou mightst have done this without thy beard, and gown: he sees thee not.

Sir To. To him in thine own voice, and bring me word how thou findest him; I would, we were all well rid of this knavery. If he may be conveniently delivered, I would he were; for I am now so far in offence with my niece, that I cannot pursue with any safety this sport to the upshot. Come by and by to my chamber. [Exeunt SIR TONY and MARIA.

Clo. "Hey Robin, jolly Robin,

Tell me how thy lady does." [Singing.]

Mal. Fool!—

Clo. "My lady is unkind, perdy."

Mal. Fool!

Clo. "Alas, why is she so?"

Mal. Fool, I say.

Clo. "She loves another"—Who calls, ha?

[Opening the door.]

Mal. Good fool, as ever thou wilt deserve well at my hand, help me to a candle, and pen, ink, and paper.

As I am a gentleman, I will live to be thankful to thee for't.

Clo. Master Malvolio!

Mal. Ay, good fool.

Clo. Alas, sir, how fell you beside your five wits?

ACT V.

SCENE III.—Olivia’s Garden.

Enter Sebastian.

Seb. This is the air; that is the glorious sun; This pearl she gave me, I do feel it, and see’t; And though’t is wonder that enwraps me thus, Yet’t is not madness. Where’s Antonio then? I could not find him at the Elephant; Yet there he was, and there I found this note, That he did range the town to seek me out. His counsel now might do me golden service: For though my soul disputes well with my sense, That this may be some error, but no madness, Yet doth this accident and flood of fortune So far exceed all instance, all discourse, That I am ready to distrust mine eyes, And wrangle with my reason, that persuades me To any other trust but that I am mad; Or else the lady’s mad: yet, if ’t were so, She could not away her house, command her followers, Take, and give back, and thus despatch affairs, With such a smooth, discreet, and stable bearing, As, I perceive, she does. There’s something in’t, That is deceivable. But here the lady comes.

Enter Olivia and a Priest.

Oli. Blame not this haste of mine. If you mean well, Now go with me, and with this holy man, Into the chantry by; there, before him, And underneath that consecrated roof, Plight me the full assurance of your faith; That my most jealous and too doubtful soul May live at peace: he shall conceal it, Whiles you are willing it shall come to note, What time we will our celebration keep According to my birth.—What do you say?

Seb. I’ll follow this good man, and go with you, And, having sworn truth, ever will be true.

Oli. Then lead the way, good father; and heavens so shine,
That they may fairly note this act of mine! [Exeunt]

ACT V.

SCENE I.—The Street before Olivia’s House.

Enter Cloten and Fabian.

Fab. Now, as thou lovest me, let me see his letter. Clo. Good master Fabian, grant me another request. Fab. Any thing.

Clo. Do not desire to see this letter.

Fab. This is, to give a dog, and in recompense desire my dog again.

Enter Duke, Viola, and Attendants.

Duke. Belong you to the lady Olivia, friends?

Clo. Ay, sir; we are some of her trappings.

Duke. I know thee well: how dost thou, my good man?

Clo. Truly, sir, the better for my foes, and the worse for my friends.

Duke. Just the contrary; the better for thy friends.

Clo. No, sir, the worse.

Duke. How can that be?

Mal. Fool, there was never man more excessively abused: I am as well in my wits, fool, as thou art.

Clo. But as well? then you are mad, indeed, if you be no better in your wits than a fool.

Mal. They have here propounded me; keep me in darkness, send ministers to me,asses! and do all they can to face me out of my wits.

Clo. Advise you what you say: the minister is here.

[Speaking as sir Topas.]

—Malvolio, Malvolio, thy wits the heavens restore! endeavour thyself to sleep, and leave thy vain bubble babble.

Mal. Sir Topas.

Clo. Maintain no words with him, good fellow.— Who, I, sir? not I, sir. God b’ wi’ you, good sir Topas.—Marry, amen.—I will, sir, I will.

Mal. Fool, fool, fool, I say.

Clo. Alas, sir, be patient. What say you, sir? I am ashen for speaking to you.

Mal. Good fool, help me to some light, and some paper; I tell thee, I am as well in my wits, as any man in Illyria.

Clo. Well-a-day, that you were, sir.

Mal. By this hand, I am. Good fool, some ink, paper, and light, and convey what I will set down to my lady: it shall advantage thee more than the hearing of letter did.

Clo. I will help you to’t. But tell me true, are you not mad indeed? or do you but counterfeit?

Mal. Believe me, I am not: I tell thee true.

Clo. Nay, I’ll never believe a madman, till I see his brains. I will fetch you light, and paper, and ink.

Mal. Fool, I’ll require it in the highest degree: I pray thee, be gone.

Clo. [Singing.]

I am gone, sir,
And anon, sir,
I’ll be with you again,
With a trick,
Like the old vice,
Your need to sustain;

Who withadder oflath,
In his rage and his wrath,
Cries, Ah, ha! to the devil:

Like a mad lad,
Pare thy nails, dad,
Adieu, good man drive!" [Exit]

Seb. This is the air: thus is the glorious sun; This pearl she gave me, I do feel it, and see’t; And though’t is wonder that enwraps me thus, Yet’t is not madness. Where’s Antonio then? I could not find him at the Elephant; Yet there he was, and there I found this note, That he did range the town to seek me out. TWELFTH-NIGHT: OR, WHAT YOU WILL.

But more of that anon.—Take him aside.

Oli. What would my lord, but that he may not have, Wherein Olivia may seem serviceable?—

Cesario, you do not keep promise with me.

Vio. Madam?

Duke. Gracious Olivia,—

Oli. What do you say. Cesario?—Good my lord,—

Vio. My lord would speak, my duty hushes me.

Oli. If it be aught to the old tune, my lord,—

It is as fat and fulsome to mine ear,

As howling after music.

Duke. Still so cruel?

Oli. Still so constant, lord.

Duke. What, to perverseness? you uncivil lady,

To whose ingrate and unauspicious altar

My soul the faithfullists offerings hath breath'd out,

That e'er devotion tender'd. What shall I do? [him.

Oli. Even what it please my lord, that shall become

Duke. Why should I not, had I the heart to do it,

Like to the Egyptian thief at point of death,

Kill what I love? a savage jealousy,

That sometimes savours nobly. But hear me this:

Since you to non-regardance cast my faith,

And that I partly know the instrument

That screws me from my true place in your favour,

Live you the marble-breasted tyrant still;

But this your minion, whom I know, you love,

And whom, by heaven I swear, I tender dearly,

Him will I tear out of that cruel eye,

Where he sits crowned in his master's spite.—

Come boy, with me: my thoughts are ripe in mischief:

I'll sacrifice the lamb that I do love,

To spite a raven's heart within a dove.

[Going.

Vio. And I, most jocund, apt, and willingly,

To do you rest a thousand deaths would die. [Following.

Oli. Where goes Cesario?

Vio. After him I love,

More than I love these eyes, more than my life,

More, by all more, than e'er I shall love wife.

If I do feign, you witnesses above,

Punish my life for tainting of my love!

Oli. Ah me!.detected? how am I beguil'd?

Vio. Who does beguile you? who does do you wrong?

Oli. Hast thou forgot thyself? Is it so long?—

Call forth the holy father. [Exit an Attendant.

Duke. Come away. [To VIOL.

Oli. Whither, my lord?—Cesario, husband, stay.

Duke. Husband?

Oli. Ay, husband: can he that deny?

Duke. Her husband, sirrah?

Vio. No, my lord, not I.

Oli. Alas! it is the baseness of thy fear,

That makes thee strangle thy propriety:

Fear not, Cesario: take thy fortunes up;

Be that thou know'st thou art, and then thou art

As great as that thou fear'st.—O, welcome, father!

Re-enter Attendant with the Priest.

Father, I charge thee, by thy reverence,

Here to unfold (though lately we intended

To keep in darkness, what occasion now

Reveals before 'tis ripe) what thou dost know,

Hath newly past between this youth and me.

Priest. A contract and eternal bond of love,

Confirm'd by mutual joiner of your hands,

Attested by the holy close of lips,

Strenthen'd by interchangement of your rings;

And all the ceremony of this compact

Seal'd in my function, by my testimony:

[Exit Clown.

Enter Antonio and Officers.

Fo Here comes the man, sir, that did rescue me.

Duke. That face of his I do remember well;

Fo. When I saw it last, it was beams'd,

As black as Vulcan, in the smoke of war.

A lawfully vessel was he captain of,

For shallow draught and bulk unprizable,

With which such seathful grapple did he make

With the most noble beam of our fleet,

That very envy, and the tongue of loss,

Cred fame and honour on him.—What's the matter?

Oli. Ominous, this is that Antonio,

That took the Phoenix, and her fraught, from Candy;

And this is he, that did the Tiger board,

When your young nephew Titus lost his leg.

Here in the streets, desperate of shame and state,

Is private brabble did we apprehend him.

Fo. He did me kindness, sir, drew on my side,

But in conclusion, put strange speech upon me;

I know not what it was, but distraction.

Duke. Notable pirate, thou salt-water thief,

What foolish boldness brought thee to their mercy,

When thou, in terms so bloody, and so dear,

That made thine enemies?

Oli. Orinio, noble sir,

Be pleased that I shake off these names you give me:

Amonis never yet was thief, or pirate,

That I cannot, on base and great enough,

Orinis's enemy. A witchcraft drew me hither:

That most ingratitudeful boy there, by your side,

From the rude sea's enrag'd and foamy mouth

Did I redeem: a wreck past hope he was.

His life I gave him, and did thereto add

My love, without retention, or restraint,

All his in dedication: for his sake,

I did expose myself, pure for his love,

In the danger of this adverse town;

Drew to defend him, when he was bestow;

Where being apprehended, his false cunning

(Not meaning to partake with me in danger)

Taught him to face me out of his acquaintance,

And grew a twenty-years-removed thing,

While one would wink; denied me mine own purse,

Which I had recommended to his use

Not half an hour before.

Fo. How can this be?

Duke. When came he to this town?

Oli. To-day, my lord; and for three months before.

No interim, not a minute's vacancy,

But day and night did we keep company.

Enter OLIVIA and Attendants.

Duke. Here comes the countess: now heaven walks on earth!—

But for thee, fellow; fellow, thy words are madness:

Three months this youth hath tended upon me;
Since when, my watch hath told me, toward my grave
I have travelled but two hours.

Duke. O, thou dissembling cub! what wilt thou be,
When time hath sow'd a grizzle on thy case?
Or will not else thy craft so quickly grow,
That thine own trip shall be thine overthrow?
Farewell, and take her; but direct thy feet,
Where thou and I henceforth may never meet.

Vio. My lord, I do protest,—

Oli. O! do not swear:...and not too much fear.
Enter Sir Andrew Ague-Chek, with his head broken.

Sir And. For the love of God, a surgeon! send one presently to Sir Toby.

Oli. What's the matter?

Sir And. He has broke my head across, and has given Sir Toby a bloody cockcomb too. For the love of God, your help! I had rather than forty pound I were at home.

Oli. Who has done this, sir Andrew?

Sir And. The count's gentleman, one Cesario. We took him for a coward, but he's the very devil incor-

Duke. My gentleman, Cesario?

Sir And. O'd's lifelings! here he is.—You broke my head for nothing; and that that I did, I was set on to do't by Sir Toby.

Vio. Why do you speak to me? I never hurt you:
You drew your sword upon me, without cause;
But I bespeak you fair, and hurt you not.

Sir And. If a bloody cockcomb be a hurt, you have hurt me: I think you set it on me; which by a bloody cockcomb.
Enter Sir Toby Belch, drunk, led by the Clown.

Here comes Sir Toby halting: you shall hear more;
but if he had not been in drink, he would have tickled you othergates than he did.

Duke. How now, gentleman; how's it with you?

Sir To. That's all one: he has hurt me, and there's the end on't.—Sot, didst see Dick surgeon, sot?

Clos. O! he's drunk, sir Toby, an hour ago: his eyes were set at eight i' the morning.

Sir To. Then he's a rogue, and a passy-measure pavin. I hate a drunken rogue.

Oli. Away with him! Who hath made this havoc with them?

Sir And. I'll help you, sir Toby, because we'll be dressed together.

Sir To. Will you help? An ass-head, and a cock-comb, and a knife! a thin-faced knave, a guilt!

Oli. Get him to bed, and let his hurt he look'd to.

[Exit Clown, Sir Toby, and Sir Andrew.

Enter Sebastian (all start).

Seb. I am sorry, madam, I have hurt your kinsman;
But had it been the brother of my blood,
I must have done no less with wit and safety.
You throw a strange regard upon me, and by that I do perceive it hath offended you:
Pardon que, sweet one, even for the vows
We made each other but so late ago.

Duke. One face, one voice, one habit, and two persons;
A natural perspective, that is, and is not!
Sb. Antonio! O, my dear Antonio!

Seb. How have the hours rack'd and torture'd me,
Since I have lost thee?

Ant. Sebastian are you?

Seb. Fear'st thou that, Antonio?

Ant. How have you made division of yourself?—

An apple eft in two is not more twin Than these two creatures. Which is Sebastian?

Oli. Most wonderful.

Seb. Do I stand there? I never had a brother;
Nor can there be that deity in my nature,
Of here and everywhere. I had a sister,
Whom the blind waves and surges have devour'd—

[To Viola.] Of charity, what kin are you to me?
What countryman? what name? what parentage?

Vio. Of Messaline: Sebastian was my father;
Such a Sebastian was my brother too,
So he suppli'd to his watery tomb.
If spirits can assume both form and suit,
You come to fright us.

Seb. A spirit I am indeed;
But am in that dimension grossly clad,
Which from the womb I did participate.
Were you a woman, as the rest goes even,
I should myself let fall upon your cheek,
And say,—thrice welcome, drowned Viola!

Vio. My father had a mole upon his brow.

Seb. And so had mine.

Vio. And died that day, when Viola from her birth
Had number'd thirteen years.

Seb. O! that record is lively in my soul.
He finished, indeed, his mortal act
That day that made my sister thirteen years.

Vio. If nothing lets us meet us happy both,
But this my masculine usurp'd attire,
Do not embrace me, till each circumstance
Of place, time, fortune, doth o'er and o'er, and jump,
That I am Viola; which to confirm,
I'll bring you to a captain's in this town,
Where lie my maiden weeds; by whose gentle help
I was preserv'd to serve this noble count.
All the occurrence of my fortune since
Hath been between this lady, and this lord.

Seb. So comes it, lady, [To Oliv.'] you have been mislooked;
But nature to her bias true in that.
You would have been contrac'to a maid,
Nor are you therein, by my life, deceiv'd:
You are betroth'd both to a maid and man.

Duke. Be not amaz'd; right noble is his blood.—
If this be so, as yet the glass seems true,
I shall have share in this most happy wreck.

Boy, [To Viola.] thou hast said to me a thousand time
Thou never shouldst love woman like to me.

Vio. And all those sayings will I over-swear,
And all those swearings keep as true in soul,
As doth that orbent continent, the fire
That sever'd day from night.

Duke. Give me thy hand;
And let me see thee in thy woman's weeds.

Vio. The captain, that did bring me first on short,
Hath my maid's garments: he, upon some action,
Is now in durance at Malvolio's suit,
A gentleman, and follower of my lady's.

Oli. He shall enlarge him.—Fetch Malvolio hither;
And yet, alas! now I remember me,
They say, poor gentleman, he's much distract.
A most distracting frenzy of mine own
From my remembrance clearly banish'd his—

Re-enter Clown, with a letter.

How does he, sirrah?

Clos. Truly, madam, he holds Beelzebub at the stave end, as well as a man in his case may do. He has he Twelfth-Night: or, What You Will

Though, I confess, much like the character; But, out of question, 'tis Maria's hand: And now I do bethink me, it was she First told me thou wast mad; thou cast'st in smiling, And in such forms which here were preimprompt'd Upon thee in the letter. P'r'ly thee, be content: This practice hath most shrewdly pass'd upon thee; But when we know the grounds and authors of it, Thou shalt be both the plaintiff and the judge Of thine own cause.

Fab. Good madam, hear me speak; And let no quarrel, nor no brawl to come, Taint the condition of this present hour. Which I have wonder'd at. In hope it shall not, Most freely I confess, myself, and Toby, Set this device against Malvolio here, Upon some stubborn and uncourtly parts We had conceived against him. Maria writ The letter at sir Toby's great importance; In recompense whereof he hath married her. How with a sportful malice it was follow'd, May rather pluck on laughter than revenge, If that the injuries he must be least weigh'd, That have on both sides past.

Oli. Alas, poor soul, how have they baffled thee! Clo. Why "some are born great, some achieve greatness, and some have greatness thrust upon them." I was one, sir, in this interlude: one sir Topas, sir; but that 's all one. — By the Lord, fool, I am not mad: — But do you remember? "Madam, why laugh you at such a barren rascal? an you smile not, he's gagg'd." And thus the whirrligig of time brings in his revenges. Mal. I'll be reveng'd on the whole pack of you. [Exit. Oli. He hath been most notoriously abus'd.

Duke. Pursue him, and entreat him to a peace. He hath not told us of the captain yet; When that is known and golden time conveys, A solemn combination shall be made Of our dear souls:—mean time, sweet sister, We will not part from hence.—Cesario, come; For so you shall be, while you are a man, But when in other habits you are seen, Orsino's mistress, and his fancy's queen.

Clozen sings, to pipe and tabor.

When that I was a little tynie boy, With hey, hyo, the wind and the rain, A foolish thing was but a toy.

For the rain it raineth every day.

But when I came to man's estate, With hey, hyo, the wind and the rain, 'Gainst knaves and thieves men shut their gate, For the rain it raineth every day.

But when I came, alas! to wove, With hey, hyo, the wind and the rain, By swaggering could I never thrive, For the rain it raineth every day.

But when I came unto my bed, With hey, hyo, the wind and the rain, With toss-pots still I had drunken head, For the rain it raineth every day.

A great while ago the world began, With hey, hyo, the wind and the rain, But that 's all one, our play is done, And we'll strive to please you every day.

SCENE, sometimes in Sicilia, sometimes in Bohemia.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Sicilia. An Antechamber in Leontes' Palace.

Enter Camillo and Archidamus.

Arch. If you should chance, Camillo, to visit Bohemia, on the like occasion whenon our services are now on foot, you shall see, as I have said, great difference betwixt our Bohemia and your Sicilia.

Cam. I think, this coming summer, the king of Sicilia means to pay Bohemia the visitation which he justly owes him.

Arch. Wherein our entertainment shall shame us, we will be justified in our loves; for, indeed,—

Cam. Beseech you,—

Arch. Verily, I speak it in the freedom of my knowledge: we cannot with such magnificence—in so rare —I know not what to say.—We will give you sleepy drinks, that your senses, unintelligent of our insufficiency, may, though they cannot praise us, as little accuse us.

Cam. You pay a great deal too dear for what's given freely.

Arch. Believe me, I speak as my understanding instructs me, and as mine honesty puts it to utterance.

Cam. Sicilia cannot show herself over-kind to Bohemia. They were trained together in their childhoods; and there rooted betwixt them then such an affection, which cannot choose but branch now. Since their more mature dignities, and royal necessities, made separation of their society, their encounters, though not personal, have been so royally attorney'd, with interchange of gifts, letters, loving embassies, that they have seemed to be together, though absent, shoch hands, as over a vast, and embraced, as it were, from the ends of opposite winds. The heavens continue their loves!

ARCH. I think, there is not in the world eit malice, or matter, to alter it. You have an unspeakable comfort of your young prince Mamillius: it gentleman of the greatest promise that ever came in my note.

Cam. I very well agree with you in the hopes him. It is a gallant child; one that, indeed, phy the subject, makes old hearts fresh: they, that w on crutches ere he was born, desire yet their lift see him a man.

Arch. Would they else be content to die?

Cam. Yes; if there were no other excuse why I should desire to live.

Arch. If the king had no son they would desire live on crutches till he had one.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The Same. A Room of State in the Palace.

Enter Leontes, Polixenes, Hermione, Mamillius, Camillo, and Attendants.

Pol. Nine changes of the watery star have been The shepherd's note, since we have left our throne Without a burden: time as long again Would be fill'd up, my brother, with our thanks; And yet we should for perpetuity Go hence in debt: and therefore, like a cipher, Yet standing in rich place, I multiply With one we-thank-you many thousand more That go before it.

Leon. Stay your thanks awhile, And pay them when you part.

Pol. Sir, that's to-mor: I am question'd by my fears, of what may chance, Or breed upon our absence: may there's blow No snapping winds at home, to make us say, "This is put forth too early." Besides, I have st

To tire your royalty.

Leon. We are tougher, brother, than you can put us to 't.

Pol. No longer stay.

Leon. One seven-night longer.

Pol. Very sooth, to-morrow.

Leon. We 'll part the time between 's then; and in that I'll no gain-saying.

Pol. Press me not, beseech you.

There is no tongue that moves none, none! the world,
So seen as yours, could win me: so it should now,
Were there necessity in your request, although
I were needful I denied it. My affaires
Deven drag me homeward; which to hinder,
Were in your love a whip to me, my stay
To you a charge, and trouble: to save both,
Farwell, our brother.

Leon. Tongue-tied, our queen? speak you.

Her. I had thought, sir, to have held my peace, until
You had drawn oaths from him, not to stay. You, sir,
Taker too coldly: tell him, you are sure
As in Bohemia's well: this satisfaction
The bygone day proclaim'd. Say this to him,
He's best from his best ward.

Leon. Well said, Hermione. [He walks apart.]

Her. To tell him longs to see his son were strong:
But let him say so then, and let him go;
But let him swear so, and he shall not stay,
We'll thaw him hence with distast.—[venture
Yet of your royal presence. To Polixenes.] I'll ad
The borrowed of a week. When at Bohemia
You take my lord, I'll give him my commission,
To set him there a month behind the gest²
Pref'd for's parting; yet, good deed, Léontes,
Love thee not a jar ³ of the clock behind
What lady should her lord. You'll stay?

Pol. Nay, but you will?

Her. I may not, verily.

Pol. Verily!

Her. Nay, but you will?

Pol. Am I not, verily.

Her. Verily!

Thou put me off with limber vows; but I,
Erg you would seek to unsear the stars with oaths, ill yet say, "Sir, no going. Verily,
I shall not go: a lady's verity is
A jest a lord's. Will you go yet?
: me to keep you as a prisoner,
As a guest, so you shall pay your feese,
Wit you depart, and save your thanks. How say you?
My prisoner, or my guest? by your dread verily,
Of them you shall be.

Pol. Your guest then, madam: T
: your prisoner should import offending;
Which is for me less easy to commit,
Then you to punish.

Her. Not your jailor, then,
By your kind hostess. Come, I'll question you
Of my lord's tricks, and yours, when you were boys;
You were pretty lordlings then.

Pol. We were, fair queen,
Two lads, that thought there was no more behind,
But such a day to-morrow as to-day,
As to be boy eternal.

Her. Was not my lord the verier wag ⁴ the two?

Pol. We were as twin'd lambs, that did frisk i' the sun,
And bleat the one at th' other: what we chang'd,
Was innocense for innocence; we knew not

The doctrine of ill-doing, nor dream'd
That any did. Had we pursued that life,
And our weak spirits never been higher rard
With stronger blood, we should have answer'd heaven
Boldly " not guilty," the imposition clear'd,
Hereditary ours.

Her. By this we gather,
You have tripp'd since.

Pol. O! my most sacred lady,
Temptations have since then been born to's; for
In those unfedg'd days was my wife a girl;
Your precious self had then not cross'd the eyes
Of my young play-fellow.

Her. Grace to boot! Of this make no conclusion, lest you say,
Your queen and I are devils: yet, go on;
Th' offences we have made you do, we 'll answer;
If you first sim'n'd with us, and that with us
You did continue fault, and that you slipp'd not
With any, but with us.

Leon. Is he won yet? [Coming forward
Her. He'll stay, my lord.

Leon. At my request he would not.

Hermione, my dearest, thou never spok'st
To better purpose.

Her. Never?

Leon. Never, but once.

Her. What? have I twice said well? when was 't before?

I pr'ythee, tell me. Gram's with praise, and make's
As fast as tame things: one good deed, dying tongueless, Slaughters a thousand waiting upon that,
Our praises are our wages: you may ride's
With one soft kiss a thousand furlongs, ere
With spur we clear a acre. But to the good—
My last good deed was to entreat his stay:
What was my first? it has an elder sister,
Or I mistake you: O, would her name were Grace!
But once before I spoke to the purpose: When?
Nay, let me have 't; I long.

Why, that was when
Three crabb'd months had sour'd them selves to death,
Ere I could make thee open thy white hand,
And clap's thyself my love: then didst thou utter
"I am yours for ever."

Her. It is Grace, indeed.—
Why, lo you now, I have spoke to the purpose twice:
The one for ever earn'd a royal husband,
Th' other for some while a friend.

[Giving her hand to Polixenes.

Leon. Too hot, too hot! [Aside.

To mingle friendship far is mingling bloods.
I have tremor cordis on me:—my heart dances,
But not for joy, —not joy.—This entertainment
May a free face put on; derive a liberty
From heartiness, from bounty's fertile bosom,
And well become the agent: 't may, I grant;
But to be paddling palms, and pinching fingers,
As now they are; and making privat'd smiles,
As in a looking-glass: —and then to sigh, 't were
The mort² of the deed: O! that is entertainment
My bosom likes not, nor my brows.—Mamillius,
Art thou my boy?

Mom. Ay, my good lord.

Leon. P feeks?

Why, that's my baweword.¹⁵ What I hast smutch'd thy nose?—

They say, it is a copy out of mine.
Come, captain,
We must be neat; not neat, but cleanly, captain:
And yet the steer, the heifer, and the calf,
Are all call'd neat.—Still virginning!

[Observing Polixenes and Hermione.]
Upon his palm?—How now, you wanton calf?
Art thou my calf?

Mam. Yes, if you will, my lord.

Leon. Thou want'st a rough pash,* and the shoots that I have,
To be full like me:—yet, they say, we are Almost as like as egges: women say so,
That will say any thing: but were they false
As our dead blacks, as wind, as waters; false
As dice are to be wish'd, by one that fixes
No bourn 'twillixt his and mine; yet were it true
To say this boy were like me.—Come, air page,
Look on me with your welkin eyes: sweet villain!
Most dear'st! my collop!—Can thy dam?—may't be Affection? thy intention stab's the centre;
Thine dost make possible things not so held,
Communicat'st with dreams;—(how can this be?)—
With what's unreal thou conceivest art,
And fellow'st nothing. Then, 't is very credent,
Thou may'st co-join with something; and thou dost,
And that beyond commission; and I find it,
And that to the infection of my brain's,
And hardening of my brows.

Pol. What means Sicilia?

Her. He something seems unsettled.

Pol. How, my lord!

Leon. What cheer? how is't with you, best brother?

[Holing his forehead.]

Her. You look,
As if you held a brow of much distraction:
Are you mov'd, my lord?

Leon. No, in good earnest.—
How sometimes nature will betray its folly, [Aside.]
Its tenderness, and make itself a pastime
To harder bosoms! Looking on the lines [To them.]*
Of men's face, my thoughts I did recall
Twenty-three years, and saw myself unbeeched,
In my green velvet coat; my dagger muzzled,
Lest it should bite its master, and so prove,
As ornaments oft do, too dangerous.
How like, methought, I then was to this kernel,
This squash,* this gentleman.—Mine honest friend,
Will you take egges for money?*

Mam. No, my lord, I'll fight.

Leon. You will? why, happy man be his dole!*

My brother.

Are you so fond of your young prince, as we
Do seem to be of ours?

Pol. If at home, sir,
He's all my exercise, my mirth, my matter:
Now my sworn friend, and then mine enemy;
My parasite, my soldier, statesman, all.
He makes a July's day short as December;
And with his varying childless cures in me
Thoughts that would thicken my blood.

Leon. Didst perceive it?

Pol. Of course.

Leon. Office'd with me. We two will walk, my lord,
And leave you to your graver steps.—Hermione,

How thou lov'st us, show in our brother's welcome:
Let what is dear in Sicily, be cheap.
Next to thyself, and my young rover, he's Apparent to my heart.

Her. If you would seek us,
We are yours i'the garden: shall'st attend you there?

Leon. To your own bents dispose you; you'll be found,
Be you beneath the sky.—[Aside.] I am angling now,
Though you perceive me not how I give line,
Go to, go to!
How she holds up the neb, the bill to him;
And Lord Leven with the boldness of a wife
To her allowing husband. Gone already!

[Exeunt Polixenes, Hermione, and Attendants.
Inch-thick, knee-deep, o'er head and ears a fork'd one!—
Go play, boy, play;—thy mother plays, and I
Play too, but so disgrace'd a part, whose issue
Will hiss me to my grave: contemp and clamour
Will be my knell.—Go play, boy, play.—There have been,
Or I am much deceiv'd, cuckolds ere now;
And many a man there is, (even at this present,
Now, while I speak this) holds his wife by th' arm,
That little thinks she has been stu'd in 's absence,
And his pond fish'd by his next neighbour, by Sir Smile, his neighbour. Nay, there 's comfort in't,
While other men have gates, and those gates open'd,
As mine, against their will. Should all despair
That have revoluted wives, the tenth of mankind
Would hang themselves. Physic for 't there is none:
It is a heavenly planet, that will strike
Where 't is predominant; and 't is powerful, think it,
From east, west, north, and south: be it concluded,
No barricado for a belly: know it;
It will let in and out the enemy,
With bag and baggage. Many a thousand on 's
Have the disease, and feel not.—How now, boy?

Mam. I am like you, they say.

Leon. Why, that's some comfort.

What Camillo there?

Cam. Ay, my good lord.

Leon. Go play, Mamilius. Thou'rt an honest man.

[Exit Mamilius.

Camillo, this great sir will yet stay longer.

Cam. You had much ado to make his anchor hold:
When you cast out, it still came home.

Leon. Didst note it?

Cam. He would not stay at your petitions; made
His business more material.

Leon. Didst perceive it?

They're here with me already;—whispering, rounding.

"Sicilia is a"—so forth. 'Tis far gone,
When I shall gust it last.—How came 't, Camillo.
That he did stay?

Cam. At the good queen's entreaty.

Leon. At the queen's be: good should be pertinent;
But so it is, it is not. Was this taken

THE WINTER’S TALE.

Of head-piece extraordinary? lower messes, 1
Puchars are to this business purblind: say.

Cam. Business, my lord? I think, most understand Bosnia stays here longer.

Leon. Ha?

Cam. Stays here longer.

Leon. Ay, but why?

Cam. To satisfy your highness, and the entreaties
Of our most gracious mistress.

Leon. Satisfy
The entreaties of your mistress?—satisfy?
Let me suffice. I have must needs, Camillo,
With all the nearest things to my heart, as well
My chamber-councils, wherein, priest-like, thou
Hast cleans’d my bosom: I from thee depart’d Thy penitent reform’d; but we have been Deci’d in thy integrity, deci’d
In which seems so.

Cam. Be it forbid, my lord!

Leon. To hide upon’t,—thou art not honest; or,
If thou inclin’st that way, thou art a coward,
While I am honest behind, restraining
From course requir’d; or else thou must be counted
A servant graft’d in my serious trust,
And therein negligent; or else a fool,
That seest a game play’d home, the rich stake drawn,
And tak’st it all for jest.

Cam. My gracious lord,
I may be negligent, foolish, and fearful:
In every one of these no man is free,
But that his inﬁnite doings of the world, a
Sometime puts forth. In your affairs, my lord,
If ever I were willful-negligent,
It was my folly; if industriously
I play’d the fool, it was my negligence,
Not weighing well the end; if ever fearful
To do a thing, where I the issue doubted,
Whereof the execution did cry out
Against the non-performance, it was a fear
Amidst the non-performance, it was a fear
That the non-performance infects the wisest. These, my lord,
Are such allow’d infirmities, that honesty
Is not secure of: but, beseech your grace,
Be plainer with me: let me know my trespass
By its own visage; if I then deny it,
T is none of mine.

Leon. Have not you seen, Camillo,
(But that’s past doubt; you have, or your eye-glass
Is thicker than a cuckold’s horn) or heard,
(For it is so apparent, rumour
Cannot be mute) or thought; (for cogitation
Sends not in that man that does not think it) 2
My wife is slippery? If thou wilt confess,
Or else be impulsively negative,
To have no eyes, nor ears, nor thought, then say,
My wife’s a hobbyhorse; deserves a name
As rank as any ﬂax-wench, that puts to
Before her thrift-plight: say ’t, and justify ’t.

Cam. I would not be a stander-by, to hear
My sovereign mistress clouded so, without
My present vengeance taken. Show me my heart,
I’ll never speak what did become you less
That this: which to reiterate, were sin
To deep as that, though true.

Leon. Is whispering nothing?
Heaving cheek to cheek? is meeting noses?
Being with inside lip? stopping the career
Of laughter with a sigh? (a note inﬁnable
Of breaking honesty) horning foot on foot?
Skulking in corners? wishing clocks more swift?
Hours, minutes? noon, midnight? and all eyes blind
With the pin and web, 3 but theirs, theirs only; 4
That would unseen be wicked? is this nothing?
Why, then the world, and all that is in’t, is nothing; 5
The covering sky is nothing; Bohemia nothing;
My wife is nothing; nor nothing have these nothings,
If this be nothing.

Cam. Good my lord, be curd
Of this diseas’d opinion, and betimes;
For ’t is most dangerous.

Leon. Say, it be; ’t is true.

Cam. No, no, my lord.

Leon. It is; you lie, you lie:
I say, thouliest, Camillo, and I hate thee;
Proneucle thee a gross lout, a mindless slave,
Or else a hovering temperizer, that
Canst with thine eyes at once see good and evil,
Inclining to them both: Were my wife’s liver
Infected as her life, she would not live
Dying running of one glass.

Who does infect her?

Leon. Why he, that wears her like a 5 medal, hanging
About his neck, Bohemia: who—if I
Had servants true about me, that bare eyes
To see alike mine honour as their proﬁt,
Their own particular throats, they would do that
Which should undo more doing: ay, and thou,
His cup-bearer,—whom I from meaner form
Have bench’d, and rear’d to worship, who may’st see Plainly, as heaven sees earth, and earth sees heaven,
How I am galled,—mightst bespeice a cup,
To give mine enemy a lasting wink,
Which draught to me were cordial.

Cam. Sure, my lord,
I could do this, and that with no rash potion,
But with a lingering dram, that should not work
Maliciously, like poison; but I cannot Believe this crack to be in my dread mistress,
So sovereignly being honourable.
I have lov’d thee—.

Leon. Make that thy question, and go rot!

Dost think, I am so muddy, so unsettled,
To appoint myself in this vexation? sully
The purity and whiteness of my sheets,
(Which to preserve is sleep; which, being spotted,
Is goats, thorns, nettles, tails of wasps,) 6
Give scandal to the blood o’ the prince, my son,
(Who, I do think is mine, and love as mine)
Without ripe moving to ’t? Would I do this?
Could man so bleich? 7

Cam. I must believe you, sir: I do;
And will fetch off Bohemia for ’t;
Provided, that when he’s remov’d, your highness
Will take again your queen, as yours at first,
Even for your son’s sake; and thereby for sealing
The injury of tongues, in courts and kingdoms
Known and allied to yours.

Leon. Thou dost advise me,
Even so as I mine own course have set down.
I’ll give no blemish to her honour, none.

Cam. My lord,
Go then; and with a countenance as clear
As friendship wears at feasts, keep with Bohemia,
And with your queen. I am his cup-bearer;
If from me he have wholesome beverage,
Account me not your servant.

1 foot, pl. 1 foot. 2 lower clases. 3 Ham-strings. 4 An old name for a cutthroat in army. 5 A medal. 6 Start, or set off.
Leon. This is all:
Do't, and thou hast the one half of my heart;
Do't not, thou split'st thine own.
Cam. I'll do't, my lord.
Leon. I will seem friendly, as thou hast advis'd me.
[Exit.

Cam. O, miserable lady!—But, for me,
What case stand I in? I must be the poisoner
Of good Polixenes; and my ground to do't
Is the obedience to a master; one,
Who, in rebellion with himself, will have
All that are his so too.—To do this deed,
Promotion follows; if I could find example
Of thousands that had struck anointed kings,
And flourish'd after, I'd not do't; but since
Nor brass, nor stone, nor parchment, bears not one,
Let villany itself forswear't. I must Forsake the court: so do't, or no, is certain
To me a break-neck. Happy star, reign now!
Here comes Bohemia.

Enter Polixenes.

Pol. This is strange. Methinks,
My favour here begins to warp. Not speak?—
Good-day, Camillo.

Cam. Hail, most royal sir! What is the news i' the court?

Cam. None rare, my lord.

Pol. The king hath on him such a countenance,
As he had lost some province, and a region
Lov'd as he loves himself: even now I met him
With customary compliment, when he,
Wafting his eyes to the contrary, and falling
A lip of much contempt, speeds from me, and
So leaves me to consider what is breeding
That changes thus his manners.

Cam. I dare not know, my lord.

Pol. How! dare not? do not! Do you know, and dare not
Be intelligent to me? 'Tis thereabouts;
For, to yourself, what you do know, you must,
And cannot say, you dare not. Good Camillo,
Your chang'd complexities are to me a mirror,
Which shows me mine chang'd too; for I must be A party in this alteration, finding Myself thus alter'd with 't.

Cam. There is a sickness
Which puts some of us in distemper; but I cannot name the disease, and it is caught
Of you, that yet are well.

Pol. How caught of me?
Make me not sighted like the basilisk;
I have look'd on thousands, who have sped the better
By my regard, but kill'd none so. Camillo,—
As you are certainly a gentleman; therto
Clerk-like, experience'd, which no less adorns
Our gentry than our parents' noble names,
In whose success we are gentle.—I beseech you,
If you know aught which does behave my knowledge
Thereof to be inform'd, imprison it not
In ignorant concealment.

Cam. I may not answer.

Pol. A sickness caught of me, and yet I well?
I must be answer'd.—Dost thou hear, Camillo,
I conjure thee, by all the parts of man
Which honour does acknowledge,—whereof the least
Is not this suit of mine,—that thou declare
What incidency thou dost guess of harm
Is creeping toward me; how far off, how near;
Which way to be prevented, if to be;

If not, how best to bear it.

Cam. Sir, I will tell you;
Since I am charg'd in honour, and by him
That I think honourable. Therefore, mark my counsel,
Which must be even as swiftly follow'd, as I mean to utter it, or both yourself and I
Care'd 'tis lost," and so good-night.

Pol. On, good Camillo.

Cam. I am appointed him to murder you.

Pol. By whom, Camillo?

Cam. By the king.

Pol. For what?

Cam. He thinks, nay, with all confidence he swears,
As he had seen 't, or been an instrument
To vice' you to 't—that you have touch'd his queen Forbiddingly.

Pol. O! then my best blood turn
To an infected jelly, and my name
Be yok'd with his that did betray the Best!
Turn then my freshness reputation
To a savour, that may strike the dullest nostril,
Where I arrive; and my approach be shunn'd,
Nay, hated too, worse than the great'st infection
That e'er was heard, or read!

Cam. Swear this though over
By each particular star in heaven,

Pol. By all their influences, you may as well
Forbid the sea for to obey the moon,
As, or by oath, remove, or counsel, shake,
The fabric of his folly, whose foundation
Is pil'd upon his faith, and will continue
The standing of his body.

Pol. How should this grow?

Cam. I know not; but, I am sure, 't is safer to Avoid what's grown, than to question how 't is born.
If therefore you dare trust my honesty,
That lies enclosed in this trunk, which you
Shall bear along impawnd, away to-night.
Your followers I will whisper to the business;
And will, by twos and threes, at several posterns, Clear them o' the city. For myself, I'll put
My fortunes to your service, which are here
By this discovery lost. Be not uncertain;
For, by the honour of my parents, I
Have utter'd truth, which if you seek to prove,
I dare not stand by; nor shall you be safer
Than one condemned by the king's own mouth,
Therein his execution sworn.

Pol. I do believe thee:
I saw his heart in 's face. Give me thy hand:
Be pilot to me, and thy places shall Still neighbour mine. My ships are ready, and My people did expect my hence departure
Two days ago.—This jealousy
Is for a precious creature: as she's rare,
Must it be great; and, as his person's mighty,
Must it be violent; and as he does compose
He is dishonour'd by a man which ever
Profess'd to him, why, his revenge must
In that be made more bitter. Fear o'erershades me:
Good expedition be my friend: heaven comfort*
The gracious queen, part of his dream, but nothing
Of his ill-ta'en suspicion! Come, Camillo:
I will respect thee as a father, if,
Thou bear'st my life off hence. Let us avoid.

Cam. It is in mine authority to command
The keys of all the posterns. Please your highness
To take the urgent hour. Come, sir: away!

[Exeunt

SCENE I.—The Same.

Enter HERMIONE, MAMILLIUS, and Ladies.

Her. Take the boy to you: he so troubles me,
'Tis past enduring.

1 Lady. Come, my gracious lord:
Shall I be your play-fellow?

Mom. No, I'll none of you.

1 Lady. Why, my sweet lord?

Mom. You'll kiss me hard, and speak to me as if I were a baby still.—I love you better.

2 Lady. And why so, my lord?

Mom. Not for because
Your brows are blacker; yet black brows, they say;
Become some women best, so that there be not Too much hair there, but in a semi-circle,
Or a half-moon made with a pen.

2 Lady. Who taught this?

Mom. I learn'd it out of women's faces.—Pray now,
What colour are your eyebrows?

1 Lady. Blue, my lord.

Mom. Nay, that's a mock: I have seen a lady's nose
That has been blue, but not her eyebrows.

2 Lady. Hark ye.

The queen, your mother, rounds apace: we shall Present our services to a fine new prince,
One of these days, and then you'd wanton with us,
If we would have you.

1 Lady. She is spread of late
As a goodly bulk: good time encounter her!

Her. What wisdom stirs amongst you? Come, sir;
now
I am for you again: pray you, sit by us,
And tell us a tale.

Mom. Merry, or sad, shall it be?

Her. As merry as you will.

Mom. A sad tale's best for winter.

Her. Let's have that, good sir.

Come on; sit down:—come on, and do your best.
To fright me with your sprites: you're powerful at it.

Mom. There was a man,—

Her. Nay, come; sit down; then on.

Mom. Dwelt by a church-yard.—I will tell it softly;
Ye'd cricket shall not hear it.

Her. Come on then,

And give't me in mine ear.

Enter Lontes, Antigonus, Lords, and others.

Leon. Was he met there? his train? Camillo with him?

1 Lord. Behind the tuft of pines I met them: never Saw I men soor so on their way. I eyed them
Even to their ships.

Leon. How bless'd am I

[Aside.]

In my just censure! in my true opinion!—
Alack, for lesser knowledge!—How accurate,
In being so blest!—There may be in the cup
A spider steep'd, and one may drink a part.
And yet partake no venom, for his knowledge
Is not infected; but if one present
The abhor'd ingredient to his eye, made known,
How he hath drunk, he cracks his gorge; his sides,
With violent hefts.—I have drunk, and seen the spider.
Camillo was his help in this, his pander.

There is a plot against my life, my crown:
THE WINTER'S TALE.

ACT II.

Leon. No; if I mistake
In those foundations which I build upon,
The centre is not big enough to bear
A school-boy's top.—Away with her to prison!
He, who shall speak for her, is afar off guilty,
But that he speaks.

Her. There's some ill planet reigns:
I must be patient, till the heavens look
With an aspect more favourable.—Good my lords,
I am not prone to weeping, as our sex
Commonly are, the want of which vain dew,
Perchance, shall dry your pities; but I have
That honourable grief lodg'd here, which burns
Worse than tears drown. Beseech you all, my lords,
With thoughts so qualified as your charities
Shall best instruct you, measure me;—and so
The king's will be performed.

Leon. Shall I be heard? [To the Guards.
Her. Who is't that goes with me?—Beseach your highness,
My women may be with me; for you see,
My plight requires it. Do not weep, good fools;
There is no cause: when you shall know, your mistress
Has deserv'd prison, then abound in tears,
As I come out: this action, I now go on,
For my better grace.—Adieu, my lord:
I never wish'd to see you sorry: now,
I trust, I shall.—My women, come; you have leave.

Leon. Go, do our bidding: hence!

[Exeunt Queen and Ladies.

1 Lord. Beseach your highness, call the queen again.

Ant. Be certain what you do, sir, lest your justice
Prove violence; in the which three great ones suffer,
Yourself, your queen, your son.

1 Lord. For her, my lord, I dare my life lay down, and will do 't, sir,
Please you 't accept it, that the queen is spotless
I' the eyes of heaven, and to you: I mean,
In this which you accuse her.

Ant. If it prove
She's otherwise, I'll keep me stable' where
I lodge my wife; I'll go in couples with her;
Than when I feel, and see her, no further trust her;
For every inch of woman in the world,
Ay, every dram of woman's flesh, is false,
If she be.

Leon. Hold your peace! 1

1 Lord. Good my lord,
Ant. It is for you we speak, not for ourselves.
You are abuse'd, and by some putter-on,
That will be damn'd for 't; would I knew the villain,
I would lamback' him. Be she honour-flaw'd,—
I have three daughters: the eldest is eleven,
The second, and the third, nine, and some five;
If this prove true, they'll pay for 't: by mine honour,
I'll bind them all: fourteen they shall not see,
To bring false generations: they are co-heirs,
And I had rather glib myself, than they Should not produce fair issue.

Leon. Cease! no more.
You smell this business with a sense as cold
As is a dead man's nose: but I do see 't, and feel 't,
As you feel doing thus, and see withal
The instruments that feel.

Ant. If it be so,
We need no grave to bury honesty:
There's not a grain of it the face to sweeten
Of the whole dunyng earth.

Leon. What! lack I credit?

1 Lord. I had rather you did lack, than I, my lord,
Upon this ground; and more it would content me
To have her honour true, than your suspicion,
Be blam'd for 't how you might.

Leon. Why, what need we Commune with you of this, but rather follow
Our forceful instigation? Our prerogative
 Calls not your counsels, but our natural goodness
Imparts this; which, if you (or stupified,
Or seeming so in skill) cannot, or will not,
Relish a truth like us, inform yourselves,
We need no more of your advice: the matter,
The loss, the gain, the ordering on 't, is all Properly ours.

Ant. And I wish, my liege,
You had only in your silent judgment tried it,
Without more overture. . .

Leon. How could that be?
Either thou art most ignorant by age,
Or thou wert born a fool. Camillo's flight,
Added to their familiarity,
(Which was as gross as ever touch'd conjecture,
That lack'd sight only, nought for approbation
But only seeing, all other circumstances
Made up to the deed) doth push on this proceeding:
Yet, for a greater confirmation,
(For in an act of this importance 'twere
Most piteous to be wild) I have despatch'd in post,
To sacred Delphos, to Apollo's temple,
Cleomenes and Dion, whom you know
Of stuff'd sufficiency. Now, from the oracle
They will bring all; whose spiritual counsel had,
Shall stop, or spur me. Have I done well?

1 Lord. Well done, my lord.

Leon. Though I am satisfied, and need no more Than what I know, yet shall the oracle
Give rest to the minds of others; such as he,
Whose ignorant credulity will not Come up to the truth. So have we thought it good,
From our free person she should be confin'd,
Lest that the treachery of the two fled hence
Be left her to perform. Come, follow us:
We are to speak in public; for this business
Will raise us all.

Ant. [Aside.] To laughter, as I take it,
If the good truth were known.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The Same. The outer Room of a Prison.

Enter Paulina and Attendants.

Paul. The keeper of the prison,—call to him:
[Exit an Attendant

Let him have knowledge who I am.—Good lady!
No court in Europe is too good for thee,
What dost thou then in prison?—Now, good sir
Re-enter Attendant, with the Jailer.

You know me, do you not?
Jailer. For a worthy lady,
And one whom much I honour.

Paul. pray you then,
Conduct me to the queen.

Jailer. I may not, madam: to the contrary
I have express commandment.

Paul. Here's ado,
To look up honesty and honour from you.

'Th' access of gentle visitors!—Is 't lawful, pray you,
To see her women? any of them? Emilia?

Jailer. So please you, madam,
To put apart these your attendants, I Shall bring Emilia forth.
Paul. I pray now, call her.—[Exeunt Attend.]

Jailer. And, madam, I must be present at your conference.

Paul. Well, be’t so, pr’ythee. [Exit Jailer.

Here’s such ado to make no stain a stain,
As passes colouring.

Re-enter Jailer, with EMILIA.

Dear gentlewoman,

How fares our gracious lady?

Emil. As well as she can, and so forlorn, may hold together. On her frights, and griefs, (Which never tender lady hath borne greater)
She is, something before her time, deliver’d.

Paul. A boy?

Emil. A daughter; and a goodly babe,
Lusty, and like to live: the queen receives
Mach comfort in’t, says, “My poor prisoner,
I am innocent as you.”

Paul. I dare be sworn:
These dangerous, unsанe’ lunes i’ the king, beshear them!

He must be told on’t, and he shall: the office
Becomes a woman best; I’ll take’t upon me.
If I prove honey-mouth’d, let my tongue blister,
And never to my red-lock’d anger be
The trumpet any more.—Pray you, Emilia,
Command my best obedience to the queen:
If she dares trust me with her little babe,
I’ll shew’t the king, and undertake to be
Her advocate to the loud’d: we do not know
How he may soften at the sight o’ the child:
The silence often of pure innocence
Pernades, when speaking fails.

Emil. Most worthy madam,
Your honour, and your goodness, are so evident,
That your free undertaking cannot miss
A thriving issue: there is no lady living
So meet for this great errand. Please your ladyship
To visit the next room, I’ll presently
Acquaint the queen of your most noble offer,
Who, but to-day, hammer’d of this design,
But durst not tempt a minister of honour,
Lest she should be demised.

Paul. Tell her, Emilia,
I’ll use that tongue I have: if wit flow from it,
As boldness from my bosom, let it not be doubted
I shall do good.

Emil. Now, be you blest for it!
I’ll to the queen.—Please you, come something nearer.

Jailer. Madam, is’t please the queen to send the babe,
I knew not what I should incur to pass it,
Having no warrant.

Paul. You need not fear it, sir:
The child was prisoner to the womb, and is,
By law and process of great nature, thence Freeth and enfanchised: not a party to
The anger of the king, nor guilty of,
If any be, the trespass of the queen.

Jailer. I do believe it.

Paul. Do not you fear: upon mine honour, I
Will stand bêtwixt you and danger. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The Same. A Room in the Palace.

Enter LEONTES, ANTIGONUS, LORDS, and other Attendance.

Leom. Nor night, nor day, nor rest. It is but weakness
To bear the matter thus, mere weakness. If

The cause were not in being, part o’ the cause,
She, th’ adultress; for the harlot king
Is quite beyond mine arm, out of the blank
And level of my brain, plot-’droof; but she
I can hook to: say, that she were gone,
Given to the fire, a moistry of my rest
Might come to me again.—Who’s there?—

1 Atten. My lord.

Leom. How does the boy?

1 Atten. He took good rest to-night:
’Tis hop’d, his sickness is discreet’d.

Leom. To see his nobleness! Conceiving the dishonour of his mother,
He straighten declar’d, droop’d, took it deeply,
Fusten’d and fix’d the shame on’t in himself,
Throw off his spirit, his appetite, his sleep,
And downright languish’d.—Leave me solely:—go,
See how he fares. [Exit Atten. ]—Fie, fie! no thought
Of him:—

The very thought of my revenges that way
Recoil upon me: in himself too mighty,
And in his parts, his alliance:—let him be,
Until a time may serve: for present vengeance,
Take it on her. Camillo and POLIZENES,
Laugh at me; make their pastime at my sorrow:
They should not laugh, if I could reach them; nor Shall she, within my power.

Enter PAULINA, behind? with a Child.

1 Lord. You must not enter.

Paul. Nay, rather, good my lords, be second to me.
Fear you my tyrannous passion more, alas,
Than the queen’s life? a gracious innocent soul,
More free than he is jealous.

Ant. That’s enough.

1 Atten. Madam, he hath not slept to-night; commanded
None should come at him.

Paul. Not so hot, good sir:
I come to bring him sleep. ’Tis such as you,—
That creep like shadows by him, and do sigh
At each his needless heavings, such as you
Nourish the cause of his awaking: I
Do come with words as medicinal as true,
Honest as either, to purge him of that humour,
That presses him from sleep.

Leom. What noise there, ho?—Paul. No noise, my lord; but needful conference,
[Coming forward.]

About some gossip for your highness.

Leom. How?—

Away with that audacious lady. Antigonus,
I charg’d thee, that she should not come about me:
I knew she would.

Ant. I told her so, my lord,
On your displeasure’s peril, and on mine,
She should not visit you.

Leom. What! canst not rule her?—Paul. From all dishonesty he can: in this, (Unless he take the course that you have done, Commit me for committing honour) trust it,
He shall not rule me.

Ant. Lo, you now! you hear.

When she will take the rein, I let her run;
But she’ll not stumble.

Paul. Good my liege, I come,—
And, I beseech you, bear me, who professes
Myself your loyal servant, your physician,
Your most obedient counsellor, yet that dares
Less appear so in comforting your evils,
The Winter's Tale

Act II

Ant. Hang all the husbands
That cannot do that feat, you'll leave yourself
Hardly one subject.

Leon. Once more, take her hence.

Paul. A most unworthy and unnatural lord
Can do no more.

Leon. I'll ha' thee burn'd.

Paul. I care not.
It is an heretic that makes the fire,
Not she which burns in 't. I'll not call you tyrant;
But this most cruel usage of your queen
(Not able to produce more accusation
Than your own weak hing'd fancy) something savours
Of tyranny, and will ignoble make you,
Yes, scandalous to the world

Leon. On your allegiance,
Out of the chamber with her. Were I a tyrant,
Where were her life? She durst not call me so,
If she did know me one. Away with her!
Paul. I pray you, do not push me; I'll be gone.
Look to your babe, my lord; 'tis yours: Jove send her
A better guiding spirit! —What need these hands? —
You, that are thus so tender o'er his follies,
Will never do him good, not one of you.

Paul. So, so: — farewell; we are gone.

[Exit Leon. Thou, traitor, hast set on thy wife to this.
My child? away with 't! — even thou, that hast
A heart so tender o'er it, take it hence,
And see it instantly consum'd with fire;
Even thou, and none but thee. Take it up straight.
Within this hour bring me word 't is done,
(And by good testimony) or I'll seize thy life,
With what thou else call'st thine. If thou refuse,
And wilt encounter with my wrath, say so;
The bastard-brains with these thy proper hands
Shall I dash out. Go, take it to the fire,
For thou sett'st on thy wife.

Ant. I did not, sir:
These lords, my noble fellows, if they please,
Can clear me in 't.

1 Lord. We can: my royal liege,
He is not guilty of her coming hither.

Leon. You're liars all.

1 Lord. Beseech your highness, give us better credit.
We have always truly serv'd you, and beseech you
So to esteem of us; and on our knees we beg,
(As recompense of our dear services,
Past, and to come) that you do change this purpose;
Which, being so horrible, so bloody, must Lead on to some foul issue. We all kneel.

Leon. Am I a feather for each wind that blows?
Shall I live on, to see this bastard kneel
And call me father? Better burn it now,
Than curse it then. But, be it; let it live: —
It shall not neither. — You, sir, come you hither;

[To Antigonus.]

You, that have been so tenderly officious
With lady Margery, your midwife, there,
To save this bastard's life, — for 't is a bastard,
So sure as thy board's grey,—what will you undertake
To save this brat's life?

Ant. Any thing, my lord,
That my ability may undergo,
And nobleness impose: at least, thus much;
I'll pawn the little blood which I have left,
To save the innocent; any thing possible
Leon. It shall be possible. Swear by this sword
Thou wilt perform my bidding.
SCENE II.

THE WINTER'S TALE.

I will, my lord.

Leon.  Mark, and perform it, seest thou; for the fail
Of any point in 't shall not only be
Death to thyself, but to thy lewd-tongued wife,
Whom for this time we pardon.  We enjoin thee,
As thou art liegeman to us, that thou carry
Thy female bastard hence; and that thou bear it
To some remote and desert place, quite out
Of our dominions; and that there thou leave it,
Without more mercy, to its own protection,
As favour of the climate.  As by strange fortune
I came to us, I do in justice charge thee,
On thy soul's peril and thy body's torture,
That thou commend it strangely to some place,
Where chance may nurse, or end it.  Take it up.

Ant.  I swear to do this, though a present death
Had been more merciful.  —Come on, poor babe:

Tak'ing it up!

Some powerful spirit instruct the kites and ravens,
To be thy nurses.  Wolves, and bears, they say,
Casing their savageness aside, have done
His offices of pity. —Sir, be prosperous

In more than this deed doth require! —And blessing
Against this cruelty fight on thy side,
Poor thing, condemn'd to loss!  [Exit with the Child.

Leon.  No; I'll not rear

Another's issue.

Ant.  Please your highness, poets
From those you sent to the oracle are come
An hour since: Cleomenes and Dion,
Being well arriv'd from Delphos, are both landed,
Hasting to the court.

Leon.  So please you, sir, their speed
Hath been beyond account.

Leon.  Twenty-three days
They have been absent: 'tis good speed, foretells,
The great Apollo suddenly will have
The truth of this appear.  Prepare you, lords:
Summon a session, that we may arraign
Our most disloyal lady; for, as she hath
Been publicly accus'd, so shall she have
A just and open trial.  While she lives,
My heart will be a burden to me.  Leave me,
And think upon my bidding.  [Exeunt

ACT III.

SCENE I.  —The Same.  A Street in some Town.

Enter Cleomenes and Dion.

Cle.  The climate's delicate, the air most sweet,
Fertile the isle, the temple much surpassing
The common praise it bears.

Dion.  I shall report,
For me it catch'd me, the celestial habits,
And think I should term them) and the reverence
Or the grave wearer, O, the sacrifice!
How ceremonious, solemn, and unearthly!
It was the offering!

Cle.  But, of all, the burst
And the ear-deafening voice o' the oracle,
And Jove's thunder, so surpris'd my sense,
That I was nothing.

Dion.  If th' event o' the journey
Proves as successful to the queen, O, be it so!
As it hath been to us rare, pleasant, speedy,
The time is worth the use on't.

Cle.  Great Apollo,
Turn all to the best!  These proclamations,
Sett'ring faults upon Hermione,
Were like

Dion.  The violent carriage of it
Will clear, or end, the business: when the oracle,
(Thus by Apollo's great divine seal'd up)
Shall the contents discover, something rare,
Let us then, with rush to knowledge. —Go, fresh horses;

And gracious be the issue.  [Exeunt

SCENE II.  —The Same.  A Court of Justice.

Enter Leontes, Lords, and Officers.

Leon.  This session's (to our great grief we pronounce)
Even to the guilt, or the purgation. —
Produce the prisoner.

Offi.  It is his highness' pleasure, that the queen
Appear in person here in court.  [Silence.

Enter Hermione, to her trial, guarded; Paulina and Ladies attending.

Leon.  Read the indictment.

Offi.  "Hermione, queen to the worthy Leontes,
King of Sicilia, thou art here accused and arraigned
Of high treason, in committing adultery with Polixenes,
King of Bohemia; and conspiring with Camillo to take Away the life of our sovereign lord the king, thy royal
Husband: the pretense whereof being by circumstances
Partly laid open, thou, Hermione, contrary to the faith
And allegiance of a true subject, didst counsel and aid
Them, for their better safety, to fly away by night."

Her.  Since what I am to say, must be but that Which contradicts my accusation, and
The testimony on my part no other
But what comes from myself, it shall scarce boast me
To say "Not guilty:" mine integrity,
Being counted falsehood, shall, as I express it,
Be so receiv'd.  But thus: —If powers divine
Behold our human actions, (as they do)
I doubt not, then, but innocence shall make False accusation blush, and tyranny
Tremble at patience. —You, my lord, best know
(Who least will seem to do so) my past life
Hath been so constant, as chaste, as true,
As I am now unhappy; which is more
Than history can pattern, though devi'd,
And play'd to take spectators.  For behold me, my
A fellow of the royal bed, which owe'd
A moiety of the throne, a great king's daughter,
The mother to a hopeful prince, here standing
To prove and talk for life, and honour, 'fore
Who please to come and hear.  For life, I prize it
As I weigh grief, which I would spare: for honour,
'Tis a derivative from me to mine,
And only that I stand for.  I appeal

1See in f.a.  2 Printed as a stage direction in the 1st folio; the other omit it.  Mod. ed., with Malones, usually add it to the previous 3The words "tc her trial," not in f.a.  4 Omni.
To your own conscience, sir, before Polixenes
Came to your court, how I was in your grace,
How merited to be so; since he came,
With what encounter so uncurrent I
Have strayed still appear thus: if one jot beyond
The bound of honour, or, in act, or will,
That way inclining, harden'd be the hearts
Of all that hear me, and my near'st of kin
Cry, "Fie!" upon my grave.

Leon. I ne'er heard ye'd,
That any of these border vices wanted
Less impudence to gainsay what they did,
Than to perform it first.

Her. That's true enough:
Though 'tis a saying, sir, not due to me.

Leon. You will not own it.

Her. More than mistress of,
Which comes to me in name of fault, I must not
At all acknowledge. For Polixenes,
[Whom with I am accus'd] I do confess,
I lov'd him, as in honour he requir'd,
With such a kind of love as might become
A lady like me; with a love, even such,
So strong and so yourself composed:
Which not to have done, I think, had been in me
Both disobedience and ingratitude
To you, and toward your friend, whose love had spoke,
Even since it could speak from an infant, freely,
That it was yours. Now, for conspiracy,
I know not how it tastes, though it be dish'd
For me to try how: all I know of it
Is, that Camillo was an honest man;
And why he left your court, the gods themselves,
Wotting no more than I, are ignorant.

Leon. You knew of his departure, as you know
What you have undertook to do in's absence.

Her. Sir, you speak a language that I understand not:
My life stands in the level of your dreams,
Which I'll lay down.

Leon. Your actions are my dreams:
You had a bastard by Polixenes,
And I but dream'd it.—As you were past all shame,
[Those of your fact are so] set all, all truth,
Which to deny concerns more than avails; for as Thy brat hath been cast out, like itself,
No father owning it, (which is indeed,
More criminal in thee than it) so thou
Shall feel our justice, in whose easiest passage
Look for no less than death.

Her. Sir, spare your threats:
The bug, which you would fright me with, I seek.
To me can life be no commodity:
The crown and comfort of my life, your favour,
I do give lost; for I do feel it gone,
But know not how it went. My second joy,
And first-fruits of my body, from his presence
I am barr'd, like one infectious. My third comfort,
Starr'd most unluckily, is from my breast,
The innocent milk in its most innocent mouth,
Hailed out to murder: myself on every post
Proclaim'd a strumpet: with immodest hatred,
The child-bed privilege denied, which longs
To women of all fashion; lastly, hurried
Here to this place, 'i the open air, before
I have got strength of limit. Now, my liege,
Tell me what blessings I have here alive,
That I should fear to die? Therefore, proceed.
But yet hear this; mistake me not.—No: life, stra"d: i. f. e. * is the object at which aim is taken. ^ Of how the queen may speed—the issue.
I prize it not a straw; but for mine honour,
[Which I would bear] if I shall be condemnd'd
Upon surprizes, all proofs sleeping else
But what your jealousies awake, I tell you,
'T is rigour, and not law.—Your honours all,
I do refer me to the oracle:
Apollo be my judge.

1 Lord. This your request
Is altogether just. Therefore, bring forth,
And in Apollo's name, his oracle. [Exeunt Officer.
Her. The emperor of Russia was my father:
O! that he were alive, and here beholding
His daughter's trial; that he did but see
The fineness of my misery, yet with eyes
Of pity, not revenge!

Re-enter Officers, with Cleomenes and Dion.
Offi. You here shall swear upon this sword of justice
That you, Cleomenes and Dion, have Been both at Delphos; and from thence have brought
This seal'd up oracle, by the hand deliver'd
Of great Apollo's priest; and that, since then,
You have not dare'd to break the holy seal,
Nor read the secrets in't.

Cleo. Dion. All this we swear.

Leon. Break up the seals, and read.

Offi. [Reads.] "Hermione is chaste, Polixenes blameless, Camillo a true subject, Lontes a jealous tyrant his innocent babe truly gotten; and the king shall live without an heir, if that which is lost be found."

Lords. Now, blessed be the great Apollo!

Her. Praise.

Leon. Hast thou read truth?

Offi. Ay, my lord; even
As it is here set down.

Leon. There is no truth at all in the oracle.
The sessions shall proceed: this is mere falsehood.

Enter a Servant, in haste.

Serv. My lord the king, the king!

Leon. What is the business?

Serv. O sir! I shall be hated to report it:
The prince your son, with mere conceit and fear
Of the queen's speed, is gone.

Leon. How! gone?

Serv. Is dead. [Hermione weeps
Leon. Apollo's angry, and the heavens themselves
Do strike at my injustice. How now there!

Paul. This news is mortal to the queen.—Let down,
And see what death is doing.

Leon. Take her hence:
Her heart is but o'ercharg'd; she will recover.—
I have too much believed mine own suspicion:—
Beseech you, tenderly apply to her
Some remedies for life.—Apollo, pardon

[Exeunt Paulina and Ladies, with Her
My great profaneness 'gainst thine oracle!—
I'll reconcile me to Polixenes,
Now woo my queen, recall the good Camillo,
Whom I proclaim a man of truth, of mercy;
For, being transported by my jealousies
To bloody thoughts and to revenge, I chose
Camillo for the minister, the poisoner
My friend Polixenes: which had been done,
But that the good mind of Camillo tardied
My swift command; though I with death, and with Reward, did threaten and encourage him,
Not doing it, and being done: he, most humane,
And all'd with honour, to my kingly guest
THE WINTER'S TALE.

[Scene III]

[Exit Paulina.]

Pau. Woe the while! I cut my face, lost my heart, cracking it, seek too!

1 Lord. What fit is this, good lady?

Is lead, or oil? what old, or newer torture
Not I receive, whose every word deserves
To taste of thy most worst? Thy tyranny,
Together working with thy jealouies,-

Fancies too weak for boys, too green and idle
For girls of nine,—O! think, what they have done,
And then run mad, indeed; stark mad, for all
Tis by-gone fooleries were but spices of it.

That thou betray'st Polixenes. 'twas nothing;
That did but show thee of a fool, inconstant,
And damnable ungrateful: nor was 't much,
That wouldst have poison'd good Camillo's honour,
That hadst him kill a king: poor trepasses,
Most monstrous standing by! wherefore I reckon
The casting forth to crows thy baby daughter,

T here or none, or little; though a devil
Would have shed water out of fire, ere don't:

Nor is't directly laid to thee, the death
Of the young prince, whose honourable thoughts
(That arest high for one so tender) cloth the heart
That could conceive a gross and foolish sire
Remark'd his gracious dam: this is not, no,
Lost to thy answer: but the last,—O, lords!

Was I have said, ery, woe!—the queen, the queen,
The sweet'st, dear'st creature's dead; and vengeance

Not depp'd down yet.

1 Lord. The higher powers forbid!

Paul. I say, she's dead; I'll swear 't: if word, nor oath,

Foul not, go and see. If you can bring
Let me, my lord, in her lip, her eye,
Rest outwardly, or breath within, I'll serve you
As I would do the gods.—But, O thou tyrant!
Do not repeat these things, for they are heavier
Than all thy woes can stir; therefore, betake thee
To seeking but despair. A thousand knees
To a thousand years together, naked, fasting,
Upon a barren mountain, and still winter,
In snow perpetual, could not move the gods
To look that way thou wert.

Lom. Go on; go on; that I cast not speak too much: I have deserved
All means to talk their bitterest.

1 Lord. Say no more:

Over the business goes, you have made fault
The boldness of your speech.

Paul. I am sorry for 't: I, Isabel, make, when I shall come to know them,
I repent. Also! I have show'd too much Delicacy of a woman, too is touch'd
In the noble heart. —'What's gone, and what's past help,
Shall be past grief: do not receive affliction'

'petition.' I beseech you: rather
To be punish'd, that have minded you

Of what you should forget. Now, good my liege,
Sir, royal sir, forgive a foolish woman:
The love I bore your queen,—io, fool again!—
I'll speak of her no more, nor of your children,
I'll not remember you of my own lord,
Who is lost too. Take your patience to you,
And I'll say nothing.

Lom. Thou didst speak but well,
When most the truth, which I receive much better,
Than to be pitied of thee. Pr'ythee, bring me
To the dead bodies of my queen, and son.
One grave shall be for both: upon them shall
The causes of their death appear, unto
Our shame perpetual. Once a day I'll visit
The chapel where they lie; and tears shed there Shall be my recreation: so long as nature
Will bear up with this exercise, so long
I daily vow to use it. Come, and lead me
To these sorrows.

SCENE III.—Bohemia. A Desert Country near the Sea.

Enter Antigonus, with the Babe; and a Mariner.

Ant. Thou art perfect, then, our ship hath touch'd upon
The deserts of Bohemia?

Mar. Ay, my lord; and fear
We have landed in ill time: the skies look grimly,
And threaten present blusters. In my conscience,
The heavens with that we have in hand are angry,
Andrown upon us.

Ant. Their sacred wills be done!—Go, get aboard;
Look to thy bark: I'll not be long, before
I call upon thee.

Mar. Make your best haste, and go not Too far in the land: 't is like to be loud weather:
Besides, this place is famous for the creatures
Of prey that keep upon 't.

Ant. Go thou away:
I'll follow instantly.

Mar. I am glad at heart
To be so rid o' the business.

[Exeunt.]

Enter Paulina, with a Woman. Come, poor babe:—
I have heard, (but not belief'd) the spirits o' the dead
May walk again: if such thing be, thy mother
Appeard to me last night, for so'er was dream'd
So like a waking. To me comes a creature,
Sometimes her head on one side, some other,
I never saw a vessel of like sorrow,
So ill'd, and so o'er-running: in pure white robes,
Like very sanctity, she did approach:
My cabin where I lay, thrice bow'd before me,
And, gasping to begin some speech, her eyes
Became two spouts: the fury spent, anon
Did this break from her.— Good Antigonus,
"Since fate, against thy better disposition,
"Hath made thy person for the thrower-out
"Of my poor babe, according to thine oath,
"Places remote enough in Bohemia,
"There wend," and leave it crying; and, for the babe
"Is count'd lost for ever, Perdita,
"I pr'ythee, call 't: for this ungentle business,
"Put on thee by my lord, thou ne'er shalt see
"Thy wife Paulina more:"—and so, with shrieks
She melted into air. Affrighted much,
I did in time collect myself, and thought
This was so, and no slumber. Dreams are toys;
Yet for this once, yea, superstitiously,
I will be squar'd by this. I do believe,
Hermione hath suffer'd death; and that
Apollo would, this being indeed the issue
Of king Polixeus, it should here be laid,
Either for life or death, upon the earth.
Of its right father. — Blossom, speed thee well!

[Laying down the Babe.

There lie; and there thy character: there these,

[Laying down a Bundle.

Which may, if fortune please, both breed thee, pretty,
And still re-tine. — The storm begins. — Poor wretch!
That for thy mother's fault art expos'd Thrander.
To lose, and what may follow. — WEEP I cannot,
But my heart bleeds, and most accur'd am I,
To be by oath enjou'd to this. — Farewell!

The day browns more and more: thou art like to have
A lullaby too rough. I never saw [elamour? —
The heavens so dim by day. [Bear roars.] A savage
Well may I get aboard! — This is the chase;
I am gone for ever.

Enter an old Shepherd.

SKEP. I would there were no age between ten and
And three-and-twenty, or that youth would sleep out the rest; for there is nothing in the between but getting wrenches with child, wronging the humanity, stealing, fighting. — Hark you now! — Would any but these boiled-brains of nineteen, and two-and-twenty, hunt this weather? They have scared away two of my best sheep; where it, I fear, the wolf will sooner find. than the master: if any where you have them, it is by the sea-side, browsing of ivy. Good luck, an't be thy will! what have we here? [Taking up the Babe.] Mercy on's, a babe; a very pretty bairn! A boy, or a child, I wonder.
A pretty one! a very pretty one. Sure some scope:
though I am not bookish, yet I can read waiting-gen-tlewoman in the seaco. This has been some stair-work, some trunk-work, some behind-door work; they were warmer that got this, than the poor thing is here.
I'll take it up for pity; yet I'll tarry till my son come:
he hal-loo'd but even now. — Whoo, ho ho!

Enter Clown.

Clo. Hilloa, loa!

SKEP. What! art so near? If thou 'lt see a thing to talk on when thou art dead and rotten, come hither.
What a'th' sou, man?

Clo. I have seen two such sights, by sea, and by land! — but I am not to say it is a sea, for it is now the sky: betwixt the firmament and it you cannot thrust a bodkin's point.

SKEP. Why, boy, how is it?

Clo. I would, you did but see how it chafes, how it rages, as it takes up the shore! but that's not to the point. 0, the most piteous cry of the poor souls! I sometimes to see 'em, and not to see 'em: now the ship boring the moon with her mainmast; and anon swallowed with yest and froth, as you'd thrust a cork into a hoghead. And then for the land service: — to see how the bear tore out his shoulder bone: how he cried to me for help, and said his name was Antigou-us, a nobleman. — But to make an end of the ship:
— to see how the sea flap-dragoned it? — but, first, how the poor souls roared, and the sea mocked them: — and how the poor gentleman roared, and the bear mocked him, both roaring louder than the sea, or weather.

SKEP. Name of mercy! when was this, boy?

Clo. Now, now; I have not winked since I saw these sights: the men are not yet cold under water, nor the bear half dined on the gentleman: he's at it now.

SKEP. Would I had been by, to have helped the old man!

Clo. I would you had been by the ship's side, to have helped her: there your charity would have lacked footing.

SKEP. Heavy matters! heavy matters! but look these here, boy. Now bless thyself: thou met'st with things dying, I with things new born. Here's a sight for thee; look thee: a bearing-cloth for a squire's child!
Look thee here: take up, take up, boy; open 't. So, let's see. It was told me I should be rich by the fairies: this is some changing.—Open 't: what's within, boy?

Clo. You're a made old man: if the sins of your youth are forgiven you, you're well to live. Gold! all Gold!

SKEP. This is fair gold. boy, and 't will prove so: up with it, keep it close; home, home, the next way. We are lucky, boy: and to be so still requires nothing but secrecy. — Let my sheep go. — Come, good boy, the nexway home.

Clo. Go you the next way with your findings: I'll go see if the bear be gone from the gentleman, and how much he hath eaten: they are never curst, but when they are hungry. If there be any of him left, I'll bury it.

SKEP. That's a good deed. If thou may'st discern by that which is left of him, what he is, fetch me to the sight of him.

Clo. Marry, I will; and you shall help to put him the ground.

SKEP. 'Tis a lucky day, boy, and we'll do good deeds e'on't. [Exit]

ACT IV.

Enter Time, the Chorus.

Time. I, that please some, try all: both joy, and terror,
Or good and bad: that make, and unfold error,
Now take upon me, in the name of Time,
To use my wings. Impute it not a crime
To me, or my swift passage, that I slide
'Er sixteen years, and leave the growth untried
Of that wide gap; since it is in my power
To o'erthrow law, and in one self-born hour
To plant and o'erwhelm am and custom. Let me pass
The same I am, ere ancient'st order was,
Or what is now receiv'd: I witness to 1 Description. 2 Swallowed ships as drinkers swallow flagrant. — small substances floating in water, which were swallowed burining.

SCENE II.—The Same. A Road near the Shepherd's Cottage.

Enter AUTOLYCUS, singing.

When daffodils begin to peer.—
[1 Tune.]
When, heigh! the dozy over the dale,—
Why, then comes in the sweet o' the year;
For the red blood reigns in the winter's pale.

The white sheet bleaching on the hedge,—
With, heigh! the sweet birds, O, how they sing!—
Doth set my prigging tooth on edge;
For a quart of ale is a dish for a king.

The lark, that tirra-lirra chants,—
With heigh! with heigh! the thrush and the jay,
Are summer songs for me and my auns,
While we lie tumbling in the hay.

I have served prince Florizel, and, in my time, wore three-pile, but now I am out of service:

But shall I go mourn for that, my dear? [2 Tune.]
The pale moon shines by night;
And when I wander here and there,
Then do I must go right.

If tinkers may have leave to live, [3 Tune.
And bear the sore-skin burden.
Then my account I well may give,
And in the stocks avouch it.

My traffic is sheets; when the kite builds, look to lesser linen. My father named me. Autolycus; who, being, as I am, littered under Mercury, was likewise a snapper-up of unconsidered trifles. With die, and drab, I purchased this exparison, and my revenue is the silly cheat. Gallows, and knock, are too powerful on the highway: beating, and hanging, are terrors to me: for the life to come, I sleep out the thought of it.

—A prize! a prize!

Enter Clown.

Clo. Let me see:—Every 'leven wether tods'; every tod yields—pound and odd shilling; fifteen hundred shorn, what comes the wool to?

Aut. [Aside.] If the springs hold, the cock's mine.

Clo. I cannot do without counters—Let me see; what am I to buy for our sheep-shearing feast? "Three pound of sugar; five pound of currants; rice"—What will this sister of mine do with rice? But my father hath made her mistress of the feast, and she lays it on. She hath made me four-and-twenty nosegays for the shearsers; three-man song-men, and, very good ones, but they are most of them means and bases: but one Puritan amongst them, and he sings psalms to hornsaxes. I must have saffron, to colour the warden pies; mace, dates, none; that's out of my note: nutmegs, seven: a race or two of ginger;" but that I may beg:—four pound of prunes, and as many of raisins o' the sun.

Aut. O, that ever I was born! [Grovelling on the ground.

Clo. I the name of me!—

Aut. O, help me, help me! pluck but off these rags, and then, death, death!

Clo. Alack, poor soul! thou hast need of more rags to lay on thee, rather than have these off.

Aut. O, sir! the lothsomeness of them offends me more than the stripes I have received, which are mighty ones, and millions.

Clo. Alas, poor man! a million of beating may come to a great matter.

Scene III.—The Same. A Shepherd’s Cottage.

Enter Florizel and Perdita.

Flor. These, your unusual weeds, to each part of you
Do give a life: no shepherdess, but Flora
Peering in April’s front. This, your sheep-shearing,
Is as a meeting of the petty gods,
And you the queen on’t.

Per. Sure, my gracious lord,
To chide at your extremes it becomes me;
O! pardon, that I name them: your high self,
The gracious mark of the land, you have observ’d
With a swain’s wearing, and me, poor lowly maid,
Most goddess-like pranks’d up. But that our feasts
In every mess have folly, and the feeders
Digest it with a custom, I should blush
To see you so attir’d, so worn; I think,
To show myself a glass.

Flor. When my good falcon made her flight across Thy father’s ground.

Per. Now, Jove afford you cause
To me the difference forges dread; your greatness
Hath not been used to fear. Even now I tremble
To think, your father, by some accident,
Should pass this way, as you did. O, the fates!
How would he look to see, his work, so noble,
Vilely bound up? What would he say? Or how Should I, in these my borrowed flaunts, behold
The sternness of his presence?

Flor. Apprehend
Nothing but jollity. The gods themselves,
Humbling their deities to love, have taken
The shapes of beasts upon them: Jupiter
Became a bull, and bellow’d; the green Neptune
A ram, and bleated; and the fire-rob’d god,
Golden Apollo, a poor humble swain,
As I seem now. Their transformations
Were never for a piece of beauty rarer,
Nor any way so cheaste; since my desires
Run not before mine honour, nor my lusts
Burn hotter than my faith.

Per. O! but, sir,
Your resolution cannot hold, when ’tis
Oppos’d as it must be, by the power of the king.
One of these two must be necessities,
Which then will speak—that you must change this purpose,
Or my life.

Flor. Thou dearest Perdita,
With these fore’d thoughts, I pray thee, darken not
The mirth o’ the feast: or I’ll be thine, my fair,
Or not my father’s; for I cannot be Mine own, nor any thing to any; if
I be not thine: to this I am most constant,
Though destiny say, no. Be merry, girl;*
Strangle such thoughts as these with any thing
That you behold the while. Your guests are coming
Lift up your countenance, as ’t were the day
Of celebration of that nuptial, which
We two have sworn shall come.

Per. O, lady fortune,
Stand you auspicious!

Enter Shepherd, with Politeness and Camillo, disguised; Clown, Mopsa, Dorcas, and others.

Flor. See, your guests approach:
Address yourself to entertain them sprightly,
And let’s be red with mirth.

Scene III.

THE WINTER'S TALE.

I would, I had some flowers o' the spring, that might Become your time of day; and yours, and yours,
That wear upon your virgin branches yet
Your maidenheads growing:—O Proserpina!
For the flowers now, that, frightened, thou let'st fall
From Dis's waggon! daffodils,
That come before the swallow dares, and take
The winds of March with beauty: violets dim,
But sweeter than the lides of Juno's eyes,
Or Cytherea's breath; pale primrose,
That die unmarried ere they can behold
Bright Thebus in his strength, a malady
Most incident to maids; bold oxlips, and
The crown imperial; lilies of all kinds,
The flower-de-luce being one! O these I lack,
To make you garlands of, and, my sweet friend,
To strew him o'er and o'er.

Fio. What! like a corse?

Per. No, like a bank, for love to lie and play on,
Not like a corse; or if,—not to be buried,
But quick, and in mine arms. Come, take your flowers
Methinks, I play as I have seen them do
In Whitman-pastoral: sure, this robe of mine
Does change my disposition.

Fio. What you do
Still better what is done. When you speak, sweet,
I'd have you do it ever: when you sing,
I'd have you buy and sell so; so give alms;
Pray so; and, for the ordering your affairs,
To sing them too. When you do dance, I wish you
A wave o' the sea, that you might ever do
Nothing but that; move still, still so,
And own no other function: each your doing,
So singular in each particular,
Crowns what you are doing in the present deeds,
That all your acts are queens.

Per. O Doricles! Your praises are too large: but that your youth,
And the true blood, which peeps so fairly through it,
Do plainly give you out an untrain'd shepherd,
With wisdom I might fear, my Doricles,
You wou'd me the false way.

Fio. I think, you have
As little skill to fear, as I have purpose
To put you to 't.—But, come; our dance, I pray.
Your hand, my Perdita: so turtles pair,
That never mean to part.

Per. Well, I'll swear for 'em.

Pol. This is the prettiest low-born lass, that ever
Ran on the green-award: nothing she does, or says,
But smack's of something greater than herself;
Too noble for this place.

Cam. He tells her something,
That wakes her blood:—look on 't. Good sooth, she is
The queen of curds and cream.

Cio. Come on, strike up.

Mope. Mopes must be your mistress: marry, garlick
To mend her kissing with.—

Mop. Now, in good time—

Clo. Not a word, a word: we stand upon our manners.—

Come, strike up.

[Music

Here a dance of Shepherds and Shepherdesses.

Pol. Pray, good shepherd, what fair swain is this,
Which dances with your daughter?

Shp. They call him Doricles, and boasts himself
To have a worthy breeding; but I have it
Upon his own report, and I believe it:
He looks like sooth. He says, he loves my daughter.
I think not too; for never gaz’d the moon
Upon the water, as he ’ll stand, and read,
As ‘twere, my daughter’s eyes; and, to be plain,
I think, there is not half a kiss to choose,
Who loves another best.

Per. She dances fealty.

Mop. So she does any thing, though I report it,
That should be silent. If young Doricles
Do light upon her, she shall bring him that
Which he not dreams of.

Enter a Servant.

Serv. O master! if you did but hear the pedlar at the door, you would never dance again after a tabor and pipe; no, the bagpipe could not move you. He sings several tunes faster than you ‘ll tell money; he utters them as he had eaten ballads, and all men’s ears grew to his tunes.

Clo. He could never come better: he shall come in.
I love a ballad but even too well; if it be doleful mat¬ ter, merrily set down, or a very pleasant thing indeed, and sung lamentably.

Serv. He hath songs, for man, or woman, of all sizes:
no milliner can so fit his customers with gloves. He has the prettiest love-songs for maids: so without bawdry, which is strange; with such delicate burdens of ‘dildo’s’ and ‘fadings’; ‘‘jump her and thump her;’’
and where some stretch’d-mouth’d rascal ear, as it were, mean mischief, and break a soul jape in the matter, he makes the maid to answer. ‘Whoop, do me no harm, good man,’ puts him off, slights him with ‘Whoop, do me no harm, good man.’

Pol. This is a brave fellow.

Clo. Believe me, thou talkest of an admirable-con¬ ceited fellow. Has he any embroidered wares?

Serv. He hath ribands of all the colours i’ th’ rain¬ bow; points, more than all the lawyers in Bohemia can learnedly handle though they come to him by the gros; inkles, caddises, cambries, lawns: why he sings them over, as they were gods or goddesses. You would think a smock were a she-angel, he so chants to the sleeve-band, and the work about the square’s on’t.

Clo. Prythee, bring him in, and let him approach singing.

Per. Forewarn him, that he use no scurrilous words in tunes.

Clo. You have of these peddlars, that have more in them than you’d think, sister.

Per. Ay, good brother, or go about to think.

Enter Autolycus, singing.

Lawn, as white as driven snow;
Cypress, black as e’er was crown;
Gloves, as sweet as damask roses;
Masks for faces, and for noses;
Bangle-bracelet. necklace amber;
Perfume for a lady’s chamber:
Golden quips, and stomachers,
For my lad’s to give their dears;
Pins and poking-sticks of steel,
What maids lack from head to heel:
Come, buy of me, come; come buy, come buy,
Buy, lads, or else your lasses cry:
Come, buy.

Clo. If I were not in love with Mopes, thou shouldst take no money of me: but being enthral’d as I am, it will also be the bondage of certain ribands and gloves.

Mop I was promised them against the feast, but they come not too late now.

Dor. He hath promised you more than that, o.
there be liars.

Mop. He hath paid you all he promised you: may be, he has paid you more, which will shame you to give him again.

Clo. Is there no manners left among maids? will they wear their plaquetts, where they should bear their faces? Is there not milking-time when you are going to bed, or kiln-hole, to whisper off these secrets, but you must be title-tattling before all our guests? ’tis well they are whispering. Charm your tongues, and not a word more.

Mop. I have done. Come, you promised me a tawdry lace, and a pair of sweet gloves.

Clo. Have I not told thee, how I was cozened by the way, and lost all my money?

Aut. And, indeed, sir, there are cozeners abroad;
therefore, it behoves men to be wary.

Clo. Fear not thou, man, thou shalt lose nothing here.

Aut. I hope so, sir; for I have about me many parcels of charge.

Clo. What hast here? ballads?

Mop. Pray now, buy some: I love a ballad in print o’life, for then we are sure they are true.

Aut. Here’s one to a very doleful tune, how a usher’s wife was brought to bed of twenty money bags at a burden; and how she longed to eat adders’ heads, and toads carbonadoed.

Mop. Is it true, think you?

Aut. Very true; but and a month old.

Dor. Bless me from marrying a usurer!

Aut. Here’s the midwife’s name to’t, one mistress Talopez, and five or six honest wives that were present. Why should I carry lies abroad?

Mop. Pray you now, buy it.

Clo. Come on, lay it by; and let’s first see more ballads: we’ll buy the other things anon.

Aut. Here’s another ballad, of a fish, that appeared upon the coast, on Wednesday the fourscore of April, forty thousand fathom above water, and sung this bal¬ lad against the hard hearts of maids: it was thought she was a woman, and was turned into a cold fish, for she would not exchange flesh with one that loved her.
The ballad is very pithful, and as true.

Dor. Is it true too, think you?

Aut. Five justices’ hands at it, and witnesses more than my pack will hold.

Clo. Lay it by too: another.

Aut. This is a merry ballad, but a very pretty one.

Mop. Let’s have some merry ones.

Aut. Why this is a passing merry one, and goes to the tune of, “Two maids wooing a man.” There’s scarce a maid westward but she sings it: ’tis in request, I can tell you.

Mop. We can both sing it: if thou’st bear a part, then shalt hear; ’tis in three parts.

Dor. We had the tune on’t a month ago.

Aut. I can bear my part; you must know, ’tis my occupation: have it at will with you.

SONG.

Auto. Get you hence, for I must go,
Whither fits not you to know.

Dor. Why other?

Mop. O! whither?

Dor. Whither?

Mop. It becomes thy coat full well,
Thou to me thy secrets tell.
Before this ancient sir, who, it should seem,
Hath sometimes lov'd: I take thy hand; this hand,
As soft as dove's down, and as white as it,
Or Ethiopia's tooth, or the fann'd snow, that's bolted
By the northern blasts twice o'er.

Pol. What follows this?—
How prettily the young swain seems to wash
The hand, was fair before!—I have put you out.—
But, to your protestation: let me hear
What you profess.

Flo. Do, and be witness to't.
Pol. And this my neighbour too?

Flo. And he, and more
Than he, and men; the earth, the heavens, and all;
That were I crown'd the most imperial monarch,
Thereof most worthy; were I the fairest youth
That ever made eye swerve; had sense,* and knowledge,
More than was ever man's. I would not prize them,
Without her love: for her employ them all,
Command them, and condemn them, to her service,
Or to their own perdition.

Pol. Fairly offer'd.

Cam. This shows a sound affection.

Shep. But, my daughter,
Say you the like to him?

Per. I cannot speak
So well, nothing so well; no. nor mean better:
By the pattern of mine own thoughts I eat out
The purity of his.

Shep. Take hands; a bargain:—

Flo. I the virtue of your daughter: one being dead,
I shall have more of you than can dream of yet;
Enough then for your wonder. But, come on;
Contract us 'fore these witnesses.

Shep. Come, your hand;
And, daughter, yours.

Flo. Soft, swain, awhile, beseech you.

Pol. Have you a father?

Flo. I have; but what of him?

Pol. Knows he of this?

Flo. He neither doe, nor shall.

Pol. Methinks, a father
Is at the nuptial of his son a guest
That best becomes the table. Pray you, once more:
Is not your father grown incapable
Of reasonable affairs? is he not stupid
With age, and altering rheums? Can he speak? hear?
Know man from man? dispose* his own estate?
Lies he not bed-rid? and again, does nothing,
But what he did being childish?

Flo. No, good sir:
He has his health, and ampler strength, indeed,
Than most have of his age.

Pol. By my white beard,
You offer him, if this be so, a wrong
Something unphilial. Reason, my son.
Should choose himself a wife; but as good reason,
The father, (all whose joy is nothing else
But fair posterity) should hold some counsel
In such a business.

Flo. I yield all this;
But for some other reasons, my grave sir,
Which 't is not fit you know, I not acquaint

At knowing of thy choice.
Flo. Mark our contract.
Pol. Mark your divorces, young sir, [Discovering himself.
Whom son I dare not call: thou art too base
To be acknowledg'd. Thou a sceptre's heir,
That thus affect'st a sheep-hook!—Thou old traitor,
I am sorry, that by hanging thee I can
But shorten thy life one week.—And thou fresh piece
Of excellent witchcraft, who of force must know
The royal fool thou cop'st with—
O, my heart!
Pol. I'll have thy beauty scratch'd with brans, and made
More homely than thy state.—For thee, fond boy,
If I may ever know, thou dost but sigh
That thou no more shalt never see this knack, (as never
I mean thou shalt) we'll bar thee from succession;
Not hold thee of our blood, no not our kin,
Far than Deucalion off:—mark thou my words;
Follow us to the court.—Thou, choir, for this time,
Though full of our displeasure, yet we free thee
From the dead blow of it.—And you, enchantment,— Worthy enough a herdmann; yea, him too,
That makes himself, but for our honour therein,
Unworthy thee,—if ever henceforth thou
These rural latches to his entrance open,
Or hoist his body more with thy embraces,
I will devise a death as cruel for thee,
As thou art tender to 't. [Exit.
Per. Even here undone!
I was not much afeard; for once, or twice,
I was about to speak, and tell him plainly,
The self-same sun that shines upon his court,
Hides not his visage from our cottage, but
Looks on alike.—Will 't please you, sir, be gone?
[T佛RIZEL.
I told you, what would come of this. Beseech you,
Of your own state take care: this dream of mine,
Being now awake, I'll queen it no inch farther,
But milk my ewes, and weep.
Cam. Why, how now, father?
Skep. Speak, ere thou diest.
Cam. I cannot speak, nor think,
Nor dare to know that which I know.—O, sir,
[T佛RIZEL.
You have undone a man of fourscore three,
That thought to fill his grave in quiet; yes,
To die upon the bed my father died,
To lie close by his honest bones; but now,
Some haugman must put on my shroud, and lay me
Where no priest shovels in dust.—O, curse'd, wretched!
[T佛RIZEL.
That knew'st this was the prince, and wouldst adventure
To mingle faith with him.—Undone! undone!
If I might die within this hour, I have liv'd
To die when I desire. [Exit.
Flo. Why look you so upon me?
I am but sorry, not afeard; delays'd,
But nothing alter'd. What I was, I am:
More straining on, for plucking back: not following
1 Debting sarcastics was frequent with writers of the time. 2 Love. 3 Not in O. C.
THE WINTER'S TALE.

And, through him, what's nearest to him, which is your gracious self, embrace but my direction, if your more ponderous and settled project may suffer alteration on mine honour I'll point you where you shall have such receiving as shall become your highness; where you may enjoy your mistress; (from the whom, I see, there's no disjunction to be made, but by as heavens foreordain, your ruin) marry her; and (with my best en-learvours in your absence) your discontenting father strive to qualify, and bring him up to liking.

Flo. How, Camillo, may this, almost a miracle, be done, that I may call thee something more than man, and, after that, trust to thee.

Cam. Have you thought on a place where to you'll go? Flo. Not any yet; but as thou unthought-on accident is guilty to what we wildly do, so we profess ourselves to be the slaves of chance, and flies of every wind that blows.

Cam. Then list to me: This follows. If you will not change your purpose, but undergo this flight, make for Sicilia, and there present yourself, and your fair princess, (for so, I see, she must be)fore Leontes;

She shall be habited, as it becomes the partner of your bed. Methinks, I see Leontes, opening his free arms, and weeping his welcome forth; asks thee, the son, forgiveness, as 'twere I the father's person; kisses the hands of your fresh princess; o'er and o'er divides him twixt his unkindness and his kindness: 'tis one he shides to hell, and bids the other grow faster than thought, or time.

Flo. Worthy Camillo, what colour for my visitation shall I hold up before him?

Cam. Sent by the king, your father, to greet him, and to give him comforts, sir, the manner of your bearing towards him, with what you, as from your father, shall deliver, things known betwixt us three, I'll write you down: the which shall point you forth at every sitting what you must say, that he shall not perceive, but that you have your father's bosom there, and speak his very heart.

Flo. I am bound to you.

Cam. There is some sap in this.

Cam. A course more promising than a wild dedication of yourselves to upur'd waters, undream'd shores; most certain to miseress enough: no hope to help you, but, as you shake off one, to take another: nothing so certain as your anchors, who do their best office, if they can but stay you where you'll be lost to be. Besides, you know, prosperity 's the very bond of love, whose fresh complexion, and whose heart together, affections alters.

Per. One of these is true: I think, affliction may subdue the cheek, but not take in the mind.

Cam. Yes, say you so? There shall not, at your father's house, these seven years, be born another such.

Flo. My good Camillo, she is as forward of her breeding, as she is in the rear of birth.

Cam. I cannot say, 'tis pity she lacks instructions, for she seems a mistress to most that teach.

Per. Your pardon, sir; for this I'll blush you thanks.

Flo. My prettiest Perdita.

But, O, the thorns we stand upon!—Camillo, Preserver of my father, now of me, the medicine of our house, how shall we do? We are not furnish'd like Bohemia's son, nor shall appear 't in Sicily.

Cam. My lord, fear none of this. I think, you know, my fortunes are full lie there: it shall be so my care to have you royally appointed, as if the scene you play were true. For instance, sir, that you may know you shall not want, one word.

[They talk apart.]

Enter AUTOLYCUS.

Aust. Ha! ha! what a fool honesty is! and trust, his sworn brother, a very simple gentleman! I have sold all my trumpery, not a counterfeit-stone, not a riband, glass, pomander, brooch, table-book, ballad, knife, tape, glove, shoe-ke, bracelet, horn-ring, to keep my pack from fasting; they thronged who should buy first; as if my trinkets had been hallowed, and brought a benediction to the buyer: by which means, I saw whose purse was best in picture, and what I saw, to my good use I remember'd: My clown (who wants but something to be a reasonable man) grew so in love with the wenches' song, that he would not stir his petticoats, till he had both tune and words; which so drew the rest of the herd to me, that all their other senses stuck in ears: you might have pinched a placket, it was senseless: 't was nothing to geld a codpiece of a purse; I would have filed keys off, that hung in chains: no hearing, no feeling, but my sir's song, and admiring the nothing of it; so that, in this time of lethargy, I picked and cut most of their festival purses, and had not the old man come in with a whoo-bub against his daughter and the king's son, and seared my chouches from the chaff, I had not left a purse alive in the whole army.

[Camillo, Florizel, and Perdita, come forward.

Cam. Nay, but my letters, by this means being there so soon as you arrive, shall clear that doubt.

Flo. And those that you'll procure from king Leontes?

Cam. Shall satisfy your father.

Per. Happy be you! All that you speak shows fair.

Cam. Whom have we here?—[Seeing AUTOLYCUS.] We'll make an instrument of this: omit nothing may give us aid.

Aust. If they have overheard me now,—why hanging. Cam. How now, good fellow! Why shaketh thou so? Fear not, man; here's no harm intended to thee. Aust. I am a poor fellow, sir.

Cam. Why, be so still; here's nobody will steal that from thee: yet, for the outside of thy poverty, we must make an exchange: therefore, dost thee instantly, thou must think, there's a necessity in it, and change garments with this gentleman. Though the penny-worth on the side be the worst, yet hold thee, there's some boot.

[Giving money. Aust. I am a poor fellow, sir.—[Aside.] I know ye well enough.
Csn. Nay, pr'ythee, dispatch: the gentleman is half slayed already.

Avt. Are you in earnest, sir?—[Aside.] I smell the trick of it.

Flo. Dispatch. I pr'ythee.

Avt. Indeed, I have had earnest; but I cannot with ceremony take it.

Csn. Unbuckle, unbuckle.—[Flo. and Autol. exchange garments.

Fortunate mistress, (let my prophecy Come home to you!) you must retire yourself Into some covert: Take your sweetheir's hat, And pluck it o'er your brows; muffle your face; Dismantle you, and as you can, dislik'en The truth of your own seeing, that you may, (For I do fear eyes ever!) to ship-board Get undeserved.

Per. I see, the play so lies, That I must bear a part.

Csn. No remedy.—

Have you done there?

Flo. Much as I wish I had not done, sir. [Gives it to Perdita.]

Comé, lady, come.—Farewell, my friend.

Flo. O Perdita! what have we twain forgot? Pray you, a word. [They talk apart.

Csn. What do I do next shall be to tell the king Of this escape, and whither they are bound; Wherein, my hope is, I shall so prevail, To force him after: in whose company I shall review Sicilia, for whose sight I have a woman's longings.

Flo. Fortune speed us!—

Thus we set on, Camillo, to the sea-side.

Csn. The swifter speed, the better.

[Exit Florizel, Perdita, and Camillo.

Avt. I understand the business; I hear it. To have an open ear, a quick eye, and a nimble hand, is necessary for a cut-purse: a good nose is requisite also, to smell out work for the other senses: I see, this is the time that the unjust man doth thrive. What an exchange had this been without boot! what a boot is here for this exchange! Sure, the gods do this year crown us, and we may do any thing extempore. The prince himself is about a piece of iniquity: stealing away from his father, with his clog at his heels. If I thought it were a piece of honesty to acquaint the king withal, I would not do't: I hold it the more knavery to conceal it, and therein am I constant to my profession.

Enter Clown and Shepherd.

Aside, aside:—here is more matter for a hot brain. Every lane's end, every shop, church, session, hanging, yields a careful man work.

Clo. See, see, what a man you are now! There is no other way, but to tell the king she's a changeling, and none of your flesh and blood.

Shep. Nay, but hear me.

Shep. Go to then.

Clo. She being none of your flesh and blood, your flesh and blood has not offended the king; and so your flesh and blood is not to be punished by him. Show those things you found about her: those secret things, all but what she has with her. This being done, let the law go whistle; I warrant you.

Shep. I will tell the king all, every word, yes, and his son's pranks too; who, I may say, is no honest man, neither to his father, nor to me, to go about to make me the king's brother-in-law.

Clo. Indeed, brother-in-law was the furthest off you could have been to him; and then your blood had been the dearer by me to know how much an ounce.

Avt. [Aside.] Very wisest, puppies!

Shep. Well, let us to the king: there's that in this fardel will make him scratch his head.

Avt. [Aside.] I know not what impediment this complaint may be to the flight of my master.

Clo. Pray heartily he be at palace.

Avt. [Aside.] Though I am not naturally honest, I am so sometimes by chance:—let me pack up my pedler's excrement.—[Takes off his false beard.] How now, rusticles! whither are you bound?

Shep. To the palace, an it like your worship.

Avt. Your affairs there? what? with whom? the condition of that fardel, the place of your dwelling, your names, your ages, of what having, breeding, and any thing that is fitting to be known? discover.

Clo. We are but plain fellows, sir.

Avt. A lie: you are rough and hairy. Let me have no lying: it becomes none but tradesmen, and they often give us soldiers the lie; but we pay them for it with stamped coin; not stabbing steel: therefore, they do not give us the lie.

Clo. Your worship had like to have given us one, if you had not taken yourself with the manner.

Shep. Are you a courtier, an't like you, sir?

Avt. Whether it like me, or no, I am a courtier. Seest thou not the air of the court in these enfoldings? hast not my gait in it the measure of the court? receives not thy nose court-odour from me? reflect not on thy baseness court-contempt? Think'st thou, for that I insinuate, or touze from thee thy business, I am therefore no courtier? I am courtier, cap-a-pie; and one that will either push on, or pluck back thy business there: whereupon, I command thee to open thy affair.

Shep. My business, sir, is to the king.

Avt. What advocate hast thou to him?

Shep. I know not, an't like you.

Clo. Advocate's the court-word for a pheasant; say, you have none.

Shep. None, sir: I have no pheasant, cock, nor hen.

Avt. How bless'd are we that are not simple men! Yet nature might have made me as these are, Therefore I 'll not disdain.

Clo. This cannot but be a great courtier.

Shep. His garments are rich, but he wears them not handsomely.

Clo. He seems to be the more noble in being fantastical: a great man, I'll warrant; I know, by the picking on his teeth.

Avt. The fardel there? what's i' the fardel? Where fore that box?

Shep. Sir, there lie such secrets in this fardel, and box, which none must know but the king; and which he shall know within this hour, if I may come to the speech of him.

Avt. Are, thou hast lost thy labour.

Shep. Why, sir?

Avt. The king is not at the palace: he is gone aboard a new ship to procure melancholy, and air himself: for, thou best capable of things serious, thou must know, the king is full of grief.
THE WINTER'S TALE.

ACT V.

SORELY, TO SAY I DID: IT IS AS BITTER
UPON THY TONGUE, AS IN MY THOUGHT. NOW, GOOD NOW, SAY SO BUT SOWTLY.

CLO. YOU MIGHT HAVE SPOKEN A THOUSAND THINGS THAT WOULD HAVE DONE THE TIME MORE BENEFIT, AND GRAC'D
YOUR KINDNESS BETTER.

PAUL. YOU ARE ONE OF THOSE, WOULD HAVE HIM WED AGAIN.

PAUL. IF YOU WOULD NOT SO, YOU PITY NOT THE STATE, NOR THE REMEMBRANCE OF HIS MOST SOVEREIGN NAME; CONSIDER LITTLE
WHAT DANGERS, BY HIS HIGHNESS' FAI! OF ISSUE,
MC drop upon his kingdom, and devour
IN CERTAIN LOOKERS-ON. WHAT WERE MORE HOLY,
THAT TO REJOICE THE FORMER QUEEN IS WELL?
WHAT, OLDER THAN, FOR ROYALTY'S REPAIR,
FOR PRESENT COMFORT, AND FOR FUTURE GOOD,
TO BLESS THE BEC. OF MAJESTY AGAIN WITH A SWEET FELLOW TO 'T?

PAUL. THERE IS NONE WORTHY, RESPECTING HER THAT'S GONE. BESIDES, THE GODS
WILL HAVE FULFIL'D THEIR SECRET PURPOSES;
FOR HAS NOT THE DIVINE APOLLO SAID,
Is't not the tenour of his oracle,
That king Leontes shall not have an heir,
Till his lost child be found? which, that it shall,
Is all as monstrous to our human reason,
As my Antigonus to break his grave,
And come again to me; who, on my life,
Did play with the infant. 'tis your counsel,
My lord should to the heavens be contrary,
Oppose against their wills.—Care not for issue;
The crown will find an heir: Great Alexander
Left his to the worthiest, so his successor
Was like to be the best.

Leon. Good Paulina,—
Who hast the memory of Hermione,
I know, in honour,—O, that ever I
Had swear'd to thy counsel! then, even now,
I might have look'd upon my queen's full eyes,
Have taken treasure from her lips,—
Paul. And left them
More rich, for what they yielded.

Leon. Thou speak'st truth.
No more such wives; therefore, no wife: one worse,
And better us'd, would make her sainted spirit
Again possess her corse; and, on this stage,
(Where we offenders now appear) soul-vox'd,
Begin, 'And why to me?'

Paul. Had she such power,
She had just cause.

Leon. She had; and would incense me
To murder her I married.

Paul. I should do
Were I the ghost that walk'd, I'd bid you mark
Her eye, and tell me for what dull part in 't
You chose her? then I'd shriek, that even your ears
Should rift to hear me, and the words that follow'd
Should be, "Remember mine."

Leon. Stars, stars! and
And all eyes else dead coals.—Fear thou no wife;
I'll have no wife, Paulina.

Paul. Will you swear
Never to marry, but by my free leave?
Leon. Never, Paulina; so be bless'd my spirit!
Paul. Then, good my lords, bear witness to his oath.
Cleo. You tempt him over-much.

Leon. Unless another,
As like Hermione as is her picture,
Affront his eye.

Cleo. Good madam, I have done.
Paul. Yet, if my lord will marry,—if you will, sir,
No remedy, but you will—give me the office
To choose you a queen. She shall not be so young
As was your former; but she shall be such As, walk'd your first queen's ghost, it should take joy to see her in your arms.

Leon. My true Paulina,
We shall not marry, till thou bidd'st us.
Paul. That
Shall be when your first queen's again in breath:
Never till then.

Enter a Gentleman.

Gent. One that gives out himself prince Florizel Son of Polixenes, with his princess, (she
The fairest I have yet beheld,) desires ao.-\sa
For your high presence.

Leon. What! with him? he comes not Like to his father's greatness: his approach,
So out of circumstance and sudden, tells us
'T is not a visitation fram'd, but forc'd

By need, and accident. What train?

Gent. But few,
And those but mean.

Leon. His princess, say you, with him?

Gent. Ay; the most peerless piece of earth, I think
That e'er the sun shone bright on.
Pardoin, madam:—Hermione!
As every present time doth boast itself
Above a better, gone, so must thy grace
Give way to what's seen now. Sir, you yourself
Have said and writ so, but your writing now
Is colder than that theme—She had not been,
Nor was not to be equal'd;—thus your verse
Flow'd with her beauty once: 'tis shrewdly ebb'd,
To say you have seen a better.

Gent. The one I have almost forgot, (your pardon)
The other, when she has obtained your eye,
Will have your tongue too. This is a creature,
Would she begin a sect, might quench the zeal
Of all professors else, make proselytes
Of whom she did but follow.

Paul. How! not women?

Gent. Women will love her, that she is a woman
More worth than any man; men, that she is
The rarest of all women.

Leon. Go, Cleomenes;
Yourself, assisted with your honour'd friends,
Bring them to our embracement.—Still 't is strange,
Exeunt Cleomenes, Lords, and Gentlemen
He should thus steal upon us.

Paul. Had our Prince
(Jewel of children) seen this hour, he had pair'd
With well this lord: there was not full a month
Between their births.

Leon. Pr'ythee, no more: cease! thou know'st,
When I shall see this gentleman, thy speeches
Will bring me to consider that, which may Unfurnish me of reason.—They are come.—

Re-enter Cleomenes, with Florizel, Perdita, and Others.

Cleomenes, with Florizel, Perdita, and Others.
Your mother was most true to wed-lock, prince,
For she did print your royal father off,
Concerning you. Were I but twenty-one,
Your father's image is so hit in you,
His very air, that I should call you brother,
As I did him; and speak of something, wildly
By us perform'd before. Most dearly welcome!
And your fair princess, goddess! —O alas!
I lost a couple, that 'twixt heaven and earth
Might thus have stood, begetting wonder as,
You, gracious couple, do. And then I lost
All mine own folly the society,
Amity too, of your brave father; whom,
Though bearing misery, I desire my life
Once more to look on him.

Flo. By his command
Have I here touch'd Sielilias; and from him
Give you all greetings, that a king, as* friend,
Can send his brother; and, but infirmity
(Which waits upon worn times) hath something seen
His wish'd ability, he had himself
The lands and waters 'twixt your throne and his Measur'd to look upon you, whom he loves
(He bade me say so) more than all the sceptres,
And those that bear them, living.

Leon. O, my brother!
Scene II.

THE WINTER'S TALE.

301

Good gentleman, the wrongs I have done thee stir
Afresh within me; and these thy offices,
And, rarely kind, are as interpreters
Of my behind-hand slackness.—Welcome hither,
As is the spring to th' earth. And hath he, too,
Exceed this paragon to the fearful usage
In the dreadful Neptune,
To greet a man not worth her pains, much less
This adventure of her person?

Flo. Good, my lord, She came from Libys.

Leon. Where the warlike Smaulus, that noble, honour'd lord, is fear'd, and lov'd?

Flo. Most royal sir, from thence; from him, whose daughter
His tears proclaim'd his, parting with her: thence (A proper son south-wind friendly) we have cross'd,
To execute the charge my father gave me,
For visiting your highness. My best train
I have from your Sicilian shores dismiss'd,
Woe for Bohemia bend, to signify,
Not only my success in Libys, sir,
But my arrival, and my wife's, in safety.
Here, where we are.

Leon. The blessed gods Purge all infection from our air, whilst you Do name here! You have a noble* father, A graceful gentleman, against whose person, So sacred as it is, I have done sin; For which the heavens, taking angry note, Have left me issueless; and your father's bless'd (As he from heaven merits it) with you, Worthy his goodness. What might I have been, Might I a son and daughter now have look'd on, Such goodly things as you? Enter a Lord.

Lord. Most noble sir, That which I shall report will bear no credit, Were not the proof so nigh. Please you, great sir, Bohemia greets you from himself by me; Desires you to attach his son, who has (His dignity and duty both cast off) Fle'd from his father, from his hopes, and with A shepherd's daughter.

Lord. Here in your city; I now came from him: I speak amaz'dly, and it becomes My marvel, and my message. To your court While he was hastening (in the chase, it seems, Of this fair couple) meets he on the way The father of this seeing lady, and Her brother, having both their country quitted With this young prince.

Camillo has betray'd me, Whose honour, and whose honesty, till now, Endur'd all weathers.

Lord. Lay't 's to his charge:

Enter with the king your father.

Leon. Who? Camillo? Lord. Camillo, sir: I speak with him, who now Has three poor men in question. Never saw I Wretched so quake: they kneel, they kiss the earth, Ever wear themselves as often as they speak: Bohemia stops his ears, and threatens them With divers deaths in death.

Per. O, my poor father!— The heaven sets spires upon us, will not have Our dear act celebrated.

Leon. You are married?

Flo. We are not, sir, nor are we like to be;
The stars, I see, will kiss the valleys first:
The odds for high and low's alike.

Leon. Is this the daughter of a king?

Flo. She is, When once she is my wife.

Leon. That once, I see, by your good father's speed, Will come on very slowly. I am sorry,
Most sorry, you have broken from his liking,
Where you were tied in duty; and as sorry,
Your choice is not so rich in worth as beauty,
That you might well enjoy her.

Flo. Dear, look up Though fortunate, visible an enemy,
Should chase us with my father, power no jot Hath she to change our loves.—Beseech you, sir, Remember since you ow'd no more to time Than I do now; with thought of such affections, Stone forth mine advocate: at your request, My father will grant precious things as tristles.

Leon. Would he do so, I'd beg your precious mistrees,
Which he countes but a trifle.

Paul. Sir, my liege,
Your eye hath too much youth in't: not a month 'Fore your queen died, she was more worth such guses Than what you look on now.

Leon. I thought of her,
Even in these looks I made.—But your petition To Florizel.

Is yet unanswer'd. I will to your father: Your honour not o'erthrown by your desires, I am a friend to them, and you; upon which errand I now go toward him. Therefore, follow me, And mark what way I make. Come, good my lord. [Exeunt.

Scene II. — The Same. Before the Palace.

Enter Autolycus and a Gentleman.

Aut. Beseech you, sir, were you present at this relation?

1 Gent. I was by at the opening of the fardel, heard the old shepherd deliver the manner how he found it: whereupon, after a little amazement, we were all commanded out of the chamber; only this, methought I heard the shepherd say, he found the child.

Aut. I would most gladly know the issue of it.

1 Gent. I make a broken delivery of the business; but the changes I conceived in the king, and Camillo, were very notes of admiration: they seemed almost, with staring on one another, to tear the cases of their eyes; there was speech in their dumbness, language in their very gesture; they looked, as they had heard of a world ransomed, or one destroyed. A notable passion of wonder appeared in them; but the wisest beholder, that knew no more but seeing, could not say, if the importance were joy, or sorrow; but in the extrmity of the one it must needs be,

Enter another Gentleman.

Here comes a gentleman, that, haply, knows more.—
The news, Rogero?

2 Gent. Nothing but bonfires. The oracle is ful-filed; the king's daughter is found: such a deal of wonder is broken out within this hour, that ballad-makers cannot be able to express it.

Enter a third Gentleman.

Here comes the lady Paulina's steward: he can deliver you more.—How goes it now, sir? This news, which is called true, is so like an old tale, that the verity of it is in strong suspicion. Has the king found his heir?

3 Gent. Most true, if ever truth were pregnant by circumstance: that which you hear, you'll swear you see, there is such unity in the proofs. The mantle of queen Hermione,—her jewel about the neck of it;—the letters of Antigonus found with it, which they know to be his character;—the majesty of the creature, in resemblance of the mother;—the affection of nobleness, which nature shows above her breeding, and many other evidences, proclaim her with all certainty to be the king's daughter. Did you see the meeting of the two kings?

2 Gent. No.

3 Gent. Then you have lost a sight, which was to be seen, cannot be spoken of. There might you have beheld one joy crown another; so, and in such manner, that, it seemed, sorrow wept to take leave of them, for their joy waded in tears. There was casting up of eyes, holding up of hands, with contemnence of such distraction, that they were to be known by garment, not by favour. Our king, being ready to leap out of himself for joy of his found daughter, as if that joy were now become a loss, cries, "O, thy mother, thy mother!" then asks Bohemia forgiveness; then embraces his son-in-law; then again worries his daughter with clipping her: now he thanks the old shepherd, which stands by, like a weather-beaten conduit of many kings' reigns. I never heard of such another encounter, which laments report to follow it, and undoes description to show it.

2 Gent. What, pray you, became of Antigonus, that carried hence the child?

3 Gent. Like an old tale still, which will have matter to rehearse, though credit be asleep, and not an ear open. He was torn to pieces with a bear: this avouches the shepherd's son, who has not only his innocence (which seems much) to justify him, but a handkerchief, and rings of his that Paulina knows.

1 Gent. What became of his bark, and his followers?

3 Gent. Wrecked, the same instant of their master's death, and in the view of the shepherd: so that all the instruments, which aided to expose the child, were even then lost, when it was found. But, O! the noble combat, that 'twist joy and sorrow was fought in Paulina! She had one eye declined for the loss of her husband, another elevated that the oracle was fulfilled: she lifted the princess from the earth, and so locks her in embrace, as if she would pin her to her heart, that she might no more be in danger of losing her.

1 Gent. The dignity of this act was worth the audience of kings and princes, for by such was it acted.

3 Gent. One of the prettiest touches of all, and that which angled for mine eyes (caught the water, though not the fish) was, when at the relation of the queen's death, (with the manner how she came to 't, heavily confessed, and lamented by the king) how attentiveness wounded his daughter; till, from one sign of dolor to another, she did, with an alas! I would fain say, bleed tears: for, Jem sure, my heart went blood. Who was most marble there changed colour; some swooned, all sorrowed: if all the world could have seen it, the woe had been universal.

1 Gent. Are they returned to the court?

3 Gent. No: the princess hearing of her mother's statue, which is in the keeping of Paulina.—a piece many years in doing, and now newly performed by that rare Italian master, Julio Romano; who, had he himself eternity and could put breath into his work, would beguile nature of her custom, so perfectly he is her ape: he so near to Hermione hath done Hermione, that, they say, one would speak to her, and stand in hope of answer. Thither with all greediness of affection, are they gone, and there they intend to sup.

2 Gent. I thought, she had some great matter there in hand, for she hath privately, twice or thrice a day, ever since the death of Hermione, visited that removed house. Shall we thither, and with our company piece the relation?

1 Gent. Who would be thence, that has the benefit of access? every wink of an eye, some new grace will be born: our absence makes us unorthy to our knowledge. Let's along.

[Exeunt Gentlemen.

Aut. Now, had I not the dash of my former life in me, would preferment drop on my head. I brought the old man and his son aboard the prince; told him I heard them talk of a farsel, and I know not what; but he at that time, over-fond of the shepherd's daughter, (so he then took her to be) who began to be much sea-sick, and himself little better; extremity of weather continuing, this mystery remained undiscovered. But 'tis all one to me; for had I been the finder out of this secret, it would not have relished among my other discerdis.

Enter Shepherd and Clown, in new apparel.

Here come those I have done good to against my will, and already appearing in the blossoms of their fortune. Step. Come, boy; I am past more children, but thy sons and daughters will be all gentlemen born.

Clo. You are well met, sir. You denied to fight with me this other day, because I was no gentleman born: see you these clothes? say, you see them not, and think me still no gentleman born: you were best say, these robes are not gentlemen born. Give me the lie, do, and try whether I am not a gentleman born.

Aut. I know, you are now, sir, a gentleman born.

Clo. Ay, and have been so any time those four hours.

Step. And so have I, boy.

Clo. So you have;—but I was a gentleman born before my father, for the king's son took me by the hand, and called me, brother; and then the two kings called my father, brother; and then the prince, my brother, and the princess, my sister, called my father, father; and so we wept: and there was the first gentleman-like tears that ever we shed.

Step. We may live, son, to shed many more.

Clo. Ay; or else 'twere hard luck, being in so pretentious estate as we are.

Aut. I humbly beseech you, sir, to pardon me all the faults I have committed to your worship, and to give me your good report to the prince my master.

Step. Pr'ythee, son, do; for we must be gentle, now we are gentlemen.

Clo. Thou wilt amend thy life?

Aut. Ay, an it like your good worship.

Clo. Give me thy hand: I will swear to the prince, thou art as honest a true fellow as any is in Bohemia.

Step. You may say it, but not swear it.

Clo. Not swear it, now I am a gentleman? Let boors and franklins say it, I'll swear it.

Step. How if it be false, son?

Clo. If it be ne'er so false, a true gentleman may swear it in the behalf of his friend:—And I'll swear to the prince, thou art a tall fellow of thy hands, and that thou wilt not be drunk; but I know, thou art a tall fellow of thy hands, and that thou wilt be drunk;
Scene III.—The Same. A Chapel in Paulina's House.

Enter Leontes, Polixenes, Florizel, Perdita, Camillo, Paulina, Lords, and Attendants.

Paul. O! grave and good Paulina, the great comfort I have had of thee!

Paul. What, sovereign sir, did I not well, I meant well. All my services, you have paid home; but that you have vouchsaf'd, with your crown'd brother, and those your contracted here your kingdom, to visit it, is a surplus of your grace, which never my life may last to answer.

Paul. O Paulina! We honour you with trouble. But we came to see the statue of our queen: your gallery has pass'd through, not without much content. In many singularities, but we saw not that which my daughter came to look upon, the statue of her mother.

Paul. As she liv'd, fearless, So her dead likeness, I do well believe, excels whatever yet you look'd upon, or hand of man hath done; therefore I keep it lovely, apart. But here it is: prepare to see the life as lively mock'd, as ever still sleep mock'd death: behold! and say, 'tis well.

Paulina undresses a curtain, and discovers a statue. Music playing.—A pause.

I like your silence: it the more shows off your wonder: but yet speak:—first you, my liege. Canes it not something near?

Paul. Her natural posture.—Shed me, dear stone, that I may say, indeed, Thou art Hermione; or, rather, thou art she In thy not chiding, for she was as tender in infancy, and grace. But yet, Paulina, Hermione was not so much wrinkled; nothing scarred, as this seems.

Paul. O! not by much.

Paul. So much the more our carver's excellence; which lets go by some sixteen years, and makes her as she liv'd now.

Paul. As now she might have done, so much to my good comfort, as it is now piercing to my soul. O! thus she stood, even with such life of majesty, (warm life, as now it coldly stands) when first I woad her. I am ashamed: does not the stone rebuke me, for being more stone than it?—O, royal piece! There's magic in thy majesty, which has shrivels conjur'd to remembrance; and from thy admiring daughter took the spirits, standing like stone with thee.

Per. And give me leave, I do not say 'tis superstition, that Kneeling: feel, and thus implore her blessing.—Lady, you queen, that ended when I but began, give me that hand of yours to kiss.

Paul. O, patience! The statue is but newly fix'd; the colour's not dry.

Cam. My lord, your sorrow was too sore laid on, which sixteen winters cannot blow away, so many summers dry: scarce any joy did ever so long live; no sorrow, but kill'd itself much sooner.

Pol. Dear my brother, let him that was the cause of this, have power to take off so much grief from you, as he will piece up in himself.

Paul. Indeed, my lord, if I had thought, the sight of my poor image would thus have wrought you, (for the stone is mine) I'd not have show'd it. [Offers to draw.]

Leon. Do not draw the curtain. Paul. No longer shall you gaze on't, lest your fancy may think anon it moves. Leon. Let be, let be! Would I were dead, but that, methinks, already I am but dead, stone looking upon stone.— What was he that did make it?—See, my lord, would you not deem it breath'd, and that those veins did verily bear blood?

Pol. Masterly done: The very life seems warm upon her lip.

Leon. The fixture of her eye has motion in't, as we are mock'd with art.

Paul. I'll draw the curtain. My lord's almost so far transported, that [Offers again to draw.] He'll think anon it lives.

Leon. O, sweet Paulina! Make me to think so twenty years together. No settled senses of the world can match the pleasure of that madness. Let 't alone. Paul. I am sorry, sir; I have thus far stirr'd you; but I could afflict you farther. Leon. Do, Paulina, for this affliction has a taste as sweet as any cordial comfort. Still, methinks, there is an air comes from her: what fine chisel could ever yet cut breath? Let no man mock me, for I will kiss her.

Paul. Good my lord, forbear. [She stays him.] The ruddiness upon her lip is wet: You'll mar it, if you kiss it; stain your own With oily painting. Shall I draw the curtain? Leon. No, not those twenty years. Per. So long could I stand by, a looker on.

Paul. Either forbear, quit presently the chapel, or resolve you For more amazement. If you can behold it, I'll make the statue move indeed; descend, and take you by the hand; but then you'll think, (Which I protest against) I am assisted by wicked powers.

Leon. What you can make her do, I am content to look on: what to speak, I am content to hear; for 'tis as easy To make her speak, as move.

Paul. It is requir'd, you do awake your faith. Then, all stand still: on, those that think it is unlawful business I am about; let them depart. Leon. Proceed:

No foot shall stir.
'T is time; descend be stone no more: approach;
Strike all that look upon with marvel. Come;
I'll fill your grave up: stir; nay, come away;
Bequesteth to death your numbness, for from him
Dear life redeems you.—You perceive, she stirs.

[HERMIONE descends slowly from the pedestal.

Start not: her actions shall be holy, as
You hear my spell is lawful: do not shun her,
Until you see her die again, for then
You kill her double. Nay, present your hand:
When she was young you woo'd her; now, in age,
is she become the suitor?

Leon. O! she's warm. [Embracing her.
If this be magic, let it be an art
Lawful as eating.

Pol. She embraces him.

Cam. She hangs about his neck.

If she pertain to life, let her speak too.

Pol. Ay: and make it manifest where she has liv'd,
Or how stol'n from the dead?

Paul. That she is living,
Went it but told you, should be hoisted at
Like an old tale; but it appears she lives,
Though yet she speak not. Mark a little while.—
Please you to interpose, fair madam: kneel,
And pray your mother's blessing.—Turn, good lady,
Our Perdita is found. [PERDITA kneels to HERMIONE.

Her. You gods, look down,
And from your sacred vials pour your graces
Upon my daughter's head!—Tell me, mine own,
Where hast thou been preserv'd? where liv'd? how

found

- Take her by the head: in f a.

Thy father's court? for thou shalt hear, that I,
Knowing by Paulina that the oracle
Gave hope thou wast in being, have preserv'd
Myself to see the issue.

Paul. There's time enough for that,
Lest they desire upon this push to trouble
Your joys with like relation.—Go together,
You precious winners all: your exultation
Partake to every one. I, an old turtle,
Will wing me to some wither'd bough, and there,
My mate, that's never to be found again,
Lament till I am lost.

Leon. O peace, Paulina!
Thou shouldst a husband take by my consent,
As I by thine, a wife: this is a match,
And made between 's by vows. Thou hast found mine
But how is to be question'd, for I saw her,
As I thought, dead; and have in vain said many
A prayer upon her grave: I'll not seek far
(For him, I partly know his mind) to find thee
An honourable husband.—Come, Camillo,
And take her hand, whose worth, and honesty,
Is richly noted, and here justified
By us, a pair of kings.—Let's from this place.—
What!—Look upon my brother:—both your pardons,
That e'er I put between your holy looks
My ill-suspicion.—This your son-in-law,
And son unto the king, (whom heavens directing)
Is troth-plight to your daughter.—Good Paulina,
Lead us from hence, where we may leisurely
Each one demand, and answer to his part
Perform'd in this wide gap of time, since first
We were disserver'd. Hastily lead away. [Exeunt

Lords, Ladies, Citizens of Angiers, Sheriff, Heralds, Officers, Soldiers, Messengers, and Attendants.

SCENE, sometimes in England, and sometimes in France.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Northampton. A Room of State in the Palace.

Enter King John, Queen Elinor, Pembroke, Essex, Salisbury, and Others, with Chatillon.

K. John. Now, say, Chatillon, what would France with us?

Chat. Thus, after greeting, speaks the king of France, In my behaviour, to the majesty, The borrow'd majesty, of England here.

Eliz. A strange beginning!—borrow'd majesty?

Chat. Philip of France, in right and true sovereignty Of thy deceased brother Geoffrey's son, Arthur Plantsaginet, lays most lawful claim To this fair island, and the territories, To Ireland, Poictiers, Anjou, Touraine, Maine; Desiring thee to lay aside the sword Which sways usurpingly these several titles, And put the same into young Arthur's hand, Thy nephew, and right royal sovereign.

K. John. What follows, if we disallow of this?

Chat. The proud control of fierce and bloody war, To enforce these rights so forcibly withheld.

K. John. Here have we war for war, and blood for blood, Controlement for controlement: so answer France.

Chat. Then take my king's defiance from my mouth, The farthest limit of my embassy.

K. John. Bear mine to him, and so depart in peace. Be thou as lightning in the eyes of France; For ere thou canst report I will be there. The thunder of my cannon shall be heard. So hence! Be thou the trumpet of our wrath, And sudden presage of your own decay.—

An honourable conduct let him have: Pembroke, look to't. Farewell, Chatillon.

[Exit Chatillon and Pembroke.

Eliz. What now, my son? have I not ever said, How that ambitious Constance would not cease, Till she had kindled France, and all the world, Upon the right and party of her son? This might have been prevented, and made whole, With very easy arguments of love, Which now the manage 1 of two kingdoms must With fearful bloody issue arbitrate.

K. John. Our strong possession, and our right for us.

Eliz. Your strong possession, much more than your right, Or else it must go wrong with you, and me: So much my conscience whispers in your ear, Which none but heaven, and you, and I, shall hear.

Enter the Sheriff of Northamptonshire, who whispers Essex.

Essex. My liege, here is the strangest controversy Come from the country to be judged by you, That e'er I heard: shall I produce the men?

K. John. Let them approach.—[Exit Sheriff.

Our abbeys, and our priories, shall pay Re-enter Sheriff, with Robert Faulconbridge, and Philip, his bastard Brother.

This expedition's charge.—What men are you?

Bast. Your faithful subject; a gentleman Born in Northamptonshire, and eldest son, As I suppose, to Robert Faulconbridge, A soldier, by the honour-giving hand Of Cour de lion knighted in the field.

K. John. What art thou?

Rob. The son and heir to that same Faulconbridge.

K. John. Is that the elder, and art thou the heir? You came not of one mother, then, it seems.

Bast. Most certain of one mother, mighty king, That is well known, and, as I think, one father But, for the certain knowledge of that truth, I put you o'er to heaven, and to my mother: Of that I doubt, as all men's children may.

1 syll.: is f. o. 2 Conduct.
Eli. Out on thee, rude man! thou dost shame thy mother,
And wound her honour with this disaffection.
Bast. I, madam? no, I have no reason for it:
That is my brother's plea, and none of mine;
The which if he can prove, 'tis a pope me out
At least from this court, and send me pound a year,
Heaven guard my mother's honour, and my land!
K. John. A good blunt fellow.—Why, being younger born,
Doth he lay claim to thine inheritance?
Bast. I know not why, except to get the land.
But once he slander'd me with bastardy:
But wher'e I be as true begot, or no,
That still I lay upon my mother's head;
But, that I am as well begot, my liege,
(Fair fall the bones that took the pains for me!)
Compare our faces, and be judge yourself.
If old sir Robert did beget us both,
And were our father, and this son like him,
O! old sir Robert, father, on my knee
I give heaven thanks, I was not like to thee.
K. John. Why, what a madcap hath heaven lent us here!
Eli. He hath a trick of Cœur-de-lion's
The scent of his senses affected him.
Do you not read some tokens of my son
In the large composition of this man?
K. John. Mine eye hath well examined his parts,
And finds them perfect Richard.—Sirrah, speak;
What doth move you to claim your brother's land?
Bast. Because he hath a half-face, like my father,
With that half-face¹ would he have all my land:
A half-face'd great² five hundred pound a year!
Rob. My gracious liege, when that my father liv'd,
Your brother did employ my father much.
Bast. Well, sir; by this you cannot get my land.
Your tale must be, how he employ'd my mother.
Rob. And once deepstart'd him in an embassy
To Germany, there, with the emperor,
To treat of high affairs touching that time.
The advantage of his absence took the king,
And in the mean time sojourn'd at my father's;
Where how he did prevail I shame to speak,
But truth saith, he did a large length, much and shores
Between my father and my mother lay,
As I have heard my father speak himself,
When this same lusty gentleman was got.
Upon his death-bed he by will bequeath'd
His lands to me; and took it, on his death,
That this, my mother's son, was none of his:
And, if he were, he came into the world
Full fourteen weeks before the course of time.
Then, good my liege, let me have what is mine,
My father's land, as was my father's will.
K. John. Sirrah, your brother is legitimate:
Your father's wife did after wedlock bear him;
And if she did play false, the fault was hers,
Which fault lies on the hazards of all husbands
That marry wives. Tell me, how if my brother
Who, as you say, took pains to get this son,
Had of your father claim'd this son for his?
In sooth, good friend, your father might have kept
This case behind his back in his world;
In sooth, he might: then, if he were my brother's,
My brother might not claim him, nor your father,
Being none of his, refuse him.—This concludes,—
My mother's son did get your father's heir;
Your father's heir must have your father's land.
Rob. Shall, then, my father's will be of no force
To dispossess that child which is not his?
Bast. Of no more force to dispossess me, sir,
Than was his will to get me, as I think.
Eli. Whether hadst thou rather be a Faulconbridge,
And, like thy brother, to enjoy thy land,
Or the reputed son of Cœur-de-lion,
Lord of thy presence, and no land beside?
Bast. Madam, an if my brother had my shape,
And I had his, sir Robert his,² like him;
And if my legs were two such riding-rods,
My arms such eel-skins stuff'd; my face so thin,
That in mine ear I durst not stick a roe,
Least men should say, "Look, where three-farthings goes."
And, to his shape, were heir to all this land,
Would I might never stir from off this place,
I'd give it every foot to have this face:
I would not be sir Nob² in any case.
Eli. I like thee well. Wilt thou forsake thy fortune,
Bequeath thy land to him, and follow me?
I am a soldier, and now bound to France.
Bast. Brother, take you my land, I'll take my chance.
Your face hath got five hundred pounds a year;
Yet sell your face for five pence, and 'tis dear.—
Madam, I'll follow you unto the death.
Eli. Nay, I would have you go before me, thither.
Bast. Our country manners give our betters way.
K. John. What is thy name?
Bast. Philip, my liege; so is my name begun;
Philip, good old sir Robert's wife's eldest son.
K. John. From henceforth bear his name whose form thou bearest.
Kneel thou down Philip, but arise more great:
[Bast. kneels and rises.]²
Ariseth Richard, and Plantagenet.
Bast. Brother, by the mother's side, give me your hand:
My father gave me honour, yours gave land,
Now blessed be the hour, by night or day,
When I was got Sir Robert was away.
Eli. The very spirit of Plantagenet!—
I am thy grandson, Richard: call me so.
Bast. Madam, by chance, by chance, but not by truth, what though?
Something about, a little from the right,
In at the window, or else o'er the hatch:
Who dares not stir by day, must walk by night,
And have is have, however men do catch.
Near or far off, well won is still well shot,
And I am I, how'er I was begot.
K. John. Go, Faulconbridge: now hast thou thy desire;
A landless knight makes thee a landed squire.—
Come, madam, and come, Richard: we must speed
For France, for France, for France, it is more than need.
Bast. Brother, adieu: good fortune come to thee,
For thou wast got i' the way of honesty.
[Exeunt all but the Bastard.
A foot of honour better than I was,
But many, ah, many foot of land the worse.
Well, now can I make any Joan a lady.—
"Good den, sir Richard."—"God-a-mercy, fellow?"
And if his name be George, I'll call him Peter;
For new-made honour doth forget men's names:
'T is too respective, and too sociable.
For your diversion, now, your traveller,

¹ Folio: half that face. ² The great of Henry VII., with the sovereign's head in profile, then a new practice, on it. ³ Robert's. ⁴ A silver coin of Elizabeth, very thin, with a rose at the back of the ear. ⁵ Head. ⁶ Not in f. e. ⁷ Evening
He and his tooth-pick’ at my worship’s meal;
And when my knotty stomach is suff’red,
Why then I suck my teeth, and catechize
My picked’ man of countries—"My dear sir,"
Thus leaning on mine elbow I begin,
"I shall beseech you"—that is question now;
And then comes answer like an ABC-book:—
"O sir," says answer, "at your best command;
At your employment; at your service, sir?"—
"No sir," says question, "I, sweet sir, at yours?"
And so, ere answer knows what question would,
Saving in dialogue of compliment,
And talking of the Alps, and Apennines,
The Pyrenees, and the river Po,
It draws toward supper, in conclusion so.
But this is worshipful society,
And fits a mounting spirit, like myself;
For he is but a bastard to the time,
That doth not smack of observation;
And so am I, whether I smack, or no;
And not alone in habit and device,
Exterior form, outward accoutrement,
But from the inward motion to survive.
Sweet, sweet, sweet poison for the age’s tooth:
Which, though I will not practise to deceive,
Yet, to avoid deceit, I mean to learn,
For it shall strew the footsteps of my rising.—
But who comes in such haste, in riding robes?
What woman-post is this? hath she no husband,
That will take pains to blow a horn before her?
Enter Lady Faulconbridge and James Gurney.
O me! it is my mother.—How now, good lady!
What brings you here to court so hastily?
Lady F. Where is that slave, thy brother? where is he,
That holds in chase mine honour up and down?
Bast. My brother Robert? old sir Robert’s son?
Colbrand the giant, that same mighty man?
Is it sir Robert’s son, that you seek so?
Lady F. Sir Robert’s son? Ay, thou unrevener boy,
Sir Robert’s son: why scorn’st thou at sir Robert?
He is sir Robert’s son, and so art thou.
Bast. James Gurney, wilt thou give us leave awhile?
Ouy. Good leave, good Mr. Gurney.
Bast. Philip?—sparrow!—James,
There’s toys abroad: anon I’ll tell thee more.
[Exit Gurney.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—France. Before the Walls of Angiers.

Enter, on one side, the Archduke of Austria, and Forces; on the other, Philip, King of France, and Forces; Lewis, Constance, Arthur, and Attendants.

Lewis. Before Angiers well met, brave Austria.—
Arthur, that great fore-runner of thy blood,
Richard, that robb’d the lion of his heart,
And fought the holy wars in Palestine,
By this brave duke came early to his grave:
And, for amends to his posterity,
At our importance’ hither is he come,
To spread his colours, boy, in thy behalf;
And to rebuke the usurpation
Of thy unnatural uncle, English John:

Madam, I was not old sir Robert’s son:
Sir Robert might have eat his part in me
Upon Good-Friday, and never broke his fast.
Sir Robert could do well: nay, to confess,
Could not get me; sir Robert could not do it:
We knew his handy-work.—Therefore, good mother,
To whom am I beholding for these limbs?
Sir Robert never holp to make this leg.

Lady F. Hast thou conspired with thy brother, too,
That for thine own gain shouldst defend mine honour?
What means this scorn, thou most untoward knave?
Bast. Knight, knight, good mother,—Basilisco-like.

What! I am double; I have it on my shoulder.
But, mother, I am not sir Robert’s son;
I have disclaim’d sir Robert, and my land;
Legitimation, name, and all is gone.
Then, good my mother let me know my father:
Some proper man, I hope; who was it, mother?
Lady F. Hast thou denied thyself a Faulconbridge?
Bast. As faithfully as I deny the devil.
Lady F. King Richard Cœur-de-lion was thy father.
By long and vehement suit I was seduced
To make room for him in my husband’s bed.—
Heaven! lay not my transgression to my charge.
Thou’st art the issue of my dear offence,
Which was so strongly urg’d, past my defence.
Bast. Now, by this light, were I to get again,
Madam, I would not wish a better father.
Some sins do bear their privilege on earth,
And so doth yours; your fault was not your folly:
Needs must you lay your heart at his dispose,
Subjected to command, and love,
Against whose fury and unmatched force
The aweless lion could not wage the fight,
Nor keep his princely heart from Richard’s hand.
He, that perforce robs lions of their hearts,
May easily win a woman’s. Ay, my mother,
With all my heart I thank thee for my father.
Who lives, and dares but say thou didst not well
When I was got, I’ll send his soul to hell.
Come, lady, I will show thee to my kin;
And they shall say, when Richard me begot,
If thou hastad said him nay, it had been sin:
Who says it was, he lies: I say, ’tis not.

[Exeunt.

And confident from foreign purposes.
Even till that utmost corner of the west
Salute thee for her king: till then, fair boy,
Will I not think of home, but follow arms.

Const. O! take his mother's thanks, a widow's thanks,
Till your strong hand shall help to give him strength,
To make a more requital to your love.

Aust. The peace of heaven is theirs, that lift their swords
In such a just and charitable war.

K. Phi. Well then, to work. Our cannon shall be Against the brows of this resisting town:—

Call for our chiefest men of discipline,
To cull the plots of best advantages.
We'll lay before this town our royal bones,
Wade to the market-place in Frenchmen's blood,
But we will make it subject to this boy.

Const. Stay for an answer to your embassy.
Lost unadvised you stain your swords with blood.
My lord Chatillon may from England bring
That right in peace which here we urge in war;
And then we shall repent each drop of blood,
That hot rash haste so indiscreetly1 shed.

Enter Chatillon.

K. Phi. A wonder, lady—lo, upon thy wish,
Our messenger, Chatillon, is arriv'd.—

What England says, say briefly, gentle lord;
We coldly pause for thee: Chatillon, speak.

Chat. Then turn your forces from this paltry siege,
And stir them up against a mightier task.
England, impatient of your just demands,
Hath put himself in arms: the adverse winds,
Whose leisure I have stay'd, have given him time
To land his legions all as soon as I.
His marches are expedit2 to this town;
His forces strong, his soldiers confident.
With him along is come the mother-queen,
As stir him to blood and strife:
With her her niece, the lady Blanch of Spain;
With them a bastard of the king's deceased,
And all th' unsettled humour of the land:
Rash, inconsiderate, fiery voluntaries,
With ladies' faces, and fierce dragons' spleens,
Have sold their fortunes at their native homes,
Bearing their birthrights proudly on their backs,
To make a hazard of new fortunes here.
In brief, a braver choice of dauntless spirits,
Than now the English bottoms have walt o'er,
Did never float upon the swelling tide,
To do offence and scorn in Christendom.

[Drums heard.]

The interruption of their churlish drums
Cuts off more circumstance; they are at hand,
To parley, or to fight; therefore, prepare.

K. Phi. How much unlook'd for is this expedition!

Aust. By how much unexpected, by so much
We must awake endeavour for defence,
For courage mounteth with occasion:
Let them be welcome, then: we are prepared.

Enter King John, Elinor, Blanch, the Bastard, Pembroke, and Forces.

K. John. Peace be to France, if France in peace permit
Our just and lineal entrance to our own:
If not, bleed France, and peace ascend to heaven;
While we, God's wrathful agent, do correct
Their proud contempt that beats his peace to heaven.

K. Phi. Peace be to England, if that war return
From France to England, there to live in peace.
England we love; and, for that England's sake,
With burden of our armour here we sweat.
This toil of ours should be a work of thine;
But thou from loving England art so far,
That thou hast under-wrought her lawful king,
Cut off the sequence of posterity,
Outfaced infant state, and done a rape
Upon the maiden virtue of the crown.

Look here upon thy brother Geoffrey's face:

[Pointing to Arthur]

These eyes, these brows, were moulded out of his:
This little abstract doth contain that large,
Which died in Geoffrey, and the hand of time
Shall draw this brief into so huge a volume.
That Geoffrey was thy elder brother born,
And this his son: England was Geoffrey's right,
And this is Geoffrey's.3 In the name of God,
How comes it, then, that thou art call'd a king,
When living blood doth not these temples beat,
Which owe the crown that thou o'ermasterest?

K. John. From whom hast thou this great commission, France,
To draw my answer from thy articles?

K. Phi. From that supremal Judge, that stirs good thoughts
In any breach of strong authority,
To look into the blots and stains of right,
That Judge hath made me guardian to this boy;
Under whose warrant I impeach thy wrong,
And by whose help I mean to chastise it.

K. Phi. Excuse: it is to beat usurping down.

Eliz. Who is it, thou dost call usurper, France?

Const. Let me make answer:—thy usurping son.

Eliz. Out, insolent! thy bastard shall be king,
That thou may'st be a queen, and check the world!

Const. My bed was ever to thy son as true,
As thine was to thy husband, and this boy
Liker in feature to his father Geoffrey,
Than thou and John, in manners being as like,
As rain to water, or devil to his dam.
My boy a bastard! By my soul, I think,
His father never was so true begot:
It cannot be, an if thou wilt his mother.

Eliz. There's a good mother, boy, that bolts thy father Const. There's a good grandam, boy, that would blot thee.

Aust. Peace!

Bast. Hear the orer.

Aust. What the devil art thou?

Bast. One that will play the devil, sir, with you,
An 'a may catch your hide and you alone.
You are the hare of whom the proverb goes,
Whose valour plucks dead lions by the beard.
I'll smoke your skin-coat, and I catch you right:
Sirrah, look to 't; 'tis faith, I will, t faith.
Blanch. O! well did he become that lion's robe,
That did disrobe the lion of that robe.

Bast. It lies as sightly on the back of him,
As great Aldeis' shoes upon an ass.—
But, ass, I'll take that burden from your back,
Or lay on that shall make your shoulders crack.

Aust. What crack'r is this same, that deafe's our ears
With this abundance of superfluous breath?

K. Phi. Lewis, determine what we shall do straight.
KING JOHN.

KING JOHN. This is the very sum of all:
England, and Ireland. Anjou, Touraine, Maine,
Is right of Arthur do I claim of thee.

Shall resign them, and lay down thy arms?
My life as soon: I do defy thee, France.
Arbor of Brestyield, give thee to my hand,
And out of my dear love I'll give thee more,
Then ever the coward hand of France can win:
Shall thee, boy.

Come to thy grandam, child.
Do, child, go to it; grandam, child;
Give it a plum, a cherry, and a fig:
There's a good grandam.

Good my mother, peace! I would that I were low laid in my grave: [Weeping,]
I am not worth this coil that's made for me.
Thy mother shames him so, poor boy, he weeps.
Now shame upon you, who's she does, or no!
Thy grandam's wrongs, and not her mother's shames,
Draw those heaven-moving pearls from his poor eyes,
Which heaven shall take in nature of a fee:
Ay, with these crystal beads shall heaven be brib'd
To do him justice, and revenge on you.

Thou monstrous slanderer of heaven and earth!
Thou monstrous injector of heaven and earth!
Call me slanderer: thou, and thine, usurp
The dominions, royalties, and rights,
Or this oppress'd boy, thy aged son's son,
Infortunate in nothing but in thee:
The son are visit'd on this poor child,
Shall bear the second generation
Removed from thy sin-conceiving womb.

K. Joh. Bedlam, have done.

I have but this to say,—
He is not only plagued for her sin,
But God hath made her sin and her: the plague
On this removed issue, plac'd for her,
And with her plague her sin: his injury
Her: injury the beadle to her sin,
All pleas'd in the person of this child,
And all for her, a plague upon her!

Thou unadvised scold. I can produce
A will, that bears the title of thy son.

Ay, who doubts that? a will! a wicked will;
A weak will: a canker'd grandam's will!

K. Phi. Peace, lady! pause, or be more temperate.
It becometh this presence, to cry aim
To these ill-tuned repetitions.—
Stern trumpet summoneth to the walls
These men of Angiers: let us hear them speak,
Woe be it they admit, Arthur's or John's.

Trumpets sound. Enter Citizens upon the walls.
Ct. Who is it, that hath war'd us to the walls? K. Joh. "Tis France, for England.

Men of Angiers, and my loving subjects,
K. Phi. You loving men of Angiers, Arthur's subjects,
Our trumpet call'd you to this gentle parle.

K. Joh. For our advantage; therefore, hear us first.

These flags of France, that are advanced here
Before the eye and prospect of your town,
Have hither march'd to your endamental:
The cannons have their bowels full of wrath,
And they mounted are they, to spit forth
Their iron indignation 'gainst your walls:
All preparation for a bloody siege,
And merciless proceeding by these French,
Come 'fore your city's eyes, your winking gates;
And, but for our approach, those sleeping stones,
That as a waist do girdle you about,
By the compulsion of their ordnance
By this time from their fixed beds of lime
Had been dishabited, and wide havoc made
For bloody power to rush upon your peace.
But, on the sight of us, your lawful king,
Who painfully, with much expedient march,
Have brought a countercheck before your gates,
To save unscath'd your city's threaten'd cheeks,
Behold, the French amaz'd vouchsafe a parle;
And now, instead of bullets wrap'd in fire,
To make a shaking fever in your walls,
They shoot but calm words, folded up in smoke,
To make a faithless error in your ears:
Which trust accordingly, kind citizens,
And let us in, your king; whose labour'd spirits,
Far ne'er in this action of swift speed,
Crave harbourage within your city walls.

K. Phi. When I have said, make answer to us both Lo! in this right hand, whose protection
Is most divinely vow'd upon the right
Of him it holds, stands young Plantagenet,
Son to the elder brother of this man,
And king o'er him, and all that he enjoys.
For this down-trodden equity, we tread
In warlike march these greens before your town;
Being no farther enemy to you,
Than the constraint of hospitable zeal,
In the relief of this oppressed child,
Religiously provokes. Be pleased, then,
To pay that duty which you truly owe,
To him that owes it, namely, this young prince;
And then our arms, like to a muzzled bear,
Save in aspect, have all offence seal'd up:
Our cannon's malice vainly shall be spent
Against th' invulnerable clouds of heaven;
And with a blessed and unex'd retire,
With unshack'd swords, and helmets all unbruis'd,
We will bear home that lusty blood again,
Which here we came to spout against your town,
And leave your children, wives, and you, in peace.
But if you fondly pass our proffer'd offer,
'Tis not the roundur's of your old-fac'd walls
Can hide you from our messengers of war.
Though all these English, and their discipline,
Were harbour'd in their rude circumference.
Then, tell us; shall your city call us lord,
In that behalf which we have challenge'd it,
Or shall we give the signal to our rage,
And stand in blood to our possession?

Ct. In brief, we are the king of England's subjects:
For him, and in his right, we hold this town.
K. Joh. Acknowledge then the king, and let me in.
Ct. That can we not; but he that proves the king,
To him will we prove loyal; till that time,
Have we ramm'd up our gates against the world.
K. Joh. Doth not the crown of England prove the
And, if not that, I bring you witnesses, [king?
Twice fifteen thousand hearts of England's breed. —

Bast. Bastards, and else. [Aside.]
K. Joh. To verify our title with their lives.
K. Phi. As many, and as well-born bloods as those,

Bast. Some bastard, too. [Aside.
K. Phi. Stand in his face to contradict his claim.

K. John. France, hast thou yet more blood to cast away?
Say, art thou of the current of our right stream on?
Whose passage, vex'd with thy impediment,
Shall leave his native channel, and o'er-swell
With course disturb'd even thy confining shores,
Unless thou let his silver waters keep
A peaceful progress to the ocean.
[blood.
K. Phi. England, thou hast not sav'd one drop of
In this hot trial, more than we of France;
Rather, lost more: and by this hand I swear,
That sways the earth this climate overlooks,
Before we will lay down our just-born arms,
We'll put thee down, 'gainst whom these arms we bear,
Or add a royal number to the dead,
Gracing the scroll, that tells of this war's loss,
With slaughter coupled to the name of kings.
[exit.

K. Phi. Speak, citizens, for England who's your king?
K. John. Whose party do the townsmen yet admit?
K. Phi. Know him in us, that here hold up his right.
K. John. In us, that are our own great deputy,
And bear procession of our person here;
Lord of our presence, Angiers, and of you.
K. Phi. A greater power than we denies all this;
And, till it be undoubted, we do lock
Our former scruple in our strong-bar'd gates,
Kings of our fear; until our fear, resolv'd,
Be by the certain king purg'd and depo'd.
[exit.
K. John. By heaven, these scurvies of Angiers bow,
you, kings,
And stand securely on their battlements,
As in a theatre, whence they gape and point
At your industrious scenes and sets of death.
Your royal presences be rud'd by me:
Do like the mutines of Jerusalem.
Be friends awhile, and both conjointly bend
Your sharpest deeds of malice on this town.
By east and west let France and England mount
Their battering cannon, charg'd to the mouths,
Till their soul-fearing clamours have brawld down
The flinty ribs of this contemptuous city:
I'd play incessantly upon these jades,
Even till unfenced desolation
Leave them as naked as the vulgar air.
That done, disseven your united strengths,
And part your mingled colours once again:
Turn face to face, and bloody point to point;
Then, in a moment, fortune shall eall forth
Out of one side her happy minion,
To whom in favour she shall give the day,
And kiss him with a glorious victory.
How like you this wild counsel, mighty states?
Smacks it not something of the policy?
K. John. Now, by the sky that hangs above our heads
I like it well.—France, shall we knit our powers,
And lay this Angiers even with the ground,
Then, after, fight who shall be king of it?
Bast. As if thou hast the mottle of a king,
Beast wrong'd as we are by this peevish town,
Tum thou the mouth of thy artillery,
As we will ours, against these saucy walls;
And when we have dash'd them to the ground,
Way, then defy each other, and pull-mell,
Make work upon ourselves for heaven, or hell.
K. PhI. Let it be so.—Say, where will you assault.
K. Joh. We from the west will send destruction
Into this city's bosom.
Bast. I from the north.
K. PhI. Our thunder from the south,
Shall rain their drift of bullets on this town.
Bast. 0, prudent discipline! From north to south,
Austria and France shoot in each other's mouth.

[Aside.] I'll stir them to it.—Come, away, away!—
Ct. Hear us, great kings: vouchsafe a while to stay,
And I shall show you peace, and fair-face'd league;
Was you this city without stroke, or wound;
These bees breathing lives to die in beds,
That here come sacrifices for the field.
Never not, but hear me, mighty kings.
K. Joh. Speak on, with favour: we are bent to hear.
Ct. That daughter there of Spain, the lady Blanche,
Is niece to England: look upon the years
Of Lewis the Dauphin, and that lovely maid.
Vustry love should go in quest of beauty,
Where should he find it fairer than in Blanche?
E'er happy love should go in search of virtue,
Where should he find it purer than in Blanche?
If love ambitious sought a match of birth,
Whose veins bound richer blood than lady Blanche?
Such as she is, in beauty, virtue, birth,
Is the young Dauphin every way complete:
I'm not complete of, say, he is not she;
And she again wants nothing, to name want,
If want it be not, that she is not he:
Half the half part of a blessed man,
Left to be finished by such a she.
And she a fair divided excellence,
Whose fullness of perfection lies in him.
Of two such silver currents, when they join,
Do glorify the banks that bound them in;
And two such shores to two such streams made one,
Two such controlling bounds shall you be, kings,
To these two princes, if ye marry them.
His union shall do more than battery can
To our fast-closed gates; for, at this match,
With swifter spleen than powder can enforce,
The mouth of passage shall we fling wide ope,
And give you entrance; but, without this match,
The sea enraged is not half so deaf,
Leaves more confident, mountains and rocks
More free from motion: no, not deatn himself
A mortal fury half so peremptory,
As we to keep this city.

Bast. Here's a stay.
Shake the rotten carcass of old death
Out of his rage! Here's a large mouth, indeed,
But epic forth death, and mountains, rocks, and seas;
Talks as familiarly of roaring lions,
As how of thirteen do of puppy-dogs.
What name orer begot this lusty blood?
He speaks plain cannon-fire, and smoke, and bounte,
He gives the bastinado with his tongue:
Our ears are cudgeil'd; not a word of his,
KING JOHN.

ACT III.

With her to thee; and this addition more,
Full thirty thousand marks of English coin.—
Philip of France, if thou be pleased withal,
Command thy son and daughter to join hands.

K. Phi. It likes us well.—Young princes, close your hands. [They join hands.]

Aust. And your lips too; for, I am well assur'd,
That I did so, when I was first assur'd.

K. Phi. Now, citizens of Angiers, ope your gates,
Let in that amity which you have made;
For at saint Mary’s chapel presently
The rites of marriage shall be solemniz’d.—
Is not the lady Constance in this troop?
I know, she is not; for this match, made up,
Her presence would have interrupted much.
Where is she and her son? tell me, who knows.

Lec. She is sad and passionate at your highness’ tent.
K. Phi. And, by my faith, this league, that we have
Will give her sadness very little cure.—
[made]
Brother of England, how may we content
This widow’d lady? In her right we came,
Which we, God knows, have turn’d another way,
To our own vantage.

K. John. We will heal up all;
For we’ll create young Arthur duke of Bretagne,
And earl of Richmond, and this rich fair town
We make him lord of.—Call the lady Constance:
Some speedy messenger bid her repair
To our solemnity—I trust we shall,
If not fill up the measure of her will,
Yet in some measure satisfy her so,
That we shall stop her exclamation.
Go we, as well as haste will suffer us,
To this unlock’d for, unprepared pomp.

[Exeunt all but the Bastard.—The Citizens retire from the walls.

Bast. Mad world! mad kings! mad composition! John, to stop Arthur’s title in the whole,
Hath willingly departed with a part;
And France, whose armour conscience buckled on,
Whom zeal and charity brought to the field,
As God’s own soldier, rounded in the ear
With that same purpose-changer, that sly devil,
That broker that still breaks the pact of faith,
That daily break-voe, he that wins of all,
Of kings, of beggars, old men, young men, maids,—
Who having no external thing to lose,
But the word maid,—cheats the poor maid of that;
That smooth-faced gentleman, tickling commodity,—
Commodity, the bias of the world;
The world, who of itself is poised well,
Made to run even, upon even ground,
Till this advantage, this vile drawing bias,
This away of motion, this commodity,
Makes it take head from all indifferency,
From all direction, purpose, course, intent:
And this same bias, this commodity,
This bawd, this broker, this all-changing word,
Clapp’d on the outward eye ofickle France,
Hath drawn him from his own determin’d aim;—
From a resolv’d and honourable war,
To a most base and vile-concluded peace.
And why rail I on this commodity:
But for because he hath not woo’d me yet:
Not that I have no power to clutch my hand,
When his fair angels would salute my palm;
But for my hand, as unattempted yet,
Like a poor beggar, railing, in the rich.
Well, whilsts I am a beggar, I will rail,
And say, there is no sin, but to be rich;
And being rich, my virtue then shall be,
To say, there is no vice but beggary.
Since kings break faith upon commodity,
Gain, be my lord, for I will worship thee.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—The Same. The French King’s Tent.

Enter Constance, Arthur, and Salisbury.

Const. Gone to be married? gone to swear a peace?
False blood to false blood join’d! Gone to be friends?
Shall Lewis have Blanch, and Blanch those provinces?
It is not so; thou hast mis-spoke, mistranscribed:
Be well advis’d, tell o’er thy tale again:
It cannot be; thou dost but say ’tis so.
I trust, I may not trust thee, for thy word
Is but the vain breath of a common man:
Believe me, I do not believe thee, man:
I have a king’s oath to the contrary.
Thou shalt be punish’d for this trusting me,
For I am sick, and capable of fears;
Oppress’d with wrongs, and therefore full of fears;
A widow, husbandless, subject to fears;
A woman, naturally born to fears;
And though thou now confess, thou didst but jest,
With my vex’d spirits, I cannot take a truce,
But they will quake and tremble all this day.
What dost thou mean by shaking of thy head?
Why dost thou look so sadly on my son?
What means that hand upon that breast of thine?
Why holds thine eye that lamentable rheum,
Like a proud river peering o’er his bounds?

Be these sad signs confirmers of thy words?
Then speak again; not all thy former tale,
But this one word, whether thy tale be true.

Sal. As true, as, I believe, you think them false,
That give you cause to prove my saying true.

Const. O! if thou teach me to believe this sorrow,
Teach thou this sorrow how to make me die;
And let belief and life encounter so,
As doth the fury of two desperate men,
Which in the very meeting fall, and die.—
Lewis marry Blanch! O, boy! then where art thou?
France friend with England! what becomes of me?
Fellow, be gone; I cannot brook thy sight:
This news hath made thee a most ugly man.

Sal. What other harm have I, good lady, done,
But spoke the harm that is by others done?

Const. Which harm within itself so heinous is,
As it makes harmful all that speak of it.

Artk. I do beseech you, madam, be content.

Const. If thou, that bidd’st me be content, wert grim,
Ugly, and slanderous to thy mother’s womb.

Of full of unpleasing blots, unsightly* stains,
Lame, foolish, crooked, swart, prodigious,
Patch’d with foul moles, and eye-offending marks
I would not care, I then would be content;

KING JOHN.

For then I should not love thee; no, nor thou
Result of thy great birth, nor deserve a crown.

But thou art fair; and at thy birth, dear boy,
And fortune join'd to make thee great:
Nature's gifts thou may'st with little boast,
And with the half-blow'd rose. But fortune, O!
She is corrupted, chang'd, and won from thee:
She advanc'd hourly with his uncle John;
And with her golden hand hath plac'd on France
To endown fair respect of sovereignty,
And made his majesty the bawd to theirs.

France is a bawd to fortune, and king John;
That dunghill fortune, that usurping John!—
Tell me, thou fellow, is not France forsworn?
Clench him with words, or get thee gone,
And leave those woe's alone, which I alone
Am bound to understand.

Sir, I may not go without you to the kings.

Const. Thou may'st, thou shalt: I will not go with thee.

Will instruct my sorrow to be proud,
For grief is proud, and makes his owner stoop.
To me, and to the state of my great grief,
Let kings assemble; for my grief is so great,
That no supporter but the huge arm earth
Has held it up: here I and sorrows sit;
Here is my throne, bid kings come bow to it.

[She sits on the ground.]

Enter King John, King Philip, Lewis, Blanch,
Elinor, Bastard, Austria, and Attendants.

K. Phi. 'Tis true, fair daughter; and this blessed day in France shall be kept festival: [day, o solemnize this day, the glorious sun day in his course, and plays the alchemist, burning, with splendour of his precious eye,
the meagre coldy earth to glutting gold:
be yearly course, that brings this day about,
hall never see it but a holyday.

Const. A wicked day, and not a holy day! [Rising.
That hath this day deserv'd? what hath it done,
that in golden letters should be set,
among the high tides, in the calendar?
Say, rather, turn this day out of the week;
his day of shame, oppression, perjury:
If it must stand still, let wives with child say, that their burdens may not fall this day,
Let their hopes profaned be bowl'd:
On this day, let seamen fear no wreck;
No bargains break, that are not this day made:
This day all things begun come to ill end;
Faith itself to hollow falsehood change!

K. Phi. By heaven, lady, you shall have no cause to curse the fair proceedings of this day.

Hve I not pawn'd to you my majesty?

Const. You have beguil'd me with a counterfeit,
Reassembling majesty, which, being touch'd and tried,
Presses values: they are forever, forsworn;
We came in arms to spill mine enemies' blood,
But in arms you strengthen it with yours:
The grappling vigour, and rough frown of war,
E'd in amity and faint in peace.

And fair oppression hath made up this league.—
Arm arm, ye heavens, against these perjur'd kings!
A blow cries: be husband to me, heavens!
Let us the hours of this ungodly day
Wast out the day in peace: but, ere sunset,
Set armed discord 'twixt these perjur'd kings!
Hear me! O, hear me!

Aust. Lady Constance, peace!

Const. War! war! no peace! peace is to me a word,
O, Lymoges! O, Austria! thou dost shame
That bloody spoil: thou slave, thou wretch, the coward:
Thou little valiant, great in villainy!
Thou ever strong upon the stronger side!
Thou fortunate, a champion, thou dost never fight
But when her humorous ladyship is by
To teach thee safety! thou art perjur'd too
And sooth'd up greatness. What a fool art thou,
A ramping fool, to brag, and stamp, and swear,
Upon my party! Thou cold-blooded slave,
Hast thou not spoke like thunder on my side?
Been sworn my soldier! bidding me depend
Upon thy stars, thy fortune, and thy strength?
And dost thou now fall over to my foes?
Thou wear a lion's hide! doff it for shame,
And hang a calf's-skin on those recreant limbs.

Aust. O, that a man should speak those words to me!

Bast. And hang a calf's-skin on those recreant limbs

Aust. Thou darest not say so, villain, for thy life.

Bast. And hang a calf's-skin on those recreant limbs

K. John. We like not this: thou dost forget thyself.

Enter PANDULPH.

K. Phi. Here comes the holy legate of the pope.

Pand. Hail, you anointed deputies of heaven.

To thee, king John, my holy errand is.

1 Pandulph, of fair Milan cardinal,
And from Pope Innocent the legate here,
Do in his name religiously demand,
Why thou against the church, our holy mother,
So wilfully dost spurn; and, force perforce,
Keep Stephen Langton, chosen archbishop
Of Canterbury, from that holy see?
This, in our foresaid holy father's name,
Pope Innocent, I do demand of thee.

K. John. What earthly name to interrogatories
Can task the free breath of a sacred king?

Thou canst not, cardinal, devise a name
So slight, unworthy, and ridiculous,
To charge me to an answer, as the pope.

Tell him this tale; and from the mouth of England,
Add thus much more,—that no Italian priest
Shall sit thine or toll in our dominions;
But as we under heaven are supreme,
So, under heaven, that great supremacy,
Where we do reign, we will alone uphold,
Without thine assistance of a mortal hand.

So tell the pope; all reverence set apart
To him, and his usurp'd authority.

K. John. Though you, and all the kings of Christendom,
Are led so grossly by this meddling priest,
Dreading the curse that money may buy out,
And, by the merit of vile gold, dross, dust,
Purchas'd corrupted pardon of a man;
Who, in that sale, sells pardon from himself;
Though you, and all the rest, so grossly led,
This juggling witchcraft with revenue cherish,
Yet I, alone, alone do me oppose
Against the pope, and count his friends my foes.

Pand. Then, by the lawful power that I have,
Thou shalt stand curr'd, and excommunicate:
And blessed shall he be, that doth revolt
From his allegiance to an heretic;
And meritorious shall that hand be call'd,
Canoniz'd and worshipp'd as a saint,
That takes away by any secret course
Thy hateful life.

Con. O! lawful let it be,
That I have room with Rome to curse awhile.
Good father Cardinal, cry thou amen
To my keen curses: for without my wrong
There is no tongue hath power to curse him right.

Pard. There’s law and warrent, lady, for my curse.

Con. And for mine too: when law can do no right,
Let it be lawful that law bar no wrong.
Law cannot give my child his kingdom here,
For he that holds his kingdom holds the law:
Therefore, since law itself is perfect wrong,
How can the law forbid my tongue to curse?

Pard. Philip of France, on peril of a curse,
Let go the hand of that arch-heretic,
And raise the power of France upon his head,
Unless he do submit himself to Rome.

Elt. Lookst thou pale, France? do not let go thy hand.

Con. Look to that, devil. lest that France repent,
And by disjoinings hands hell lose a soul.

Aust. King Philip, listen to the cardinal.

Bast. And hang a calf’s-skin on his recreant limbs.

Aust. Well, ruffian, I must pocket up these wrongs, Because—

Bast. Your breeches best may carry them.
K. John. Philip, what say’st thou to the cardinal?

Con. What should he say, but as the cardinal?

Lev. Bothkink, you father; for the difference
Is purchase of a heavy curse from Rome,
O, the light loss of England for a friend:
Forgo the easier.

Blanch. That’s the curse of Rome.

Con. O Lewis, stand fast! the devil tempts thee here,
In likeness of a new uptrimmed1 bride.

Blanch. The lady Constance speaks not from her faith,
But from her need.

Con. O! if thou grant my need,
Which only lives but by the death of faith,
That need must needs infer this principle,
That faith would live again by death of need:
O! then, tread down my need, and faith mounts up;
Keep my need up, and faith is trodden down.

K. John. The king is mov’d, and answers not to this.

Con. O! be remov’d from him, and answer well.
Aust. Do so, King Philip: hang more in doubt.

Bast. Hang nothing but a calf’s-skin, most sweet suit.

K. Phi. I am perplex’d, and know not what to say.

Pard. What canst thou say, but will perplex thee more,
tr. how stand excommunicate, and curse’d?

K. Phi. Good reverend father, make my person yours,
And tell me how you would bestow yourself.
This royal hand and mine are newly knit,
And the conjunction of our inward souls
Married in league, coupled and linked together
With all religious strength of sacred vows;
The latest breath that gave the sound of words,
Was deep-sworn faith, peace, amity, true love,
Between our kingdoms, and our royal selves;
And even before this truce, but new before,
No longer than we well could wash our hands,
To clap this royal bargain up of peace,
Heaven knows, they were bear-armed2 and overstain’d
With William’s penit; where revenge did paint
The fearful deficiency of immense kings:
And shall these hands, so lately purged of blood,

1. uptrimmed: I. n. e. = which Dyce defines, "virgins." 2. bear-armed: I. n. e. = Dyce suggests "shaved."
KING JOHN.

815

So strongly guarded.—Cousin, look not sad:

Thy grandam loves thee, and thy uncle will
As dear be to thee as thy father was.

Arth. O! this will make my mother die with grief.

K. John. Cousin, [To the Bastard.] away for England : haste before;
And ere our coming, see thou shakst the bags
Of hoarding abbots; their imprisonment angels
Set at liberty: the fat rible of peace
Must by the hungry now be fed upon:
Use our commissary in his utmost force.

Bast. Bell, book, and candle shall not drive me back,
When gold and silver beckons me to come on.
I leave your highness.—Grandam, I will pray
(If ever I remember to be holy,
For your fair safety: so I kiss your hand.

Eli. Farewell, gentle cousin.

K. John. Cos, farewell. [Exit Bastard.]

Eli. Come hither, little kinsman; bark, a word.

She talks apart with Arthur.

K. John. Come hither, Hubert. O! my gentle Hubert,
We owe thee much: within this wall of flesh
There is a soul counts thee her creditor,
And with advantage means to pay thy love:
And, my good friend, thy voluntary oath
Lives in this house, dearly cherished.
Give me thy hand. I had a thing to say,—
But I will fit it with some better time.
By heaven, Hubert, I am almost ashamed
To say what good respect I have of thee.

Hub. I am much bounden to your majesty. [yest;
K. John. Good friend, thou hast no cause to say so
But thou shalt have: and creep time ne'er so slow,
Yet it shall come, for me to do thee good.
I had a thing to say,—but let it go.
The sun is in the heaven, and the proud day,
Attended with the pleasures of the world,
Is all too wanton, and too full of gawds,
To give me audience:—if the midnight bell
Did, with his iron tongue and brazen mouth,
Sound on into the drowsy ear of night:
If this same were a churchyard where we stand,
And thou possessed with a thousand wrongs;
Or if that surely spring of melancholy,
Had bak'd thy blood, and made it heavy, thick,
(Which, else, runs tingling up and down the veins,
Making that idiot, laughter, keep men's eyes,
And strain their cheeks to idle merriment,
A passion haleful to my purpose,
Or if that thou couldst see me without eyes,
Hear me without thine ears, and make reply
Without a tongue, using conceit alone,
Without eyes, ears, and harmful sound of words,
Then, in despite of the broad watchful day,
I would into thy bosom pour my thoughts.
But ah! I will not:—yet I love thee well:
And, by my troth, I think, thou lov'st me well.

Hub. So well, that what you bid me undertake
Though that my death was adjourned to my act,
By heaven, I would do it.

K. John. Do not I know, thou wouldst?
Good Hubert! Hubert—Hubert, throw thine eye
On yond' young boy: I'll tell thee what, my friend,
He is a very serpent in my way:
And whereas or this foot of mine doth tread,
He lies before me. Dost thou understand me?
Thou art his keeper.

SCENE III.—The Same.

Alarms; Excursions; Retreat. Enter King John
Elios, Arthur, the Bastard, Hubert, and Lords.

K. John. So shall it be; your grace shall stay behind,

[To Elios.]

1 Not in f. o.  2 shy: in f. o.  3 This word not in f. o.  4 She takes Arthur aside: in f. o.  5 moe: in f. o.  6 thisling: in f. o.
This word not in f. o.  8 brooked: in f. o.
Hub. And I'll keep him so,
That he shall not offend your majesty.
Hub. My lord?
Hub. He shall not live.

I could be merry now. Hubert, I love thee;
Well, I'll not say what I intend for thee:
Remember,—Madam, fare you well;
I'll send those powers o'er to your majesty.
Eli. My blessing go with thee!
Hubert shall be your man, attend on you
With all true duty.—On towards Calais, ho! [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—The Same. The French King's Tent.

Enter King Philip, Lewis, PANDULPH, and Attendants.

K. Phi. So, by a roaring tempest on the flood,
A whole armada of converted sail
Is scatter'd, and disjoint'd from fellowship.
Pend. Courage and contentment! all shall yet go well.
K. Phi. What can go well, when we have run so ill?
Are we not beaten? Is not Angiers lost?
Arthur ta'en prisoner? divers dear friends slain?
And bloody England into England gone,
O'erbearing interruption, spite of France?
Lew. What he hath won, that hath he fortified:
So hot a speed with such advice disposed,
Such temperate order in so fierce a cause,
Doth want example. Who hath read, or heard,
Of any kindred action like to this?
K. Phi. Well could I bear that England had this praise,
So we could find some pattern of our shame.
Enter Constance.

Look, who comes here? a grave unto a soul;
Holding thy eternal spirit, against her will,
In the vile prison of afflicted breath.—
I pr'ythee, lady, go away with me.

Con. Lo now; now see the issue of your peace!
K. Phi. Patience, good lady: comfort, gentle Constance.

Con. No, I defy all counsel, all redress,
But that which ends all counsel, true redress,
Death, death.—O, amiable lovely death!
Thou odouriferous steench! sound rottenness!
Arose from forth the couch of lasting night,
Thou hatest and terror to prosperity;
And I will kiss thy detestable bones;
And put my eye-balls in thy vauley brows;
And ring these fingers with thy household worms;
And stop this gap of breath with fulsome dust,
And be a carrion monster like thyself:
Come, grin on me: and I will think thou smilest,
And buss thee as thy wife! Misery's love,
O, come to me!

K. Phi. O, fair affliction, peace!

Con. No, no, I will not, having breath to cry,—
O! that my tongue were in the thunder's mouth;
Then with what passion I would shake the world,
And rouse from sleep that fell anatomy,
Which cannot hear a lady's feeble voice,
Which soorns a widow's invocation.

Pend. Lady, you utter madness, and not sorrow.
Con. Thou art not holy to belie me so.
I was thy wife, that art my son in law;
My name is Constance: I was Geoffrey's wife;
Young Arthur is my son, and he is lost!
I am not mad:—I would to heaven. I were;

For then, 'tis like I should forget myself:
O, if I could, what grief should I forget! —
Preach some philosophy to make me mad,
And thou shalt be canoniz'd, cardinal;
For, being not mad, but sensible of grief,
My reasonable part produces reason
How I may be deliver'd of these woes,
And teaches me to kill or hang myself:
If I were mad. I should forget my son;
I madly think a babe of clouts were he.
I am not mad: too well, too well I feel
The different plague of each calamity.

K. Phi. Bind up those tresse: O! what love I note
In the fair multitude of those her hairs!
Where but by chance a silver drop hath fallen,
Even to that drop ten thousand wry friends
Do glue themselves in sociable grief;
Like true, inseparable, faithful lovers,
Sticking together in calamity.

Con. To England, if you will.

K. Phi. Bind up your hairs.

Con. Yes, that I will: and wherefore will I do it?
I tore them from their bonds, and cried aloud,
"O, that these hands could so redeem my son,
As they have given these hairs their liberty!"
But now, I envy at their liberty,
And will again commit them to their bonds,
Because my poor child is a prisoner:
And, father cardinal, I have heard you say,
That we shall see and know our friends in heaven:
If that be true, I shall see my boy again;
For, since the birth of Cain, the first male child,
To him that did but yesterday surpise,
There was not such a gracious creature born.
But now will canker a row to eat my bud,
And chase the native beauty from his cheek,
And he will look as hollow as a ghost,
As dim and meagre as an ague's fit,
And so he 'll die; and, rising so again,
When I shall meet him in the court of heaven,
I shall not know him: therefore never, never
Must I behold my pretty Arthur more.

Pend. You hold too heinous a respect of grief.

Con. He talks to me, that never had a son.

K. Phi. You are as fond of grief, as of your child.

Con. Grief fills the room up of my absent child,
Lies in his bed, walks up and down with me;
Puts on his pretty looks, repeats his words,
Remembers me of all his gracious parts,
Stuffs out his vacant garments with his form:
Then, have I reason to be fond of grief.

Fare you well: had you such a loss as I,
I could give better comfort than you do.—
I will not keep this form upon my head;

Tearing her hair.

When there is such disorder in my wit,
K. Phi. O lord! my boy, my Arthur, my fair son!
My life, my joy, my food, my all the world,
My widow-comfort, and my sorrow's cure!

Con. [Exit.

K. Phi. I fear some outrage, and I'll follow her.

Pend. Before the curing of a strong disease,
Even in the instant of repair and health,
The fit is strongest: evils that take leave,
KING JOHN.

On their departure most of all show evil.
What have you lost by losing of this day?

Lew. All days of glory, joy, and happiness.

Pand. If you had won it, certainly, you had.
No. no: when fortune seems to man most good,
She looks upon him with a threatening eye.

Is it strange, to think how much King John hath lost
In this which he accounts so clearly won.

Are not you grieved that Arthur is his prisoner?

Lew. As heartily, as he is glad he hath him.

Pand. Your mind is all as youthful as your blood.

Now hear me speak with a prophetic spirit;
For even the breath of what I mean to speak
Shall blow each dust, each straw, each little rub,
Out of the path which shall directly lead
Thy foot to England's throne; and therefore mark.

John hath seiz'd Arthur; and it cannot be,
That whiles warm life plays in that infant's veins,
The mispris'd John should entertain one hour,
One minute, nay, one quiet breath of rest.
A snare, snatch'd with an unkindly hand,
Must be as boisterously maintain'd as gain'd;
And he, that stands upon a slippery place,
Makes none of no vile hold to stay him up:
That John may stand, then Arthur needs must fall;
So be it, for it cannot be but so.

Lew. But what shall I gain by young Arthur's fall?

Pand. You, in the right of lady Blanch your wife,
May then make all the claims that Arthur did.

Lew. And lose it, life and all, as Arthur did.

Pand. How green you are, and fresh in this old world!

John lays you plots; the times conspire with you,
For he that steeps his safety in true blood
Shall find but bloody safety, and untrust.

This act, so evilly born, shall cool the hearts
Of all his people, and freeze up their zeal,
That none so small advantage shall step forth
To check his reign, but they will cherish it
No natural exhalation in the sky,
No scope of nature, no distemper'd day,
No common wind, no customized event,
But they will pluck away his natural cause,
And call them meteors, prodigies, and signs,
Ablowives, presages, and tongues of heaven,
Plainly denouncing vengeance upon John.

Lew. May be, he will not touch young Arthur's life,
But hold himself safe in his prison;

Pand. O! sir, when he shall hear of your approach,
If that young Arthur be not gone already,
Even at that news he dies; and then the hearts
Of all his people shall revolt from him,
And kiss the lips of unacquainted change;
And pick strong matter of revolt, and wrath,
Out of the bloody fingers' ends of John.

Methinks, I see this hurly all on foot:
And, O! what better matter breeds for you,
Than I have nam'd.—The bastard Faulconbridge
Is now in England ransacking the church,
Offending charity: if but a dozen French
Were there in arms, they would be as a call
To train ten thousand English to their side;
Or as a little snow, tumbled about,
Anon becomes a mountain. O, noble Dauphin!
Go with me to the king. 'T is wonderful,
What may be wrought out of their discontent.
Now that their souls are topfull of offence,
For England go; I will whet on the king.

Lew. Strong reasons make strong actions. Let us ga
If you say, ay, the king will not say, no.

[Exeunt]

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—Northampton. A Room in the Castle.

Enter Hubert and two Attendants.

Hub. Heat me these irons hot; and, look thou send Within the areas: when I strike my foot
Upon the bosom of the ground, rush forth,
And bind the boy, which you shall find with me,
Fast to the chair: be heedful. Hence, and watch.

1 Attend. I hope, your warrant will bear out the deed.

Hub. Uncleanly scripures: fear not you: look to 't.

[Exeunt Attendants.

Young lad, come forth; I have to say with you.

Enter Arthur.

Art. Good morrow, Hubert.

Hub. Good morrow, little prince.

Art. As little prince (having so great a title
To be more prince,) as may be. You are sad.

Hub. Indeed, I have been merrier.

Art. Mercy on me! Methinks, no body should be sad but I:
Yet I remember, when I was in France,
Young gentlemen would be as sad as night,
Only for wantonness. By my christendom,
So I were out of prison, and kept sheep,
I should be merry as the day is long;
And so I would be here, but that I doubt
My uncle practises more harm to me:
He is afraid of me, and I of him.

Is it my fault that I was Geoffrey's son?

No, indeed, is it not; and I would to heaven,
I were your son, so you would love me, Hubert.

Hub. [Aside.] If I talk to him, with his innocent prate
He will awake my mercy, which lies dead:
Therefore I will be sudden, and dispatch.

Art. Are you sick, Hubert? You look pale to-day.
In sooth, I would you were a little sick;
That I might sit all night, and watch with you.
I warrant, I love you more than you do me.

Hub. [Aside.] His words do take possession of my bosom.

[Read here, young Arthur. [Shoeing a paper.]
[Aside.] How now, foolish rheum?
Turning dispensive torture out of door?
I must be brief; lest resolution drop
Out at mine eyes in tender womanish tears.—
Can you not read it? is it not fair writ?

Art. Too fairly, Hubert, for so foul effect.
Must you with hot irons burn out both mine eyes?

Hub. Young boy, I must.

Art. And will you?

Hub. And I will.

Art. Have you the heart? When your head did not ache,
I knit my handkerchief about your brows,
(The best I had, a princess wrought it me,) And I did never ask it you again:
And with my hand at midnight held your head,
And, like the watchful minutes to the hour,
Still and anon cheer'd up the heavy time,
Saying, What lack you? and, Where lies your grief?
Or, What good love may I perform for you?
Many a poor man's son would have lain still,
And ne'er have spoke a loving word to you;
But you at your sick service had a prince.
Nay, you may think my love was crafty love,
And call it cunning: do, an if you will.
If heaven be pleas'd that you will use me ill,
Why, then you must — Will you put out mine eyes?
Those eyes, that never did, nor never shall
So much as frown on you?

Hub. I have sworn to do it,
And with hot irons must I burn them out.

Arth. Ah! none but in this iron age would do it.
The iron of itself, though heat red-hot,
Approaching near these eyes would drink my tears,
And quench this! fiery indignation,
Even in the matter of mine innocence:
Nay, after that, consume away in rust,
But for containing fire to harm mine eye.
Are you more stubborn-hard than hammer'd iron?
An if an angel should have come to me,
And told me Hubert should put out mine eyes,
I would not have believ'd him: no tongue but Hubert's.

Arth. O! save me, Hubert, save me! my eyes are out,
Even with the fierce looks of these bloody men.

Hub. Give me the iron, I say, and bind him here.

Arth. Alas! what need you be so boisterous-rough?
I will not struggle; I will stand stone-still.
For heaven's sake, Hubert, let me not be bound.
Nay, hear me, Hubert: drive these men away,
And I will sit as quiet as a lamb;
I will not stir, nor wince, nor speak a word,
Nor look upon the iron angrily.
Thrust but these men away, and I'll forgive you,
Whatever torment you do put me to.

Hub. Go, stand within: let me alone with him.

1 Attend. I am best pleas'd to be from such a deed.

[Exeunt Attendants.

Arth. Alas! I then have chid away my friend;
He hath a stern look, but a gentle heart,—
Let him come back, that his compassion may Give life to yours.

Hub. Come, boy, prepare yourself.

Arth. Is there no remedy?

Hub. None, but to lose your eyes.

Arth. O heaven!—that there were but a mote in yours,
A grain, a dust, a gnat, a wandering hair,
Any annoyance in that precious sense!
Then, feeling what small things are boisterous there,
Your vile intent must needs seem horrible.

Hub. Is this your promise? go to; hold your tongue.

Arth. Hubert, the utterance of a brace of tongues
Must needs want pleading for a pair of eyes:
Let me not hold my tongue; let me not, Hubert:
Or, Hubert, if you will, cut out my tongue,
So I may keep mine eyes. O! spare mine eyes;
Though to no use, but still to look on you.
Lo! by my troth, the instrument is cold,
And would not harm me.

Hub. Can heat it, boy.

Arth. No, in good sooth; the fire is dead with grief,
Being created for comfort, to be us'd

In underriv'd extremes: see else yourself;
There is no malice in this burning coal,
The breath of heaven hath blown his spirit out,
And struck repellant ashes on his head.

Hub. But with my breath I can revive it, boy.

Arth. And if you do, you will but make it blush,
And glow with shame of your proceedings, Hubert:
Nay, it, perchance, will sparkle in your eyes;
And like a dog that is compell'd to fight,
Snatch at his master that doth tarre'x him on.
All things that you should use to do me wrong,
Deny their office: only you do lack
That mercy, which fierce fire, and iron, extend,
Creatures of note for mercy-lacking uses.

Hub. Well, see to live; I will not touch thine eyes
For all the treasures that thine uncle owes:
Yet am I sworn, and I did purpose, boy,
With this same very iron to burn them out.

Arth. O! now you look like Hubert: all this while
You were disguised.

Your uncle must not know but you are dead:
I'll fill these dogged spies with false reports;
And, pretty child, sleep doublets, and secure,
That Hubert for the wealth of all the world
Will not offend thee.

Arth. O heaven!—I thank you, Hubert

Hub. Silence! no more. Go closely in with me;
Much danger do I undergo for thee.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The Same. A Room of State in the Palace.

Enter King John, crowned; Pembroke, Salisbury, and other Lords. The King takes his State.

K. John. Here once again we sit, once again crown'd,
And look'd upon, I hope, with cheerful eyes.

Pem. This once again, but that your highness pleased,
Was once superfluous: you were crown'd before,
And that high royalty was ne'er plac'd off;
The faiths of men ne'er stain'd with revolt;
Fresh expectation troubled not the land,
With any long'd-for change, or better state.

Sal. Therefore, to be possess'd with double pomp,
To guard a title that was rich before,
To gild refined gold, to paint the lily,
To throw a perfume on the violet,
To smooth the ice, or add another hue
Unto the rainbow, or with taper-light
To seek the beauteous eye of heaven to garnish,
Is wasteful, and ridiculous excess.

Pem. But that your royal pleasure must be done,
This act is as an ancient tale new told,
And in the last repeating troublesome,
Being urged at a time unseasonable.

Sal. In this, the antique and well-noted face
Of plain old form is much disfigur'd;
And, like a swallow on a sail,
It makes the course of thoughts to fetch about,
Startles and frights consideration,
Makes soul sound opinion sick, and truth suspected,
For putting on so new a fashion'd robe.

Pem. When workmen strive to do better than well:
They do confound their skill in covetousness;
And, oftentimes, excusing of a fault
Both make the fault the worse by the excuse.
As patches, set upon a little breach,
Dwight more in the hiding of the fault,
Than did the fault before it was so patch'd.

Sal. To this effect, before you were new-crown'd,
KING JOHN. 319

K. John. They burn in indignation. I repeat:
There is no sure foundation set on blood,
No certain life achiev'd by others' death.

Enter a Messenger.

A fearful eye thou hast: where is that blood,
That I have seen inhabit in those cheeks?
So foul a sky clear not without a storm;
Four down thy weather. How goes all in France?
Mess. From France to England. Never such a power
For any foreign preparation,
Was levied in the body of a land.
The copy of your speed is learn'd by them;
For, when you should be told they do prepare,
The tides come that they are all arriv'd.
K. John. O! where hath our intelligence been drunk?
Where hath it slept? Where is my mother's care,
That such an army could be drawn in France,
And she not hear of it?

Mess. My liege, her ear
Is stopp'd with dust: the first of April, died
Your noble mother: and, as I hear, my lord,
The lady Constance in a frenzy died
Three days before: but this from rumour's tongue
I idly heard: if true, or false, I know not.
K. John. Withhold thy speed, dreadful Occasion!
O! make a league with me, till I have pleas'd
My discontented peers. What! mother dead?
How wildly, then, walks my estate in France?
Under whose conduct come those powers of France,
That thou for truth giv'st out are landed here?
Mess. Under the Dauphin.

Enter the Bastard, and Peter of Pomfret.

K. John. Thou hast made me giddy
With these ill-tidings. Now, what says the world
To your proceedings? do not seek to stuff
My head with more ill news, for it is full.
Bast. But if you be afraid to hear the worst,
Then let the worst, unheard, fall on your head.
K. John. Bear with me, cousin, for I was amaz'd
Under the tide; but now I breathe again
Aloft the flood, and can give audience
To any tongue, speak it of what it will.
Bast. How have I sped among the clergymen,
The sums I have collected shall express:
But as I travell'd hither through the land,
I find the people strangely famish'd;
Possessed with rumours, full of idle dreams,
Not knowing what they fear, but full of fear;
And here's a prophet, that I brought with me
From forth the streets of Pomfret, whom I found
With many hundreds treading on his heels;
To whom he sung, in rude harh-sounding rhymes,
That ere the next Ascension-day at noon,
Your highness should deliver up your crown.
K. John. Thou idle dreamer, wherefore didst thou so?
Peter. Foreknowing that the truth will fall out so.
K. John. Hubert, away with him: imprison him;
And on that day at noon, whereon, he says,
I shall yield up my crown, let him be hang'd.
Deliver him to safety, and return,
For I must use thee.—O my gentle cousin!

[Exit Hubert, with Peter.

Hear'st thou the news abroad. who are arriv'd?

Bast. The French, my lord; men's mouths are full Bides, of a most lawless conspiracy;
Bogot, and lord Salisbury, of it:
With eyes as red as now-enkindled fire,
And others more, going to seek the grave
Of Arthur, who, they say, is kill'd to-night
On your suggestion.
K. John. Gentle kinsman, go,
And thrust thyself into their companies.
I have a way to win their loves again:
Bring them before me.

Bast. I will seek them out.

K. John. Nay, but make haste; the better foot before.—

O! let me have no subject enemies,
When adverse foreigners affright my towns
With dreadful pomp of stout invasion,
Be Mercury; set feathers to thy heels,
And fly like thought from them to me again.

Bast. The spirit of the time shall teach me speed.

[Exit.

K. John. Spoke like a spriteful, noble gentleman.—
Go after him; for he, perhaps, shall need
Some messenger betwixt me and the peers,
And be thou he.

Mett. With all my heart, my liege. [Exit.

K. John. My mother dead!
Re-enter HUBERT.

Hub. My lord, they say, five moons were seen to-night:
Four fixed; and the fifth did whirl about
The other four in wonderous motion.

K. John. Five moons?

Hub. Old men, and beldames, in the streets
Do prophesy upon it dangerously.
Young Arthur’s death is common in their mouths,
And when they talk of him, they shake their heads,
And whisper one another in the ear;
And he that speaks, doth grip the hearer’s wrist,
Whilst he that hears, makes fearful action,
With wrinkled brows, with nods, with rolling eyes.
I saw a smith stand with his hammer, thus,
The whilst his iron did on the anvil cool,
With open mouth swallowing a tailor’s news;
Who, with his shears and measure in his hand,
Standing on slippers, (which his nimble haste
Had falsely thrust upon contrary foot)
Told of a many thousand warlike French,
That were embattled and rank’d in Kent.
Another lean, unwash’d artificer,
Cuts off his tale, and talks of Arthur’s death.

K. John. Why seek’st thou to possess me with these fears?
Why urg’st thou so oft young Arthur’s death?
Thy hand hath murder’d him: I had a mighty cause
To wash him dead, but thou hadst none to kill him.

Hub. Had none, my lord? why, did you not provoke me?

K. John. It is the curse of kings, to be attended
By slaves, that take their humours for a warrant
To break into the bloody house of life;
And, on the winking of authority,
To understand a law; to know the meaning
Of dangerous majesty, when, perchance, it frowns
More upon humour than advis’d respect.

Hub. Here is your hand and seal for what I did.

K. John. O! when the last account ‘twixt heaven
And earth
Is to be made, then shall this hand and seal
Witness against us to damnation.
How oft the sight of means to do ill deeds
Makes ill deeds done! Hadst thou not been by,
A fellow by the hand of nature mark’d,
Quoted, and sign’d, to do a deed of shame,
This murder had not come into my mind;
But, taking note of thy ahorr’d aspect,
Finding thee fit for bloody villainy,
I, apt, liable to be employ’d in danger,
I faintly broke with thee of Arthur’s death;
And thou, to be endorsed to a king,
Made it no conscience to destroy a prince.

Hub. My lord,—

K. John. Hadst thou but shook thy head, or made a
When I spake darkly what I purposed; [pause,
Or turned an eye of doubt upon my face,
Or bid me tell my tale in express words,
Deep shame had struck me dumb, made me break off,
And all the feares might have wrought feares in me:
But thou didst understand me by my signs,
And didst in signs again parley with sign:
Yea, without stop, didst let thy heart consent,
And consequently thy rude hand to act
The deed which both our tongues held vile to name.
Out of my sight, and never see me more!
My nobles leave me: and my state is brav’d,
Even at my gates, with ranks of foreign powers:
Nay, in the body of this fleshly land,
This kingdom, this confine of blood and breath,
Hostility and civil tumult reigns
Between my conscience, and my cousin’s death.

Hub. Arm you against your other enemies,
I’ll make a peace between your soul and you.
Young Arthur is alive: this hand of mine
Is yet a maiden and an innocent hand,
Not painted with the crimson spots of blood.
Within this bosom never enter’d yet
The dreadful motion of a murderous thought,
And you have slander’d nature in my form;
Which, howsoever rude exteriorly,
Is yet the cover of a fairer mind,
Than to be butcher of an innocent child.

K. John. Doth Arthur live? O! haste thee to the peers:
Throw this report on their incensed rage,
And make them tame to their obedience.
Forgive the comment that my passion made
Upon thy feature; for my rage was blind,
And soul imaginary eyes of blood
Presented thee more hideous than thou art.
O! answer not; but to my closet bring
The angry lords, with all expedient haste:
I conjure thee but slowly; run more fast.

[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The Same. Before the Castle.

Enter ARTHUR, on the Walls.

Arth. The wall is high; and yet will I leap down.—
Good ground, be pitiful, and hurt me not!—
There’s few, or none, do know me; if they did,
This ship-boy’s semblance hath disguis’d me quite.
I am afraid; and yet I’ll venture it.
If I get down, and do not break my limbs,
I’ll find a thousand shifts to get away:
As good to die and go, as die and stay. [Leaps down.
O me! my uncle’s spirit is in these stones.—
Heaven take my soul, and England keep my bones. [Dies.

Enter PEMBROKE, SALISBURY, and BURGOT.

Sal. Lords, I will meet him at Saint Edmund’s Bury:
It is our safety, and we must embrace
This gentle offer of the perilous time.

Pem. Who brought that letter from the cardinal? Sal. The count Melun, a noble lord of France;
Whose privatemissive of the Dauphin’s love
Is much more general than these times import.
But, in the morning let me meet him then
Sal. Or, rather then set forward: for ‘t will be
Two long days’ journey, lords, or e’er we meet.
Enter the Bastard.

Bast. Once more to-day well met, distemper'd lords. The king by me requests your presence straight.

Sal. The king hath disposses'd himself of us: He will not line his sin-besotted! cloak With our pure honours, nor attend the foot That leaves the print of blood where'er it walks. Return, and tell him so: we know the worst.

Bast. What che'er you think, good words, I think, were be beat. Sal. Our griefs, and not our manners, reason now. Bast. But there is little reason in your grief; Therefore, 't were reason you had manners now. Prm. Sir, sir, impatience hath his privilege. Bast. 'T is true: to hurt his master, no man else. Sal. This is the prison. What is he lies here?

Prem. O death! made proud with pure and princely beauty, The earth had not a hole to hide this deed. Sal. Murder, as hating what himself hath done, Hath lay it open to urge on revenge. Big. Or when he doom'd this beauty to a grave, Found it too precious-princely for a grave. Sal. Sir Richard, what think you? Have you beheld, Or have you read, or heard? or could you think? Or do you almost think, although you see, That you do see? could thought, without this object, Form such another? This is the very top, The height, the crest, or crest unto the crest, Of murder's arms: this is the bloodiest shame, The wildest savagery, the vilest stroke, That ever wall-eyed' wrath, or staring rage, Present to the tears of soft remorse. Prem. All murders past do stand exced'd in this; And this, so sole and so unmatchable, Stain give a holiness, a purity, To the yet unbegotten sin of times; And prove a deadly bloodshed but a jest, Exampled by this heinous spectacle. Bast. It is a damned and a bloody work; The graceless action of a heavy hand, If that it be the work of any hand. Sal. If that it be the work of any hand?— We had a kind of light, what would ensue: It is the shameful work of Hubert's hand; The practice, and the purpose, of the king: From whose obedience I forbid my soul, Kneeling before this ruin of sweet life, And breathing to his breathless excellence The license of a vow, a holy vow, Never to taste the pleasures of the world, Never to be infected with delight, Nor conversant with ease and idleness, Till I have set a glory to this head, By giving it the worship of revenge. Prem. Big. Our souls religiously confirm thy words. Enter Hessey.

Hub. Lords, I am hot with haste in seeking you. Arthur doth live; the king hath sent for you. Sal. O! he is bold, and blushes not at death.— Avast, thou hateful villain! get thee gone. Hub. I am no villain. Sal. Must I rob the law? [Drawing his sword. Bast. Your sword is bright, sir: put it up again. Sal. Not till I sheath it in a murderer's skin. Hub. Stand back, lord Salisbury; stand back, I say: By Heaven, I think, my sword's as sharp as yours. I would not have you, lord, forget yourself,
The life, the right, and truth of all this realm
Is fled to heaven; and England now is left
To tug and scramble, and to part by the teeth
The unowned interest of proud swelling state.
Now for the bare-pick'd bone of majesty.
Doth dogged war bristle his angry crest,
And snarl leth in the gentle eyes of peace:
Now powers from home, and discontented at home,
Meet in one line: and vast confusion waits,
As doth a raven on a sick-fallen beast,
The imminent decay of wrested pomp.
Now happy he, whose cloak and cincture can Hold out this tempest. — Bear away that child,
And follow me with speed: I'll to the king,
A thousand businesses are brief in hand,
And heaven itself doth frown upon the land.

[Exeunt: Hubert bearing out Arthur's may.]

ACT V.

SCENE I.—The Same. A Room in the Palace.

Enter King John, Pandulph with the Crown, and Attendants.

K. John. Thus have I yielded up into your hand
This circlet of my glory.

From this my hand, as holding of the pope,
Your sovereign greatness and authority.

K. John. Now keep your holy word: go meet the French;
And from his holiness use all your power
To stop their marches, 'fore we are inflamm'd.
Our discontented counties do revolt,
Our people quarrel with obedience,
Swearing allegiance, and the love of soul,
To stranger blood, to foreign royalty.
This inundation of mistemper'd humour
Rests by you only to be qualified:
Then pause not; for the present time's so sick,
That present medicine must be minister'd,
Or overthrow incurable ensues.

Pand. It was my breath that blew this tempest up,
Upon your stubborn usage of the pope;
But since you are a gentle convert,
My tongue shall hush again this storm of war,
And make fair weather in your blistering land.
On this Ascension-day, remember well,
Upon your oath of service to the pope,
Go I to make the French lay down their arms. [Exeunt.

K. John. Is this Ascension-day? Did not the prophet
Say that before Ascension-day at noon,
My crown I should give off? Even so I have.
Did I suppose it should be on constraint;
But, heaven be thank'd, it is but voluntary.

Enter the Bastard.

K. John. All Kent hath yielded; nothing there holds
But Dover castle: London hath receiv'd,
Like a kind host, the Dauphin and his powers.
Your nobles will not hear you, but are gone
To offer service to your enemy:
And wild amazement hurry up and down
The little number of your doubtful friends.

K. John. Would not my lords return to me again,
After they heard young Arthur was alive?

Bast. They found him dead, and cast into the streets;
An empty casket, where the jewel of life
By some damn'd hand was rob'd and ta'en away.

K. John. That villain Hubert told me he did live.

Bast. So, on my soul, he did, for aught he knew.
But wherefore do you droop? why look you sad?
Be great in act, as you ha've been in thought;
Let not the world see fear, and blank distrust,
Govern the motion of a kingly eye:

Be stirring as the time; meet fire with fire;
Threaten the threatenere, and outface the brow
Of bragging horror: so shall inferior eyes,
That borrow their behaviours from the great,
Grow great by your example, and put on
The dauntless spirit of resolution.
Away! and glister like the god of war,
When he intendeth to become the field:
Show boldness, and aspiring confidence.

What! shall they seek the lion in his den,
And fright him there? and make him tremble there?
O! let it not be said.—Courage, and run
To meet displeasure further from the doors,
And grapple with him ere he come so nigh.

K. John. The legate of the pope hath been with me,
And I have made a happy peace with him;
And he hath promis'd to dismiss the powers
Led by the Dauphin.

Bast. O, inglorious league! shall we, upon the footing of our land,
Send fair-play offers, and make compromise,
Insinuation, parody, and base truce,
To arms invasive? shall a beardless boy,
A cocker'd silken wanton, brave our fields,
And fleh his spirit in a warlike soil,
Mocking the air with colours idly spread,
And find no check? Let us, my liege, to arms:
Perchance, the cardinal cannot make your peace;
Or if he do, let it at least be said,
They saw we had a purpose of defence.

K. John. Have thou the ordering of this present time.

Bast. Away then, with good courage; yet I know,
Our party may well meet a prouder foe.

Enter, in arms, Lewis, Salisbury, Melun, Pembrows, Boot, and Soldiers.

lew. My lord Melun, let this be copied out,
And keep it safe for our remembrance.
Return the precedent to these lords again;
That, having our fair order written down,
Both they, and we, perusing o'er these notes,
May know wherewith we took the sacrament,
And keep our faiths firm and inviolable.

Sal. Upon our sides it never shall be broken.
And, noble Dauphin, albeit we swear
A voluntary seal, and an unurg'd faith,
To your proceedings; yet, believe me, prince,
I am not glad that such a sorn of time
Should seek a plaster by contemn'd revolt,
And heal the inveterate canker of one wound,
By making many. O! it grieves my soul,
That I must draw this metal from my side.

1 Exeunt: in f. a. 2 see: in f. a. 3 be: in f. a. 4 Forage: in f. a. 5 order: in f. a.
Your breath first kindled the dead coal of wars
Between this chariot's kingdom and myself,
And brought in matter that should feed this fire;
And how 'tis far too huge to be burnt out
With that same weak wind which enkindled it.
You taught me how to know the face of right,
Acquainted me with interest to this land,
Yea, thrust this enterprise into my heart,
And come ye now to tell me, John hath made
His peace with Rome? What is that peace to me?
I, by the honour of my marriage-bed,
After young Arthur, claim this land for mine;
And now it is half-conqu'rd, must I back
Because that John hath made his peace with Rome?
Am I Rome's slave? What penny hast Rome borne,
What men provided, what munition sent,
To underprop this action? is't not I,
That undergo this charge? who else but I,
And such as to my claim are liable,
Sweat in this business, and maintain this war?
Have I not heard these islanders shout out,
Vive le roy! as I have bank'd their towns?
Have I not here the best cards for the game,
To win this easy match, play'd for a crown,
And shall I now give o'er the yielded set?
No, on my soul, it never shall be said.

Pand. You look but on the outside of this work.

Lev. Outside or inside, I will not return
Till my attempt so much be glorified,
As to my ample hope was promised
Before I drew this gallant head of war,
And call'd these fiery spirits from the world,
To outlook conquest, and to win renown
Even in the jaws of danger and of death.

[Trumpet sounds]

What lusty trumpet thus doth summon us?

Enter the Bastard, attended.

Bast. According to the fair play of the world,
Let me have audience: I am sent to speak.
My holy lord of Milan, from the king
I come, to learn how you have dealt for him;
And, as you answer: I do know the scope
And warrant limited by my tongue.

Pand. The Dauphin is too willful-opposite,
And will not temporize with my entertainments:
He flatter says, he 'll not lay down his arms.

Bast. By all the blood that ever fury breath'd,
The youth says well.—Now, hear our English king,
For thus his royalty doth speak in me.
He is prepare'd; and reason, too, he should:
This apish and unmanly approach,
This harness'd masque, and unsuaded revel,
This unheard sauceiness of boyish troops,
The king doth smile at; and is well prepar'd
To whip this dwarfish war, these pigmy arms,
From out the circle of his territories.
That hand, which had the strength, even at your doors,
To congeal you, and make you take the hatch;
To dive like buckets in concealed wells;
To crouch in litter of your stable planks;
To lie like paws lock'd up in chests and trunks,
To hug with steel, to drive away out
In vaults and prisons, and to thrill, and shake,
Even at the crowing of your nation's cock,
Thinking his voice an armed Englishman:
Shall that victorious hand be foiled here,
That in your chambers gave you chastisement?
No! Know, the gallant monarch is in arms;
And like an eagle o'er his ha'ry towers,
To sake annoyance that comes near his nest.—
And you dgenerate, you ingrate revolts,
You bloody Nereus, ripping up the womb
Of your dear mother England, blush for shame:
For your own ladies, and pale-visag'd maids,
Like Amazons come tripping after drums;
Their thimbles into armed gauntlets chang'd,
Their needls to lances, and their gentle hearts
To fierce and bloody inclination.

Lev. There end thy brave, and turn thy face in peace:
We grant thou canst outcool us. Fare thee well:
We hold our time too precious to be spent
With such a brabher.

Pam. Give me leave to speak.

Bast. No, I will speak.

Lev. We will attend to neither. — Strike up the drums! and let the tongue of war
Play for our interest, and our being here.

Bast. Indeed, your drums, being beaten, will cry out;
And so shall you, being beaten. Do but start
An echo with the clamour of thy drum,
And even at hand a drum is ready brac'd,
That shall reverberate as loud as thine;
Sound but another, and another shall,
As loud as thine, rattle the welkin's ear,
And mock the deep-mouth'd thunder: for at hand
(Not trusting to this halting legate here, Whom he hath us'd rather for sport than need)
Is warlike John; and in his forehead sits
A bare-rib'd death, whose office is this day
To feast upon whole thousands of the French.

Lev. Strike up our drums to this danger out.

Bast. And thou shalt find it, Dauphin, do not doubt.

[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The Same. A Field of Battle.

Alarums. Enter King John and Hubert.

K. John. How goes the day with us? O ! tell me, Hubert.

Hub. Badly, I fear. How fares your majesty?

K. John. This fever, that hath troubled me so long,
Lies heavy on me: O ! my heart is sick.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My lord, your valiant kinsman, Faulconbridge,
Desires your majesty to leave the field,
And send him word by me which way you go.

K. John. Tell him, toward Swinside, to the abbey there.

Mess. Be of good comfort; for the great supply,
That was expected by the Dauphin here,
Are wreck'd three nights ago on Goodwin sands:
This news was brought to Richard but even now.
The French fight coldly, and retire themselves.

K. John. Ah me! this tyrant fever burns me up,
And will not let me welcome this good news.
Sent on toward Swinside; to my litter straight:
Weakness possesseth me, and I am faint.

[Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—The Same. Another part of the Same.

Enter Salisbury, Pembroke, Bigot, and Others.

Sal. I did not think the king so stor'd with friends.

Pem. Up once again; put spirit in the French:
If they miscarry, we miscarry too.

Sal. That misbegotten devil, Faulconbridge,
In an of speed, alone upholds the day.

Pem. They say, king John sore sick hath left the field.

Enter Melun, wounded, and led by Soldiers.

Mel. Lead me to the revolts of England here.

Sal. When we were happy we had other names.

Pem. It is the count Melun.

Sal. Wounded to death.

Mel. Fly, noble English; you are bought and sold:
Untread the road-way of rebellion,
And welcome home again discarded faith.
Seek out king John, and fall before his feet;
For if the French be lords of this loud day,
He means to recompense the pains you take,
By cutting off your heads. Thus hath he sworn,
And I with him, and many more with me,
Upon the altar at Saint Edmund's Bury;
Even on that altar, where we swore to you
Dear eminence and everlasting love.

Sal. May this be possible? may this be true?

Mel. Have I not hideous death within my view,
Retaining but a quantity of life,
Which bleeds away, even as a form of wax
Resolveth' from his figure gainst the fire?
What in the world should make me now deceive,
Since I must lose the use of all deceit?
Why should I then be false, since it is true
That I must die here, and live hence by truth?
I say again, if Lewis do win the day,
He is forsworn, if e'er those eyes of yours
Behold another day break in the east:
But even this night, whose black contagious breath
Already smokes about the burning crest
Of old, feeble, and day-wearied sun,
Even this ill night, your breathing shall expire,
Paying the fine of rated treachery,
Even with a treacherous fine of all your lives,
If Lewis by your assistance win the day.
Commend me to one Hubert, with your kung;
The love of him,—and this respect besides,
For that my grandsire was an Englishman,— Awakes my conscience to confess all this,
In lieu whereof, I pray you, bear me hence
From forth the noise and rumour of the field;
Where I may think the remnant of my thoughts
In peace, and part this body and my soul
With contemplation and devout desires.

Sal. We do believe thee, and bestraw my soul,
But I do love the favour and the form
Of this most fair occasion, by the which
We will untread the steps of damned flight;
And, like a bated and retired fleet,
Leaving our rankness and irregular course,
Stoop low within those bounds we have o'erlook'd,
And calmly run on in obedience,
Even to our ocean, to our great king John.
My arm shall give thee help to bear theence,
For I do see the cruel pangs of death
Bright in thine eye.—Away, my friends! New flight
And happy newness, that intends old right.

[Exeunt, leading off Melun.

SCENE V.—The Same. The French Camp.

Enter Lewis and his Train.

Lev. The sun of heaven, methought, was lost to see
But stay'd, and made the western welkin blush,
When English measureth backward their own ground,
In faint retire. O! bravely came we off,
When with a volley of our needleshot
After such bloody toil we bid good night,
And wound our cousins closely up.

Last in the field, and almost lords of it!

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Where is my prince, the Dauphin?
SCENE VII.—The Orchard of Swinstead-Abbey.

Enter Prince Henry, Salisbury, and Bigot.

P. Hen. It is too late: the life of all his blood Is touch'd corruptibly; and his pure brain (Which some suppose the soul's frail dwelling-house) Doth, by the idle comments that it makes, Forester the ending of mortality.

Enter Pembroke.

Pem. His highness yet doth speak; and holds belief, That being brought into the open air, It would allay the burning quality Of that fell poison which assaileth him.

P. Hen. Let him be brought into the orchard here.— Doth he still rage? [Exit Bigot.

Pem. He is more patient Than when you left him: even now he sung. P. Hen. O, vanity of sickness! fierce extremes In their continuance will not feel themselves. Death, having prey'd upon the outward parts, Leaves them unvisited; and his siege is now Against the mind, the which he pricks and wounds With many legions of strange fantasies, Which, in their throng and press to that last hold, Confound themselves. 'Tis strange that death should sing.

I am the cynet to this pale faint swan, Who chants a doleful hymn to his own death, And from the organ-pipe of frailty sings His soul and body to their lasting rest.

Sal. Be of good comfort, prince, for you are born To set a form upon that indigest, Which he hath left so shapeless and so rude. Re-enter Bigot and Attendants: King John brought in a Chair.

K. John. Ay, marry, now my soul hath elbow-room It would not out at windows, nor at doors. There is so hot a summer in my bosom, That all my bowels cumber up to dust: I am a scribbled form, drawn with a pen Upon a parchment, and against this fire Do I shrink up.

P. Hen. How fares your majesty? K. John. Poison'd,—ill-sure;—dead, forsook, cast off, And none of you will bid the winter come, To thrust his icy fingers in my maw; Nor let my kingdom's rivers take their course Through my burn'd bosom; nor entreat the north To make his bleak winds kiss my parched lips, And comfort me with cold.—I do not ask you much: I beg cold comfort: and you are so strait, And so ingratitude, you deny me that.

P. Hen. O, that there were some virtue in my tears That might relieve you! K. John. The salt in them is hot.— Within me is a hell; and there the poison Is, as a fiend, confin'd to tyrannize On unreprievable condemned blood.

Enter the Bastard.

Bast. O! I am scaled with my violent motion, And spleen of speed to see your majesty. K. John. O cousin! thou art come to set mine eye The tackle of my heart is crack'd and burn'd; And all the shrouds, wherewith my life should sail, Are turned to one thing, an old bald hair: My heart hath one poor string to stay it by, Which holds but till thy news be uttered, And then all this thou seest is but a cod, And model of confounded royalty.

LEW. Here.—What news? Mrs. The count Melun is slain: the English lords, By his persuasion, are again fallen off; And your supplies, which you have wish'd so long, Are cast away, and sunk. On Goodwin sands.

LEW. Ah, foul shrewd news!—Be shrew thy very heart! I did not think to be so sad to-night, As this bath made me.—Who was he, that said, King John did fly an hour or two before The snuffling night did part our weary powers? Mrs. Whoe'er spoke it, it is true, my lord.

LEW. Well; keep good quarter, and good care to-night: The day shall not be up so soon as I, To try the fair adventure of to-morrow. [Exeunt.

SCENE VI.—An open place in the neighbourhood of Swinstead-Abbey.

Enter the Bastard and Hubert, severally.

Hub. Who's there? speak, ho! speak quickly, or I shoot.

Bast. Whither dost thou go? Hub. What's that to thee? Why may not I demand of this affair, as well as thou of mine?

Bast. Hubert, I think.

Hub. Thou hast a perfect thought: I will, upon all hazards, well believe Thou art my friend, that know'st my tongue so well. Who art thou?

Bast. Who thou wilt: and, if thou please, Thou may'st befriend me so much, as to think I come one way of the Plantagenets. Hub. Unkind remembrance! thou, and eyelash night, Have done me shame.—Brave soldier, pardon me, That any accent breaking from thy tongue Should 'scape the true acquaintance of mine ear.

Bast. Brief, then; and what's the news? Hub. O! my sweet air, news fitting to the night, Black, fearful, comfortless, and horrible.

Bast. Show me the very wound of this ill news: I am no woman: I'll not swoon at it.

Hub. The king, I fear, is poison'd by a monk: I left him almost speechless, and broke out To acquaint you with this evil, that you might The better arm you to the sudden time, Than if you had at leisure known of this.

Bast. Whom didst thou leave to tend his majesty? Hub. Why, know you not? the lords are all come back, And brought prince Henry in their company; At whose request the king hath pardon'd them, And they are all about his majesty.

Bast. Withhold thine indignation, mighty heaven, And tempt us not to bear above our power. I'll tell thee, Hubert, half my power this night, Passing these flats, are taken by the tide: These Lincoln washes have devour'd them: Myself well-mounted hardly have escap'd. Away: before: conduct me to the king; I doubt, he will be dead or ere I come. [Exeunt.
Bast. The Dauphin is preparing hitherward,
Where, heaven he knows, how we shall answer him;
For, in a night, the best part of my power,
As I upon advantage did remove,
Were in the washes, all unwarily,
Devoured by the unexpected flood. [King John dies.
Sal. You breathe these dead news in as dead an ear.—
My liege! my lord!—But now a king, now thus.
P. Hen. Even so must I run on, and even so stop.
What surety of the world, what hope, what stay,
When this was now a king, and now is clay?
Bast. Art thou gone so? I do but stay behind,
To do the office for thee of revenge,
And then my soul shall wait on thee to heaven,
As it on earth hath been thy servant still.—
Now, now, you stars, that move in your right spheres,
Where be your powers? Show now your mended faiths,
And instantly return with me again,
To push destruction, and perpetual shame,
Out of the weak door of our fainting land,
Straight let us seek, or straight we shall be sought:
The Dauphin rages at our very heels.
Sal. It seems you know not, then, so much as we.
The cardinal Pandulph is within at rest,
Who half an hour since came from the Dauphin,
And brings from him such offers of our peace
As we with honour and respect may take,
With purpose presently to leave this war.
Bast. He will the rather do it, when he sees Ourselves well sinew’d to our own defence.
Sal. Nay, it is in a manner done already;
For many carriages he hath despatch’d
To the sea-side, and put his cause and quarrel
To the disposing of the cardinal:
With whom yourself, myself, and other lords,
If you think meet, this afternoon will post
To consummate this business happily.
Bast. Let it be so.—And you, my noble prince,
With other princes that may best be spare’d,
Shall wait upon your father’s funeral.
P. Hen. At Worcester must his body be inter’d;
For so he will’d it.
Bast. Thither shall it then.
And happily may your sweet self put on
The lineal state and glory of the land:
To whom, with all submission, on my knee,
I do bequeath my faithful services,
And true subjection everlastingly.
Sal. And the like tender of our love we make,
To rest without a spot for evermore.
P. Hen. I have a kind soul, that would give you thanks,
And knows not how to do it, but with tears.
Bast. O! let us pay the time but needful woe,
Since it hath been beforehand with our griefs.—
This England never did, nor never shall,
Lie at the proud foot of a conqueror,
But when it first did help to wound itself.
Now these, her princes, are come home again,
Come the three corners of the world in arms,
And we shall shock the n. Nought shall make us rue
If England to itself do rest but true. [Exeunt.

ACT I.

Enter King Richard, attended; John of Gaunt, and other Nobles, with him.

K. Rich. Old John of Gaunt, time-honourd Leicester,

Hast thou, according to thy oath and band,1
Brought hither Henry Hereford, thy bold son,
Here to make good the boisterous late appeal,
Which then our leisure would not let us hear,
Against the duke of Norfolk, Thomas Mowbray?

Gaunt. I have, my liege.

K. Rich. Tell me, moreover, hast thou sounded him,
If he appeal the duke on ancient malice,
Or warily, as a good subject should,
On some known ground of treachery in him?

Gaunt. As near as I could sift him on that argument,
I saw no apparent danger seen in him,
Shed at your highness; no uninveterate malice.

K. Rich. Then call them to our presence: face to face,
And bring them to our presence: face to face,
And bring them to our presence: face to face.

K. Rich. We thank you both: yet one but flatters us,
As well appeareth by the cause you come;
Namely, to appeal each other of high treason.—
Cousin of Hereford, what dost thou object
Against the duke of Norfolk, Thomas Mowbray?

Boiling. First, heaven be the record to my speech! I
In the devotion of a subject's love,
Tendering the precious safety of my prince,
And free from wrath or misbegotten hate,
Come I appellant to this princely presence.—
Now, Thomas Mowbray, do I turn to thee,
And mark my greeting well; for what I speak,
My body shall make good upon this earth,
Or my divine soul answer it in heaven.
Thou art a traitor, and a miscreant;
Too good to be so, and too bad to live,
Since the more fair and crystal is the sky,
The uglier seem the clouds that in it fly.
Once more, the more to aggravate the note,
With a foul traitor's name stuff I thy throat;
And wish, (so please my sovereign) ere I move,
What my tongue speaks, my right-drawn sword may prove.

Nor. Let not my cold words here accuse my seal.
'Tis not the trial of a woman's war,
The bitter clamour of two eager tongues,
Can arbitrate this cause betwixt us twain:
The blood is hot that must be cool'd for this;
Yet can I not of such tame patience boast,
As to be hush'd, and nought at all to say.
First, the fair reverence of your highness curbs me
From giving rein and spur to my free speech,
Which else would post, until it had return'd
These terms of treason doubled down his throat.

Setting aside his high blood's royalty,
And let him be no kinsman to my liege,
I do defy him, and I spit at him;
Call him a slanderous coward, and a villain:
Which to maintain I would allow him odds,
And meet him, were I tied to run a-foot
Even to the frozen ridges of the Alps,
Or any other ground inhabitable
Where ever Englishman durst set his foot.

Mean time, let this defend my loyalty:—
By all my hopes, most falsely doth he lie.

Boling. Pale trembling coward, there I throw my gage,
Disclaiming here the kindred of the king;
And lay aside my high blood's royalty,
Which fear, not reverence, makes thee to except:
If guilty deed have left thee so much strength,
As to take up mine honour's pawn, then stoop.
By that and all the rites of knighthood else,
Will I make good against thee, arm to arm,
What I have spoke, or thou canst worse devise.

Nor. I take it up; and, by that sword I swear,
Which gently laid my knighthood on my shoulder,
I'll answer thee in any degree,
Or chivalrous design of knightly trial:
And, when I mount all may I not light,
If I be traitor, or unjustly fight.

K. Rich. What deth our cousin lay to Mowbray's charge?
It must be great, that can inherit us
So much as of a thought of ill in him.

Boling. Look, what I speak, your life shall prove it true:—
That Mowbray hath receiv'd eight thousand nobles,
In name of lendings for your highness's soldiers,
The which he hath detain'd for levies employment,
Like a false traitor, and injurious villain.

Besides, I say, and will in battle prove,
Or here, or elsewhere, to the furthest verge
That ever was survey'd by English eye,
That all the treasons, for these eighteen years
Complotted and contriv'd in this land,
Feath from false Mowbray their first head and spring.
Farther, I say, and farther will maintain
Upon his head all may I not light,
That he did plot the duke of Gloucester's death;
Suggest his own-believing adversaries,
And, consequently, like a traitor-coward,
Stlice'd out his innocent soul through streams of blood:
Which blood, like sacrificing Abel's, cries,
Even from the tongueless caverns of the earth,
To me for justice, and rough chastisement:
And, by the glorious worth of my deccent,
This arm shall do it, or this life be spent.

K. Rich. How high a pitch his resolution soars!—
Thomas of Norfolk, what sayst thou to this?

Nor. O! let my sovereign turn away his face,
And bid his ears a little while be deaf,
Till I have told this slander of his blood,
How God, and good men, hate so foul a liar.

K. Rich. Mowbray, impartial are our eyes, and ears:
Were he my brother, nay, my kingdom's heir,
As he is but my father's brother's son,
Now is not the time to name a flaw,
Such neighbour nearness to our sacred blood
Should nothing privilege him, nor partialize
The unstopping firmness of my upright soul.

He is our subject, Mowbray, so art thou:
Free speech and fearers, I to thee allow.

Nor. Then, Bolingbroke, as low as to thy heart,
Through the false passage of thy thought, thou liest.
Three parts of that receipt I had for Calais,
Disbur'd I duly to his highness' soldiers:
The other part reserv'd I by consent;
For that my avow'd like was in my debt,
Upon remainder of a clear account.

Since last I went to France to fetch his queen,
Now, swallow down that lies.—For Gloucester's death,
I slew him not; but to mine own grace,
Neglected my sworn duty in that case:—
For you, my noble lord of Lancaster,
The honourable father to my foe,
Once did I lay an ambush for your life,
A treapass that doth vex my grieved soul;
But, ere I last receiv'd the sacrament,
I did confess it, and exactly begg'd
Your grace's pardon, and, I hope, I had it.

This is my fault: as for the rest appeal'd,
It issues from the rancour of a villain,
A recreant and most degenerate traitor;
Which in myself I boldly will defend,
And interchangeably hurl down my gage
Upon this overweening traitor's foot,
And prove myself a loyal gentleman,
Even in the best blood chamber'd in his bosom.

In haste whereof, most heartily I pray
Your highness to assign our trial day.

K. Rich. Wrath-kindled gentlemen, be rul'd by me
Let's purge this choler without letting blood:
This we prescribe, though no physician;
Deep malice makes too deep incision.
Forget, forgive; conclude, and be agreed;
Our doctors say this is no month to bleed:—
Good uncle, let this end where it began;
We'll calm the duke of Norfolk, you your son.

Gault. To be a make-peace shall become my age—
Throw down, my son, the duke of Norfolk's gage.

K. Rich. And, Norfolk, throw down his.

Gault. When, Harry? when?

Obedience bids, I should not bid again.

K. Rich. Norfolk, throw down; we bid; there is no boot.

Nor. O! I throw, drest sovereign, at thy foot,
My life thou shalt command, but not my shame.
The one my duty owes; but my fair name,
Despite of death that lives upon my grave,
To dark dishonour's use thou shalt not have.
I am disgrac'd, impeach'd, and baff'd here;
Pier'd to the soul with slander's venom'd spear,
The which no ha'm can cure, but his heart-blood
Which breath'd this poison.

K. Rich. Rage must be withstood
Give me his gage:—ions make leopards tame.

Nor. Yes, but not change his spots: take but my shame,
And I resign my gage. My dear, dear lord,
The purest treasure mortal times afford
Is spotless reputation; that away,
Men are but gilded loam, or painted clay.
A jewel in a ten times hard'd-up chest
Is a bold spirit in a loyal breast.

Now honour is my life; but grow in one:
Take honour from me, and my life is done.
Then, dear my liege, mine honour let me try;
In that I live, and for that will I die.

KING RICHARD II.

Scene III.

Enter GAUNT, and Duchess of Gloucester.

Duchess. Ailes! the part I had in Gloucester's blood! Doth more solicite me, than your exclaims, To stir against the butchers of his life:
But some correction lieth in those hands, Which made the fault that we cannot correct, Put we our quarrel to the will of heaven;
Who when they see the hours ripe on earth, Will read a sentence on offenders' heads.

GAUNT. Finds brotherhood in thee no sharper spur?
Ruth love in thy old blood no living fire?
Edward's seven sons, whereof thyself art one,
Or seven fair branches springing from one root:
Some of those seven are dried by nature's course,
Some of those branches by the destinies cut;
But Thomas, my dear lord, my life, my Gloucester,
One full of Edward's sacred blood,
One springing branch of his most royal root,
Is check'd and all the precious liquor spilt;
Is hack'd down, and his summer leaves all faded,
Breath'd hand, and murder's bloody axes.
Ah! Gaunt, his blood was thine: that bed, that womb,
That metal, that self-mould, that fashion'd thee,
Made him a man: and though thou liv'st, and breath'st,
Yet art thou slain in him. Thou dost consent
In some large measure to thy father's death,
In that thou seest thy wretched brother die,
Who was the model of thy father's life.
Call it not patience, Gaunt; it is despair:
Is suffering thus thy brother to be slaughtered?
Then show'st at the naked pathway to thy life,
Teaching stern murder how to butcher thee.
That which in mean men we entitle patience,
Is cold cowardice in noble breasts.
What shall I say? to safeguard thine own life,
The best way is to venge my Gloucester's death.
GAUNT. To God, the widow's champion and defence.

Duchess. Why then, I will. — Farewell, farewell, old Gaunt.

GAUNT. Thou go'st to Coventry, there to behold
Our cousin Hereford and fell Mowbray fight.
O! sit my husband's wrongs on Hereford's spear,
That it may enter butcher Mowbray's breast;
Or if misfortune miss the first career,
Be Mowbray's sins so heavy in his bosom,
That they may break his foaming courser's back,
And throw the rider headlong in the lists,
A caitiff recreant to my cousin Hereford.

FAULKNER. Farewell, old Gaunt: thy sometime brother's wife
With her companion grief must end her life.

Duchess. Sister, farewell: I must to Coventry.

GAUNT. As much good stay with thee, as go with me!

Duchess. Yet one word more. — Grief boundeth where it falls,
Not with the empty hollowness, but weight:
I take my leave before I have begun,
For sorrow ends not when it seemeth done.

GAUNT. Command me to my brother, Edmund York.
Lo! this is all: — nay, yet depart not so;
Though this be all, do not so quickly go;
I shall remember more. Bid him. — O! what? —
With all good speed at Plashy visit me.

Duchess. And what shall good old York there see,
But empty lodgings and unfurnished walls,
Unpeople offices, unrodden stones?
And what hear they there for welcome, but my groans?
Therefore commend me; let him not come there,
To seek out sorrow that dwells everywhere.

Duchess. Desire, despite, will I hence, and die:
The last leave of thee takes my weeping eye.

SCENE III. — Gosford Green, near Coventry.

List sets out, and a Throne. Herald, &c., attending.

Enter the Lord Marshal, and Aumerle.

Mar. My lord Aumerle, is Harry Hereford arm'd?

Aum. Yes, at all points, and longs to enter in.

Mar. The duke of Norfolk, sprightfully and bold,
Stays but the summons of the appellant's trumpet.

Aum. Why then, the champions are prepar'd, and stay
For nothing but his majesty's approach.

Flourish. — Enter King Richard, who takes his seat on his Throne; GAUNT, BUSBY, BAGOT, GREEN, and others, who take their places. A Trumpet is sounded, and answered by another Trumpet within. Then enter NORFOLK in armour, preceded by a Herald.

K. Rich. Marshal, demand of yonder champion
The cause of his arrival here in arms:
Ask him his name; and orderly proceed
To swear him in the justice of his cause.

Mar. In God's name, and the king's, say who thou art,
And why thou com'st thus knightly clad in arms:
Against what man thou com'st, and what thy quarrel.
Speak truly, on thy knighthood, and thine oath,
As so defend thee heaven, and thy valour!

Nor. My name is Thomas Mowbray, duke of Norfolk.

Who hither come engaged by my oath,
(Which, God defend, a knight should violate!) Both to defend my loyalty and truth,
To God, my king, and my succeeding issue,
Against the duke of Hereford that appeals me
And, by the grace of God and this mine arm,
To prove him, in defending of myself,
A traitor to my God, my king, and me:
And, as I truly fight, defend me heaven!

Trumpets sound. Enter BOLINGBROKE, in armour,
Proceeded by a Herald.

K. Rich. Marshal, ask yonder knight in arms,
Both who he is, and why he cometh hither
Thus plated in habiliments of war;
And formally, according to our law,
Depose him in the justice of his cause.

Mar. What is thy name, and wherefore com'st thou
hither,
Before King Richard in his royal lists?
Against whom com'st thou? and what is thy quarrel?
Speak like a true knight; so defend thee heaven!

Boling. Harry of Hereford, Lancaster, and Derby,
Am I; who ready here do stand in arms,
To prove by God's grace, and my body's valour,
In lists, on Thomas Mowbray, duke of Norfolk,
That he's a traitor, foul and dangerous,
To God of heaven, king Richard, and to me:
And, as I truly fight, defend me heaven!

Mar. On pain of death no person be so bold,
Or daring hardy, as to touch the lists;
Except the marshals, and such officers
Appointed to direct these fair designs.

Boling. Lord marshal, let me kiss my sovereign's hand, my knee before his majesty:
For Mowbray and myself are like two men
That vow a long and weary pilgrimage;
Then let us take a ceremonious leave,
And loving farewell of our several friends.

Mar. The appellant in all duty greets your highness,
And crave to kiss your hand, and take his leave.

K. Rich. We will descend, and fold him in our arms.
Cousin of Hereford, as thy cause is right,
So be thy fortune in this royal fight.
 Farewell, my blood; which if to-day thou shed,
Lament we may, but not revenge thee dead.

Boling. O! let no noble eye profane a tear
For me, if I be gored with Mowbray's spear.
As confident as is the falcon's flight
Against a bird, do I with Mowbray fight.—
My loving lord, I take my leave of you:—
Of you, my noble cousin, lord Aumerle:—
Not sick, although I have to do with death,
But lusty, young, and cheerfully drawing breath.
Lo! as at English feasts, so I regret
The daintiest last, to make the end most sweet:
O! thou, [To GAUNT:] the earthily author of my Whose youthful spirit, in me regenerate, [blood,—
Both with a twofold vigour lift me up
To reach at victory above my head,
Add proof unto mine armour with thy prayers;
And with thy blessings steel my lance's point,
That it may enter Mowbray's waxen coat,
And furnish new the name of John of Gaunt,
Even in the lusty 'haviour of his son.

Gaunt. God in thy good cause make thee prosperous!
Be swift like lightning in the execution;
And let thy blows, doubly redoubled,
Fall like amazing thunder on the casque
Of such a prince as Gaunt's enemy:
Rouse up thy youthful blood, be valiant and live.

Boling. Mine innocence, and Saint George to thrive!

Nor. However God, or fortune, cast my lot,
There lives or dies, true to king Richard's throne
A loyal, just, and upright gentleman.

Never did captive with a freer heart
Cast off his chains of bondage, and embrace
His golden uncontroul'd enfranchisement,
More than my dancing soul doth celebrate
This feast of battle with mine adversary.—
Most mightily liege, and most true hearted peer,
Take from my mouth the wish of happy years:
As gentle and as jovial, as to jest,
Go I to fight. Truth hath a quiet breast.

K. Rich. Farewell, my lord: securely I enwrap
Virtue with valour couched in thine eye.—

Order the trial, marshal, and begin.

Mar. Harry of Hereford, Lancaster, and Derby,
Receive thy lance; and God defend the right!

Boling. Strong as a tower in hope, I cry, amen.

Mar. Go bear this lance [To an Officer.] to Thomas duke of Norfolk.

1 Her. Harry of Hereford, Lancaster, and Derby,
Stands here for God, his sovereign, and himself,
On pain to be found false and recreant,
To prove the duke of Norfolk, Thomas Mowbray,
A traitor to his God, his king, and him;
And dares him to set forward to the fight.

2 Her. Here standeth Thomas Mowbray, duke o Norfolk.

On pain to be found false and recreant,
Both to defend himself, and to approve
Henry of Hereford, Lancaster, and Derby,
To God, his sovereign, and to him, dialogal;
Courageously, and with a free desire,
Attending but the signal to begin.

Mar. Sound, trumpets; and set forward, combatant Norfolk.

[Advance, with Charge sounds.

Stay, the king hath thrown his warrant down.

K. Rich. Let them lay by their helmets and the spear,

And both return back to their chairs again.—
Withdraw with us; and let the trumpets sound,
While we return these dukes what we decree.—

[long flourish

Draw near, [To the Combatants.] and list, what our our council we have done.

For that our kingdom's earth should not be soil'd
With those holy and good whose souls it hath foster'd,
And for our eyes do hate the dire aspect
Of civil wounds plough'd up with neighbours' swords
And for we think the eagle-winged pride
Of sky-aspiring and ambitious thoughts,
With rival-hating envy, set on you
To wake our peace, which in our country's cradle
Draws the sweet infant breath of gentle sleep;
Which so rous'd up with boisterous untand'd drums,
With harsh resounding trumpets' dreadful brays,
And grating shock of wrathful iron arms,
Might from our quiet confines fright fair peace,
And make us wade even in our kindred's blood:
Therefore, we banish you our territories:
You, cousin Hereford, upon pain of life, till
Till twice five summers have enrich'd our fields,
Shall not regrat our fair dominions,
But tread the stranger paths of banishment.

Boling. Your will be done. This must my comfort
That sun that warms you here shall shine on me;
And those golden beams, to you here lent,
Shall point on me, and gild my banishment.

K. Rich. Norfolk, for thee remains a heavier doom,
Which I with some unwillingness pronounce:
The 5th-8th hours shall not determinate

Scene III.

KING RICHARD II.

He shortens four years of his son's exile; But little vantage shall I reap thereby. For, ere the six years, that he hath to spend, Can change their moons, and bring their times about, My oil-dried lamp, and time-bewasted light, Shall be extinct with age and endless night: My inch of taper will be burnt and done, And blindfold death not let me see my son.

K. Rich. Why, uncle, thou hast many years to live.

Gaunt. But not a minute, king, that thou canst give: Shorten my days thou canst not, with sullen sorrow, And plack nights from me, but not lend a morrow. Thou canst help time to curfew me with age, But stop no wrinkle in his pilgrimage: Thy word is current with him for my death, But, dead, thy kingdom cannot buy my breath.

K. Rich. Thy son is banish'd upon good advice, Whereeto thy tongue a party-verdict gave: Why at our justice seem'st thou, then, to lower?

Gaunt. Things sweet to taste provoke in digestion sour. You urg'd me as a judge; but I had rather, You would have bid me argue like a father. O! had it been a stranger, not my child* To smooth his fault I should have been more mild: A partial slander sought I to avoid, And in the sentence my own life destroy'd.

Alas! I look'd when some of you should say, I was too strict to make mine own away; But you gave leave to my unwilling tongue, Against my will to do myself this wrong.

K. Rich. Cousin, farewell;—and, uncle, bid him so: Six years we banish him. he shall go.

[Flourish. Exit King Richard, and Train.

Aum. Cousin, farewell: what presence must not know, From where do you remain, let paper show.

Mar. My lord, no leave take I; for I will ride, As far as land will let me, by your side.

Gaunt. 0! to what purpose dost thou hear thy words, That thou return'st no greeting to thy friends? Boling. I have too far to take a leave of you, When the tongue's office should be prodigal To breathe the abundant dolour of the heart.

Gaunt. Thy grief is but thy absence for a time. Boling. Joy absent, grief is present for that time. Gaunt. What is six winters? they are quickly gone. Boling. To men in joy; but grief makes one hour ten.

Gaunt. Call it a travel, that thou tak'st for pleasure. Boling. My heart will sigh when I miscall it so, Which finds it an enforced pilgrimage.

Gaunt. The sullen passage of thy weary steps Esteem a foil, wherein thou art to set The precious jewel of thy home-return.

Boling. Nay, rather, every tedious stride I make! Will but remember me, what a deal of world I wander from the jewels that I love. Must I not serve a long apprenticeship To foreign passages, and in the end, Having my freedom, boast of nothing else But that I was a four-foot man in the end?

Gaunt. All places that the eye of heaven visits, Are to a wise man ports and happy havens. Teach thy necessity to reason thus; There is no virtue like necessity: Think not the kind did banish thee, But thou the king: woe doth the heavier rut,
Where it perceives it is but faintly borne.
Go, say I sent thee forth to purchase honour,
And not the king exil’d thee; or suppose,
Drowning pestilence hangs in our air,
And thou art flying to a fresher elime:
Look, what thy soul holds dear, imagine it
To lie that way thou go’st, not whence thou com’st:
Suppose the singing birds musicians,
The grass whereon thou tread’st the presence strew’d,
The flowers fair ladies, and thy steps no more
Than a delightful measure, or a dance;
For gnarling sorrow hath less power to bite
The man that mocks at it, and sets it light.
Boling. O! who can hold a fire in his hand,
By thinking on the frosty Caucuses?
Or cloy the hungry edge of appetite,
By bare imagination of a feast?
Or swallow naked in December snow,
By thinking on fantastic summer’s heat?
O! no: the apprehension of the good,
Gives but the greater feeling to the worse:
Fell sorrow’s tooth doth never rakke more,
Than when it’ bites, but Lanceath not the sore.

Gaut. Come, come, my son, I’ll bring thee on thy way though.
Had I thy youth and cause, I would not stay.
Boling. Then, England’s ground, farewell: sweet soil, adieu;
My moth’r, and my nurse, that bears me yet!
Where-e’er I wander, boast of this I can,
Though banish’d, yet a trueborn Englishman. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV. — The Same. A Room in the King’s Castle.

Enter King Richard, Bagot, and Green, at one door; Aumerle at another.

K. Rich. We did observe.—Cousin Aumerle,
How far brought you high Hereford on his way?
Aum. I brought high Hereford, if you call him so,
But to the next highway, and there I left him.

K. Rich. And, say, what store of parting tears were shed?
Aum. ’Faith, none for me; except the north-east wind,
Which then blew bitterly against our faces,
Awak’d the sleeping rheum, and so by chance
Did grace our hollow parting with a tear.

K. Rich. What said our cousin, when you parted with him?

Aum. Farewell: and, for my heart disdain’d my tongue
Should so profane the word, that taught me craft
To counterfeit oppression of such grief,
That words seem’d buried in my sorrow’s grave.

Marry, would the word “farewell” have lengthen’d hours,
And added years to his short banishment,
He should have had a volume of farewells:
But, since it would not, he had none of me.

K. Rich. He is our cousin, cousin; but ’t is doubt,
When time shall call him home from banishment,
Whether our kinsman come to see his friends.
Ourself, and Bushy, Bagot here, and Green,
Observe’d his courtship to the common people:
How he did seem to dive into their hearts,
With humble and familiar courtesy;
What reverence he did throw away on slaves;
Woos poor craftsmen with the craft of smiles,
And patient underbearing of his fortune,
As ’t were to banish their affects with him.
Off goes his bonnet to an oyster wrench;
A brace of draymen bid God speed him well,
And had the tribute of his supple knee

With — ’Thanks, my countrymen, my loving friends!’—

As were we England in reversion his,
And he our subjects’ next degree in hope.

Green. Well, he is gone; and with him go these:

Now for the rebels, which stand out in Ireland,
Expedient manage must be made, my liege,
Ere farther leisure yield them farther means,
For their advantage, and your highness’ loss.

K. Rich. We will ourselves in person to this war:
And, for our coffers with too great a court,
And liberal largess, are grown somewhat light,
We are enforce’d to farm our royal realm;
The revenue whereof shall furnish us
For our affairs in hand. If that come short,
Our subsidies at home shall have blank charters,
Whereeto, when they shall know what men are rich,
They shall subscribe them for large sums of gold,
And send them after to supply our wants,
For we will make for Ireland presently.

Enter Bushy.

Bushy. What news?

Bushy. Old John of Gaunt is grievous sick, my lord,
Sudden taken, and hath sent post-haste,
To entreat your majesty to visit him.

K. Rich. Where lies he now?

Bushy. At Ely-house, my liege.

K. Rich. Now put it, God, in his physician’s mind
To help him to his grave immediately!
The lining of his coffers shall make costs
To deck our soldiers for these Irish wars.—

Come, gentlemen, let’s all go visit him:
Pray God, we may make haste, and come too late!

[Exeunt.

ACT II.

Gaunt on a Couch; the Duke of York, and Others, standing by him.

Gaunt. Will the king come, that I may breathe my
In wholesome counsel to his unstate youth?

York. Vex not yourself, nor strive not with your breath;
For all in vain comes counsel to his ear.

Gaunt. O! but they say, the tongues of dying men
Entrance attention like deep harmony:

1 The quarto, 1597, has: he. 2 Expedition. 3 So the quartos; the folio: in.
The pleasure that some fathers feed upon
Is strict fast, I mean my children's looks;
And therein fasting hast thou made me gaunt.
Gaunt am I for the grave, gaunt as a grave,
Whose hollow womb inherits nought but bones.

K. Rich. Can sick men play so nicely with their names?

Gaunt. No: misery makes sport to mock itself:
Since thou dost seek to kill my name in me,
I mock my name, great king; to flatter thee.

K. Rich. Should dying men flatter with those that live?

Gaunt. No, no; men living flatter those that die.

K. Rich. Thou, now a-dying, say'st—thou flatter'st me.

Gaunt. O! no; thou diest, though I the sicker be.
K. Rich. I am in health, I breathe, and see thee ill.

Gaunt. Now, He that made me knows I see thee ill
Ill in myself to see, and in thee seeing ill.
Thy death-bed is no lesser than the land,
Wherein thou dost in reputation sick;
And thou, too careless patient as thou art,
Commit'st thy 'pointed body to the cure
Of those physicians that first wounded thee.
A thousand flatterers sit within thy crown,
Whose compass is no bigger than thy head,
And yet, incaged in so small a verge,
The waste is no whit lesser than thy land.
O! had thy grand sire, with a prophet's eye,
Saw how his son's son should destroy his sons,
From forth thy reach he would have laid thy shame
Deposing thee before thouwert possess'd,
Which art possess'd now to depose thyself.
Why, cousin, wilt thou reign of the world,
It were a shame to let this land by lease;
But for thy world enjoying but this land,
Is it not more than shame to shame it so?
Landlord of England art thou now, not king:
Thy state of law is bondslave to the law,
And thou—'

K. Rich. A lunatic lean-witted fool,
Presuming on an ague's privilege,
Dar'st with thy frozen admonition
Make pale our cheek, chasing the royal blood
With fury from his native residence.
Now, by my seat's right royal majesty,
Wert thou not brother to great Edward's son,
This tongue that runs so roundly in thy head,
Should run thy head from thy unreverend shoulders.
Gaunt. O! spare me not, my brother Edward's son.
For that I was his father Edward's son:
That blood already, like the pelican,
Hast thou tapp'd out, and drunkenly carous'd.
My brother Gisler, plain well-meaning soul,
Whom fair beafl in heaven 'mongst happy souls
May be a precedent and witness good,
That thou respect'st not spilling Edward's blood.
Join with the present sickness that I have,
And thy unkindness be like crooked age,
To crop at once a too-long withered flower.
Live in thy shame, but die not shame with thee.
These words hereafter thy tormentors be—
Convey me to my bed, then to my grave:
Love they to live, that love and honour have.

Exeunt borne out by his Attendants

K. Rich. And let them die, that age and sullies have
For both hast thou, and both become the grave.
KING RICHARD II.

ACT II.

York. I do beseech your majesty, impute his words
To everlasting sickness and age in him:
He loves you, on my life, and holds you dear.
As Harry, duke of Hereford, were be here.
K. Rich. Right, you say true; as Hereford; love,
As theirs, so mine; and all be as it is.

Enter NORTHUMBERLAND.

North. My liege, old Gaunt commends him to your majesty.
K. Rich. What says he?
North. Nay, nothing; all is said.
His tongue is now of a priggles instrument:
Words, life, and all, old Lancaster hath spent.
York. Be York the next that must be bankrupt so!
Though death be poor, it ends a mortal woe.
K. Rich. The ripest fruit first falls, and so doth he:
His time is spent; our pilgrimage must be.
So much for that.—Now for our Irish wars.
We must supplant those rough rug-headed kerns,
Which live like venom, where no venom else,
But only the venom of their privilege to live.
And for those great affairs do ask some charge,
Towards our assistance we do seize to us
The plate, coin, revenues, and movables,
Whereof our uncle Gaunt did stand possess'd.
York. How long shall I be patient? Ah! how long
Shall tender duty make me suffer wrong?
Not Gaunt's death, nor Hereford's banishment,
Not Gaunt's rebukes, nor England private wrong,
Nor the prevention of poor Bolingbroke
About his marriage, nor my own disgrace,
Have ever made me sour my patient cheek,
Or bend one wrinkle on my sovereign's face.
I am the last of noble Edward's sons,
Of whom thy father, prince of Wales, was first:
In war was never lion rás'd more fierce,
In peace was never gentle lamb more mild,
Than was that young and princely gentleman.
His face thou hast, for even so look'd he,
Accomplish'd with his number of thy hours;
But when he frown'd, it was against the French,
And not against his friends: his noble hand
Did win what he did spend, and spent not that
Which his triumphant father's hand had won:
His hands were guilty of no kindred blood,
But bloody with the enemies of his kin.
O, Richard! York is too far gone with grief,
Or else he never would compare between.
O, my liege! I pardon me, if you please; if not, I, please'd
Not to be pardon'd, am content withal.
Seek you to seize, and gripe into your hands,
The royalties and rights of banish'd Hereford?
Is not Gaunt dead, and doth not Hereford live?
Was not Gaunt just, and is not Harry true?
Did not the one deserve to have an heir?
Is not his heir a well-deserving son?
Take Hereford's rights away, and take from time
His charters and his customary rights;
Let not to-morrow, then, ensue to-day;
Be not thyself; for how art thou a king,
But by fair sequence and succession?
Now, afore God (God forbid, I say true!) If you do wrongfully seize Hereford's rights,
Call in the letters patents that he hath
By his attorney-general to sue
His livery; and deny his offer'd homage,
You pluck a thousand dangers on your head,
You lose a thousand well-disposed hearts,
And prick my tender patience to those thoughts
Which honour and allegiance cannot think.
K. Rich. Think what you will: we seize into our hands
His plate, his goods, his money, and his lands.
York. I'll not be by the while. My liege, farewell:
What will ensue hereof, there's none can tell;
But by bad course they may be understood.
That their events can never fall out good.
[Exit K. Rich. Go, Bushy, to the earl of Wiltshire straight:
Bid him repair to us to Ely-house,
To see this business. To-morrow next
We will for Ireland; and 'tis time, I trow:
And we create, in absence of ourself,
Our uncle York lord governor of England,
For he is just, and always lov'd us well.—
Come on, our queen:—to-morrow must we part;
Be merry, for our time of stay is short.

[Flourish.

Exeunt, King, Queen, Bushy, Aumelle, Green, and Bagoth.

North. Well, lords, the duke of Lancaster is dead.
Ross. And living too, for now his son is duke.
Willo. Barely in title, not in revenues.
North. Richly in both, if justice had her right.
Ross. My heart is great; but it must break with silence.
Ere 't be disburden'd with a liberal tongue.
North. Nay, speak thy mind; and let him ne'er speak more.
That speaks thy words again to do thee harm!
Willo. Tends that thou'dst speak, to the duke of Hereford?
If it be so, out with it boldly, man,
Quick is mine ear to hear of good towards him.
Ross. No good at all that I can do for him,
Unless you call it good to pity him,
Bereft and gelled of his patrimony.
North. Now, afore God, 'tis shame such wrongs are borne
In him, a royal prince, and many more
Of noble blood in this declining land.
The king is not himself, but basely led
By flattering; and what they will inform,
Merely in hate, 'gainst any of us all,
That will the king severely prosecute,
'Gainst us, our wives, our children, and our heirs.
Ross. The commons hath he pill'd with grievances;
And quite lost their hearts: the nobles hath he fin'd
For ancient quarrels, and quite lost their hearts.
Willo. And daily new exactions are devis'd;
As blanks, benevolences, and I wot not what:
But what, o' God's name, doth become of this?
North. Wars have not wasted it, for 'ward' he hatt not,
But basely yielded upon compromise
That which his noble ancestors achiev'd with blow
More hath he spent in peace, than they in wars.
Ross. The earl of Wiltshire hath the realm in farm
Willo. The king's grown bankrupt, like a broken man.
North. Reproach, and dissolution, hangeth over him.
Ross. He hath not money for these Irish wars,

---

1. On the death of every person who was held by Knight's service, the escheator of the court summoned a jury, who inquired what estate and subsistance he had left. If he was under age, what age his next heir was. If he was of full age, he had right to sue out a writ of aster in main, that is, his livery, that the king's hand might be taken off, and the land delivered to him. — Involves lives in f. o. 2. Not in the folio.
Divides one thing entire to many objects;
Like perspectives*, which, rightly gaz’d upon,
Show nothing but confusion: ey’d awry,
Distinguish form: so your sweet majesty,
Looking awry upon your lord’s departure,
Finds shapes of grief more than himself to wall:
Which, look’d on as it is, is nought but shadows
Of what it is not. Then, thrice gracious queen,
More than your lord’s departure weep not: more’s not seen;
Or if it be, ’tis with false sorrow’s eye,
Which for things true weeps things imaginary.
Queen. It may be so: but yet my inward soul
Persuades me, it is otherwise: how’er it be, cannot but be sad; so heavy sad,
As, though unthinking* on no thought I think,
Makes me with heavy nothing faint and shrink.
Busky. ’Tis nothing but conceit, my gracious lady.
Queen. ’Tis nothing less: conceit is still deriv’d
From some forefather grief; mine is not so,
For nothing hath begot my something woe*.
Or something hath the nothing that I guess:
’Tis in reversion that I do pensive,
But what it is, that is not yet known, what
I cannot name: ’tis nameless woe, I wot.
Enter Queen.
Green. God save your majesty:—and well met, gentlemen,—
I hope, the king is not yet shipp’d for Ireland.
Queen. Why hop’st thou so? ’tis better hope he is,
For his designs crave haste, his haste good hope;
Then, wherefore dost thou hope, he is not shipp’d?
Green. That he, our hope, might have retir’d his power,
And driven into despair an enemy’s hope,
Who strongly hath set footing in this land,
The banish’d Bolingbroke repeals himself,
And with uplifted arms is safe arriv’d
At Ravenspur.
Queen. Now, God in heaven forbid!
Green. Ah! madam, ’tis too true: and what is worse,
The lord Northumberland, his son young* Henry Percy,
The lords of Roe, Beaumont, and Willoughby,
With all their powerful friends, are fled to him.
Busky. Why have you not proclaim’d Northumberland,
And all the rest of the revolted faction, traitors?
Green. We have: whereupon the earl of Worcester
Hath broken his staff, resign’d his stewardship,
And all the household servants fled with him
To Bolingbroke.
Queen. So, Green, thou art the midwife to my woe,
And Bolingbroke my sorrow’s dismal heir:
Now hath my soul brought forth her prodigy,
And I, a gasping new-deliver’d mother,
Have woe to woe, sorrow to sorrow join’d.
Busky. Despair not, madam.
Queen. Who shall hinder me?
I will despair, and be at enmity
With cozening hope: he is a flatterer,
A parasite, a keeper-back of death,
Who gently would dissolve the bands of life,
Which false hopes snare in extremity.
Enter the Duke of York, part-armed.*
Green. Here comes the duke of York.
Queen. With signs of war about his aged neck.
KING RICHARD II.

ACT II.

Will the hateful commons perform for us, Except like curs to tear us all to pieces.—
Will you go along with us?

Bagot. No. I will to Ireland to his majesty. Farewell: if heart's pressages be not vain,
We three here part, that never shall meet again.

Bushy. That's as York thrives to beat back Bolingbroke.

Green. Aha, poor duke! the task he undertakes Is numbering sands, and drinking oceans dry: Where one on his side fights, thousands will fly.
Farewell at once; for once, for all, and ever.

Bushy. Well, we may meet again.

Bagot. I fear me, never. [Exit]

SCENE III.—The Wilds in Glosstshire.

Enter Bolingbroke and Northumberland, with Forces.

Boling. How far is it, my lord, to Berkeley now?

North. Believe me, noble lord, I am a stranger here in Glosstshire. These high wild hills, and rough untrodden ways, Draw out our miles, and make them wearisome; And yet your fair discourse hath been as sugar, Making the hard way sweet and delectable. But, I bethink me, what a weary way From Ravengpur to Cotswold will be found In Ross and Willoughby, wanting your company, Which, I protest, hath very much beguiled The tediousness and process of my travel: But thine is sweetend with the hope to have The present benefit which I possess; And hope to joy is little less in joy, Than hope enjoy'd: by this the weary lords Shall make their way seem short, as mine hath been By sight of what I have, your company. Boling. Of much less value is my company, Than your good words. But who comes here?

Enter Henry Percy.

North. It is my son, young Harry Percy, Sent from my brother Worcester, wheresoe'er— Harry, how fares your uncle?

Percy. I had thought, my lord, to have learn'd a health of you.

North. Why, is he not with the queen?

Percy. No, my good lord: he hath forsook the court,
Broken his staff of office, and dispers'd The household of the king.

North. What was his reason?

He was not so resolv'd, when last we spoke Together. Percy. Because your lordship was proclaimed traitor. But he, my lord, is gone to Ravengpur, To offer service to the duke of Hereford; And sent me over by Berkeley, to discover What power the duke of York had levied there; Then, with directions to repair to Ravengpur.

North. Have you forgot the duke of Hereford, boy Percy. No, my good lord; for that is not forgot, Which ne'er I did remember: to my knowledge, I never in my life did look on him.

North. Then learn to know him now: this is the duke Percy. My gracious lord, I tender you my service Such as it is, being tender, raw, and young, Which elder days shall ripen, and confirm To more approved service and desert.

Boling. I thank thee, gentle Percy; and be sure, I count myself in nothing else so happy,
As in a soul remembering my good friends;
And as my fortune ripens with thy love,
'Tis shall be still thy true love's recompense:
My heart this comes to pay, and thus seals it.

North. How far is it to Berkley? And what still Keeps good old York there, with his men of war?
Ferry. There stands the castle, by yond'ruft of trees,
Mund with three hundred men, as I have heard;
And in it are the lords of York, Berkley, and Seymour;
Not else of name, and noble estimate.

Enter Ross and Willoughby.

North. Here come the lords of Ross and Willoughby,
Bloody with spurring, fiery-red with haste.
Boling. Welcome, my lords. I wot, your love pursues
A banish'd traitor: all my treasury
Is but yet unfelt thanks, which, more enrich'd,
Shall be your love and labour's recompense.
Ross. Your presence makes us rich, most noble lord.
Will. And far surrounds our labour to attain it.
Boling. Evermore thanks, th' exchequer of the poor:
Which, till my infant fortune comes to years,
Stand for my bonds. But who comes here?

Enter Berkley.

North. It is my lord of Berkley, as I guess.
Berk. My lord of Hereford, my message is to you.
Boling. My lord, my answer is—to Lancaster,
And I am come to seek that name in England;
A I must find that title in your tongue,
Before I make reply to aught you say.
Berk. Mistake me not, my lord; 'tis not my meaning
To cause mine title of your honour out;
To you, and to my lord, I come, what lord you will,
From the most gracious' regent of this land,
The duke of York, to know what pricks you on
To take advantage of the absent time,
And inght our native peace with self-born arms.

Enter York attended.

Boling. I shall not need transport my words by you:
Here comes his grace in person.—My noble uncle.

[Kneels.

York. Show me thy humble heart, and not thy knees,
Whose duty is deceivable and false.
Boling. My gracious uncle—
York. Tut, tut! Grace me no grace, nor uncle me no uncle:
I am no traitor's uncle; and that word "grace,"
In an ungracious mouth, is but profane.
Why have those banish'd and forbidden legs
Not once to touch a dust of England's ground?
But more than that,—why have they dar'd to march
So many miles upon our peaceful bosom,
Frighting her pale-face'd villages with war,
And ostentation of despoothing arms?
Christ thou because th' anointed king is hence?
Why, foolish boy, the king is left behind,
And in my loyal bosom lies his power.
Were I but now the lord of such hot youth,
As when brave Gaunt, thy father, and myself,
Rescued the Black Prince, that young Mars of men,
From forth the ranks of many thousand French,
O! then, how quickly should this arm of mine,
Now prisoner to the palsy, chastise thee,
And minister correction to thy fault!
Boling. My gracious uncle, let me know my fault:
On what condition stands it, and wherein?
York. Even in condition of the worst degree;
In gross rebellion, and destitute treason:
Thou art a banish'd man, and here art come
Before the expiration of thy time,
In braving arms against thy sovereign.
Boling. As I was banish'd, I was banish'd Hereford:
But as I come, I come for Lancaster.
And, noble uncle, I beseech with an indifferent eye:
Look on my wrongs, for, methinks, in you
I see old Gaunt alive: O! then, my father,
Will you permit that I shall stand condemm'd
A wandering vagabond, my rights and royalties
Pluck'd from my arms perforce, and given away
To upset unthrifts? Wherefore was I born?
If that my cousin king be king of England,
It must be granted I am duke of Lancaster.
You have a son, Aumerle, my noblekinsman;
Had you first died, and he been thus trod down,
He should have found his uncle Gaunt a father,
To rouse his wrongers, chasse them to the bay.
I am denied to see my livery here,
And yet my letters patent give me leave:
My father's goods are all distrain'd, and sold;
And these, and all, are all amiss employ'd.
What would you have me do? I am a subject,
And challenge law: attorneys are denied me,
And therefore personally I lay my claim
To my inheritance of free descent.

North. The noble duke hath been too much abusing Ross. It stands your grace upon to do him right.
Will. Base men by his endowments are made great.
York. My lords of England, let me tell you this:
I have had feeling of my cousin's wrongs,
And labour'd all I could to do him right;
But in this kind to come; in braving arms,
Be his own carver, and cut out his way,
To find out right with wrong,—it may not be:
And you, that do abet him in this kind,
Cherish rebellion, and are rebels all.

North. The noble duke hath sworn, his coming is
But for his own: and for the right of that,
We all have strongly sworn to give him aid,
And let him never see joy that breaks that oath.
York. Well, well, I see the issue of these arms.
I cannot mend it, I must needs confess,
Because my power is weak, and all ill left;
But if I could, by him that gave me life,
I would attach you all, and make you stoop
Unto the sovereign mercy of the king:
But since I cannot, be it known unto you,
I do remain as neutral. So, farewell;
Unless you please to enter in the castle,
And there, my lords, repose you for this night.

Boling. An offer, uncle, that we will accept:
But we must win your grace, to go with us
To Bristol castle; which, they say, is held
By Bushy, Bagot, and their complices,
The caterpillars of the commonwealth,
Which I have sworn to weed and pluck away.
York. It may be I will go with you;—but yet I'll not pursue.
For I am loath to break our country's laws.
Nor friends, nor foes, to me welcome you are:
Things past redress are now with me past care.

Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—A Camp in Wales.

Enter Salisbury, and a Welsh Captain.

Cap. My lord of Salisbury, we have stay'd ten days
And hardly keep our countrymen together,

Scene IV.
And yet we hear no tidings from the king;
Therefore, we will disperse ourselves. Farewell.
Sal. Stay yet another day, thou trusty Welshman:
The king repose all his confidence in thee.
Cap. 'Tis thought, the king is dead: we will not stay.
The bay-trees in our country are all wither'd,
And meteor's fright the fixed stars of heaven;
The pale-fac'd moon looks bloody on the earth,
And lean-look'd prophets whisper fearful change:
Rich men look sad, and ruffians dance and leap,
The one in fear to lose what they enjoy,

The other to enjoy by rage and war:
These signs forerun the death or fall of kings.
Farewell: our countrymen are gone and fled,
As well as thou, Richard, their king, is dead.
[Exit.
Sal. Ah, Richard! with the eyes of heavy mind,
I see thy glory, like a shooting star,
Fail to the base earth from the firmament.
Thy sun sets weeping in the lowly west,
Witnessing storms to come, woe, and unrest:
Thy friends are fled to wait upon thy foes,
And cross to thy good all fortune goes.
[Exit.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—Bolingbroke's Camp at Bristol.
Enter Bolingbroke, York, Northumberland, Percy, Willinghough, Ross: Bushy and Green, prisoners.

Boling. Bring forth these men.

[Bushy and Green stand forward.

Bushy, and Green, I will not vex your souls,
Since presently your souls must part your bodies,
With too much urging your peregrine lives,
For 't were no charity: yet, to wash your blood
From off my hands, here in the view of men
I will unfold some causes of your deaths.
You have mislead a prince, a royal king,
A happy gentleman in blood and lineaments,
By you unhappily and disgrac'd clean:
You have, in manner, with your sinful hours,
Made a divorce betwixt his queen and him,
Broke the possession of a royal bed,
And stain'd the beauty of a fair queen's cheeks
With tears, drawn from her eyes by your foul wrongs.
Myself, a prince by fortune of my birth,
Near to the king in blood, and near in love,
Till you did make him misinterpret me,
Have stoo'd my neck under your injuries,
And sigh'd my English breath in foreign clouds,
Eating the bitter bread of banishment,
Whilst you have fed upon my signories,
Dispark'd my parks, and fell'd my forest woods,
From mine own windows torn my household coat,
Raz'd out my impress, leaving me no sign,
Save men's opinions, and my living blood,
To show the world I am a gentleman.
This and much more, much more than twice all this,
Condemns you to the death. See them deliver'd over
To execution, and the hand of death.

Bushy. More welcome is the stroke of death to me,
Than Bolingbroke to England.—Lords, farewell!

Green. My comfort is, that heaven will take our souls,
And plague injustice with the pains of hell.

Boling. My lord Northumberland, see them dispatch'd.

[Exeunt Northumberland and Others, with Bushy and Uncle, you say the queen is at your house; [Green.

For God's sake, fairly let her be entreated:
Tell her I send to her my kind commends:
Take special care my greetings be deliver'd.

York. A gentleman of mine I have dispatch'd
With letters of your love to her at large.

Boling. Thanks, gentle uncle.—Come, my lords,
To fight with Glendower and his complices
Awhile to work, and after holiday.
[Exeunt.

The eloquent of night being pleache'd from off their backs,

SCENE II.—The Coast of Wales. A Castle in view.

Flourish: Drums and Trumpets. Enter King Richard,
Bishop of Carlisle, Aumerle, and Soldiers.

K. Rich. Barkthorpe Castle call they this thing?

Aum. Yes, my good lord. How breaks your grace the air,
After late tossing on the breaking seas?

K. Rich. Needs must I like it well: I weep for joy,
To stand upon my kingdom once again.
Dear earth, I do salute thee with my hand,
Though rebels wound thee with their horses' hoofs.
As a long parted mother with her child
Plays fondly with her tears and smiles in meeting,
So, weeping, smiling, greet I thee, my earth,
And do thee favour with my royal hand.
Feed not thy sovereign's foe, my gentle earth,
Nor with thy sweets comfort his ravenous sense;
But let thy spiders, that suck up thy venom,
And heavy-gaited toads, lie in their way,
Doing annoyance to the treacherous feet,
Which with usurping steps do trample thee.
Yield springing nettles to mine enemies;
And when they from thy bosom pluck a flower,
Guard it, I pray thee, with a lurking adder,
Whose double tongue may with a mortal touch
Throw death upon thy sovereign's enemies.
Mock not my senseless conjunction, lords:
This earth shall have a feeling, and these stones
Prove armed soldiers, ere her native king
Shall falter under fuil rebellion's arms.

Bishop. Fear not, my lord: that power that makest you king,
Hath power to keep you king, in spite of all.

The means that heavens yield must be embrac'd,
And not neglected: else, if heaven would,
And we will not, heaven's offer we refuse,
The proffer'd means of succour and redress.

Aum. He means, my lord, that we are too remiss;
Whilst Bolingbroke, through our security,
Grows strong and great in substance, and in power.

K. Rich. Discomfortable cousin! know'st thou not
That when the searching eye of heaven is hid
Behind the globe, and lights the lower world,
Then thieves and robbers range abroad unseen,
In murders and in outrage, boldly! here;
But when from under this terrestrial ball
He fires the proud tops of the eastern pines,
And darts his light through every guilty hole,
Then murders, treasons, and detested sins.
KING RICHARD II.

Scene II.

And bare and naked, trembling at themselves?

& when this thief, this traitor Bolingbroke,

Who at this while hath revell'd in the night,

While we were wandering with the antipodes,

Still see us rising in your throne, the east.

His treasons will sit blushing in his face,

Not able to endure the sight of day,

But, self-affrighted, tremble at his sin.

Not all the water in the rough sea

Can wash the balm from an appointed king:

The breath of worldly men cannot deposite

The deputy elected by the Lord.

For every man that Bolingbroke hath pres'd,

To lift a sword against our golden crown,

God for his Richard hath in heaven paid

A glorious angel: then, if angels fight,

Weak men must fall, for heaven still guards the right.

Enter Salisbury.

Welcome, my lord. How far off lies your power?

Sd. Nor near, nor farther off, my gracious lord,

Than this weak arm. Discomfit guides my tongue

And bids me speak of nothing but despair.

One day too late, I fear, may not be lord.

Hast speeded all thy happy days on earth.

O call back yesterday, bid time return,

And then shall have twelve thousand fighting men:

To-day, to-day, unhappy day too late,

Outshews thy joys, friends, fortune, and thy state;

For all the Welshmen, hearing thou wert dead,

Are gone to Bolingbroke, disper'sd, or fled.

Aum. Comfort, my liege! why looks thy grace so pale?

K. Rich. But now, the blood of twenty thousand men

I'd triumph in my face, and they are fled;

And till so much blood thither comes again.

Have I not reason to look pale and dead?

All souls that will be safe, fly from my side;

For time hath set a blot upon my pride.

Aum. Comfort, my liege! remember who you are.

K. Rich. I had forgot myself. Am I not king?

Arise, thou coward majesty! thou sleepest.

Is not my name twenty thousand names?

Aum, arm, my name! a puppy subject strikes

A' thy great glory.—Look not to the ground,

In favours of a king: are we not high?

Hich be our thoughts. I know, my uncle York

Hath power enough to serve our turn. But who comes here?

Enter Scroop.

Scroop. More health and happiness betide my liege,

This can my care-turn'd tongue deliver him.

K. Rich. Mine ear is open, and my heart prepar'd:

The worst is worldly los'd thou canst unfold.

Sir, is my kingdom lost? why, 'tis was my care;

And what loss is it to be rid of care?

Stir not Bolingbroke to be as great as we?

Greatly he shall not be: if he serve God,

We'll serve him too, and be his fellow so,

Betray our subjects? that we cannot mend;

They break their faith to God, as well as us.

Cry woes, destruction, ruin, loss, decay.

The worse is death, great death will have his day.

Scroop. Glad am I, that your highness is so arm'd

To bear the tides of calamity.

Like an unseasonable stormy day,

Which makes the silver rivers drown their shores,

As if the world were all dissolv'd to tears;

So high above his limits swells the rage

Of Bolingbroke, covering you a fearful land;

With hard bright steel, and hearts harder than steel.

White-beards have arm'd their thin and hairless scalps

Against thy majesty; and boys, with women's voices,

Strive to speak big, and clasp their feeble joints

In stiff unwieldy armour 'gainst thy crown:

Thy very beaudeams learn to bend their bows

Of double-fatal yew against thy state;

Yea, distaff-women manage rusty bills

Against thy seat: both young and old rebel,

And all goes worse than I have power to tell.

K. Rich. Too well, too well, thou tell'st a tale so ill.

Where is the earl of Wiltsire? where is Bagot?

What is become of Bushy? where is Green?

That they have let the dangerous enemy

Measure our confines with such peaceful steps?

If we prevail, their heads shall pay for it.

I warrant they have made peace with Bolingbroke.

Scroop. Peace have they made with him, indeed, my lord.

Dogs, easily won to fawn on any man!

Snake, in my heart-blood warm'd, that sting my heart.

Three Judases, each one thrice worse than Judas

Would they make peace? terrible hell make war

Upon their spotted souls for this offence!

Scroop. Sweet love. I see, changing his property,

Turns to the surest and most deadly hate.

Again uncurse their souls; their peace is made

With heads and not with hands: those whom you curse

Have felt the worst of death's destroying wound,

And lie full low, grad' in the hollow ground.

Aum. Is Bushy, Green, and the earl of Wiltshire, dead?

Scroop. Yea, all of them at Bristol lost their heads.

Aum. Where is the duke, my father, with his power?

K. Rich. No matter where. Of comfort no man speak:

Let's talk of graves, of worms, and epitaphs;

Make dust our paper, and with rainy eyes

Write sorrow on the bosom of the earth.

Let's choose exprest names, and talk of wills:

And yet not so,—for what can we bequeath,

Save our deposited bodies to the ground?

Our lands, our lives, and all are Bolingbroke's,

And nothing can we call our own but death,

And that small model of the barren earth,

Which serves as paste and cover to our bones.

For God's sake, let us sit upon the ground,

And tell sad stories of the death of kings:

How some have been depos'd, some slain in war,

Some haunted by the ghosts they have depos'd,

Some poison'd by their wives, some sleeping kill'd,

All murder'd;—for within the hollow crown,

That rounds the mortal temples of a king,

Keeps death his court, and there the antick sits,

Scotching his state, and grinning at his pomp;

Allowing him a breath, a little scene,

To monarchical, be fear'd, and kill with looks;

Infusing him with self and vain conceit,

As if this flesh, which waves all our life,

Were braes impassable, and brooks'ur'd thus,

Comes at the last, and with a little pin

Bore through his castle wall, and—farewell king!

Cover your heads, and mock not flesh and blood

With solemn reverence: throw away respect,

Tradition, form, and ceremonious duty.
For you have but mistook me all this while:
I live with bread like you, feel want,
Taste grief, need friends; subjected thus,
How can you say to me—I am a king?

Bishop. My lord, wise men nor sit and wail their
But presently present the ways to wail. [woes,
To fear the foe, since fear oppresseth strength,
Gives, in your weakness, strength unto your foe,
And so your futilities fight against yourself.*
Fear, and be plain: no worse can come to fight:
And fight and die is death destroying death;
Where fearing dying pays death service breathe.

Aum. My father hath a power, enquire of him,
And learn to make a body of a limb.

K. Rich. Thou chidst me well.—Proud Bolingbroke,
I come
To change blowes with thee for our day of doom.
This ague-fit of fear is over-blown:
An easy task it is, to win our own.
Say, Scroop, where lies our uncle with his power?
Speak sweetly, man, although thy looks be sour.
Scroop. Men judge by the complexion of the sky
The state and inclination of the day;
So may you by my dull and heavy eye,
My tongue hath but a heavier tale to say.
I play the torturer, by small and small,
To lengthen out the worst that must be spoken.
Your uncle York is join’d with Bolingbroke;
And all your northern castles yielded up,
And all your southern gentlemen in arms
Upon his party.*

K. Rich. Thou hast said enough.—
Beshrew thee, cousin, [To Aumerle.] which didst lead me forth
Of that sweet way I was in to despair!
What say you now? What comfort have we now? By heaven, I’ll hate him everlastingly,
That bids me be of comfort any more.
Go to Flint castle: there I’ll pine away;
A king, woe’s slave, shall kingling woe obey.
That power I have, dischARGE; and let them go
To cast there the land that hath some hope to grow,
For I have none.—Let no man speak again.
To alter this, for counsel is but vain.

Aum. My liege, one word.
K. Rich.
He doeth me double wrong,
That wounds me with the flatteries of his tongue.
Discharge my followers: let them hence away,
From Richard’s night to Bolingbroke’s fair day.

[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Wales. A Plain before Flint Castle.
Enter, with Drum and Colours, Bolingbroke and Forces; York, Northumberland, and Others.

Boling. So that by this intelligence we learn,
The Welshmen are dispairs; and Salisbury
Is gone to meet the king, who lately landed
With some few private friends upon this coast.

North. The news is very fair and good, my lord:
Richard, not far from hence, hath hid his head.

York. It would be meet to the lord Northumberland,
To say, king Richard:—Alack, the heavy day,
When such a sacred king should hide his head!

North. Your grace mistakes me; only to be brief,
Left I his title out.
York. The time hath been,
Would you have been so brief with him, he would Have been so brief with you, to shorten you,
For taking so the head, your whole head’s length.

Boling. Mistake not, uncle, farther than you should.
York. Take not, good cousin, farther than you should Lost you mistake: the heavens are o’er our heads.*

Boling. I know it, uncle; and oppose not myself
Against their will.—But who comes here?

Enter Percy.

Welcome, Harry. What, will not this castle yield?
Percy. The castle royally is mann’d, my lord,
Against thy entrance.

Boling. Royally?
Why, it contains no king.
Percy.

Yes, my good lord;
It doth contain a king: king Richard lies
Within the limits of yond’ time and stone;
And with him are the lord Aumerle, lord Salisbury,
Sir Stephen Scroop; besides a clergyman
Of holy reverence, who, I cannot learn.

North. O! belike it is the bishop of Carlisle.

Boling. Noble lord,
[To North] Go to the rude ribe of that ancient castle;
Through brazen trumpet send the breath of parole
Into his ruin’d ears, and thus deliver:
Henry Bolingbroke
On both his knees doth kiss king Richard’s hand,
And sends allegiance, and true faith of heart,
To his most royal person; hither come
Even at his feet to lay my arms and power,
Provided that, my banishment repeal’d,
And lands restor’d again, be freely granted.
If not, I’ll use th’ advantage of my power,
And lay the summer’s dust with showers of blood,
Rain’d from the wounds of slaughter’d Englishmen:
The which, how far off from the mind of Bolingbroke
It is, such crimson tempest should bedrench
The fresh green lap of fair king Richard’s land,
My stooping duty tenderly shall show.
Go; signify as much, while here we march
Upon the grassy carpet of this plain.
Let’s march without the noise of threatening drum,
That from the castle’s totter’d battlements
Our fair appointments may be well perus’d.
Methinks, king Richard and myself should meet
With no less terror than the elements
Of fire and water, when their thundering shock
At meeting terrors the cloudy cheeks of heaven.
Be he the fire, I’ll be the yielding water;
The rage be his, while on the earth I rain
My waters; on the earth, and not on him.—
March on, and mark king Richard how he looks.
A parley sounded, and answered by a Trumpet with Flourish. Enter on the walls King Richard, &
Bishop of Carlisle, Aumerle, Scroop, and Salisbury
Boling. See, see, king Richard doth himself appere
As doth the blushing discontented sun
From out the fiery portal of the east,
When he perceives the envious clouds are bent
To dim his glory, and to stain the track
Of his bright passage to the occident.
York. Yet looks he like a king: behold, his eye,
As bright as is the eagle’s, lightens forth
Controlling majesty. Alack, alack, for woe,
That any storm* should stain so fair a show!

K. Rich. We are amaz’d; and thus long have we stood
[To Northumberland;]
To watch the faithful* boding of thy knee,
KING RICHARD II.

Scene III.

Because we thought ourselves thy lawful king:
And if we be, how dare thy joints forget
To pay their awful duty to our presence?
If we be not, show us the hand of God
That hath dismission'd us from our stewardship:
For well we know, no hand of blood and bone
Can grip the sacred handle of our sceptre,
Unless he do profane, steal, or usurp.
And though you think that all, as you have done,
Have torn their souls by turning them from us,
And we are barren and destitute of friends,
Yet know my master. God omnipotent,
Is master in his clouds on our behalf
Armes of pestilence; and they shall strike
Your children yet unborn, and unbegot,
That lift your vassal hands against my head,
And treat the glory of my precious crown.
Tel Boleingbroke, for yond'; methinks, he stands,
That every stride he makes upon my land
Is dangerous treason. He is come to ope
The breach of interdict on his knee:
But ere the crown he looks for live in peace,
Ten thousand bloody crowns of mothers' sons
Shall ill become the flower of England's face,
Change the complexion of her maid-pale peace
To scarlet indignation, and bedew
Her pastures' grass with faithful English blood.

North. The King of heaven forbid, our lord the king
Should so with civil and uncivil arms
Be rush'd upon. Thy thrice-noble cousin,
Harry Boleingbroke, doth humbly kiss thy hand;
And by the honourable tomb he swears,
That stands upon your royal grandaire's bones,
And by the royalties of both your bloods,
Currents that spring from one most gracious head,
And by the buried hand of warlike Gaunt,
And by the worth and honour of himself,
Composing all that may be sworn or said,
His coming hither hath no farther scope,
Than for his lineal royalties, and to beg
Exoneration immediate on his knees:
Which on thy royal party granted once,
His glistening arms he will command to rust,
His barbed steeds to stables, and his heart
To faithful service of your majesty.
This swear he, as he is a prince, is just,
And as a gentleman, I credit him.

K. Rich. Northumberland, say,—thus the king reigns:
His noble cousin is right welcome hither;
[Turns:
And all the number of his fair demands
Shall be accomplish'd without contradiction;
With all the gracious utterance thou hast,
Speak to his gentle hearing kind commends.

[Boleingbroke retires to Boleingbroke.

We do debate ourselves, cousin, (To Aumerle.) do we not,
To look so poorly, and to speak so fair?
Shall we call back Northumberland, and send Defiance to the traitor, and so die?

Aumerle. No, good my lord: let's fight with gentle words,
Tell time lend friends, and friends their helpful swords.

K. Rich. O God! O God! that ever this tongue of mine,
That laid the sentence of dread banishment
On such proud man, should take it off again
With words of sooth: O! that I were as great
As is my grief, or lesser than my name,
Or that I could forget what I have been,
Or not remember what I must be now.

Well'th thou, proud heart? I'll give thee scope to beat, [Unbuttoning.

Since foes have scope to beat both thee and me.

Aumerle. Northumberland comes back from Boleingbroke.

K. Rich. What must the king do now? Must he submit?
The king shall do it. Must he be depo'd?
The king shall be contented. Must he lose
The name of king? o' God's name, let it go:
I'll give my jewels for a set of beads,
My gorgeous palace for a hermitage,
My gay apparel for an alms-man's gown,
My fine girdle for a dish of wood,
My sceptre for a palmer's walking staff,
My subjects for a pair of carved saints,
And my large kingdom for a little grave,
A little little grave, an obscure grave:
Or I'll be buried in the king's highway,
Some way of common trade, where subjects' feet
May hourly trample on their sovereign's head;
For on my heart they tread, now whilst I live,
And, buried once, why not upon my head?—
Aumerle, thou wast at't; my tender-hearted cousin!—
We'll make foul weather with despised tears;
Our sighs and they shall lodge the summer corn,
And make a earth in this revolting land:
Or shall we play the wantson with our woes,
And make some pretty match with shedding tears?
As thus;—to drop them still upon one place,
Till they have fretted us a pair of graves
Within the earth; and, therein laid, there lies
Two kinmen digg'd their graves with weeping eyes.
Would not this ill do well?—Well, well, I see
I talk but idly, and you mock at me.

Most mighty prince, my lord Northumberland,
What says king Boleingbroke? will his majesty
Give Richard leave to live till Richard die?
You make a leg, and Boleingbroke says ay.

North. My lord, in the base court he doth attend
To speak with you: may't please you to come down?

K. Rich. Down, down, I come; like glistening
Phoebus,
Wanting the manage of unruly jades.

[North. retires again to Boleingbroke.

In the base court? Base court, where kings grow base,
To come at traitors' calls, and do them grace.
In the base court? Come down? down, court! down,
king!
For night-owls shriek, where mounting larks should sing.
[Exeunt, from above.

Boling. What says his majesty?

North. Sorrow and grief of heart
Make him speak fondly, like a frantic man:
Yet he is come.

Enter King Richard, and his Attendants, below.

Boling. Stand all apart,
And show fair duty to his majesty.

My gracious lord,—

K. Rich. Fair cousin, you debate your princely knee,
To make the base earth proud with kissing it:
Me rather had, my heart might feel your love,
Than my unpleas'd eye see your courtesy.
Up, cousin, up: your heart is up, I know,
Thus high at least, although your knee be low.
Boling. My gracious lord. I come but for mine own.
K. Rich. Your own is yours; and I am yours, and all.
Boling. So far be mine, my most redoubted lord,
As my true service shall deserve your love.

K. Rich. Well you deserve:—they well deserve to have,
That know the strong'st and surest way to get,—
I 'nkle, give me your hand: nay, dry your eyes;
Tears show their love, but want their remedies.—
Cousin, I am too young to be your father,
Though you are old enough to be my heir.
What you will have I'll give, and willing too,
For do we must what force will have us do.—
Set on towards London.—Cousin, is it so?
Boling. Yea, my good lord.
K. Rich. Then, I must not say no.
[FLOURISH. EXEUNT.]

Enter the Queen, and two Ladies.

Queen. What sport shall we devise here in this garden,
To drive away the heavy thought of care?
Lady. Madam, we'll play at bowls.
Queen. 'Twill make me think the world is full of ruts,
And that my fortune runs against the bias.
1 Lady. Madam, we'll dance.
Queen. My legs can keep no measure in delight,
When my poor heart has no measure keeps in grief:
Therefore, no dancing, girl; some other sport.
1 Lady. Madam, we'll tell tales.
Queen. O, sorrow, or of joy?*
1 Lady. Of either, madam.
Queen. Of neither, girl;
For if of joy, being altogether wanting,
It doth remember me the more of sorrow;
Or if of grief, being altogether had,
It adds more sorrow to my want of joy;
For what I have I need not to repeat,
And what I want it bores not to complain.
1 Lady. Madam, I'll sing.
Queen. 'Tis well that thou hast cause;
But thou shouldst please me better, wouldest thou weep.
1 Lady. I could weep, madam, would it do you good.
Queen. And I could sing, would weeping do me good,
And never borrow any tear of thee.
But stay, here come the gardeners:
Let's step into the shadow of these trees.—
My wretchedness unto a row of pins,
They'll talk of state: for every one doth so
Against a change. Woe is forerun with woe.
[Queen and Ladies retire.

Enter a Gardener and two Servants.

Gard. Go, bind thou up yond' dangling apriocks,
Which, like unruly children, make their sires
Stoop with oppression of their prodigal weight:
Give some supportance to the bending twigs.—
Go thou, and like an executioner,
Cut off the heads of two fast-growing sprays,
That look too lofty in our commonwealth:—
You thus employ'd, I will go root away
The noisome weeds, that without profit seek
The soil's fertility from wholesome flowers.
1 Serv. Why should we, in the compass of a pale,
Keep law, and form, and due proportion,
Showing, as in a model, our firm estate,
When our sea-walled garden, the whole land,
Is full of weeds: her fairest flowers chok'd up,
Her fruit-trees all unprun'd, her hedges ruin'd,
Her knots disorder'd, and her wholesome herbs
Swarming with caterpillars?

Gard. Hold thy peace.
He that hath suffer'd this disorder'd spring,
Hath now himself met with the fall of leaf;
The weeds that his broad-spreading leaves did shelter,
That seem'd in eating him to hold him up,
Are pluck'd up, root and all, by Bolingbroke;
I mean, the earl of Wiltshire, Bushy, Green.
1 Serv. What! are they dead?
Gard. They are; and Bolingbroke
Hath seiz'd the wasteful king.—What pity is it,
That he had not so trimm'd and dress'd his land,
As we this garden. At the time of year
We wound the bark, the skin of our fruit-trees,
Lest, being over-proud in sap and blood,
With too much riches it confound itself:
Had he done so great and growing men,
They might have liv'd to bear, and he to taste
Their fruits of duty. Superfluous branches
We lop away, that bearing boughs may live:
Had he done so, himself had borne the crown,
Which waste and idle hours have quite thrown down.
1 Serv. What! think you, then, the king shall be depos'd?
Gard. Depris'd he is already: and depos'd,
'Tis doubt, he will be: letters came last night
To a dear friend of the good duke of York's,
That tell black tidings.
Queen. O! I am pres't to death, through want of speaking. [Coming forward.
Thou, old Adam's likeness, set to dress this garden,
How dares thy harsh, rude tongue sound this unpleasing
What Eve, what serpent hath suggested thee [news?
To make a second fall of cursed man?
What dost thou say king Richard is depos'd?
Dar'st thou, thou little better thing than earth,
Divine his downfall? Say, where, when, and how,
Can'st thou by these ill tidings? speak, thou wretch.
Gard. Pardon me, madam: little joy have I,
To breathe these news, yet what I say is true.
King Richard, he is in the mighty hold
Of Bolingbroke: their fortunes both are weigh'd:
In your lord's scale is nothing but himself,
And some few vanities that make him light;
But in the balance of great Bolingbroke,
Besides himself, are all the English peers,
And with that odds he weighs king Richard down.
Post you to London, and you'll find it so;
I speak no more than every one doth know:
Queen. Nimble mischance, that art so light of foot,
Dost not thy embassage belong to me,
And am I last that knows it? O! thou think'st
To serve me last, that I may longest keep Thy sorrow in my breast.—Come, ladies, go
To meet at London London's king in woe.—
What! was I born to this, that my sad look
Should grace the triumph of great Bolingbroke?
Gardener, for telling me these news of woe.
Pray God, the plants thou hath may never grow.
[Exeunt Queen and Ladies.

Gard. Poor queen! so that thy state might be no worse,
I would my skill were subject to thy curse.
Here did she fall a tear; here, in this place,
I'll set a bank of rue, sour herb of grace:
Rue, even for ruth, here shortly shall be seen
In the remembrance of a weeping queen.
[Exeunt.]

SCENE I.—London. Westminster Hall.

The Lords spiritual on the right side of the Throne; the Lords temporal on the left; the Commons below.

Enter Bolingbroke, Aumerle, Surrey, Northumberland, Percy. Fitzwater, another Lord, the Bishop of Carlisle, the Abbot of Westminster, and Attendants.1

Boling. Call forth Bagot.—

Enter Bacon, guarded.2

Kw. Bagot, freely speak thy mind,
What thou dost know of noble Gloster's death;
Woe wrought it with the king, and who performed
The bloody office of his timeless end.

Bol. Then, set before my face the lord Aumerle.

Bol. Cousin, stand forth, and look upon that man.

Bol. My lord Aumerle, I know your daring tongue
Seems to unsay what once it hath deliver'd.
In the dead time when Gloster's death was plotted,
I heard you say,—"Is not my arm of length,
That I might take the strong man of the court,
As far as Calais, to mine uncle's head?"
Amidst much other talk, that very time,
I heard you say, that you had rather refuse
The offer of an hundred thousand crowns,
Than Bolingbroke's return to England;
Adding vithal, how blest this land would be
In this your cousin's death.

Aum. Princes, and noble lords, What answer shall I make to this base man?
Sail I so much dishonour my fair stars,
Or equal terms to give him chastisement?
Either must, or have mine honour soil'd
With the attainer of his slanderous lips.—
There is my gage, the manual seal of death,
That marks thee out for hell: I say, thou liest,
And will maintain what thou hast said is false
In thy heart-blood, though being all too base
To run the temper of my knightly sword.

Boling. Bagot, forbear: thou shalt not take it up.

Excepting one, I would be the best
In all this present, that hath mov'd me so.
Fitz. If thy that valour stand on sympathy,
There is my gage, Aumerle, in gage to thine.
Be that fair sun which shows me where thou stand'st,
I heard thee say, and vauntingly thou spak'st it,
That thou wast cause of noble Gloster's death.
If thou deny'st it twenty times, thou liest;
And I will turn thy falsehood to thy heart,
Where it was forged, with my rapier's point.

Aum. Thou dar'st not, coward, live to see that day.

Fitz. Now, by my soul, I would it were this hour.

Aum. Fitzwater, thou art damm'd to hell for this.

Percy. Aumerle, thou liest; his honour is as true
In this appeal, as thou art all unjust;
And, that thou art so, there I throw my gage,
To prove it on thee to the extremest point
Of mortal breathing. Seize it if thou dar'st.

Aum. And if I do not, may my hands rot off,
And never brandish more revengeful steel
Over the glittering helmet of my foe!

Lord. I task the earth to the like, foreworn Aumerle;3
And spur thee on with full as many lies.

1 a old Officers behind, with Bacor. * Not in a c. * Equality of rank. + This and the next speech are not in the a. c., but scene 1 of 1587, read: take.
Worst in this royal presence may I speak,
Yet best becom'ing me to speak the truth.
Would God, that any in this noble presence
Were enough noble to be upright judges
Of noble Richard: then true noblesst would Learn him forbearance from so foul a wrong.
What subject can give you but your son on his king?
And who sits here that is not Richard's subject?
Thieves are not judged but they are by to hear,
Although apparent guilt be seen in them;
And shall the figure of God's majesty,
His captain, steward, deputy elect,
Anointed, crowned, planted many years,
Be judged by subject and inferior breath.
And he not present! O! foreordain's it, God,
That, in a Christian climate, souls refin'd
Should show so heinous, black, obscene a deed!
I speak to subjects, and a subject speaks,
Stir'd up by God thus boldly for his king.
My lord of Hereford here, whom you call king,
Is a foul traitor to proud Hereford's king;
And if you crown him, let me prophesy
The blood of English shall manure the ground,
And future ages groan for this foul act:
Peace shall go sleep with Turks and infidels,
And in this seat of peace tumultuous wars
Shall kind with kin, and kind with kind confound;
Disorder, horror, fear, and mutiny,
Shall here inhabit, and this land be call'd
The field of Golgotha, and dead men's skulls.
O! if you raise4 this house against this house,
It will the woefullest division prove,
That ever fell upon this cursed earth.
Prevent, resist it, let it be not so,
Lest child. child's children, cry against you—woe!
North. Well have you argued, sir; and, for your pains,
Of capital treason we arrest you here.
My lord of Westminster, be it your charge
To keep him safely till his day of trial.
May it please you, lords, to grant the commons' suit.4
Boling.Fetch hither Richard, that in common view
He may surrender: so we shall proceed
Without suspicion.
York. I will be his conduct. [Exit.
Boling. Lords, you that here are under our arrest,
Procure your sureties for your days of answer.—
Little are we beholding to your love. [To the Bishop.
And look for little at your helping hands.
Re-enter York, with King Richard, and Officers bearing the Crown, &c.

K. Rich. Alack! why am I sent for to a king,
Before I have shook off the regal thoughts
Wherewith I reign'd? I hardly yet have learn'd
To insinuate, flatter, bow, and bend my limbs:
Give sorrow leave awhile to tutor me
To this submission. Yet I well remember
The counsel of these men: were they wise men?
Did they not sometimes cry, All hail! to me?
So Judas did to Christ; but he, in twelve,
Found truth in all, but one: I, in twelve thousand, none.
God save the king!—Will no man say, amen?
Am I both priest and clerk? well then, amen.
God save the king! although I be not he;
And yet, amen, if heaven do think him me.
To do what service am I sent for hither?
York. To do that office of thine own good will,
Which tired majesty did make thee offer;

The resignation of thy state and crown
To Harry Bolingbroke.
K. Rich. Give me the crown.—Here, cousin, seize the crown;
[ Cresent brought.
Here, cousin, on this side my hand, and on that side, yours.
Now is this golden crown like a deep well,
That owes two buckets, filling one another;
The emptier ever dancing in the air,
The other down, unseen, and full of water:
That bucket down, and full of tears, am I,
Drinking my grief, whilst you mount up on high
Boling. I thought you had been willing to resign.
K. Rich. My crown, I am; but still my griefs are mine.
You may my glories and my state depose,
But not my griefs: still am I king of those. [crown Boling. Part of your cares you give me with your K. Rich. Your cares set up do not pluck my care down.
My care is loss of care, by old care done;
Your care is gain of care, by new care won:
The cares I give, I have, though given away;
They tend the crown, yet still with me they stay.
Boling. Are you contented to resign the crown?
K. Rich. Ay, no;—no, ay;—for I must nothing be.
Therefore no no, for I resign to thee.
Now mark me how I will unde myself,—
I give this heavy weight from off my head,
And this unwieldy sceptre from my hand,
The pride of kingly sway out from my heart:
With mine own tears I wash away my balm,
With mine own hands I give away my crown,
With mine own tongue deny my sacred state,
With mine own breath release all duties, rites:4
All pomp and majesty I do forswear;
My manors, rents, revenues, I forego;
My acts, decrees, and statutes, I deny:
God pardon all oaths that are broke to me!
God keep all vows unbrok'en that swear'd to thee!
Make me, that nothing have, with nothing griev'd,
And thou with all pleas'd, that hast all acquiev'd!
Long may'st thou live in Richard's seat to sit,
And soon lie Richard in an earthy pit!
God save king Henry, unkind Richard says,
And send him many years of sunshine days!—
What more remains?
North. No more, but that you read [Offering a pap.
These, these, these, and these grievous crimes.
Committed by your person and your followers,
Against the state and profit of this land;
That, by confessing them, the souls of men
May deem that you are worthily depos'd.
K. Rich. Must I so do? and must I ravell out
My weav'd up folly? Gentle Northumberland,
If thy offences were upon record,
Would it not shame thee, in so fair a troop,
To read a lecture of them? If thou wouldst,
There shouldst thou find one heinous article,
Containing the deposing of a king,
And cracking the strong warrant of an oath,
Mark'd with a blot, damn'd in the book of heaven—
 Nay, all of you, that stand and look upon me,
Whilst that my wretchedness doth baffle itself,
Though some of you, with Pilate, wash your hands,
Showing an outward pity; yet you Pilates
Have here deliver'd me to my sour cross,
And water cannot wash away your sin.

KING RICHARD II.

NEARLY. My lord, dispatch: read or these articles.

K. Rich. Mine eyes are full of tears, I cannot see;
And yet salt water blinds them not so much,
But they can see a sort of traitors here.

Nay, if I turn mine eyes upon myself,
I feel myself a traitor with the rest;
For I have given here my soul's consent,
To deject the pompous body of a king;
And my base, and sovereignly a slave,
From a majesty a subject; state a peasant.

Nay, my lord—

K. Rich. No lord of thine, thou haught, insulting man,
Nor man's lord. I have no name, no title,
No not that name was given me at the font,
But as my nard—Alack, the heavy day!
That I have worn so many winters out,
And know not now what name to call myself.
O! that I were a mockery king of snow,
In the sun of Bolingbroke,
To set myself a way in water drops—

Good king—great king—and yet not greatly good,
And if my name be sterling yet in England,
Let it command a mirror hither straight,
That it may show me what a face a man,

Be the bankrupt of his majesty.

Boling. Go some of you, and fetch a looking-glass.

[Exit an Attendant.

NEARLY. Read o'er this paper, while the glass doth come.

K. Rich. Fie! thou torment'st me ere I come to hell.

Boling. Urge it no more, my lord Northumberland.

NEARLY. The commons will not then be satisfied.

K. Rich. They shall be satisfied: I'll read enough,
When I see the very book indeed,
Where all my sins are writ, and that's—myself.

Re-enter Attendant with a Glass.

Give me the glass, and therein will I read—
No super wrinkles yet? Hath sorrow struck
Many blows upon this face of mine,
And made no deeper wounds?—O, flattering glass!

Look to my followers in prosperity,
I was beguiled. Was this face the face,
That every day under his household roof
Did keep ten thousand men? Was this the face,
That like the sun did make beholder's wink?
Was this the face, that faced so many fiddles,
And was at last out-face'd by Bolingbroke?

A little glory shineth in this face:
A little as the glory on the face;
Dashes the glass against the ground.
For there it is, crack'd in a hundred shivers.

Mark, silent king, the moral of this sport:
How soon my sorrow hath destroy'd my face.

Boling. The shadow of your sorrow hath destroy'd
The shadow of your face.

K. Rich. Say that again.

The shadow of my sorrow? Ha! let's see:—
'Tis very true, my grief lies all within;
And these external manners of lament
Are merely shadow to the unseen grief,
That swells with silence in the tortured soul;
There lies the substance: and I thank thee, king,
For thy great bounty, that not only giv'st
Me cause to wail, but teachest me the way
How to lament the cause. I'll beg one boon,
And then begone and trouble you no more.
Shall I obtain it?

Boling. Name it, fair cousin.

K. Rich. Fair cousin! I am greater than a king;
For, when I was a king, my flatterers
Were then but subjects; being now a subject, I have a king here to my flatterer.

Being so great, I have no need to beg.

Boling. Yet ask.

K. Rich. And shall I have it?

Boling. You shall.

K. Rich. Why then give me leave to go.

Boling. Whither?

K. Rich. Whither you will, so I were from your sight.

Boling. Go, some of you; convey him to the Tower.

K. Rich. O, good! Convey?—Conveyers are you all,
That rise thus nimbly by a true king's fall.

[Exeunt K. RICHARD, and Guard.

Boling. On Wednesday next we solemnly set down
Our coronation: lords, prepare yourselves.

[Exeunt all but the Abbot, Bishop of Carlisle, and Aumerle.

Abbot. A woeful pageant have we here beheld.
Bishop. The wo'e to come: the children yet unborn
Shall feel this day as sharp to them as thorn.

Aumerle. You holy clergymen, is there no plot
To rid the realm of this pernicious blot?

Abbot. My lord, before I freely speak my mind herein,
You shall not only take the sacrament
To bury mine intents, but also to effect
Whatever I shall happen to devise.
I see your brows are full of discontent,
In our hearts of sorrow, and your eyes of tears:
Come home with me to supper; I will lay
A plot, shall show us all a merry day.

[Exeunt.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—London. A Street leading to the Tower.

Enter QUEEN, and Attendants.

Queen. This way the king will come: this is the way
To Julius Caesar's ill-erected tower,
To whose feet bosom my condemned lord served a prisoner by proud Bolingbroke.
Here let us rest, if this rebellious earth
Have resting for her true king's queen.

Enter King RICHARD, Queen, and Guard.

How set, but see, we neither do see
My fair rose wither: yet look up, behold,

That you in pity may dissolve to dew,
And wash him fresh again with true-love tears.—
Ah! thou, the model where old Troy did stand;
Thou map of honour; thou king Richard's tomb,
And not king Richard: thou most beauteous inn,
Why should hard-favour'd grief be lodg'd in thee,
When triumph is become an alehouse guest?

K. Rich. Join not with grief, fair woman, do not so,
To make my end too sudden: learn, good soul,
To think our formate a happy dream;
From which we waked, the truth of what we are Shows us but this. I am sworn brother, sweet,
K. Rich. So two, together weeping, make one weep. Weep thou for me in France, I for thee here; Better far off, than near, being ne'er the near. Go; count thy way with sighs, I mine with groans.

Quee. So longest way shall have the longest means. K. Rich. Tw'o for one step I'll groan, the wa'; being short, And piece the way out with a heavy heart. Come, come, in woeing sorrow let's be brief, Since, wedding it, there is such length in grief. One kiss shall stop our mouths, and dumbly part: Thus give me mine, and thus take I thy heart. [They kiss. Quee. Give me mine own again; 't were no good part To take on me to keep, and kill thy heart. [They kiss again. So, now I have mine own again, begun, That I may strive to kill it with a groan.

K. Rich. We make woe wanton with this fond delay Once more, adieu; the rest let sorrow say. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The Same. A Room in the Duke of York's Palace.

Enter York, and the Duchess.

Duch. My lord, you told me, you would tell the rest When weeping made you break the story off, Of our two crimes coming into London. York. Where did I leave? Duch. At that sad stop, my lord Where rude misgovern'd hands, from windows' tops, Threw dust and rubbish on king Richard's head. York. Then, as I said, the duke, great Bolingbroke, Mounted upon a hot and fiery steed, Which his aspiring rider seem'd to know, With slow but stately pace kept on his course, While all tongues cried—'God save thee, Bolingbroke!'

You would have thought the very windows spake, So many greedy looks of young and old Through casements darted their desiring eyes Upon his visage; and that all the walls With painted imagery had said at once,— "Jeau preserve thee! welcome, Bolingbroke!"

Whilst he, from one side to the other turning, Bare-headed, lower than his proud steed's neck, Bespake them thus—as "I thank you, countrymen;" And thus still doing, thus he pass'd along.

Duch. Alas, poor Richard! where rode he the whilst York. As in a theatre, the eyes of men, After a well-gard'd actor leaves the stage, Are idly bent on him that enters next, Thinking his prattle to be tedious; Even so, or with much more contempt, men's eyes Did scowl on gentle Richard: no man cried, God save him; No joyful tongue gave him his welcome home; But dust was thrown upon his sacred head, Which with such gentle sorrow he shook off, His face still combating with tears and smiles, The badges of his grief and patience, That had not God, for some strong purpose, steel'd The hearts of men, they must perforce have melted, And barbarism itself have pitied him. But heaven hath a hand in these events, To whose high will we bound our calm contents. To Bolingbroke are we sworn subjects now, Whose state and honour I for eye allow.

Duch. Here comes my son Aumerle. York. Aumerle that was...
SCENE III.

KING RICHARD II.

To kill the king at Oxford.

Duch.

He shall be none;

We'll keep him here: then, what is that to him?

York.

Away, fond woman! were he twenty times

My son, I would appease him.

Duch.

Hasted thou groan'd for him,

As I have done, thou wouldst be more pitiful.

But now I know thy mind: thou dost suspect,

That I have been disloyal to thy bed.

And that he is a bastard, not thy son.

Sweet York, sweet husband, be not of that mind:

He is as like thee as a man may be,

Not like to me, nor any of my kin,

And yet I love him.

York.

Make way, unruly woman. [Exit.

Duch.

After, Aumerle! Mount thee upon his horse:

Spur, post, and get before him to the king,

And beg thy pardon ere he do accuse thee.

I'll not be long behind: though I be old,

I doubt not but to ride as fast as York:

And never will I rise up from the ground,

Till Bolingbroke have pardon'd thee. Away! begone.

[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Windso.

A Room in the Castle.

Enter BOLINGBROKE as King; Percy, and other Lords.

Boling.

Can no man tell me of my unthrift son?

'T is full three months, since I did see him last:

If any plague hang over us, 'tis he.

I would to God, my lords, he might be found.

Inquire at London, 'mongst the taverns there,

For there they say, he daily doth frequent,

With unrestrained loose companions;

Even such, they say, as stand in narrow lanes,

And beat our watch, and rob our passengers;

While he, young wanton, and effeminate boy,

Takes on the point of honour to support

So dissolute a crew.

Percy.

My lord, some two days since I saw the prince,

And told him of these triumphs held at Oxford.

Boling.

And what said the gallant?

Percy.

His answer was,—he would unto the stews;

And from the common'st creature pluck a glove,

And wear it as a favour; and with that

He would unhorse the lustiest challenger.

Boling.

A溶解ute, as desperate: yet through both

I see some spark of better hope, which elder days

May happily bring forth. But who comes here?

Enter Aumerle, in great haste.

Aum.

Where is the king?

Boling.

What means our cousin, that he stares and looks

So wildly?

Aum.

God save your grace. I do beseech your majesty,

To have some conference with your grace alone.

Boling.

Withdraw yourselves, and leave us here alone.

Aum.

For ever may my knees grow to the earth.

Kneels.

My tongue cleave to my roof within my mouth,

Unless a pardon, ere I rise, or speak.

Boling.

Intended, or committed, was this fault?

If on the first, how heinous e'er it be,

To win thy after love I pardon thee.

Aum.

Then give me leave that I may turn the key

That no man enter till my tale be done.

Boling.

Have thy desire. [Aumerle locks the door
York. [Within.] My liege, beware! look to thyself:
Thou hast a traitor in thy presence there.

Boling. Villain, I'll make thee safe. [Drawing.

Aum. Stay thy revengeful hand: thou hast no cause to fear.

York. [Within.] Open the door, secure, fool-hardy king:
Shall I for love speak treason to thy face?
Open the door, or I will break it open.

[Bolingbroke opens the door, and locks it again.

Enter York.

Boling. What is the matter, uncle? speak;
Recover breath: tell us how near is danger,
That we may arm us to encounter it.

York. Peruse this writing here, and thou shalt know
The treason that my haste forbids me show.

Aum. Remember, as thou read'st, thy promise past.
I do repent me; read not my name there:
My heart is not confederate with my hand.

York. It was, villain, ere thy hand did set it down.—
I tore it from the traitor's bosom, king:
Fear, and not love, begets his penitence.
Forget to pity him, lest thy pity prove
A serpent that will sting thee to the heart.

Boling. O, heinous, strong, and bold conspiracy!—
O, loyal father of a treacherous son!
Thou sheer, immaculate, and silver fountain,
From whence this stream through muddy passages
Hath held his current, and defil'd himself!
Thy overflow of good converts to bad;
And thy abundant goodness shall excuse
This deadly blot in thy digressing son.

York. So shall my virtue be his vice's bawd,
And he shall spend mine honour with his shame,
As thriftless sons their scraping fathers' gold.
Mine honour lives when his dishonour dies,
Or my sham'd life in his dishonour lies:
Thou kill'st all in his life; giving him breath,
The traitor lives, the true man 's put to death.

Duch. [Within.] What ho! my liege! for God's sake let me in.

Boling. What a shrill-voic'd suppliant makes this noise?

Duch. A woman, and thine aunt, great king; 't is I.
Speak with me, pity me, open the door:
A beggar begs, that never begg'd before.

Boling. Our scene is altered, from a serious thing,
And now chang'd to "The Beggar and the King."—
My dangerous cousin, let your mother in:
I know, she's come to pray for your foul sin.

York. If thou do pardon, whatsoever pray,
More sins for this forgiveness prosper may.
This fester'd joint cut off, the rest rest sound;
This, let alone, will all the rest confound.

Enter Duchess.

Duch. O king! believe not this hard-hearted man:
Love, loving not itself, none other can.

York. Thou frantic woman, what dost thou make here?

Shall thy old dugs once move a traitor rear?

Duch. Sweet York, be patient. Hear me, gentle liege. [Kneels.

Boling. Rise up, good aunt.

Duch. Not yet, I thee beseech:
For ever will I walk* upon my knees,
And never see the day that the happy sees,
Till thou give joy; until thou bid me joy,
By pardoning Rutland, my tranregressing boy.

Aum. Unto my mother's prayers, I bend my knee.

[Bowels.

York. Against them both, my true joints bended be.

Ill may'th thou thrive, if thou grant any grace!*

Duch. Plead's me in earnest? look upon his face;
His eyes do drop no tears, his prayers are in jest;
His words come from his mouth, ours from our breast;
He prays but faintly, and would be denied;
We pray with heart, and soul, and all beside:
His weary joints would gladly rise, I know;
Our knees shall kneel till to the ground they grow:
His prayers are full of false hypocrisy;
Ours of true zeal and deep integrity.
Our prayers do out-pray his; then, let them have
That mercy which true prayers ought to have.

Boling. Good aunt, stand up.

Duch. Nay, do not say—stand up
But, pardon first, and afterwards, stand up.
An if I were thy nurse, thy tongue to teach,
Pardon should be the first word of thy speech.
I never long'd to hear a word till now;
Say—pardon, king: let pity teach thee how:
The word is short, but not so short as sweet;
No word like pardon, for kings' mouths so meet.

York. Speak it in French, king: say, pardonnez-moi.

Duch. Dost thou teach pardon pardon to destroy?
Ah, my sour husband, my hard-hearted lord,
That set'st the word itself against the word!
Speak, pardon, as 't is current in our land;
The chopsing French we do not understand.
Thine eye begins to speak, set thy tongue there,
Or in thy piteous heart plant thou thine ear,
That hearing how our plaints and prayers do pierce,
Pity may move thee pardon to rehearse.

Boling. Good aunt, stand up.

Duch. I do not sue to stand
Pardon is all the suit I have in hand.

Boling. I pardon him, as God shall pardon me.

Duch. O, happy vantage of a kneeling knee!
Yet am I sick for fear: speak it again;
Twice saying pardon doth not pardon twain,
But makes one pardon strong.

Boling. I pardon him with all my heart.

Duch. A god on earth thou art. [Rises.

Boling. But for our trusty brother-in-law, and tis abbot,
With all the rest of that consorted crew,
Destruction straight shall dog them at the heels.—
Good uncle, help to order several powers
To Oxford, or where else these traitors be:
They shall not live within this world, I swear,
But I will have them. so* I once know where.
Uncle, farewell.—and cousin mine! adieu:
Your mother well hath pray'd, and prove you true.

Duch. Come, my old son; I pray God make th' new.

[Exeunt

SCENE IV.

Enter Sir Percy of Exton, and a Servant.

Exton. Didst thou not mark the king, what war he spake?
"Have I no friend will rid me of this living fear?"
Was it not so?

Serv. Those were his very words. [twic.

Exton. "Have I no friend?" quoth he: he spake
And urg'd it twice together, did he not?

Serv. He did.

KING RICHARD II.

SCENE V. - POMFRET. The Dungeon of the Castle.

Enter King Richard.

K. Rich. I have been studying how I may compare
The prison, where I live, unto the world:
And for because the world is populous,
And I am not a creature so great,
I cannot do it: yet I'll hammer 't out.
My brain I'll prove the female to my soul;
My soul, the father: and these two beget
A generation of still-breeding thoughts,
And these same thoughts people this little world;
Its humour like the people of this world,
For so thought is contented. The better sort,
As thoughts of things divine, are intermix'd
With scurvies, and do set the world itself
Arous'd.
As thus: — "Come, little ones," and then again,—
"It is as hard to come, as for a camel
To thread the postern of a small needle's eye,"
Thoughts tending to ambition, they do plot
Culthey wonders: how these vain weak nails
My tear a passage through the flinty ribs
Of this hard world, my ragged prison walls;
And, for they cannot, die in their own pride,
Thoughts tending to content flatter themselves,
That they are not the first of fortune's slaves,
Nor shall be the last; like silly beggars,
Wooing in the stocks, refuse their shame
That many have, and others must sit there:
In this thought they find a kind of ease,
Being their own misfortune on the back
Of such as have before endured the like.
Thus play I, in one person, many people,
As one contented: sometimes am I king;
And, treason makes me wish myself a beggar,
And so am I: then, crushing penury
Purges me I was better when a king:
Then am I king's: and, by and by,
That I am unking'd by Bolingbroke,
And straight am nothing. — But whatse'er I am,
I will not be any man, that but man is,
With nothing shall be pleas'd, till he be eas'd
With being nothing. — Music do I hear?
Music. If it be keep time. — How sour sweet music is,
When time is broke, and no proportion kept!
So is it in the music of men's lives:
And here have I the daintiness of ear,
To catch time broke in a disorder'd string,
But for the concord of my state and time,
Had not an ear to hear my true time broke.
I wasted time, and now doth time waste me;
For now hath time made me his numbering clock;
My thoughts are minutes, and with sighs they jar;
Their watches on unto mine eyes the outward watch;
Wore my finger, like a dial's point,
I scintillating still, in cleansing them from tears.
New, for the sound, that tells what hour it is,
Are crimson groans, that strike upon my heart,
Such is the bell: so sighs, and tears, and groans,
None minutes, times, and hours; but my time
Passes on in Bolingbroke's proud joy,
While I stand looking here, his Jack o' the clock.
This music made me: let it sound no more.
For though it hath holp'd madmen to their wits,
In me, it seems, it will make wise men mad.
Yet, blessing on his heart that gives it me!
For 'tis a sign of love, and love to Richard
Is a strange brooch in this all-hating world.

Enter Groom.

Groom. Hail, royal prince!

K. Rich. Thanks, noble peer;
The cheapest of us is ten groats too dear.
What art thou? and how conset thou either,
That none man never comes, but that said? dig.
That brings me food to make misfortune live?
Groom. I was a poor grom of thy stable, king,
When thou wert king; who, travelling towards York,
With much ado, at length have gotten leave
To look upon my sometime royal master's face.
O! how it yern'd my heart, when I beheld
In London streets that crowning day,
When Bolingbroke rode on roan Barbary!
That horse that thou ten hast bestrid,
That horse that I so carefully have dress'd
K. Rich. Rode he on Barbary? Tell me, gentle friend,
How went he under him?

Groom. So proud, as if he had disdain'd the ground.
K. Rich. So proud that Bolingbroke was on his back?
That jade hath eat bread from my royal hand;
This hand hath made him proud with clapping him.
Would he not stumble? Would he not fall down,
(Since pride must have a fall) and break the neck
Of that proud man that did usurp his back?
Forgiveness, horse! why do I rail on thee,
Since thou, created to be sw'd by man,
Wast born to bear? I was not made a horse;
And yet I bear a burden like an ass,
Spur-gall'd and tir'd by jouncing Bolingbroke.

Enter Keeper, with a Dish.

Keep. Fellow, give place: here is no longer stay.

K. Rich. If thou love me, 'tis time thou wert away.
Groom. What my tongue darest not, that my heart shall say.

Keep. Keep. My lord, will 't please you to fall to?
K. Rich. Taste of it first, as thou art wont to do.
Keep. Keep. My lord, I dare not: Sir Pierce of Exton,
Who lately came from the king, commands the contrary.
K. Rich. The devil take Henry of Lancaster, and thee!
Pattence is stale, and I am weary of it.

[Strikes the Keeper.

Keep. Help, help, help!

Enter Sir Pierce of Exton, and Servants, armed.

K. Rich. How now! what means death in this rude assault?
Villain, thine own hand yields thy death's instrument.

[Snatching a seapon, and killing one.
Go thou and fill another room in hell.

[He kills another: Exton strikes him down.

That hand shall burn in never-quenching fire,
That staggers thus my person.—Exton, thy fierce hand
Hath with the king's blood stain'd the king's own land.
Mount, mount, my soul! thy seat is up on high,
Whilst my gross flesh sinks downward, here to die.

[Dies.

Exton. As full of valour, as of royal blood:
Both have I spitt: O. would the deed were good!
For now the devil, that told me I did well,
Says that this deed is chronicled in hell.

Act the fourth, Scene the seventh.

[Admonitions, &c. to the Printer.}
This dead king to the living king I'll bear.—
Take hence the rest, and give them burial here.

[Exeunt with the bodies.

SCENE VI.—Windsor. An Apartment in the Castle.
Flourish. Enter BOLINGBROKE, and YORK, with Lords and Attendants.

Boling. Kind uncle York, the latest news we hear
Is, that the rebels have burnt with fire
Our town of Cicester in Glostershire;
But whether they be slain, or slain, we hear not.

Enter Northumberland.

Welcome, my lord. What is the news with you?

North. First, to thy sacred state wish I all happiness:
The next news is,—I have to London sent
The heads of Salisbury, Spencer, Blunt, and Kent.
The manner of their taking may appear
At large discoursed in this paper here.

[Presenting a Paper.

Boling. We thank thee, gentle Percy, for thy pains,
And to thy worth will add right worthy gains.

Enter Fitzwater.

Fitz. My lord, I have from Oxford sent to London
The heads of Brocas, and Sir Bennet Seely,
Two of the dangerous consorted traitors,
That sought at Oxford thy dire overthrow.

Boling. Thy pains, Fitzwater, shall not be forgot;
Right noble is thy merit, well I wit.

Enter Percy, with the Bishop of Carlisle.

Percy. The grand conspirator, abbot of Westminster,
With clog of conscience, and sour melancholy,
Hath yielded up his body to the grave;

But here is Carlisle, living, to abide
Thy kingly doom, and sentence of his pride.

Boling. Bishop of Carlisle, this shall be your doom:—
Choose out some secret place, some reverend room,
More than thou hast, and with it joy thy life;
So, as thou liv'st in peace, die free from strife:
For though mine enemy thou hast ever been,
High sparks of honour in thee have I seen.

Enter Exton, with Attendants bearing a Coffin.

Exton. Great king, within this coffin I present
Thy buried fear: herein all breathless lies
The mightiest of thy greatest enemies,
Richard of Bordeaux, by me hither brought.

Boling. Exton, I thank thee not; for thou hast wrought
A deed of slander with thy fatal hand
Upon my head, and all this famous land.

Dec

Exton. From your own mouth, my lord, aid I thine

Boling. They love not poison that do poison need,
Nor do I thee: though I did wish him dead,
I hate the murderer. love him murdered.
The guilt of conscience take thou for thy labour,
But neither my good word, nor princely favour:
With Cain go wander through the shade of night,
And never show thy head by day nor light.—

Lords, I protest, my soul is full of woe,
That blood should sprinkle me to make me grow:
Come, mourn with me for that I do lament,
And put on sullen black. Incontinent
I'll make a voyage to the Holy land,
To wash this blood off from my guilty hand.
March sadly after: grace my mourning here,
In weeping after this untimely bier.

SCENE, England.

ACT I.

Enter King Henry, Westmoreland, Sir Walter Blunt, and Others.

K. Hen. So shaken as we are, so wan with care,
For we a time for frighted peace to pant,
And breathe short-winded accents of new broils
To be commence'd in strands afar remote.
No more the thirsty entrance of this soil
Shall daub her lips with her own children's blood;
No more shall trenching war channel her fields,
Nor bruise her flowerets with the armed hoofs
Of hostile races; those opposed eyes,
Whose like the meteors of a troubled heaven,
All of one nature, of one substance bred,
Dissolv'd meet in the intestine shock
And furious close of civil butchery.
Shall now, in mutual, well-beseeing ranks,
March all one way, and be no more oppo'd
Against acquaintance, kindred, and allies:
The edge of war, like an ill-sheathed knife,
No more shall cut his master. Therefore, friends,
As far as to the sepulchre of Christ,
Whose soldier now, under whose blessed cross,
We are impressed, and engag'd to fight,
With a power of English shall we levy,
Whose arms were moulded in their mother's womb,
To chase these pageants, in those holy fields
Over whose acres walk'd those blessed feet,
Which fourteen hundred years ago were nail'd
For advantage on the better cross.

And bootless 'tis to tell you we will go:
Therefore we meet not now.—Then, let me hear
Of you, my gentle cousin Westmoreland,
What yesternight our council did decree,
In forwarding this dear expediencenote.

West. My liege, this haste was hot in question,
And many limits of the charge set down
But yesternight; when, all athwart, there came
A post from Wales laden with heavy news;
Whose worst was, that the noble Mortimer,
Leading the men of Herefordshire to fight
Against the irregular and wild Glendower,
Was by the rude hands of that Welchman taken,
A thousand of his people butchered;
Upon whose dead corporse there was such misuse,
Such beastly, shameless transformation,
By those Welchwomen done, as may not be Without much shame re-told or spoken of.

K. Hen. It seems, then, that the tidings of this broil
Brake off our business for the Holy Land.

West. This, match'd with other, did, my gracious lord;
For more uneven and unwelcome news
Came from the north, and thus it did import.

On Holy-rood day, the gallant Hotspur there,
Young Harry Percy, and brave Archibald,
That ever-valiant and approved Scot,
At Holmedon met;
Where they did spend a sad and bloody hour,
As by discharge of their artillery,
And shape of likelihood, the news was told;
For he that brought them, in the very heat

And pride of their contention did take horse,
Uncertain of the issue any way.

_K. Hen._ Here is a dear, a true-industrious friend,
Sir Walter Blunt, new lighted from his horse,
Stain'd with the variation of each soil
Betwixt that Holmedon and this seat of ours;
And he hath brought us smooth and welcome news.
The earl of Douglas is discomfited;
Ten thousand bold Scots, two-and-twenty knights,
Balk'd in their own blood, did Sir Walter see
On Holmedon's plains: of prisoners, Hotapur took Mounts, and of the soc, of the royal
To beaten Douglas, and the earl of Athol,
Of Murray, Angus, and the bold Menteith;
And is not this an honourable spoil?
A gallant prize? ha! cousin, is it not?

_West._ 'Faith, 'tis a conquest for a prince to boast of.

_K. Hen._ Yea, there thou mak'st me sad, and mak'st me sin,
In envy that my lord Northumberland
Should be the father to so blest a son:
A son, who is the theme of honour's tongue;
Amongst a grove the very straightest plant:
Who is sweet fortune's minion, and her pride:
Whilst I, by looking on the praise of him,
See riot and dishonour stain the brow
Of my young Harry. O! that it could be prov'd,
That some night-tripping fairy had exchang'd
In cradle-clothes our children where they lay,
And call'd mine Percy, his Plantagenet:
Then would I have his Harry, and he mine.
But let him from my thoughts.—What think you, coz,
Of this young Percy's pride? the prisoners,
Which he in this adventure hath surpris'd,
To his own use he keeps; and sends me word,
I shall have none but Mordake earl of Fife.

_West._ This is his uncle's teaching, this is Worcester,
Malevolent to you in all aspects;
Which makes him prune himself, and bristle up
The crest of youth against your dignity.

_K. Hen._ But I have sent for him to answer this;
And for this cause and while we must neglect
Our holy purpose to Jerusalem.
Cousin, on Wednesday next our council we
Will hold at Windsor: so inform the lords;
But come yourself with speed to us again,
For more is to be said, and to be done,
Than out of anger can be uttered.

_West._ I will, any li.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—The Same. Another Apartment in the Palace.

_Enter Henry, Prince of Wales, and Falstaff._

_Fal._ Now, Hal; what time of day is it, lad?

_P. Hen._ Thou art so fat-witted, with drinking of old sack, and unbuttoning thee after supper, and sleeping upon benches after noon, that thou hast forgotten to demand that truly, which thou wouldst truly know.
What a devil hast thou to do with the time of the day? unless hours were cups of sack, and minutes cups, and clockes the tongues of bawds, and d'ials the signs of leaping boutas, and the blessed sun himself as a fair hot wench in flame-colourd taffeta, I see no reason why thou shouldst be so superfluous to demand the time of the day.

>Fal._ Indeed you come near me, now, Hal; for we do, that purses, go by the moon and the seven stars and not by Phcebus.—he, "that wandering knight so fair." And, I pr'ythee, sweet wag, when thou art king,—ah, God save thy grace,—majesty, I should say, for grace thou wilt have none,—

_P. Hen._ What, none?

_Fal._ No, by my troth; not so much as will serve be prologue to an egg and butter.

_P. Hen._ Well, how then? come, roundly, roundly.

_Fal._ Marry, then, sweet wag, when thou art king, let men that are squires of the night's body, be called thieves of the day's beauty; let us be Diana's foresters, gentlemen of the shade, minions of the moon; and let men say, we be men of good government, being garnished as the sea is, by our noble and chaste mistresses the moon, under whose countenance we steal.

_P. Hen._ Thou say'st well, and it holds well, too; for the fortune of us, that are the moon's men, doth ebb and flow like the sea, being governed as the sea is, by the moon. As for proof now: a purses of gold most resolutely matched on Monday night, and most dises lutely spent on Tuesday morning; got with swearing—lay by; and spent with crying—bring in; now, in as low an ebb as the foot of the ladder, and, by and by,
in as high a flow as the ridge of the gallowes.

_Fal._ By the Lord, thou say'st true, lad. And is not your hostess of the tavern a most sweet wench?

_P. Hen._ As the honey of Hybla, my old lad of the castle. And is not a buff jerkin a most sweet robe of durance?

_Fal._ How now, how now, mad wag? what is thy quips, and thy quiddities? what a plague have I to do with a buff jerkin?

_P. Hen._ Why, what a pox have I to do with my hostesses of the tavern?

_Fal._ Well, thou hast called her to a reckoning many time and oft.

_P. Hen._ Did I ever call for thee to pay thy part?

_Fal._ No: I'll give thee thy due; thou hast paid a good part.

_P. Hen._ Yea, and elsewhere, so far as my coin would stretch; and, where it would not, I have used my credit.

_Fal._ Yea, and so used it, that it is here apparent that thou art heir apparent.—But, I pr'ythee, sweet wag, shall there be gallows standing in England who thou art king, and resolution thus fobbed, as it is, it the rusty curb of old father antick, the law? Do not thou, when thou art a king, hang a thief.

_P. Hen._ No: thou shalt.

_Fal._ Shall I? O rare! By the Lord, I'll be a vain judge.

_P. Hen._ Thou judgest false already: I mean, the shall have the hanging of the thieves, and so become a rare hangman.

_Fal._ Well, Hal, well; and in some sort itjump with my humour, as well as sitting in the court, I can tell you.

_P. Hen._ For obtaining of suits?

_Fal._ Yea, for obtaining of suits, whereof the baseman hath not a warrant. 'Sblood, I am as mal-choly as a gib-cat, or a lugged bear.

_P. Hen._ Or an old lion; or a lover's lute.

_Fal._ Yea, or the drone of a Lincolnshire bagpipe.*

p. Hen. What sayest thou to a hare, or the melandact of Moor-ditch?
Ld. Thou hast the most unsavoury simile; and art, indeed, the most comparative, rascally, sweet young prer. But, Hal, I pr'ythee, trouble me no more with you. I would to God, thou and I knew where a London of good names were to be bought. An old beast of the council rated me the other day in the street then you, sir: but I marked him not; and yet he looked very wisely; but I regarded him not, and yet looked wisely, and in the street too.
P. Hen. Thou didst well; for wisdom cries out in the street and no man regards it.
Ld. O! thou hast damnablyiteration, and art, indeed, able to corrupt a saint. Thou hast done much with me, Hal:—God forgive thee for it. Before I leave thee, Hal, I knew nothing; and now am I, if men should speak truly, little better than one of the street. I must give over this life, and I will give it up; by the Lord, and I do not, I am a villain: I'll be lamed for never a king's son in Christendom.
P. Hen. Where shall we take a purse to-morrow,
lad?
Ld. Sound! where thou wilt, lad, I'll make one;
in't, not call me villain, and baffle me.
P. Hen. I see a good amendment of life in thee, beginning to purse-taking.

Enter Pains, at a distance.

Ld. Why, Hal, 'tis my vocation, Hal: 'tis no sin for many to labour in this vocation. Pains!—Now shall we know if Godshall have set a match*. O! if men were to be saved by merit, what hole in hell were hot mer for him? This is the most omnipotent villain, ever cried. Stand! to a true man.
P. Hen. Good morrow, Ned.
P. Pains. Good morrow, sweet Hal.—What says monastery's rector? What says Sir John Sack* and-Sugar?
Ld. Groc, low agrees the devil and thee about thy soul, that thou soldest him on Good-Friday last, for a cup of Madeira, and a cold canop's leg?
P. Pains. Sir John stands to his word; the devil hates his bargain, for he was never yet a breaker of promises; he will give the devil his due:
Pains. Then, art thou damned for keeping thy word with the devil.
P. Hen. Else he had been damned for eozening the lad.
Pains. Bat, my lad, my lad, to-morrow morning, by seven o'clock early at Godshall. There are pilgrims past to Canterburp with rich offerings, and traders ting to London with fat purses: I have visors for you you have horses for yourselves. Godshall lies toight at Rochester; I have bespoke supper to-morrow up in Eastcheap: we may do it as secure as sleep.

If you will go, I will stuff your purses full of crowns;
if you will not, tarry at home, and be hanged.
Ld. Hear ye, Yedward: if I tarry at home, and go
I'll hang you for going.
Ld. You will, chaps?
P. Pains. Will thou make one?
Ld. There's neither honesty, manhood, nor good worth in thee, nor thou canst not of the blood mot if thou darest not stand for ten shillings.
P. Hen. Well then, once in my days I'll be a madcap.
Ld. Why, that's well said.
P. Hen. Well, come what will, I'll tarry at home.
Ful. By the Lord, I'll be a traitor then, when thou art king.
P. Hen. I care not.
Pains. Sir John, I pr'ythee, leave the prince and me alone: I will lay him down such reasons for this adventures, that he shall go.
Ful. Well, God give thee the spirit of persuasion, and him the ears of profiting, that what thou speakest may move, and what he hears may be believed, that the true prince may (for recreation sake) prove a false thief; for the poor are uses of the time want cuntenance.
Ful. Farewell: you shall find me in Eastcheap.

P. Hen Farewell, thou latter spring! Farewell,
All-hallow'd minister!

[Exit Falstaff.
Pains. Now, my good sweet honey lord, ride with us to-morrow: I have a jest to execute, that I cannot manage alone. Falstaff. Bardolph, Peto, and Godshall, shall rob those men that we have already way-laid:
yourself and I will not be there; and when they have the booty, if you and I do not rob them, cut this head off from my shoulders.
P. Hen. How shall we part with them in setting forth?
Pains. Why, we will set forth before or after them, and appoint them a place of meeting, wherein it is at our pleasure to fail; and then will they adventure upon the exploit themselves, which they shall have no sooner achieved, but we'll set upon them.
P. Hen. Yes, but 'tis like, that they will know us, by our horses, by our hussis, and by every other appointment, to be ourselves.
Pains. Tut! our horses they shall not see; I'll tie them in the wood: our visors we will change, after we leave them; and, sirrah*, I have cases of buckram for the nonce
e, to inmass our noted outward garments.
P. Hen. Yes, but I doubt they will be too hard for us.
Pains. Well, for two of them, I know them to be as true-bred cowards as ever turned back; and for the third, if he'll fight longer than he sees reason, I'll for-swear arms. The virtue of this jest will be, the incomparable lies that both same fat rogue will tell us, when we meet at supper: how thirty at least he fought with; what wards, what blows, what extremities he edured; and in the reproof of this lies the jest.
P. Hen. Well, I'll go with thee: provide us all things necessary, and meet me to-morrow night in Eastcheap, theo I'll sup. Farewell.
Pains. Farewell, my lord.

[Exit Pains.
P. Hen. I know you all, and will a while uphold
The unyoked' humdrum of your idleness:
Yet herin will I imitate the sun,
Who doth permit the base contagious clouds
To another up his beauty from the world,
That when he please again to be himself,
Being wanted, he may be more wondered at,
By breaking through the foul and ugly mista
Of vapours, that did seem to strangle him.
If all the year were playing holidays,
To sport would be as tedious as to work;
But when they seldom come, they wish'd-for come
And nothing successor.
So, when this loose behaviour I throw off,
And pay the debt I never promised,
By much better than my word I am,
By so much shall I falsify men's hopes;
And, like bright metal on a sullen ground.
My reformation, glittering o'er my fault,
Shall show more goodly, and attract more eyes,
Than that which hath no foil to set it off.
I'll so offend, to make offence a skill,
Redeeming time, when men think least I will. [Exit.

SCENE III.—The Same. Another Apartment in the Palace.

Enter King Henry, Northumberland, Worcester,
Hotsfurs, Sir Walter Blunt, and Others.

K. Hen. My blood hath been too cold and temperate,
Unapt to stir at these indignities,
And you have found me; for, accordingly,
Tread upon my patience: but, be sure,
I will from henceforth rather be myself,
Mighty, and to be feared, than my condition,
Which hath been smooth as oil, soft as young down,
And therefore lost that title of respect,
Which the proud soul ne'er pays but to the proud.

Wor. Our house, my sovereign liege, little deserves
The scourge of greatness to be used on it;
And that same greatness, too, which our own hands
Have holp to make so portly.

Norw. My good lord,—

K. Hen. Lord Worcester, get thee gone; for I do see Danger and disobedience in thine eye.
O, sir! your presence is too bold and peremptory,
And majesty might never yet endure
The moody frontier* of a servant brow.
You have good leave to leave us: when we need
Your use and counsel, we shall send for you.—

[Exit Worcester.

You were about to speak.

[To North.

North. Yea, my good lord.
Those prisoners in your highness' name demanded,
Which Harry Percy, here, at Holmedon took,
Were, as he says, not with such strength denied
As is deliver'd to your majesty:
Either envy, therefore, or misprision
Is guilty of this fault, and not my son.

Hot. My liege, I did deny no prisoners:
But, I remember, when the fight was done,
When I was dry with rage, and extreme toil,
Breathless and faint, leaning upon my sword,
Came there, or so I think, poor, trimly dress'd,
Fresh as a bridgeman; and his chin, new raz'd,
Show'd like a stubble-land at harvest-home:
He was perfum'd like a milliner,
And 'twixt his finger and his thumb he held
A pouncet-box, which ever and anon
He gave his nose, and took't away again;
Who, therewith angry, when it next came there,
Took it in snuff,—and still he smil'd, and talk'd;
And, as the soldiers bore dead bodies by,
He call'd them untaught knaves, unmanly,
To bring a slowly unhallowed corse
Betwixt the wind and his nobility.
With many holiday and lady terms
He question'd me; among the rest, demanded
My prisoners, in your majesty's behalf.
I then, allsmarting, with my wounds being cold,
To be so peater'd with a popinjay,
Out of my grief and my impatience,
Answer'd negligently, I know not what,
He should, he should not; for he made me mad,
To see him shine so brisk, and smell so sweet,
And talk so like a waiting gentilwoman,
Of guns, and drums, and wounds, God save the mark!

And telling me, the sovereign's thing on earth
Was parmacei for an inward bruise;
And that it was great pity, so it was,
This villainous salt-petre should be digg'd
Out of the bowels of the harmless earth,
Which many a good fellow had destroy'd
So cowardly; and, but for these vile guns,
He would himself have been a soldier.
This bald, unjointed chat of his, my lord,
I answer'd indirectly, as I said;
And, I beseech you, let not his report
Come current for an accusation,
Betwixt my love and your high majesty.

Blunt. The circumstance considered, good my lord
What'er Lord Harry Percy then had said,
To such a person, and in such a place,
At such a time, with all the rest re-told,
May reasonably die, and never rise
To do him wrong, or any way impeach
What then he said, so he unsay it now.

K. Hen. Why, yet he doth deny his prisoners,
But with proviso, and exception.
That we, at our own charge, shall ransom straight
His brother-in-law, the foolish Mortimer;
Whose heart and soul, hath wilfully betray'd
The lives of those that he did lead to fight Against that great musician, damn'd Glendower,
Whose daughter, as we fear, that earl of March
Hath lately married. Shall our coffers, then,
Be emptied to redeem a traitor home?
Shall we buy treason, and indent with foes,
When they have lost and forfeited themselves?
No, on the barren mountains let him starve;
For I shall never hold that man my friend,
Whose word shall ask me for one penny cost,
To ransom home revolted Mortimer.

Hot. Revolted Mortimer!
He never did fall off, my sovereign liege,
But by the chance of war: to prove that true,
Needs no more but one tongue for all those wounds
Those mouthed wounds, which valiantly he took,
When on the gentle Severn's sedgy bank,
In single opposition, hand to hand,
He did confound the best part of an hour
In changing hardiment with great Glendower.
Three times they breath'd, and three times did drink,
Upon agreement, of swift Severn's flood;
Who then, affrighted with their bloody looks,
Ran fearfully among the trembling reeds,
And hid his crisp head in the hollow bank
Blood-stained with these valiant combatants.
Never did base and rotten policy
Colour her working with such deadly wounds;
Nor never could the noble Mortimer
Receive so many, and all willingly:
Then, let him not be slander'd with revolt.

K. Hen. Thou dost belie him, Percy, thou dost him:
He never did encounter with Glendower.
I tell thee, he durst as well have met the devil alone,
As Owen Glendower for an enemy.
Art thou not ashamed? But, sirrah, henceforth
Let me not hear you speak of Mortimer.
Send me your prisoners with the speediest means,
Or you shall hear in such a kind from me •
As will displeasure you—My lord Northumberland.

Re-enter Worcester.

Hot. Speak of Mortimer! I hardly can speak of him; and let my soul be merciful, if I do not join with him.

Wor. As he is the part, I'll empty all these veins, and shed my dear blood drop by drop; for the dust, I will lift the down-trod Mortimer, high in the air, as this unhawkish king, this ingrate and canker'd Bolingbroke.

Nort. Brother, to Worcester.] The king hath made your nephew mad.

Wor. Who struck this heat up after I was gone? He was not soothed, have all my prisoners; and when I urged the ransom once again, of my wife's brother, then his cheeks look'd pale, and on my face he turn'd an eye of death, trembling even at the name of Mortimer!

Wor. I cannot blame him. Was he not proclaim'd, by Richard, that dead is, the next of blood? He was: I heard the proclamation, and then it was when the unhappy king [Whose wrongs in us God pardon! I did set forth his Irish expedition; from whence he interdicted did return to be impeach'd, and shortly murdered.

Wor. And for whose death, we in the world's wide mouth live scandaliz'd, and fouly spoken of.

Bat. Soft! I pray you, did king Richard, then, proclaim my brother Edmund Mortimer?

Nort. He did: myself did hear it.

Nay. Nay, now, I cannot blame his cousin king, for which he brought him on the barren mountains starv'd. But shall it be, that you, that set the crown on the head of this mole, and for his sake wear the detected blot, notorious subornation, shall it be, that you a world's curse undergo, bring the agents, or base second means, the cords, the ladder, or the hangman rather?—

Hot. I pardon me; that I descend so low, to show the line, and the predicament, whereas you range under this subtle king. Shall it for shame be spoken in these days, or fill up chronicles in time to come, that men of your nobility and power, dive them both in an unjust behalf, (as both of you, God pardon it! have done) to put down Richard, that sweet lovely rose, and plant this thorn, this canker, Bolingbroke?

Nay. I'll have nothing of this hiring; shall I be taught to speak Nothing but Mortimer, and give it him, to keep his anger still in motion.

Wor. Hear you, cousin, a word.

Hot. Nay, I will; that's flat.

Hot. He said he would not ransom Mortimer; Forbad my tongue to speak of Mortimer; But I will find him when he lies asleep, and in his ear I'll holla—Mortimer! Nay, I'll have a talking, and I'll be taught to speak Nothing but Mortimer, and give it him, to keep his anger still in motion.

Wor. Hear you, cousin, a word.

Hot. All studies here I solemnly defy, Save how to gall and pinch this Bolingbroke; And that same sword-and-buckler of Wales, But that I think his father loves him not, and would be glad he met with some mishance, I would have him poison'd with a pot of ale.

Wor. Farewell, kinsman! I will talk to you, When you are better temper'd to attend.

Nort. Why, what a wagg'd and impatient fool Art thou to break into this woman's mood, trying thine ear to no tongue but thine own! Hot. Why, look you, I am whip'd and scour'd with rods, nettled, and stung with pimaries, when I hear Of this vile politician, Bolingbroke.

In Richard's time,—what do ye call the place?—A plague upon it!—it is in Gloucestershire:—

'Twas where the mad-capt duke his uncle kept,

Enter a Carrier, with a Lantern in his hand.

1 Car. Heigh ho! An’t be not four by the day, I’ll be hanged: Charles’ wain is over the new chimney, and yet our horse not packed. What, ostler! Oat. [Within.] Anon, anon.

1 Car. I pr’ythee, Tom, beat Cut’s saddle, put a few flocks in the point; the poor jade is wrung in the withers out of all core.

Enter another Carrier.

2 Car. Peas and beans are as dand here as a dog, and that is the next way to give poor jades the bote: this house is turned upside down since Robin ostler died.

1 Car. Poor fellow! he never joyed since the price of oats rose: it was the death of him.

2 Car. I think, this be the most villainous house in all London road for fleas: I am stung like a tench.

1 Car. Like a tench? by the mass, there is ne’er a king in Christendom could be better bit than I have been since the first cock.

2 Car. Why, they will allow us ne’er a jordan, and then we leak in the chimney; and your chamber-lie breeds fleas like a loach.

1 Car. What, ostler! come away and be hanged; come away.

2 Car. I have a gammon of bacon, and two razors of ginger, to be delivered as far as Charing-cros.

1 Car. 'Odabody! the turkeys in my pannier are quite starved.—What, ostler!—A plague on thee! hast thou never an eye in thy head? canst not hear? As ‘t were not as good a deed as drink, to break the pate of thee, I am a very villain.—Come, and be hanged—hast no faith in thee?

Enter Galgashill.

Gals. Good morrow, carrier. What’s o’clock?

1 Car. I think it be two o’clock.

Gals. I pr’ythee, lend me thy lantern, to see my gelding in the stable.

1 Car. Nay, soft, I pray ye: I know a trick worth two of that, i’ faith.

Gals. I pr’ythee, lend me thine.

2 Car. Ay, when? canst tell?—Lend me thy lantern, quoth a?—marry, I’ll see thee hanged first.

Gals. Sirrah carrier, what time do you mean to come to London?

2 Car. Time enough to go to bed with a candle; I warrant thee.—Come, neighbour Mugs, we’ll call up the gentlemen: they will along with company, for they have great charge.

[Exeunt Carriers.

Gals. What, ho! chamberlain!

Cham. [Within.] At hand, quoth pick-purse.

Gals. That’s even as fair as—at hand, quoth the chamberlain; for thou variest no more from picking of purses, than giving direction doth from labouring; thou lay’st the plot how.

Enter Chamberlain.

Cham. Good morrow, master Galshill. It holds current, that I told you yesternight: there’s a frankfurt in the wild of Kent, hath brought three hundred marks with him in gold: I heard him tell it to one of his

KING HENRY IV.

COMPANY, last night at supper; a kind of auditor; one vast abundance of charge too, God knows what. They are up already, and call for eggs and butter; they run away presently.

GLOUCESTER. Sirrah, if they meet not with Saint Nicholas' spight, I'll give thee this neck.

CLAUS. No, I'll none of it: I pray thee, keep that for the hangman; for, I know thou worshipst Saint Nicholas as truly as a man of falsehood may.

GLOUCESTER. What talk'st thou to me of the hangman? if thou hang, I'll make a fat pair of gallows; for, if I hang, sir John hangs with me, and thou knowest he's no swilling. Tutt! there are other Trojans that thou dost not of, the which, for sport, are content to the profession some grace, that would, if matters should be looked into, for their own credit sake, make all whole. I am joined with no foot land-rakers, no best staff: sixpenny strikers: none of these mad, musk- nose-purple-hued-malt-ormes; but with nobility and gravity; burgomasters, and great ones—yes, such a man in bold; such as will strike sooner than speak; will speak sooner than drink, and drink sooner than pray: and yet I lie; for they pray continually to their own, the commonwealth; or, rather, not pray to her, but pray on her, for they ride up and down on her, and rack her boots.

CLAUS. What! the commonwealth their boots? will he hold out water in foul way?

GLOUCESTER. She will, she will; justice hath liquored her. We steal as in a castle, cock-sure; we have the receipt of seed. we walk invisible.

CLAUS. Nay, by my faith, I think you are more walking in the night, than to fern-seed, for your walking invisible.

GLOUCESTER. Give me thy hand: thou shalt have a share in my purchase, as I am a true man.

CLAUS. Nay, rather let me have it, as you are a false thief.

GLOUCESTER. Go to; homo is a common name to all men. Be the ostler bring my gelding out of the stable. Farewell, you muddy knave. [Exit.]

SCENE II.—The Road by Gadsbhill.

Enter Prince Henry, and POINS; BARDOLPH and PETO, at some distance.

POINS. Come, shelter, shelter: I have removed Falstaff's horse, and he frets like a gammed velvet. [Exit.

Falstaff. What stand close.

Enter Falstaff.

POINS. Pains! Pains, and be hanged! Pains!

Pershore. He is walked up to the top of the hill: I'll seek him. [Exit.]

Falstaff. Am I am accused to rob in that thief's company: the rascal hath removed my horse, and tied him I know where. If I travel but a foot by the squire's other afoot I shall break my wind. Well, I doubt not to die a fair death for all this, if I escape hang- ing for killing that rogue. I have forsworn his company this two-and-twenty years, and am bewitched with the rogue's company. If the usual have not given me medicines to make me love him I'll be hanged; it could not else be: I have drunk Scenes. Pains!—Hal!—a plague upon you both!—Bardolph!—Peto!—I'll starve, ere I'll rob a foot better. An't were not as good as a dead drunk to turn true man, and leave these rogues, I am the veriest varlet that ever chewed with a tooth. Eight yards of uneven ground is three score and ten miles afoot with me, and the stony-hearted villains know it well enough. A plague upon 't, when thieves cannot be true to one another! [They whistle.] Whew!—A plague upon you all! Give me my horse, you rogues: give me my horse, and be hanged.

Falstaff. Have you any levers to lift me up again, being down? 'Sblood! I'll not bear mine own flesh so far afoot again, for all the coin in thy father's exchequer. What a plague mean ye to colt me thus?

POINS. Thouliest: thou art not colted, thou art uncolted.

Falstaff. I pray thee, good prince Hal, help me to my horse: good king's son.

POINS. Out, you rogue! shall I be your ostler?

Falstaff. Go, hang thyself in thine own heir-apparent garters! If I be ta'en, I'll peach for this. An I have not ballads made on you all, and sung to filthy tunes, let a cup of sack be my poison: when a jest is so far ward, and afoot too,—I hate it.

Enter GADSDHILL.

GADSDHILL. Stand.

Falstaff. So do I, against my will.

POINS. O! 'tis our setter: I know his voice.

Enter BARDOLPH.

BARDOLPH. What news?

GADSDHILL. Case ye, case ye; on with your visors: there's money of the king's coming down the hill; 'tis going to the king's exchequer.

Falstaff. You lie, you rogue: 'tis going to the king's tavern.

GADSDHILL. There's enough to make us all.

Falstaff. To be hanged.

POINS. Sirs, you four shall front them in the narrow lane; Ned Pains and I will walk lower: if they escape from your encounter, then they light on us.

FETO. But how many be there of them?

GADSDHILL. Some eight or ten.

Falstaff. Zounds! will they not rob us?

POINS. What, a coward, sir John Paunch?

Falstaff. Indeed, I am not John of Gaunt, your grandfather; but yet no coward, Hal.

POINS. Well, we leave that to the proof.

POINS. Sirrah Jack, thy horse stands behind the hedge: when thou needest him, there thou shalt find him. Farewell, and stand fast.

Falstaff. Now cannot I strike him, if I should be hanged.

Pershore. Sirs, how shall we come to the stage?

POINS. [Aside to Poins.] Where are our disguises?

FETO. Here, hard by: stand close.

[Exit PERSHORE and POINS.

Falstaff. Now, my masters, happy man be his joke, say I: every man to his business.

Enter Truav. Truv. Come, neighbour: the boy shall lead our horses down the hill; we'll walk afoot awhile, and ease our legs.

Truav. True. Stand.

Truav. Josu bless us!

Falstaff. Strike; down with them; cut the villains throats. Ah, whorson caterpillars! bacon-fed knaves! they hate us youth: down with them; fleece them.

Truav. O! we are undone, both we and ours, for ever.
Fal. Hang ye, gobellied knaves. Are ye undone?
No, ye fat chuffs; I would, your store were here. On, bacon, on! What! ye knaves, young men must live.
You are grand-jurors are ye? We'll jure ye, I' faith.
[Exit Fal. &c, driving the Travellers out.
Re-enter Poins. Harry and Poins.

P. Hen. The thieves have bound the true men.
Now could thou and I rob the thieves, and go merrily to London, it would be argument for a week, laughter for a month, and a good jest for ever.

Poins. Stand close; I hear them coming.

Re-enter Thieves.

Fal. Come, my masters; let us share, and then to horse before day. And the prince and Poins be not twoarrant cowardes, there's no equity stirring; there's no more valour in that Poins, than in a wild duck.

P. Hen. Your money. [Rushing out upon them.

Poins. Villains. [As they are sharing, the Prince and Poins set upon them. They all run away, and Falstaff, after a blow or two, runs away too, leaving the booty behind them.]

P. Hen. Got with much ease. Now merrily to horse:
The thieves are scatter'd, and possessed with fear
So strongly, that they dare not meet each other;
Each is the better for his solitary fortune.
Away, good Ned. Falstaff sweats to death,
And lards the lean earth as he walks along:
Wer't not for laughing, I should pity him.

Poins. How the rogue roared!

[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Warkworth. A Room in the Castle.

Enter Horsetra, reading a Letter.

"—But for mine own part, my lord, I could be well contented to be there, in respect of the love you bear you. I could be contented—why is he not then? In respect of the love he bears our house:—he shows in this, he loves his own barn better than he loves our house. Let me see some more. "The purpose you undertake, is dangerous."—Why, that's certain: it is dangerous to take a cold, to sleep, to drink; but I tell you, my lord fool, out of this nettle, danger, we'll pluck this flower, safety. "The purpose you undertake, is dangerous; the friends you have named, uncertain; the time itself unsound, and your whole plot too light for that counterpoise of so great an opposition."—Say you so, say you so? I say unto you again, you are a shallow, cowardly hind, and you lie. What a lack-brain is this! By the Lord, our plot is a good plot as ever was laid: our friends true and constant: a good plot, good friends, and full of expectation: an excellent plot, very good friends. What a frosty-spirited rogue is this? Why, my lord of York commands the plot, and the general course of the action. "Zounds! and I were now by this rascal, I could brain him with his lady's fan. Is there not my father, my uncle, and myself? lord Edmund Mortimer, my lord of York, and Owen Glendower? Is there not, besides, the Douglas? Have I not all their letters, to meet me in arms by the ninth of the next month, and are they not, some of them, set forward already? What a pagan rascal is this! an infidel! Ha! you shall see now, in very sincerity of fear and cold heart, will he to the king, and lay open all our proceedings. Oh! I could divine myself, and for many such a dish of skimmed milk with so honourable an action. Hang him! let him tell the king: we are prepared. I will set forward to-night."

How now, Kate? I must leave you within these two hours.

Lady. O, my good lord! why are you thus alone?
For what offence have I this fortnight been
A banish'd woman from my Harry's bed?
Tell me, sweet lord, what is 't that takes from thee
Thy stomach, pleasure, and thy golden sleep?
Why dost thou bend thine eyes upon the earth,
And start so often when thou sit'st alone?
Why hast thou lost the fresh blood in thy cheeks,
And given my treasures, and my rights of thee,
To thick-syd'ming, and currd'm melancholy?
In thy faint slumber I by thee have watch'd,
And heard thee murmur tales of iron wars;
Speak terms of manage to thy bounding stead;
Cry, 'Courage!—to the field!' And thou hast talk
Of sallies, and restires; of trenches, tents,
Of palisades, frontiers, parapets;
Of basilisks of cannon, culverin;
Of prisoners' ransom, and of soldiers' chains,
And all th' occurrences of a heady fight.
Thy spirit within thee hath been so at war,
And thus hath so bestir'd thee in thy sleep,
That beards of sweat have stood upon thy brow,
Like bubbles on a late disturbed stream;
And in thy face strange motions have appear'd,
Such as we see when men restrain their breath
On some great sudden heat. O! what portents a
Some heavy business hath my lord in hand, [these
And I must know it, else he loves me not.

Hot. What, ho! is Williams with the packet gone?

Serv. He is, my lord, an hour ago.

Hot. Hath Butler brought those horses from the sheriffs?

Serv. One horse, my lord, he brought even now.

Hot. What horse? a roan, a crop-car, is it not?

Serv. It is, my lord.

Hot. That roan shall be my horse.

Well, I will back him straight: O, experience!

Bid Butler lead him forth into the park. [Exit Servant.

Lady. But hear you, my lord.

Hot. What say'st thou, my lady?

Lady. What is it that carries you away?

Hot. Why my horse,

My love, my horse.

Lady. Out, you mad-headed ape! A weasell hath not such a deal of spleen, as you are tose'd with. In faith, I'll know your business, Harry, that I will. I fear, my brother Mortimer doth stir About his title; and hath sent for you, To line his enterprise: but if you go—

Hot. So far afoot, I shall be weary, love.

Lady. Come, come, you parquito, answer me Directly unto this question that I ask. In faith, I'll break thy little finger, Harry, An if thou wilt not tell me all things true.

Hot. Away!

Away, you trifler!—Love?—I love thee not, I care not for thee, Kate. This is no world, To play with mammas, and to tilt with lips: We must have blood now, and crack'd'eheads, And pass them current too.—Gods me, my horse!— What say'st thou, Kate? what wouldst thou have me?
Lady. Do you not love me? do you not, indeed?

Do; do not then: for since you love me not,

'S*t will not love myself. Do you not love me?

Tell me, if you speak in jest, or no?

Sit down, come to the peace, Kate; will thou see me ride?

When I am o' horseback, I will swear

I love thee infinitely. But hark you, Kate;

I must not have henceforth question me

W., nor go, nor reason whereabout.

Wit her I must, I must; and, to conclude,

The evening must I leave you, gentle Kate.

I bow you wise; but yet no farther wise

This Harry Percy's wife: constant you are;

But get a woman: and for soreness,

To lady closer; for I well believe

This will not utter what thou dost not know;

And so far will I trust thee, gentle Kate.

Lady. How! so far?

Hark. Not an inch farther. But hark you, Kate?

Wit her I go, thither shall you go too;

Today will I set forth, to-morrow you.

Will this content you, Kate?

Lady. It must, of force. [Exit.

SCENE IV. —Eastcheap. A Room in the Boar's Head Tavern.

Enter Prince Henry and Poins.

P. Hen. Ned, pr'ythee, come out of that fat room, and lead me thy hand to laugh a little.

Poins. Where hast been, Hal?

P. Hen. With three or four loggerheads, amongst five or six score hogheads. I have sounded the my base string of humility. Sirrah, I am sworn brother to a leash of drawers, and can call them all by every Christian name, as—Tom, Dick, and Francis. They take it already upon their salvation, that though I be but prince of Wales, yet I am the king of courtiers, and tell me flatly I am no proud Jack, like Falstaff: but a Christian, a lad of mettle, a good boy, (by the lord, so they call me,) and when I am king of England I shall command all the good lads in Eastcheap. They call drinking deep, dying scarlet; and when they breathe in sour-watering" they cry hem! and had you play it off. —To conclude, I am so good a procured in one quarter of an hour, that I can drink with my liver in his own language during my life. I tell thee, Ned, thou hast lost much honour that thou wert not with me in this action. But, sweet Ned,—to swear which name of Ned, I give thee this pennyworth of sugar, clapped even now into my hand by an unkinster; one that never spake other English in his life, than—"Eight shillings and sixpence," and—"You're welcome," with this thrift addition.—"Anon, anon, sir! Score a pint of bastard in the Half-moon," etc. But, Ned, to drive away the time till Falstaff come. Pr'ythee, do thou stand in some by-room, while I employ my puny drawer to what end he gave me charge: and do thou never leave calling—Francis! his tale to me may be nothing but—anon. Step near, and I will show thee a precedent.

Francis! Francis!

P. Hen. Thou talk'st too perfect.

Francis. [Exit Francis.

P. Hen. Thou talk'st too perfect.

Poins. [Exit Poins.

Francis.

P. Hen. How long hast thou to serve, Francis?

Fran. Forsooth, five years, and as much as to—

Poins. [Within.] Francis!

P. Hen. Anon, anon, sir.

P. Hen. Five years! by'r lady, a long lease for the clinking of pewter. But, Francis, darest thou be so valiant, as to play the coward with thy indutenct, and to show it a fair pair of heels, and run from it?

Franc. O lord, sir! I'll be sworn upon all the books in England, I could find it in my heart.

Poins. [Within.] Francis!

P. Hen. Anon, anon, sir.

P. Hen. How old art thou, Francis? [be—

Poins. Let me see,—about Michaelmas next I shall Poins. [Within.] Francis!

Franc. Anon, sir.—Pray you, stay a little, my lord. P. Hen. Nay, but hark you, Francis. For the sugar thou gavest me,—'t was a pennyworth, was 't not?

Franc. O lord, sir! I would it had been two. P. Hen. I will give thee for it a thousand pound: ask me when thou wilt, and thou shalt have it.

Poins. [Within.] Francis!

P. Hen. Anon, anon.

P. Hen. Anon, Francis? No, Francis; but to-morrow, Francis; or, Francis, on Thursday; or, indeed, Francis, when thou wilt. But, Francis—

P. Hen. My lord?

P. Hen. Wilt thou rob this leather-jerkin, crystal-button, knot-pated, agate-ring, puke-stoeking, caddias-garter, smooth-tongue, Spanish-pouch,—

P. Hen. Anon, sir, who do you mean?

P. Hen. Why then, your brown bastard? is your only drink: for, look you, Francis, your white canvas douillet will sully. In Barbary, sir, it cannot come to so much.

Franc. What, sir?

Poins. [Within.] Francis!

P. Hen. Away, you rogue! Dost not thou hear them call?

Poins. [Here they both call him; the Drawer stands amazed, not knowing which way to go. Enter Vinter.

Vint. What! stand'st thou still, and hear'st such a calling? Look to the guests within. [Exit Fran.

My lord, old sir John. with half a dozen more, are at the door: shall I let them in?

P. Hen. Let them alone awhile, and then open the door. [Exit Vinter.] Poins!

Poins. [Re-enter Poins.

Poins. Anon, anon, sir.

P. Hen. Sirrah, Falstaff and the rest of the thieves are at the door. Shall we be merry?

Poins. As merry as crickets, my lad. But hark ye, what cunning match have you made with this jest of the drawer? come, what's the issue?

P. Hen. I am now of all humours, that have show'd themselves humours, since the old days of Goodman Adam to the pupil age of this present twelve o'clock at midnight. [Re-enter Francis, with Wine.] What's o'clock, Francis?

Franc. Anon, anon, sir.

P. Hen. That even this fellow should have fewer words than a parrot, and yet the son of a woman! His industry is—up-stairs, and down-stairs; his eloquence, the parcel of a reckoning. I am not yet of Percy's mind, the Hotspur of the North; he that kills me some six or seven dozen of Scots at a breakfast, washes his hands, and says to his wife,—"Fie upon this quiet life? I want work." "O my sweet Harry," says she, "How many hast thou killed to-day?" "Give my roan horse a drench," says he, and answers, "Some fourteen," an hour after; "a triffe, a triffe, I pr'ythee," call in Falstaff; I'll play Perey, and that damned brawn shall play dame Mortimer his wife. "Rivo!" says the drunkard. Call in rib, call in tailo.

Enter Falstaff, Gobnill, Bardolph, and Peto. Pozna. Welcome, Jack. Where hast thou been? Fal. A plague of all cowards, I say, and a vengeance too! Man! and amen!—Give me a cup of sack, boy. —ERE I lead this life long, I'll sew neither-stocks, and mend them, and foot them too. A plague of all cowards!—Give me a cup of sack, rogue. —Is there no virtue extant? [He drinks.

P. HEN. Didst thou never see Titan kiss a dish of butter? pitiful-hearted Titan, that melted at the sweet tale of the sun! if thou didst, then behold that compound.

Fal. You rogue, here's a Wife in this sack too: there is nothing but ruggery to be found in villainous man: yet a coward is worse than a cup of sack with lime in it; a villainous coward.—Go thy ways, old Jack: die when thou wilt, if manhood, good manhood, be not forgot upon the face of the earth, then am I a stout herring. There live not three good men unhanged in England, and one of them is fat, and grows old: God help the while! a bad world, I say. I would I were a weaver; I could sing psalms or any thing. A plague of all cowards, I say still.

P. HEN. How now, wool-sack! what murther you? Fal. A king's son! If I do not beat thee out of thy kingdom with a dagger of lath, and drive all thy subjects afore thee like a flock of wild geese, I'll never wear hair on my face more. You prince of Wales!

P. HEN. Why, you whoreson round man, what's the matter?

Fal. Are you not a coward? answer me to that? and Pozna there?

Pozna. Zounds! ye fat paunch, and ye call me coward, I'll stab thee.

Fal. I call thee coward! I' ll see thee damned ere I call thee coward: but I would give a thousand pound, I could run as fast as thou canst. You are straight enough in the shoulders; you care not who sees your back. Call you that backing of your friends? A plague upon such backing! give me them that will face me.—Give me a cup of sack: I am a rogue, if I drunk to-day.

P. HEN. O villain! thy lips are scarce wiped since thou drunk't last.

Fal. All's one for that. [He drinks.] A plague of all cowards, still say I.

P. HEN. What's the matter?

Fal. What's the matter? there be four of us here have ta'en a thousand pound this day morning. P. HEN. Where is it, Jack? where is it?

Fal. Where is it? taken from us it is: a hundred upon poor four of us.

P. HEN. What, a hundred, man?

Fal. I am a rogue, if I were not at half-sword with a dozen of them two hours together. I have 'scape by miracle. I am eight times thrust through the doublet: four through the hose; my buckler cut through and through; my sword hacked like a hand-saw: ecce sig-
num. [Drawing it.] I never dealt better since I was man: all would not do. A plague of all cowards!—Let them speak: if they speak more or less than truly they are villains, and the sons of darkness. P. HEN. Speak, sirs: how was it?

BARD. We four set upon some dozen,— Fal. Sixteen, at least, my lord.

BARD. And bound them.

PETO. No, no, they were not bound.

Fal. You rogue, they were bound, every man of them; I promised a Jew else, an Ebrew Jew.

BARD. As we were sharing, some six or seven free men set upon us,— Fal. And unbound the rest, and then come in the other.

P. HEN. What! fought ye with them all?

Fal. All? I know not what ye call all; but if fought not with fifty of them, I am a bush of radish if there were not two or three and fifty upon poor Jack, then am I no two-legged creature.

P. HEN. Pray God, you have not murdered some of them.

Fal. Nay, that's past praying for: I have pepper two of them: two, I am sure, I have paid; two rogue in buckram suits. I tell thee what, Hal,—if I thee a lie, spit in my face, call me horse. Thou knowest my old ward:—here I lay, and thus I bore my pox. Four rogues in buckram let drive at me,— P. HEN. What, four? thou saidst but two even so Fal. Four, Hal; I told thee four.

POZNA. Ay, ay, he said four.

Fal. These four came all a-front, and mainly thr at me. I made me no more ado, but took all th seven points in my target, thus.

P. HEN. Seven? why, there were but four or now.

Fal. In buckram.

POZNA. Ay, four in buckram suits.

Fal. Seven, by those hills, or I am a villain else.

P. HEN. Pr'ythee, let him alone: we shall have anon. [To FON.

Fal. Dost thou hear me, Hal?

P. HEN. Ay, and mark thee too, Jack.

Fal. Do so, for it is worth the listening to. To nine in buckram, that I told thee of,— P. HEN. So, two more already.

Fal. Their points being broken,— POZNA. Down fell their horse.

Fal. Began to give me ground; but I followed close, came in, foot and hand, and with a thou seven of the eleven I paid.

P. HEN. O monstrous! eleven buckram men go out of two.

Fal. But, as the devil would have it, three miche ten knaves, in Kendal-green, came at my back, and drive at me;—for it was so dark, Hal, that thou cou not see thy hand.

P. HEN. These lies are like the father that be them; gross as a mountain; open, palpable. W thou clay-brained guts, thou knotty-pated fool, whoreson, obscene, grossy tallow-cheek.

Fal. What! art thou mad? art thou mad? is the truth, the truth?

P. HEN. Why, how couldst thou know these men to Kendal green, when it was so dark thou couldst

We thy hand? come, tell us your reason: what sayest thou to this?

Pol. Come, your reason, Jack, your reason.

Fal. What, upon compulsion? No; were I at the scraped' or all the racks in the world, I would not tell you on compulsion. Give you a reason on compulsion? if reasons were as plenty as blackberries, I would give you so much a reason on compulsion, I.

P. Hen. I'll be no longer guilty of this sin: this sandcracker, this black pressure, this horse-breaker, this huge bill of jest;—

Fal. Away, you starveling, you elf-skint, you dried set-tongue, bull's-pizzle, you stock-fish,--O, for breath to utter what is like thee!--you tailor's yard, you death, you bow-case, you vile standing-tuck;—

P. Hen. Well, breathe awhile, and then to it again; and when thou hast tired thyself in base comparisons,
then we speak but this.

Pol. Mark, Jack.

P. Hen. We two saw you four set on four; you bed them, and were masters of their wealth.—Mark how plain a tale shall you put down. Then did we two set on you four, and, with a word, out-fuse'd you from your prize, and have it: yea, and can show it you here in the house.—And, Falstaff, you carried your guts away as nimble, with as quick dexterity, and roared for exert, and still ran and roared, as ever he built off. What a slave art thou, to hack thy sword as thou hast done, and then say, it was in fight! What trick, what device, what starting-hole, canst thou now find out to hide thee from this open and apparent shame?

Pol. Come, let's hear, Jack: what trick hast thou
now?

Fal. By the Lord, I knew ye, as well as he that made ye. Why, hear ye, my masters: was it for me to hit the heir apparent? Should I turn upon the true place? Why, thou knowest, I am as valiant as Hercules: but beware instinct: the lion will not touch the true prince. Instinct is a great matter; I was a cowed or instinct. I shall think the better of myself and thee during my life; I, for a valiant lion, and thou for a true prince. But, by the Lord, lads, I am glad you have the money.—Hostess, clap to the doors: watch watch, pray to-morrow.—Gallants, lads, boys, hearts of gold, all the titles of good fellowship come to you!
What! shall we be merry? shall we have a play exterminate?

P. Hen. Content;—and the argument shall be, thy running away.

Fal. Ah! no more of that, Hal, an thou lovest me.

Enter Hostess.

Host. O Jesu! My lord the prince,—

P. Hen. How now, my lady the hostess! what say'st you to me?

Host. Marry, my lord, there is a nobleman of the host at door would speak with you: he says, he comes from your father.

P. Hen. What, shall we give him as much as will make him a royal man and send him back again to my mother.

Fal. What manner of man is he?

Host. An old man.

Fal. What doth gravity out of his bed at midnight?

Still, retire him his answer?

P. Hen. Pr'ythee, do, Jack.

Fal. Faith, and I'll send him packing.

[Exit.

P. Hen. Now, sir; by'r lady, you fought fair;—so I say, Peto;—so did you, Bardolph: you are lions too, you ran away upon instinct, you will not touch the true prince, no;—be!

Bard. Faith, I ran when I saw others run.

P. Hen. Faith, tell me now in earnest: how came Falstaff's sword so hacked?

Peto. Why, he hacked it with his dagger, and said, he would swear truth out of England, but he would make you believe it was done in fight; and persuaded us to do the like.

Bard. Yes, and to tickle our noses with spear grass, to make them bleed: and then to besuckle our garrments with it, and to swear it was the blood of true men. I did that I did not this seven year before; I blushed to hear his monstrous devices.

P. Hen. O villain! thouostle a cup of sack eighteen years ago, and went taken with the manner, and ever since thou hast blushed extempero. Thou hast fired and sword on thy side, and yet thou ran'st away: what impeachment hast thou for it?

Bard. My lord, do you see these meteors? do you behold these exhalations?

P. Hen. I do.

Bard. What think you they portend?

P. Hen. Hot livers and cold pursues.

Bard. Choler, my lord, if rightly taken.

P. Hen. No, if rightly taken, halter.

Re-enter Falstaff.

Here comes lean Jack; here comes bare-bone. How now, my sweet creature of bombast! How long is 't ago, Jack, since thou sawest thy own knee?

Fal. My own knee? when I was about thy years, Hal, I was not an eagle's talon in the waist; I could have crept into any alderman's thumb-ring: a plague of sighing and grief! it blows a man up like a bladder.

There's villainous news abroad: here was sir John Bracy from your father: you must to the court in the morning. That same mad fellow of the north, Percy; and he of Wales, that gave Amaison the bastinado, and made Lucifer cuckold, and swore the devil his true liegeman upon the cross of a Welsh book;—what,
a plague, call you him?

P. Hen. O! Glendower.

Fal. Owen, Owen; the same; and his son-in-law,
Mortimer; and old Northumberland; and that sprightly
Scot of Scots, Douglas, that runs o' horseback up a hill perpendicular.

P. Hen. He that rides at high speed, and with his pistol kills a sparrow flying.

Fal. You have hit it.

P. Hen. So did he never the sparrow.

Fal. Well, that rascal hath good mettle in him;
he will not run.

P. Hen. Why, what a rascal art thou, then, to praise him so for running?

Fal. O' horseback, ye cuckoo! but, afoot, he will not budge a foot.

P. Hen. Yes, Jack, upon instinct.

Fal. I grant ye, upon instinct. Well, he is there too, and one Mordake, and a thousand blue-caps more.
Worcester is stolen away to-night; thy father's beard is turned white with the news: you may buy land now as cheap as standing mackarel.

P. Hen. Why then, it is like, if there come a hot June, and this civil buffeting hold, we shall buy maidenheds as they buy hob-nails, by the hundred.

Fal. By the mass, lad, thou sayest true; it is like,
we shall have good trading that way. —But, tell me,

Hal, art thou not horribly afraid? thou being heir apparent, couldst the world pick thee out three such enemies again, as that fiend Douglas, that spirit Percy, and that devil Glendower? Art thou not horribly afraid? doth not thy bellow thrill at it?

P. Hen. Not a whit, I faith: I lack some of thy instinct.

Ful. Well, thou wilt be horribly chid to-morrow, when thou comest to thy father: if thou love me, practise an answer.

P. Hen. Well, I stand for my father, and examine me upon the particulars of my life.

Ful. Shall I? content. —This chair shall be my state, this dagger my sceptre, and this cushion my crown.

P. Hen. Thy state is taken for a joint-stool, thy golden sceptre for a leaden dagger, and thy precious rich crown for a pitiful bald crown!

Ful. Well, an the fire of grace be not quite out of thee, now shall thou be moved.—Give me a cup of sack, to make mine eyes look red, that it may be their sight may lose the lustre, for I shall speak in passion, and I will do it in king Cambyses' vein.

P. Hen. Well, here is my leg. 8

Ful. And here is my speech.—Stand aside, nobility.

Host. O, Jean! this is excellent sport, I faith.

Ful. Weep not, sweet queen, for trickling tears are vain.

Host. O, the father! how he holds his countenance.

Ful. For God's sake, lords, convey my trifling queen, for tears do stop the flood-gates of her eyes.

Host. O, Jean! he doth it as like one of these harlotry players as ever I see.

Ful. Peace, good pint-pot! peace, good tickle-brain! —Harry, I do not only marvel where thou spendest thy time, but also how thou art accompanied: for though the camomile, the more it is trodden on, the faster it grows, so youth, the more it is wasted, the sooner it wastes. That thou art my son, I have partly thy mother's word, partly my own opinion; but chiefly, a villainous trick of thine eye, and a foolish hanging of thy nether lip, that doth warrant me. If, then, thou be son to me, here lies the point,—where, being son to me, art thou so pointed at? Shall the blessed son of heaven prove a mischief, and eat blackberries? a question not to be asked. Shall the sun of England prove a thief, and take purses? a question to be asked. There is a thing, Harry, which thou hast often heard of, and it is known to many in our land by the name of pitch: this pitch, as ancient writers do report, doth defile; so doth the company thou keepest; for, Harry, now I do not speak to thee in drink, but in tears; not in pleasure, but in passion; not in words only, but in woes also. —And yet there is a virtuous man, whom I have often noted in thy company, but I know not his name.

P. Hen. What manner of man, an it like your majesty?

Ful. A goodly 5 portly man 5 faith, and a corrupt: of a cheerful look, a pleasing eye, and a most noble carriage; and, as I think, his age some fifty, or, by his lady, inclining to three-score, and now I remember, his name is Falstaff: if that man should be lawfully given, he deceiveth me; for, Harry, I see virtue in his looks. If then the tree may be known by the fruit, as the fruit by the tree then peremptorily I speak it, there is virtue in that Falstaff: him keep with, the rest banish. And tell me, now, thou naughty varlet, tell me, where hast thou been this month?

P. Hen. Doest thou speak like a king? Do thou stand for me, and I'll play my father.

Ful. Depose me? if thou dost it half so gravely, so majestically, both in word and manner, hang me up by the heels for a rabbit-sucker, 5 or a poulterer's hare.

P. Hen. Well, here I am set.

Ful. And here I stand.—Judge, my masters.

P. Hen. Now, Harry! whence come you?

Ful. My house is in Eastcheap.

P. Hen. The complaints I hear of thee are grievances.

Ful. 'Sblood, my lord, they are false.—Nay, I'll tickle thee for a young prince, I faith.

P. Hen. Swearest thou, ungracious boy? henceforth ne'er look on me. Thou art violently carried away from grace: there is a devil haunts thee, in the likeness of a fat old man: a tun of man is thy companion. Why dost thou converse with that hulk 5 of humour, that bolting-hutch of beastliness, that swoln parcel of droppings, that huge bombard 5 of sack, that stuffed cloak-bag of guts, that roasted Manningtree-ox 5 , with the pudding in his belly, that reverend vice, that grey iniquity, that father ruffian, that vanity in years? Wherein is he good, but to taste sack and drink it? wherein neat and cleanly, but to carve a capon and eat it? wherein cunning, but in craft? wherein crafty, but in villainy? wherein villainous, but in all things? wherein worthy, but in nothing?

Ful. I would your grace would take me with you; 5 whom means your grace?

P. Hen. That villainous abominable misleader of youth, Falstaff, that old white-bearded Satan.

Ful. My lord, the man I know.

P. Hen. I know thou dost.

Ful. But to say, I know more harm in him than in myself, were to say more than I know. That he is old, the more the pity, his white hairs do witness it: but that he is, saving your reverence, a whomeremaster, that I utterly deny. If sack and sugar be a fault, God help the wicked! If to be old and merry be a sin, then many an old host that I know, is damned: if to be fat be to be hated, then Pharaoh's lean kine are to be loved. No, my good lord: banish Peto, banish Bardolph, banish Poins; but for sweet Jack Falstaff, kind Jack Falstaff, true Jack Falstaff, valiant Jack Falstaff, and, therefore more valiant, being, as he is, old Jack Falstaff, banish not him thy Harry's company, banish not him thy Harry's company: banish plump Jack, and banish all the world.

P. Hen. I do, I will.

[Exeunt Hostess, Francis, and Bardolph.

Re-enter BARDOLPH, running.

Bard. O! my lord, my lord! the sheriff, with a most monstrous watch, is at the door.

Ful. Out, you rogue! play out the play: I have much to say in the behalf of that Falstaff.

Re-enter Hostess.

Host. O Jean! my lord, my lord! —

P. Hen. Heigh, heigh! the devil rides upon a fiddle-stick. What's the matter?

Host. The sheriff and all the watch are at the door they are come to search the house. Shall I let them in?

Ful. Doest thou hear, Hal? never call a true piece of gold a counterfeit: thou art essentially mad, without seeming so.

P. Hen. And thou a natural coward, without instinct, Ed. I deny your major. If you will deny the sheriff, so; if not, let him enter: if I become not a scoundrel as well as another man, a plague on my bringing up. I hope I shall as soon be strangled with a halter as another.

P. Hen. Go, hide thee behind the arras!—the rest will follow. Now, my masters, for a true face, and a good conscience.

Ed. Both which I have had; but their date is out, and therefore I'll hide me.

[Exeunt all but the Prince and Peto.

P. Hen. Call in the sheriff.

Enter Sheriff and Carrier.

Nor. master sheriff, what's your will with me?

Sheriff. First, pardon me, my lord. A hue and cry must follow certain men unto this house.

P. Hen. What men?

Sheriff. One of them is well known, my gracious lord; a base fat man.

Car. As fat as butter.

P. Hen. The man, I do assure you, is not here, for myself at this time have employ'd him. And, sheriff, I will engage my word to thee, that I will, by to-morrow dinner-time, Sheriff. shall answer thee, or any man, for anything he shall be charg'd withal: adieu, let me entreat you, leave the house. Sher. I will, my lord. There are two gentlemen have in this robbery lost three hundred marks.

ACT III.

Scene I.—Bangor. A Room in the Archdeacon's House.

Enter Hotspur, Worcester, Mortimer, and Glendower.

Mort. These promises are fair, the parties sure, and our induction full of prosperous hope.

Hot. Lord Mortimer, and cousin Glendower, will you sit down?—And, uncle Worcester.—A plague upon it! I have forgot the map.

Glendower. No, here it is.

Ed. Come, Percy; sit, good cousin Hotspur; for by that name as oft as Lancaster doth speak of you, her cheek looks pale, and with a rising sigh she waketh you in heaven.

Hot. And you in hell, as often as he hears Owen Glendower spoke of.

Glendower. I cannot blame him: at my nativity, the front of heaven was full of fiery shapes, or burning crescents; and at my birth, the frame and huge foundation of the earth seemed like a coward.

Hot. Why, so it would have done at the same season, if your mother's cat had but kitten'd, though yourself had never been born.

Glendower. I say, the earth did shake when I was born.

Hot. And I say the earth was not of my mind, it supposed as fearing you it shook.

Glendower. The heavens were all on fire; the earth did tremble.

Hot. O! then the earth shook to see the heavens on fire.

And not in fear of your nativity.

Diseased nature oftentimes breaks forth In strange eruptions: oft the teeming earth Is with a kind of cholic pinch'd and vex'd By the imprisoning of unruly wind.

Within her womb: which, for enlargement striving Shakes the old beldame earth, and topples down Steeples, and moss-grown towers. At your birth, Our grandam earth, having this distemperature, In passion shook.

Glendower. Cousin, of many men I do not bear these crossings. Give me leave To tell you once again—that at my birth, The front of heaven was full of fiery shapes; The goats ran from the mountains, and the herds Were strangely clamorous in the frighted fields. These signs have mark'd me extraordinary, And all the courses of my life do show, I am not in the roll of common men. Where is he living—clip'd in with the sea That chides the banks of England, Scotland, Wales— Which calls me pupil, or hath read to me? And bring him out, that is but woman's son, Can trace me in the tedious ways of art, And hold me pace in deep experiments.

Hot. I think, there is no man speaks better Welsh.

I'll to dinner.

Mort. Peace, cousin Percy! you will make him mad.

Glendower. I can call spirits from the vasty deep.
Hot. Why, so can I, or so can any man; But will they come, when you do call for them?
Glen. Why, I can teach you, cousin, to command the devil.
Hot. And I can teach thee, coz, to shame the devil, By telling truth. tell truth, and shame the devil. —If thou have power to raise him, bring him hither, And I'll be sworn, I have power to shame him hence. O! while you live, tell truth, and shame the devil.
Mort. Come, come;
No more of this unprofitable chat.
Glen. Three times hath Henry Bolingbroke made head Against my power: threes from the banks of Wye, And sandy-bottom'd Severn, have I sent him Bootless home, and weather-beaten back.
Hot. Home without boots, and in foul weather too! How 'scap'd he auge, in the devil's name?—
Glen. Come, here's the map: shall we divide our right, According to our three-fold order ta'en?
Mort. The archdeacon hath divided it into three limits, very equally. England, from Trent and Severn hitherto, By south and east is to my part assigned: All westward, Wales, beyond the Severn shore, And all the fertile land within that bound, To Owen Glendower: —and, dear coz, to you The remnant northward, lying off from Trent. And our indentures tripartite are drawn, Which being sealed interchangeably, (A business that this night may execute) To-morrow, cousin Percy, you, and I, And my good lord of Worcester, will set forth, To meet your father, and the Scottish power, As is appointed us, at Shrewsbury. My father Glendower is not ready yet, Nor shall we need his help these fourteen days.— Within that space you may have drawn together

[To Glendower.
My tenants, friends, and neighbouring gentlemen.
Glen. A shorter time shall send me to you, lords; And in my conduct shall your ladies come: From whom you now must steal, and take no leave; For there shall be a world of water shed, Upon the parting of your wives and you.
Hot. Methinks, my moist eye, north from Burton here, In quantity equals not one of yours. See, how this river comes me cranking in, And cuts me from the best of all my land. A huge half-moon, a monstrous cantle out. I'll have the current in this place dam'd up, And here the snug and silver Trent shall run, In a new channel, fair and evenly: It shall not wind with such a deep indent, To rob me of so rich a bottom here.
Glen. Not wind? it shall; it must: you see, it doth.
Mort. Yes, but mark, how he bears his course, and runs you up With like advantage on the other side; Gilding the opposed continent, as much As on the other side it takes from you. In a yea, but a little charge will trench him here, And on this north side win this cape of land; And then he runs all straight and evenly.
Hot. I'll have it so: a little charge will do it.
Glen. I will not have it alter'd.
Hot. Will not you?
Glen. No, nor you shall not.
Hot. Who shall say me so?
Glen. Why, that will I.
Hot. Let me not understand you then.
Glen. I can speak English, lord, as well as you.
For I was train'd up in the English court; Where, being but young, I framed to the harp Many an English ditty, lovely well, And gave the tongue a helpful ornament; A virtue that was never seen in you. Hot. Marry, and I 'm glad of it with all my heart I had rather be a kitten, and cry mew, Than one of these same metre ballad-mongers: I had rather hear a brazen can'tick turn'd, Or a dry wheel grate on the axle-tree; And that would set my teeth nothing on edge, Nothing so much as mincing poetry. 'Tis like the fore'd gaunt of a shuffling nag.
Glen. Come, you shall have Trent turn'd.
Hot. I do not care. I shall have threeso much land to any well-deserving friend;
But, in the way of bargain, mark ye me, I'll cavil on the ninth part of a hair. Are the indentures drawn? shall we be gone?
Glen. The moon shines fair, you may away by night. I'll haste the writer, and withal, I'll break With your young wives of your departure hence. I am afraid my daughter will run mad, So much she doteth on her Mortimer.
[Exit Mort. Fol. cousin Percy! how you cross my faith! Hot. I cannot choose: sometime he angers me With telling me of the moldwarp and the ant, Of the dreamer Merlin and his prophecies; And of a dragon, and a finless fish, A clip-wing'd griffin, and a moulten raven, A cocking lion, and a rampling cat, And such a deal of skumble-skamble stuff As puts me from my faith. I tell you what,— He held me, last night, at the least nine hours In reckoning up the several devil's names. That were his lackeys: I cried, "humph," and well "go to," But mark'd him not a word. O! he's as tedious As a tired horse, a railing wife; Worse than a smoky house: I had rather live With cheese and garlic in a windmill, far, Than feed on cates, and have him talk to me, In any summer-house in Christendom.
Mort. In faith, he is a worthy gentleman; Exceedingly well read, and profited In strange conceits; valiant as a lion, And wondrous affable, and as bountiful As mines of India. Shall I tell you, cousin? He holds your temper in a high respect, And curbs himself even of his natural scope, When you do cross his humour; faith, he does. I warrant you, that man is not alive, Might so have tempted him as you have done, Without the taste of danger and proof: But do not use it oft, lest ye entreat y. u. Wor. In faith, my wilful lord, you are to blame, And since your coming hither have done enough

KING HENRY IV.

To put him quite beside his patience,
You must needs learn, lord, to amend this fault,
Thus sometimes it show greatness, courage, blood,
And that the secret grace it render's you,
Yet sometimes it doth present harsh rage,
Direct of manners, want of government,
Pride, haughtiness, opinion, and disdain:
The least of which, haunting a nobleman,

(Yea the beauty of all parts besides,
Begetting them of commendation.

Hot. Well, I am school'd: good manners be your speed.

She's come our wives, and let us take our leave.

Re-enter GLENDOWER, with the Ladies.

Mort. This is the deadly spite that anger's me;
My wife can speak no English, I no Welsh.

Gld. My daughter weeps: she will not part with She'll be a soldier too; she'll to the wars. [you;

Mort. Good father, tell her, that she, and my aunt
Percy,
Shall follow in your conduct speedily.

[GLENDOWER speaks to her in Welsh, and she answers him in the same.

Gld. She's desperate here;
A peremptory self-will'd harlotry, and one
So persuasive can do good upon.

[S She speaks to Mortimer in Welsh.

Mort. I understand thy looks: that pretty Welsh
Cousin pour'st down from these welling heavens,
I am too perfect in; and, but for shame,
In such a parlour would I answer thee.

[She speaks again.

Understand thy kisses, and thon mine,
And that's a feeling disposition:
But I will never be a tyrant, love,
I have learn'd thy language; for thy tongue
Mates Welsh as sweet as ditties highly pen'd,
Say by a fair queen in a summer's bow'er,
With ravishing division, to her lute.

Gl. Nay, if thou melt, then will she o'en run mad.

[She speaks again.

Mort. O! I am ignorance itself in this.

Gl. She bids you on the wanton rushes lay you
And rest your gentle head upon her lap,
And, while she sing the song that pleaseth you,
And as your eyes-lids crown the god of sleep,
Charming your blood with pleasing heaviness;
Many such difference 'twixt wake and sleep,
As the difference betwixt day and night,
The hour before the heavenly-harness'd team
Brings his golden progress in the east.

Mort. With all my heart I'll sit, and hear her sing:
But that time will our book, I think, be drawn.

Gld. Do so; and

And these musicians that shall play to you,
Be in the air a thousand leagues from hence;
And straight they shall be here. Sit, and attend.

Hot. Come, Kate, thou art perfect in lying down.
Come, quick, quick; that I may lay my head in thy lap.

Lady P. Go, ye giddy goose. [The music plays.

Hot. Now I perceive, the devil understands Welsh;
And 'tis no marvel, he is so humorous.
But lady, he's a good musician.

Lady P. Then, should you be nothing but musical,
If you are altogether governed by humours.
I'll, ye thief, and hear the lady sing.

In Welsh.

Hot. I had rather hear, lady, my brach, howl in Irish.

Lady P. Would'st thou have thy head broken?

Hot. No.

Lady P. Then be still.

Hot. Neither; 'tis a woman's fault.

Lady P. Now, God help thee!

Hot. To the Welsh lady's bed.

Lady P. What's that?

Hot. Peace, she sings. [A Welsh Song by Lady M.

Hot. Come, Kate, I'll have your song too.

Lady P. Not mine, in good sooth.

Hot. Nor yours, in good sooth! 'Heart!

You swear like to a comfit-maker's wife.

Not yours, in good sooth; and, as true as I live;

As God shall mend me; and, as sure as day:

And giv'st such sarenete surety for thy oaths,
As if thou never walk'dst farther than Finsbury.

Swear me, Kate, like a lady as thou art,
A good-mouth-filling oath; and leave in sooth,
And such protest of pepper-gingerbread,
To velvet-guards,' and Sunday-citizens.

Come, sing.

Lady P. I will not sing.

Hot. 'Tis the next way to turn tailor, or be red-bread teacher.
An the indentures be drawn, I'll away within these two hours; and so come in when ye will.

[Exit Gld.

Mort. Come on, lord Mortimer; you are as slow
As hot lord Percy is on fire to go.
By this our book is drawn: we'll seal, and part,
To horse immediately.

For we shall presently have need of you.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—London. A Room in the Palace.

Enter KING HENRY, Prince of Wales, and Lords.
K. Hen. Lords, give us leave. The Prince of Wales and I,
Must have some private conference: but be near at hand.
For we shall presently have need of you.

[Exeunt Lords.

I know not whether God will have it so,
For some displeasing service I have done,
That, in his secret doom, out of my blood
He'll breed revengement and a scourge for me
But thou doest, in thy passages of life,
Make me believe, that thou art only mark'd
For the hot vengance and the rod of heaven,
To punish my mistreadings. Tell me else,
Could such inordinate, and low desires,
Such poor, such bare, such lewd, such mean attempts,
Such barren pleasures, rude society,
As thou art match'd withal, and grafted to,
Accompany the greatness of thy blood,
And hold their level with thy princely heart?

P. Hen. So please your majesty, I would, I could Quit all offences with as clear excuse
As well as, I am doubtless, I can purge
Myself of many I am charg'd withal:
Yet such extenuation let me beg,
As, in regard of many tales devil's,
Which oft the ear of greatness needs must hear
By smiling pick thanks and base newsmongers,
I may, for some things true, wherein my youth
Hath faulty wander'd, and irregular,
Find pardon on my true submission.

then in f.
K. Hen. God pardon thee!—yet let me wonder,
At thy affections, which do hold a wing
Quite from the flight of all thy ancestors.
Thy place in council thou hast rudely lost,
Which by thy younger brother is supplied;
And art almost an alien to the hearts
Of all the court, and princes of my blood:
The hope and expectation of thy time
Is ruin'd; and the soul of every man
Prophetically doth fore-think thy fall.
Had I so lavish of my presence been,
So common-hackney'd in the eyes of men,
So stale and cheap to vulgar company,
Opinion, that did help me to the crown,
Had still kept loyal to possession,
And left me in repeateless banishment,
A fellow of no mark, nor likelihood.
By being seldom seen, I could not stir,
But like a comet I was wonder'd at;
That men would tell their children, "This be unto others;
Where? which is Bolingbroke?"
And then I stole all courtesy from heaven,
And dress'd myself in such humility,
That I did pluck allegiance from men's hearts,
Loud shouts and salutations from their mouths,
Even in the presence of the crowned king.
Thus did I keep my person fresh, and new;
My presence, like a robe pontifical,
Never seen but wonder'd at: and so my state,
Seldom, but sumptuous, showed like a feast,
And won by rareness such solemnity.
The skimping king, he ambled up and down
With shallow jesters, and rash bevin' wits,
Soon kindled, and soon burn'd; discarded state;
Mingled his royalty with carping fools;
Had his great name profaned with their soorns;
And gave his countenance against his name,
To laugh at gibing boys, and stand the push
Of every boardless vain comparative:
REW a companion to the common streets,
Encoff'd himself to popularity:
That, being daily swallowed by men's eyes,
They surfeited with honey; and began
To lose the taste of sweetness, whereof a little More than a little is by much too much.
So, when he had occasion to be seen,
He was but as the cuckoo in June,
Heard, not regarded; seen, but with such eyes,
As, sick and blunted with community,
Afford no extraordinary gaze,
Such as is best on sun-like majesty,
When it shines seldom in admiring eyes:
But rather drowns'd, and hung their eyelids down,
Slept in his face, and render'd such aspect
As cloudy men use to their adversaries,
Being with his presence glutted, gorg'd, and full.
And in that very line, Harry, stand'st thou;
For thou hast lost thy prince's privilege,
With vile participation: not an eye
But is a-aweary of thy common sight,
Save mine, which hath desir'd to see thee more;
Which now doth that I would not have it do,
Make blind itself with foolish tenderness.

P. Hen. I shall hereafter, my thrice-gracious lord,
Be more myself.

K. Hen. For all the world,
As thou art to this hour, was Richard then,
When I from France set foot at Ravenspur;
Scene III.

KING HENRY IV.

_Enter Bardolph._

Bardolph. How now, dame Partlet the hen? have you inquired yet who picked my pocket?

Hostess. Why, sir John, what do you think, sir John? Do you think I keep thieves in my house? I have searched, I have inquired, so has my husband, man by man, boy by boy, servant by servant: the title of a hair was never lost in my house before.

Bard. You lie, hostess: Bardolph was shaved, and lost many a hair; and I'll be sworn, my pocket was picked. Go to, you are a woman; go.

Host Who? I? No. I defy thee: God's light! I was never called so in mine own house before._

Host. Go to; I know you well enough._

Host. No, sir John; you do not know me, sir John: I know you, sir John: you owe me money, sir John, and now you pick a quarrel to beguile me of it. I bought you a dozen of shirts to your back._

Hostesses. I have given them away to bakers' wives, and they have made bolters of them._

Host. Now, as I am a true woman, holland of eight shillings an ell. You owe money here besides, sir John, for your diet, and by-drinkings, and money lent you, four and twenty pound.

Host. He has his part of it: let him pay._

Host. He? alas! he is poor: he hath nothing._

Host. How? poor? look upon his face: what call you rich? let them coin his nose, let them coin his cheeks. I'll not pay a denier. What, will you make a youreker of me? shall I not take mine ease in mine inn, but I shall have my pocket picked? I have lost a seal-ring of my grandfather's, worth forty mark._

Hostess. O Jesu! I have heard the prince tell him, know not how oft, that ring was copper._

Host. How! the prince is a Jack, a sneak, a 'scrool! and he were here, I would cudgel him like a dog, if he would say so._

Enter Prince HENRY and Poins.

Bardstaff. Prince, playing on his truncheon, like a fife._

Fal. How now, lad! is the wind in that door, faith? must we all march?_

Bard. Yea, two and two, Newgates-fashion._

Host. My lord, I pray you, hear me._

Host. What sayest thou, mistress Quickly? How does thy husband? I love him well: he is an honest man._

Host. Good my lord, hear me._

Host. Pr'ythee let her alone, and list to me._

Host. What sayest thou, Jack?_

Host. The other night I fell asleep, here, behind the arras, and had my pocket picked: this house is turned bawdy-house; they pick pockets._

Host. What didst thou lose, Jack?_

Host. Wilt thou believe me, Hal? three or four bonds of forty pound a-piece, and a seal ring of my grandfather's._

Host. A trifle: some eight-penny matter._

Host. So I told him, my lord: and I said I heard your grace say so: and, my lord, he speaks most vilely of you, like a foul-mouthed man as he is, and said, he would cudgel you._

Host. What! he did not?_

Host. There's neither faith, truth, nor womanhood in me else._

---

Fall. There’s no more faith in thee than in a stowed prune; nor no more truth in thee, than in a drawn fox: and for womanhood, said Marian’ may be the deputy’s wife of the ward to thee. Go, you thing, go.

Host. Say, what thing? what thing?

Fall. What thing? why, a thing to thank God on.

Host. I am nothing to thank God on, I would thou shouldst know it: I am an honest man’s wife; and, setting thy knighthood aside, thou art a knave to call me so.

Fall. Setting thy womanhood aside, thou art a beast to say otherwise.

Host. Say, what beast, thou knave thou?

Fall. What beast? why an otter.

P. Hen. An otter, sir John: why an otter?

Fall. Why? she’s neither fish nor flesh; a man knows not where to have her.

Host. Thou art an unjust man in saying so: thou or any man knows where to have me, thou knave thou! P. Hen. Thou sayest true, hostess; and he slanders thee most grossely.

Host. So he doth you, my lord; and said this other day, you ought him a thousand pound.

P. Hen. Sit still! do I owe you a thousand pound?

Fall. A thousand pound, Hal! a million: thy love a worth a million; thou owest me thy love.

Host. Nay, my lord, he called you Jack, and said he would cudgel you.

Fall. Did I, Bardolph?

Bard. Indeed, sir John, you said so.

Fall. Yea; if he said my ring was copper.

P. Hen. I say, ’tis copper: darest thou be as good as thy word now?

Fall. Why, Hal, thou knowest, as thou art but man, I dare; but as thou art prince, I fear thee, as I fear the roaring of the lion’s whelp.

P. Hen. And why not, as the lion.

Fall. The king himself is to be feared as the lion. Dostr thou think I’ll fear thee as I fear thy father? nay, as I do, I pray God, my girdle break!

P. Hen. O! if it should, how would thy guts fall about thy knees! But, sirrah, there’s no room for faith, truth, nor honesty, in this bosom of thine; it is filled up with guts and midriff. Charge an honest woman with picking thy pocket! Why, thou whoreson, impudent, embossed rascal, if there were any thing in thy pocket but tavern reckonings, memorandums of bawdy-houses, and one poor penny-worth of sugar-candy to make thee long-winded; if thy pocket were enriched with any other injuries but these, I am a villain; and yet you will stand to it; you will not pocket up wrong. Art thou not ashamed?

Fall. Doest thou hear, Hal? thou knowest in the state of innocence, Adam fell; and what should poor Jack Falstaff do, in the days of villainy? Thou seest I have more flesh than another man, and therefore more frailty. You confess, then, you picked my pocket?

P. Hen. It appears so by the story.

Fall. Hostess, I forgive thee. Go, make ready breakfast; love thy husband, look to thy servants, cherish thy guests: thou shalt find me tractable to any honest reason: thou seest, I am pacified. —Still?— Nay, pr’ythee be gone. [Exit Hostess.] Now, Hal, to the news at court: for the robbery, lad,—how is that answered?

P. Hen. O! my sweet beef, I must still be good angel to thee.—The money is paid back again.

Fall. O! I do not like that passing back; ’tis a double labour.

P. Hen. I am good friends with my father, and may do any thing.

Fall. Rob me the exchequer the first thing thou dost, and I will unwash hands too.

Bard. Do, my lord.

P. Hen. I have procured thee, Jack, a charge of foot.

Fall. I would, it had been of horse. Where shall I find one that can steal well? O! for a fine thief, of the age of two-and-twenty, or thereabouts! I am heinously unprovided. Well, God be thanked for these rebels; they offend none but the virtuous: I laud them, I praise them.

P. Hen. Bardolph!

Bard. My lord.

P. Hen. Go bear this letter to lord John of Lancaster, To my brother John: this to my lord of Westmoreland——Go, Poins, to horse, to horse! for thou, and I, Have thirty miles to ride yet ere dinner time.— Jack, meet me to-morrow in the Temple-hall

At two o’clock in the afternoon:
The shall thou know thy charge; and there receive Money, and order for their furniture.
The land is burning, Percy stands on high, And either they, or we, must lower late.

[Exeunt Prince, Poins, and Bardolph.

Fall. Rare words! brave world!—Hostess, my breakfast: come.—

O! I could wish this tavern were my drum. [Exit.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—The Rebel Camp near Shrewsbury.

Enter Hotspur, Worcester, and Douglas.

Hot. Well said, my noble Scot: if speaking truth, In this fine age were not thought flattery, Such attribution should the Douglas have, As not a soldier of this season’s stamp Should go so general current through the world.

By God. I cannot flatter: I defy The tongues of soothers; but a bravest place In my heart’s love hath no man than yourself. Nay, task me to my word; approve me, lord.

Doug. Thou art the king of honour: No man so potent breathes upon the ground,
He was much fear'd by his physicians.

War. I would the state of time had first been whole, En more sickness had been visited. His health was never better worth than now.

Hot. Sick now! droop now! this sickness doth infect The very life-blood of our enterprise: 'Tis catching hither, even to our camp. He writes me here,—that inward sickness— And that his friends by deputation could not So soon be drawn; nor did he think it meet, To lay so dangerous and dear a trust On any soul remove'd, but on his own. Yet doth he give us bold advertisements, That with our small conjunction we should on, To see how fortune is dispos'd to us; For, as he writes, there is no quailing now, Because the king is certainly possess'd Of all our purposes. What say you to it? Wor. Your father's sickness is a maim to us. Hot. A perilous gash, a very limb lopp'd off:— And yet, in faith, 'tis not; his present want Seems more than we shall find it. Were it good, To set the exact wealth of all our states All at one cast? to set so rich a main On the nice hazard of one doubtful hour? It were not good; for therein should we read The very bottom and the soul of hope, The very list, the very utmost bound Of all our fortunes.

Doug. 'Faith, and so we should, Where now remains a sweet reversion: We must may boldly spend upon the hope Of what is to come in:

A comfort of retirement lives in this.

Hot. A rendezvous, a home to fly unto, If that the devil and mischance look big Upon the trainladen of our affairs.

Wor. But yet, I would your father had been here. The quality and hair* of our attempt Breaks no division: it will be thought By those that know not why he is away, That wisdom, loyalty, and more dislike Of our proceedings, kept the earl from hence. And think, how such an apprehension May turn the tide of fearless faction, And breed a kind of question in our cause: For, well you know, we of the offering side Must keep aloof from strict arbitrement, And stop all sight-holes, every loop from whence

The eye of reason may pry in upon us. This absence of your father's draws a curtain, That shows the ignorant a kind of fear Before not dreamt of.

Hot. You strain too far. I rather, of his absence make this use:— It lends a lustre, and more great opinion, A larger dare to our great enterprise, Than if the earl were here: for men must think, If we, without his help, can make a head To press against the kingdom, with his help, We should o'erturn it topsy-turvy down.— Yet all goes well; yet all our joints are whole.

Doug. As heart can think there: is there not such a word Spoke in in Scotland as this term* of fear.

Enter Sir Richard Vernon.

Hot. No harm: what more?

Ver. The king himself in person is set forth, Or hitherwards intendeth speedily, With strong and mighty preparation.

Hot. He shall be welcome too. Where is his son The nimble-footed mad-cap prince of Wales, And his comrades, that daff'd the world aside, And bid it pass?

Ver. All furnish'd, all in arms, All plumed like stranglers, that wing the wind, Hated like eagles having lately bath'd; Glittering in golden coats, like images; As full of spirit as the month of May, And gorgeous as the sun at midsummer, Wanton as youthful goats, wild as young bulls.

I saw young Harry, with his beaver on, His cuisses on his thighs, gallantly arm'd, Rise from the ground like feather'd Mercury, And vaulted with such ease into his seat, As if an angel dropp'd down from the clouds, To turn and wind a fiery Pegaseus, And with the world with noble horsemanship.

Hot. No more, no more: worse than the sun in March, This praise doth nourish Greene. Let them come; They come like sacrifices in their trim, And to the fire-ey'd maid of smoky war, All hot, and bleeding, will we offer them: The mailed Mars shall on his altar sit, Up to the ears in blood. I am on fire, To hear this rich reprobal is so nigh, And yet not ours. —Come, let me taste* my horse, Who is to bear me, like a thunderbolt, Against the bosom of the prince of Wales: Harry to Harry shall, hot horse to horse, Meet, and ne'er part, till one drop down a corse.— O, that Glendower were come!

Ver. There is more news: I learn'd in Worcester, as I rode along, He cannot draw his power this fourteen days.

Doug. That is the worst tidings that I hear of yet.

Wor. Ay, by my faith, that bears a frosty sound.

Hot. What may the king's whole battle reach unto? Ver. To thirty thousand.

Hot. Forty let it be: My father and Glendower being both away, The powers of us may serve so great a day. Come, let us take a muster speedily; Doomsday is near; die all, die merrily.

Doug. Talk not of dying: I am out of fear Of death, or death's hand, for this one half year. [Exeunt

SCENE II.—A public Road, near Coventry.

Enter Falstaff and Bardolph.

Fal. Bardolph, get thee before to Coventry; fill me a bottle of sack. Our soldiers shall march through, we'll to Sutton-Colfield to-night.

Ver. Bard. Will you give me money, captain?

Fal. Lay out, lay out.

Bard. This bottle makes an angel.

Fal. And if it do, take it for thy labour; and if it make twenty, take them all, I'll answer the coinage. Bid my lieutenant Petro meet me at the town's end.

Bard. I will, captain: farewell.

[Exeunt

Fal. If I be not ashamed of my soldiers, I am a soused gurnet*. I have misused the king's press damnable. I have got, in exchange of a hundred and fifty soldiers, three hundred and odd pounds. I pressed me none but good householders, yeomen's sons: inquired me out contracted bachelors, such as had been asked twice on the bans; such a commodity of warm slaves, as bad as his head be the devil as a drum; such as fear the report of a caliver, worse than a struck fowl, or a hurt wild-duck. I pressed me none but such toasts and butter, 1 with hearts in their bellies no bigger than pins' heads, and they have bought out their services; and now my whole charge consists of ancients, corporals, lieutenants, gentlemen of companies, slaves as ragged as Lazarus in the painted cloth, 2 where the gluton's dogs licked his sores; and such as, indeed, were not so soldiers, but discarded unjust serving men, younger sons to younger brothers, revolted tapisters, and ostlers trade-fallen; the cankers of a calm world, and a long peace; ten times more dishonourable ragged than an old pieced 3 ancient: and such have I, to fill up the rooms of them that have bought out their services, that you would think that I had a hundred and fifty tattered prodigals, lately come from swine-keeping, from eating druff and husks. A mad fellow met me on the way, and told me I had unloaded all the giblets, and pressed the dead bodies. No eye hath seen such scarecrows. I'll not march through Coventry with them, that's flat:—say, and the villains march wide betwixt the legs, as if they had gyves on; for, indeed, I had the most of them out of prison. There's but a shirt and a half in all my company: and the half shirt is two napkins, tucked together, and thrown over the shoulders like a herald's coat without sleeves; and the shirt, to say the truth, stolen from my host at St. Albans, or the red-nosed inn-keeper of Daven'ty. But that's all one: they'll find linen enough on every hedge.

Enter Prince Henry and Westmoreland.

P. Hen. How now, blown Jack! how now, quit! Fal. What, Hal! how now, mad wag! what a devil dost thou in Warwickshire?—My good lord of Westmoreland, I cry you mercy: I thought your honour had already been at Shrewsbury.

West. 'Faith, sir John, 'tis more than time that I were there and you too; but my powers are there already. The king, I can tell you, looks for us all: we must way all night.

Fal. Tut, never fear me: I am as vigilant as a cat to steal cream.

P. Hen. I think, to steal cream indeed: for thy theft hath already made thee butter. But tell me, Jack; whose fellows are these that come after?

Fal. Mine, Hal, mine.

P. Hen. I did never see such pitiful rascals.

Fal. Tut, tut! good enough to loss 4 : food for powder, rags for powder; they'll fill a pit, as well as better: dust, man, mortal men, mortal men.

West. Ay, but, sir John, methinks they are exceeding poor and bare; too beggary.

Fal. 'Faith, for their poverty, I know not where they had that: and for their bareness, I am sure, they never learned that of me.

P. Hen. No, I'll be sworn; unless you call three fingers on the ribs, bare. But, sirrah, make haste: Percy is already in the field.

Fal. What, is the king encamped?

West. He is, sir John: I fear we shall stay too long.

Fal. Well,

To the latter end of a fray, and the beginning of a feast, Fits a dull fighter, and a keen guest.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—The Rebel Camp near Shrewsbury.

Hot. We'll fight with him to-night.

Wor. It may not be, Doug. You give him, then, advantage.

Ver. Not a whit.

Hot. Why say you so? looks he not for supply?

Ver. So do we.

Hot. His is certain, ours is doubtful.

Wor. Good cousin, be advis'd: 'tis not to-night.

Ver. Do not, my lord.

Dou. You do not counsel well.

Hot. You speak it out of fear, and a cold heart.

Ver. Do me no slander, Douglas: by my life, and I dare well maintain it with my life, if well-respected honour bid me on, I hold as little counsel with weak fear, as you, my lord, or any Scot that lives? Let it be seen to-morrow in the battle, which of us fears.

Dou. Yes, or to-night.

Ver. Content.

Hot. To-night, say I.

Ver. I wonder much, being men of such great leading as you are, that you foresee not what impediments drag back our expedition: certain horse of my cousin Vernon's are not yet come up: your uncle Worcester's horse came but to-day, and now their pride and mettle is aside, their courage with hard labour tame and dull, that not a horse is half the half himself.

Hot. So are the horses of the enemy, in general, journey-bated, and brought low; the better part of ours are full of rest.

Wor. The number of the king exceedeth ours.

For God's sake, cousin, stay till all come in.

[The Trumpet sounds a parley.]

Enter Sir Walter Blunt.

Blunt. I come with gracious offers from the king, if you will discharge me hearing and respect.

Hot. Welcome, sir Walter Blunt; and would to God you were of our determination!

Some of us love you well; and even those some envy your great deservings, and good name, because you are not of our quality, but stand against us like an enemy.

Blunt. And God defend but still I should stand so long as out of limit and true rule, you stand against anointed majesty.

But, to my charge.—The king hath sent to know the nature of your griefs; and whereupon you conjure from the breast of civil peace such bold hostility, teaching his duteous land Audacious cruelty? If that the king have any way your good deserts forgot, which he confesseth to be manifold. He bide you name your griefs, and with all speed, you shall have your desires with interest, and pardon absolute for yourself, and those, hereon misled by your suggestion.

Hot. The king is kind; and, well we know, the king knows at what time to promise, when to pay. My father, with my uncle, and myself, did give him that same royalty he wears;

1 According to Fynes Morison's itinerary (1617), Londoners were "in reproach" called Cockneys, and names of buttered toast.
2 Use of "revering walls." 3 fear: in f.e. 4 Old copies: not; mod. ed.: but. 5 Be the quarters; fools: to-night. 6 Set on a pike. 7 Of this day lives: in f.e. 8 and: in f.e.
And when he was not six-and-twenty strong,
Seek in the world's regard, wretched and low,
A poor unkinded outlaw sneaking home,
My father gave me welcome to the shore:
And, when he heard him swear, and vow to God,
He came but to be duke of Lancaster,
To sue his slander, and beg his peace,
With tears of innocence, and terms of zeal,
My father, in kind heart and pity mov'd,
Sware him assistance, and perform'd it too.
Now, when the lords and barons of the realm,
Perceiv'd Northumberland did lean to him,
The more and less came in with cap and knee;
Met him in bow'rs, cities, villages,
Attended him on bridges, stood in lanes,
Laid gifts before him, proffer'd him their oaths,
Gave him their heirs, as pages follow'd him,
Even at the heels, in golden multitudes.
He presentely, as greatness knows itself,
Sees me a little higher than his vassal,
Made to my father, while his blood was poor,
Upon the naked shore at Ravenspurgh;
And now, forsooth, takes on him to reform
Some certain edicts, and some strait decrees,
That lie too heavy on the commonwealth;
Cries out upon abuses, seems to weep
Over his country's wrongs; and, by this face,
This seeming brow of justice, did he win
The hearts of all that he did angle for:
Proceeded farther; cut me off the heads
Of all the favourites, that the absent king
In deposition left behind him here,
When he was personal in the Irish war.
Blunt. Tut! I came not to hear this.
Hot. Then, to the point.

In short time after he depon'd the king;
Soon after that, depriv'd him of his life;
And, in the neck of that, task'd the whole state;
To make that worse, suffer'd his kinsman March
Who is, if every owner were due plac'd,
Indeed his king) to be engag'd in Wales,
There without ransom to lie forfeited;
Disgrac'd me in my happy victories;
Sought to entrap me by intelligence;
Rated my uncle from the council-board;
In rage dissam'd my father from the court;
Broke oath on oath, committed wrong on wrong;
And, in conclusion, drove us to seek out
This head of safety; and, withal, to pry
Into his title, the which we find
Too indirect for long-continuance.
Blunt. Shall I return this answer to the king?
Hot. Not so, sir Walter: we'll withdraw awhile.

Go to the king; and let there be impawn'd
Some surety for a safe return again,
And in the morning early shall mine uncle
Bring him fair purposes; and so farewell.
Blunt. I would you would accept of grace and love.
Hot. And, may be, we shall.
Blunt. 'Pray God you do! [Exeunt.

Enter the Archbishop of York, and Sir Michael.

Arch. Hie, good sir Michael; bear this sealed brief
With winged haste to the lord marshal:
This to my cousin Soroop; and all the rest
To whom they are directed. If you knew
How much they do import, you would make haste.
Sir M. My good lord,
I guess their tenour.

Arch. Like enough, you do.

To-morrow, good sir Michael, is a day,
Wherein the fortune of ten thousand men
Must bide the touch; for, sir, at Shrewsbury,
As I am truly given to understand,
The king, with mighty and quick-rais'd power,
Meets with lord Harry: and, I fear, sir Michael,
What with the sickness of Northumberland,
Whose power was in the first proportion,
And what with Owen Glendower's absence thence,
Who with them was a rated sinew too,
And comes not in, o'er-run'd by prophecies,
I fear, the power of Percy is too weak
To wage an instant trial with the king.

Sir M. Why, my good lord, you need not fear;
There is Douglas, and lord Mortimer.

Arch. No, Mortimer is not there. [Percy
Sir M. But there is Mordake, Vernon, lord Harry
And there's my lord of Worcester: and a head
Of gallant warriors, noble gentlemen.

Arch. And so there is; but yet the king hath drawn
The special head of all the land together:
The prince of Wales, lord John of Lancaster,
The noble Westmorland, and warlike Blunt,
And many more corrollers, and dear men
Of estimation and command in arms.

Sir M. Doubt not, my lord, they shall be well oppress'd.
Arch. I hope no less, yet needful 'tis to fear;
And, to prevent the worst, sir Michael, speed;
For, if lord Percy thrive not, ere the king
Dismiss his power, he means to visit us,
For he hath heard of our confederacy,
And 'tis but wisdom to make strong against him:
Therefore, make haste. I must go write again
To other friends; and so farewell, sir Michael. [Exeunt.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—The King's Camp near Shrewsbury.

Enter King Henry, Prince Henry, Prince John of Lancaster, Sir Walter Blunt, and Sir John Falfur.

K. Hen. How bloodily the sun begins to peer
Above yond' busky hill: the day looks pale
At his distemperature.

P. Hen. The southern wind

Doth play the trumpet to his purposes;
And by his hollow whistling in the leaves
Foretolds a tempest, and a blustering day.

K. Hen. Then, with the losers let it sympathise,
For nothing can seem foul to those that win.—

[Trumpet sounds.

Enter Worcester and Vernon.

How now, my lord of Worcester! 'tis not well,
That you and I should meet upon such terms

* The delivery of his property to him. See Richard II., p. 334, n. 1.
  * Th' as, the place.
  * A busky wood.
  * Delivered a page or hostage.
  * So
  * As quarts, the border was rated fairly.
  * Busky, wooded.
As now we meet. You have deceiv'd our trust,
And made us doss our easy robes of peace,
To crush our old limbs in ungallant steel:
This is not well, my lord; this is not well.
What say you to it? will you again unkit
This churlish knot of all-abhorred war,
And move in that obedient orb again,
Where you did give a fair and natural light,
And be no more an exhal'd meteor,
A prodigy of fear, and a portent
Of headless monarchy to the unborn times?
Wor. Hear me, my liege.
For mine own part, I could be well content
To entertain the lag-end of my life
With quiet hours; for, I do protest,
I have not sought the day of this dislike. [then?]
K. Hen. You have not sought it! say,"how comes it
Fal. Rebellion lay in his way, and he found it.
P. Hen. Peace, chewet, peace!
Wor. For, it pleas'd your majesty, to turn your looks
Of favour, from myself, and all my house;
And yet I must remember you, my lord.
We were the first and dearest of your friends.
For you my staff of office did I break
In Richard's time; and posted day and night
To meet you on the way, and kiss your hand,
When yet you were in place, and in account,
Nothing so strong and fortunate as I.
It was myself, my brother, and his son,
That brought you home, and boldly did outface
The dangers of the time. You swore to us,
And you did swear that oath at Doncaster,
That you did nothing purpose 'gainst the state,
Nor claim no farther than your new-fall'n right,
The seat of Gaunt, dukedom of Lancaster.
To this we swore our aid; but, in short space,
It rain'd down fortune showering on your head,
And such a flood of greatness fell on you,
What with our help, what with the absent king,
What with the injuries of a wanton time,
The seeming sufferances that you had borne,
And the contrarious winds that held the king
So long in his unlucky Irish wars,
That all in England did repute him dead:
And, from this swarm of fair advantages,
You took occasion to be quickly woo'd.
To gripe the general sway into your hand;
Forgot your oath to us at Doncaster,
And, being fed by us, you us'd us so
As that ungentle gull, the cuckoo's bird,
Useth the sparrow, did oppress our nest,
Grew by our feeding to so great a bulk,
That even our love durst not come near your sight,
For fear of swallowing: but with nimble wing
We were enforce'd, for safety sake, to fly
Out of your sight, and raise this present head:
Whereby we stand opposed by such means
As you yourself have forg'd against yourself,
By unkind usages, dangerous countenances,
And violation of all faith and troth
Sworn to us in your younger enterprise.
K. Hen. These things, indeed, you have articulate Proc'aim'd at market-crosses, read in churches,
To face the garment of rebellion
With some fine colour, that may please the eye
Of fickle changelings, and poor discontented,
Which gape, and rub the elbow, at the news
Of hastily ruin'd innovation;
And never yet did insurrection want
Such water-colours to impart his cause;
Nor moody beggars, starving for a time
Ofpellimel havoc and confusion.
P. Hen. In both our armies, there is many a soul
Shall pay full dearly for this encounter,
If once they join in trial. Tell your nephew,
The prince of Wales doth join with all the world
In praise of Henry Percy: by my hopes,
This present enterprise set off his head,
I do not think, a braver gentleman,
More brave, more valiant, or more valiant-young,
More daring, or more bold, is now alive
To grace this latter age with noble deeds.
For my part, I may speak it to my shame,
I have a truant been to chivalry,
And so, I hear, he doth account me too;
Yet this before my father'smajesty:
I am content, that he shall take the odds
Of his great name and estimation,
And will, to save the blood on either side,
Try fortune with him in a single fight.

[Exeunt.]
K. Hen. And, prince of Wales, so dare we venture
Albeit considerations infinite
Do make against it.—No, good Worcester, no,
We love our people well; even those we love,
That are misled upon your cousin's part:
And, will they take the offer of our grace,
Both he, and they, and you, yea, every man
Shall be my friend again, and I 'll be his.
So tell your cousin, and sing me word
What he will do; but if he will not yield,
Rebuke and dread correction wait on us,
And they shall do their office. So, be gone.
We will not now be troubled with reply:
We offer fair, take it advisedly:

[Exeunt Worcesrer AND VERNON.

P. Hen. It will not be accepted, on my life.
The Douglas and the Hotspur both together
Are confident against the world in arms.
K. Hen. Hence, therefore, every leader to his charge,
For, on their answer, will we set on them;
And God befriend us as our case is just!

[Exeunt King, BLUNT, AND Prince John.

Fal. Hal, if thou see me down in the battle,
Bestride me, so: 'tis a point of friendship.
P. Hen. Nothing but a colossus can do thee that friendship.
Say thy prayers, and farewell.
Fal. I would it were bed-time, Hal, and all well.
P. Hen. Why, thou owest God a death.
[Exit.
Fal. 'Tis not due yet: I would be loath to pay him before his day.
What need I be so forward with him that calls not on me? Well, 'tis no matter; honour pricks me on. Yea, but how if honour prick me off when I come on? how then? Can honour set to a leg? No. Or an arm? No. Or take away the grief of a wound? No. Honour hath no skill in surgery, then? No. What is honour? A word. What is in that word, honour? What is that honour? Air. A trim reckoning!—Who hath it? He that died o' Wednesday. Dost he feel it? No. Dost he hear it? No. Is it insensible, then? Yea, to the dead. But will it not live with the living? No. Why? Destruction will not suffer it:—therefore, I 'll none of it: honour is a mere scootcheon, and so ends my catechism.

SCENE II.—The Rebel Camp.
Enter Worcesrer AND VERNON.

Wor. O, no! my nephew must not know, sir Richard.
The liberal kind offer of the king.
1 For copies: Supposition; Pepe made the change. * The folio, and all but first quarto: talking. # Misanthropy. $ So the three earliest quarto, and folio, and the old quarto: worthy. & The folio insert: worthy. * For heaven to earth: End. * So the three early quarto; the folio: two; to yield, thou naughty Scott. * So the first and second quarto; the others, and folio: ever.

There did he pause: but let me tell the world,
If he outlive the envy of this day,
England did never owe so sweet a hope,
So much misconstrued in his wantonness.

Hot. Cousin, I think thou art enamoured
Upon his folly; or did he not say so?
Of any prince so wild o’ Liberty.
But be he as he will, yet once ere night
I will embrace him with a soldier’s arm,
That he shall shrink under my courtesy.—

Arm, arm, with speed!—And, fellows, soldiers, friends
Better consider what you have to do,
Than I, that have not well the gift of tongue,
Can lift your blood up with persuasion.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My lord, here are letters for you.

Hot. I cannot read them now.—

O gentlemen! the time of life is short;
To spend that shortness basely, were too long,
If life did ride upon a dial’s point,
Still ending at the arrival of an hour.
An if we live, we live to tread on kings;
If die, brave death, when princess die with us.
Now, for our conclusions, the arms are fair;
When the intent of bearing them is just.

Enter another Messenger.

Mess. My lord, prepare: the king comes on space.

Hot. I thank him, that he cuts me from my tale
For I profess not talking. Only this—
Let each man do his best: and here draw I
A sword, whose temper I intend to stain
With the best blood that I can meet withal.
In the adventure of this perilous day.

Now,—Extempore!—Percy!—nor set on!—
Sound all the lofty instruments of war,
And by that music let us all embrace;
For heaven and earth, some of us never shall
A second time do such a courtesy.

[The Trumpets sound. They embrace, and sequester.

SCENE III.—Plain near Shrewsbury.

Excursions, and Parties fighting. Aclarum to the Battle.
Then enter DOUGLAS and BLUNT, meeting.

Blunt. What is thy name, that in battle thus Thou crossest me? what honour dost thou seek Upon my head?

Dougl. Know, then, my name is Douglas;
And I do haunt thee in the battle thus,
Because some tell me that thou art a king.

Blunt. They tell thee true.

Dougl. The lord of Stafford dear to-day hath bought Thy likeness; for, instead of thee, lord Harry,
This sword hath ended him: so shall it thee,
Unless thou yield thee as my prisoner.

Blunt. I was not born a yielded, thou proud Scott;*
And thou shalt find a king that will revenge
Lord Stafford’s death. [They fight, and Blunt is slain.

Enter HORSFUR.

Hot. O Douglas! hadst thou fought at Holmedon thus,
I never had triumph’d upon a Scott.

Dougl. All’s done, all’s won: here breathless lies the king.

Hot. Where?

Dougl. Here.

Hot. This, Douglas? no; I know this face full well:
A gallant knight he was, his name was Blunt,
Semblably furnish'd like the king himself.

Doug. A fool go with thy soul, where'er it goes! A borrower's title hast thou bought too dear: Why didst thou tell me that thou wert a king?

Hot. The king hath many masking's in his coats. Doug. Now, by my sword, I will kill all his coats: I'll murder all his wardrobe, piece by piece, Until I meet the king.

Hot. Up and away! Our soldiers stand full fairly for the day. [Exit.]

Enter Prince Henry.

P. Hen. What! stand'st thou idle here? lend me Many a nobleman lies stark and stiff [thy sword: Under the hoofs of vanquished enemies, Whose deaths are yet unreveng'd. I prythee, lend me thy sword.

Fal. O Hal! I prythee, give me leave to breathe a while.—Turk Gregory* never did such deeds in arms, as I have done this day. I have paid Percy, I have made him sure.

P. Hen. He is, indeed; and living to kill thee. I prythee lend me thy sword.

Fal. Nay, before God, Hal, if Percy be alive, thou get'st not my sword: but take my pistol, if thou wilt.

P. Hen. Give it me. What, is it in the case?

Fal. Ay, Hal; 'tis hot, 'tis hot; there's that will seek a city. [The Prince draws out a bottle of sack.]

P. Hen. What is 't a time to jest and daily now? [Throws it at him, and exit.]

Fal. Well, if Percy be alive, I'll pierce him. If he do come in my way, so: if he do not, if I come in his willingly, let him make a carbado* of me. I like not such grinning honour as sir Walter hath: give me life; which if I can save, so: if not, honour comes unlooked for, and there's an end. [Exit.]

SCENE IV.—Another Part of the Field.

Alarums. Excursions. Enter the King, Prince Henry, Prince John, and Westmoreland.

K. Hen. I prythee, Harry, withdraw thyself; thou bleed'st too much.—Lord John of Lancaster, go you with him.

P. John. Not I, my lord, unless I did bleed too.

P. Hen. I do beseech your majesty, make up, Let your retirement do amaze your friends. K. Hen. I will do so.—My lord of Westmoreland, Lead him to his tent.

West. Come, my lord, I'll lead you to your tent.

P. Hen. Lead me, my lord? I do not need your help: And heaven forbid, a shallow scratch should drive The prince of Wales from such a field as this, Where stain'd nonuity lies trodden on, And rebels' arms triumph in massacres! P. John. We breathe too long.—Come, cousin Westmoreland, Our duty this way lie: for God's sake, come.

[Exeunt Prince John and Westmoreland]

P. Hen. By God thou hast deceiv'd me, Lancaster, I did not think thee lord of such a spirit: Before, I lov'd thee as a brother, John, But now, I do respect thee as my soul.

K. Hen. I saw him hold lord Percy at the point, With lustier maintenance than I did look for Of such an ungrown warrior.

P. Hen. O! this boy Leans most to us all. [Exit.

Alarums. Enter Douglas.

Doug. Another king! they grow like Hydra's heads. I am the Douglas, fatal to all those That wear those colours on them:—what art thou, That counterfeits the person of a king?

K. Hen. The king himself; who, Douglas, graver at heart, So many of his shadows thou hast met, And not the very king. I have two boys Seek Percy, and thyself, about the field: But, seeing thou fall'st on me so luckily, I will assay thee; and defend thyself.

Doug. I fear thou art another counterfeiter, And yet, in faith, thou bear'st thee like a king. But mine I am sure thou art, who'er thou be, And thus I win thee.

[They fight: the King being in danger, enter P. Hen.

P. Hen. Hold up thy hand, vile Scot, or thou art like Never to hold it up again! the spirits Of valiant Shirley, Stafford, Blunt, are in my arms: It is the prince of Wales that threatens thee, Who never promiseth, but he means to pay.— They fight: Douglas slain.]

Cheerly, my lord: how fares your grace?— Sir Nicholas Gawsey hath for succour sent, And so hath Clifton; I'll to Clifton straight.

K. Hen. Stay, and breathe a while. Thou hast redeem'd thy lost opinion; And shou'dst thou mak'st some tender of my life, In this fair rescue thou hast brought to me.

P. Hen. O God! they did me too much injury, That ever said I hearken'd for your death. If it were so, I might have let alone The insulting hand of Douglas over you; Which would have been as speedy in your end, As all the poisonous potions in the world, And sav'd the treacherous labour of your son.

K. Hen. Make up to Clifton: I'll to sir Nicholas Gawsey. [Exit King Henry.]

Enter Hotspur.

Hot. If I mistake not, thou art Harry Monmouth. P. Hen. Thou speak'st as if I would deny my name Hot. My name is Harry Percy.

P. Hen. Why, then I see A very valiant rebel of that name. I am the prince of Wales; and think not, Percy, To share with me in glory any more: Two stars keep not their motion in one sphere; Nor can one England brook a double reign, Of Harry Percy, and the prince of Wales.

Hot. Nor shall it, Harry, for the hour is come To end the one of us; and would to God, Thy name in arms were now as great as mine! P. Hen. I'll make it greater, ere I part from thee, And all the budding honours on thy great I'll crop, to make a garland for my head. Hot* I can no longer brook thy vanities. [They fight Enter Falstaff.

Fal. Well said. Hal! to it, Hal!—Nay, you shall find no boy's play here, I can tell you.

* marching: in f. e. * So old copies; mod. eds. : but. * Gregory VII. * A piece of meat ready for browning.
Enter DOUGLAS: he fights with FALSTAFF, who falls down as if he were dead, and exit DOUGLAS. HOTSIPHR is wounded, and falls.

Hot. O, Harry! thou hast robb'd me of my youth. I better brook the loss of brittle life, Than those proud titles thou hast won of me; They wound my thoughts worse than thy sword my flesh:— But thought's the slave of life, and life time's fool; And time, that takes survey of all the world, Must have a stop. O! I could prophesy, That the earth and cold hand of death Lies on my tongue. —No, Percy, thou art dust, And food for—

P. Hen. For worms, brave Percy. Fare thee well, great heart! —Ill-wear'd ambition, how much art thou shrunk! When that body did contain a spirit, A kingdom for it was too small a bound; But now, two pieces of the vilest earth Is soon enough:—this earth that bears thee dead, Bears not alive so stout a gentleman. If thou wert sensible of courtesy, I should not make so dear a show of zeal. —But let my favours hide thy mangled face, And in thy behalf I'll thank myself. For doing these fair rites of tenderness, Adieu, and take thy praise with thee to heaven: Thy ignomy sleep with thee in the grave, But not remember'd in thy epitaph.—

[Seeing FALSTAFF on the ground.] What! old acquaintance! could not all this flesh Keep in a little life? Poor Jack, farewell! I could have better spur'd a better man. O! I should have a heavy miss of thee, If I were much in love with vanity. Death hath not struck so fat a deer to-day, Though many dearer, in this bloody fray. —Embellish'd will I see thee by and by; Till then, in blood by noble Percy lie. —

[Exit.] Fal. [Rising.] Embellow'd! if thou embellow me to-day, I'll give you leave to powder me, and eat me too, to-morrow. "Sblood! I was time to counterfeit, or that bas ternagler Scutt had paid me soot and lot too. Counterfeit? I lie; I am no counterfeit: to die, is to be a counterfeit; for he is but the counterfeit of a man, who hath not the life of a man: but to counterfeit dying, when a man thereby liveth, is to be no counterfeit, but the true and perfect image of life indeed. The better part of valour is discretion, in the which better part, I have saved my life. 'Zounds! I am afraid of this gunpowder Percy, though he be dead. How, if he should counterfeit too, and rise? By my faith, I am afraid he would prove the better counterfeit. Therefore I'll make him sure; yes, and I'll swear I killed him. Why may not he rise, as well as I? Nothing confutes me but eyes, and nobody sees me: therefore, sirrah, with a new wound in your thigh come you along with me. —[He takes HOTSIPHR on his back.]

Re-enter Prince HENRY and Prince JOHN.

P. Hen. Come, brother John; full bravely hast thou fealt'd thy sword. —

P. John. But, soft! whom have we here? Did you not tell me this fat man was dead? P. Hen. I did; I saw him dead, breathless, and bleeding on the ground.—

Art thou alive, or is it phantasy? That plays upon our eyesight? I pray thee, speak; We will not trust our eyes, without our ears. Thou art not what thou seem'st.

Fal. No, that's certain: I am not a double man; but if I be not Jack Falstaff, then am I a Jack. There is Percy: [Throwing down the body] if your father will do me any honour, so; if not, let him kill the next Percy himself. I look to be either earl or duke, I can assure you.

P. Hen. Why, Percy I killed myself, and saw thee dead.

Fal. Didst thou? —Lord, lord, how this world is given to lying! —I grant you I was down and out of breath, and so was he; but we rose both at an instant, and fought a long hour by Shrewsbury clock. If I may be believed, so: if not, let them that should reward valour bear the sin upon their own heads. I'll take it upon my death, I gave him this wound in the thigh: if the man were alive, and would deny it 'zounds! I would make him eat a piece of my sword.

P. John. This is the strangest tale that ever I heard. P. Hen. This is the strangest fellow, brother John. —Come, bring your luggage nobly on your back: For my part, if a lie may do thee grace, I'll gild it with the happiest terms I have. —

[Retreat is sounded. The trumpet sounds retreat; the day is ours. Come, brother, let us to the highest of the field, To see what friends are living, who are dead. —

[Exeunt Prince HENRY and Prince JOHN.

Fal. I'll follow, as they say, for reward. He that rewards me, God reward him; if I do grow great, I'll grow less; for I'll purge, and leave sack, and live cleanly, as a nobleman should do. —

[Exit, dragging out PERCY'S Body.]

SCENE V. —Another Part of the Field.

The Trumpets sound. Enter King HENRY, Prince HENRY, Prince JOHN, WESTMORELAND, and Others with WORCESTER, and VERNON, prisoners.

K. Hen. Thus ever did rebellion find rebuke. Ill-spirited Worcester, did we not send grace, Pardon, and terms of love to all of you? And wouldst thou turn our offers contrary? Misuse the tenour of thy kinseres's trust? Three knights upon our party slain to-day, A noble earl, and many a creature else, Had been alive this hour, If, like a Christian, thou hadst truly borne Betwixt our armies true intelligence.

Wor. What have I done, my safety urg'd me to, And I embrace this fortune patiently, Which not to be avoided falls on me. K. Hen. Bear Worcester to the death, and Vernon too;

Other offenders we will pause upon. —

[Exeunt WORCESTER and VERNON, guarded.]

How goes the field? P. Hen. The noble Soot, lord Douglas, when he saw The fortune of the day quite turn'd from him, The noble Percy alone, and all his men Upon the foot of fear, fled with the rest; And falling from a hill he was so bruiz'd, That the pursuers took him. At my tent The Douglas is, and I beseech your grace, I may dispose of him.
K. Hen. With all my heart.
P. Hen. Then, brother John of Lancaster, to you
This honourable bounty shall belong.
Go to the Douglas, and deliver him
Up to his pleasure, ransomless, and free:
His valour, shown upon our crests to-day,
Hath taught us how to cherish such high deeds,
Even in the bosom of our adversaries.
P. John. I thank your grace for this high courtesy,
Which I shall put in act without delay. ¹ K. Hen. Then this remains,—that we divide our power.—

¹ Which I shall give away immediately: in fac. This speech is found in the four earliest, but not in the two latest quartos, or the folio.

You, son John, and my cousin Westmoreland,
Towards York shall bend you, with your dearest speed,
To meet Northumberland, and the prelate Sercoop,
Who, as we hear, are busily in arms:
Myself, and you, son Harry, will towards Wales,
To fight with Glendower and the earl of March.
Rebellion in this land shall lose his sway,
Meeting the check of such another day:
And since this business so fair is done,
Let us not leave till all our own be won.  [Exeunt

Lords, and Attendants; Officers, Soldiers, Messengers, Drawers, Beadles, Grooms, &c.

SCENE, England.

INDUCTION.

(Warkworth. Before Northumberland's Castle.

Enter Rumour, painted full of Tongues.

Rumour. Open your ears; for which of you will stop
The vent of hearing, when loud rumour speaks?
I from the orient to the drooping west,
Ming in the wind my post-horse, still unfold
The seats commenced on this ball of earth:
Upon my tongue continual sanders ride,
The which in every language I pronounce,
Stiffing the ears of men with false reports,
Speak of peace, while covert enmity,
Under the smile of safety, wounds the world:
And who but Rumour, who but only I,
Make fearful musters, and prepare'st defence;
Whiling the big year, swoln with some other grief,
Is thought with child by the stern tyrant war,
And so much matter? Rumour is a pipe
Bowed by surmisings, jealousies, conjectures;
And of so easy and so plain a stop,
That the blunt monster with uncouthed heads,
The still-discordant wavering multitude,
Can play upon it. But what need I thus
My well-known body to anatomize
Among my household? Why is Rumour here?
I run before king Harry's victory;
Who in a bloody field by Shrewsbury
Hath beaten down young Hotspur, and his troops,
Quenching the flame of bold rebellion
Eyen with the rebels' blood. But what mean I
To speak so true at first? my office is
To noise abroad, that Harry Monmouth fell
Under the wrath of noble Hotspur's sword,
And that the king before the Douglas' rage
Stoop'd his amointed head as low as death.
This have I rumour'd through the pleasant towns
Between that royal field of Shrewsbury
And this worm-eaten hold of ragged stone,
Where Hotspur's father, old Northumberland,
Lies crafty-sick: the poets come tiring on,
And not a man of them brings other news
Than they have learn'd of me; from Rumour's tongues
They bring smooth comforts false, worse than true wrongs.

[Exit.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—The Same.

Enter Lord Bardolph.°

Bard. Who keeps the gate here? ho! Where is the earl?

Enter Warder, above.°

Ward. What shall I say you are?

Bard. Tell thou the earl,

Ward. That the lord Bardolph doth attend him here.

Bard. His lordship is walk'd forth into the orchard:

°This direction is only in the quarto, 1600. Rumour, or Famine, was often so represented. ° peasant: in f. a. * Porter before the Gate; 877
Please it your honour, knock but at the gate, And he himself will answer. [Exit Warder.]

Enter NORTHERN UMBRIDE. Bar. Here comes the earl.

North. What news, lord Bardolph? every minute now Should be the father of some stratagem. The times are wild: contention, like a horse Full of high feeding, madly hath broke loose, And bears down all before him. Bar. Noble earl, I bring you certain news from Shrewsbury. North. Good, an God will! Bar. As good as heart can wish. The king is almost wounded to the death, And in the fortune of my lord, your son, Prince Henry alain outright; and both the Blunts Kil'd by the hand of Douglas; young prince John, And Westminster and Stafford, fled the field; And Harry Monmouth's brawn, the hulk sir John, Is prisoner to your son. O! such a day, So fought, so followed, and so fairly won, Came not till now to dignify the times, Since Caesar's fortunes. North. How is this deriv'd? Saw you the field? came you from Shrewsbury? Bar. I spake with one, my lord, that came from thence;

A gentleman well-bred, and of good name, That freely render'd me these news for true. North. Here comes my servant, Travers, whom I sent On Tuesday last to listen after news. Bar. My lord, I over-rod him on the way, And he is furnish'd with no certainties, More than he haply may retail from me. Enter Travers. North. Now, Travers, what good tidings come with you?

Tra. My lord, sir John Umfreylie turn'd me back With joyful tidings; and, being better born, Out-rode me. After him came spurring hard A gentleman, almost forspant with speed, That stopp'd by me to breathe his bloody horse. He ask'd the way to Chester; and of him I did demand, what news from Shrewsbury: He told me that rebellion had bad luck, And that young Harry Percy's spur was cold. With that he gave his able horse the head, And, bending forward, struck his armed heels Against the panting sides of his poor jade Up to the rowel-head; and, starting so, He seem'd in running to devour the way, Staying no longer question. North. Ha!—Again. Said he, young Harry Percy's spur was cold? Of Hotspur, coldspur? that rebellion Had met ill-luck! Bar. My lord, I'll tell you what: 'If my young lord your son have not the day, I pon mine honour, for a silken point;' I'll give my barony; never talk of it. North. Why should that gentleman, that rode by Travers, Give, then, such instances of loss? Bar. Who, he? He was some hilding fellow, that had stolen The horse he rode on, and, upon my life, Spoke at a venture. Look, here comes more news.

Enter Morton. North. Yeas, this man's brow, like to a title-leaf, Foretells the nature of a tragic volume. So looks the sword, whereon the imployed Flood left a witness'd usurpation. Say, Morton, didst thou come from Shrewsbury? Mor. I ran from Shrewsbury, my noble lord; Where hateful death put on his ugliest mask, To fright our party. North. How doth my son and brother? Thou, tremblest; and the whiteness in thy cheek Is dearer than thy tongue to tell thy errand. Even such a man, so fair, so spiritless, So dull, so dead in look, so woe-begone, Drew Priam's curtain in the dead of night, And would have told him, half his Troy was burn'd: But Priam found the fire, ere he his tongue, And I my Percy's death, ere thou report it. This thou wouldst say,—Your son did thus, and them; Thy brother, thus; so fought the noble Douglas; Stopping my greedy ear with their bold deeds, But it is hard to stop mine ear indeed, Thou hast a sigh to blow away his praise, Ending with—brother, son, and all are dead. Mor. Douglas is living, and your brother, yet; But for my lord, your son,— North. Why, he is dead. See, what a ready tongue suspicion hath! He that but fears the thing he would not know, Hath by instinct knowledge from others' eyes, What he that fear'd is chance. Yest, speak, Morton Tell me thy earl his divination lies, And I will take it as a sweet disgrace, And make thee rich for doing me such wrong. Mor. You are too great to be by me gainsaid: Your spirit is too true; your fears too certain. North. Yet, for all this, say not that Percy's dead. I see a strange confession in thine eye: Thou shak'st thy head; and hold'st it fear, or sin, To speak the truth. If he be slain, say so; The tongue offends not, that reports his death; And he doth sin that doth belie the dead, Not he which says the dead is not alive. Yet the first bringer of unwelcome news Hath but a losing office; and his tongue Sounds ever after as a sullen bell, Remember'd knolling a departing friend. Bar. I cannot think, my lord, your son is dead. Mor. I am sorry I should force you to believe That which I would to heaven I had not seen; But these mine eyes saw him in bloody state, Rendering faint quittance, wearied and outbreath'd, To Harry Monmouth: whose swift wrath beat down The never-daunted Percy to the earth, From whence with life he never more sprung up. In few, his death, whose spirit lent a fire Even to the dullest peasant in his camp. Being bruited once, took fire and heat away From the best temper'd courage in his troops: For from his metal was his party steel'd; Which once in him abated, all the rest Turn'd on themselves, like dull and heavy lead. And as the thing that's heavy in itself, Upon enforcement flies with greatest speed, So did our men, heavy in Hotspur's loss, Lead to this weight such lightness with their fear, That arrows fled not swifter toward their aim, Than did our soldiers, aiming at their safety, Fly from the field. Then was that noble Worcester too soon ta'en prisoner; and that furious Soot, the bloody Douglas, whose well-labouring sword had three times slain thy appearance of the king, Gan vail his stomach, and did grace the shame 0. those that turn'd their backs; and in his flight. Sabling in fear, was took. The sum of all is that the king hath won, and hath sent out A speedy gawor, to encounter you, my lord, Under the conduct of young Lancaster, And Westmoreland. This is the news at full.

North. For this I shall have time enough to morn. In poison there is physic; and these news, Having been well, that would have made me sick, Being sick, have in some measure made me well. And as the wretch, whose fever-weaken'd joints, Like strengthless hinges, buckle under life, Impatient of his fit, breaks like a fire Out of his keeper's arms; even so my limbs, Weaken'd with grief, being now enrag'd with grief, Are thrice themselves. Hence, therefore, thou niece's crutch!

A sealy gauntlet now, with joints of steel, Must glove this hand: and hence, thou sickly quoif! Thou art a guard too wanton for the head, Which princes, flesh'd with conquest, aim to hit. Now bind my brows with iron; and approach The rugged hour that time and fate dare bring, To frown upon thee, enrag'd Northumberland. Let heaven kiss earth: now, let not nature's hand Keep the wild flood confin'd: let order die; And let this world no longer be a stage, To feed contention in a lingering act, But let one spirit of the first-born Cain Reign in all bosoms, that, each heart being set On bloody courses, the rude scene may end, And darkness be the burier of the dead!

Tria. This strained passion doth you wrong, my lord.

Bard. Sweet earl, divorce not wisdom from your honour.

Mor. The lives of all your loving complices Lean on your health; the which, if you give o'er To stormy passion, must perforce decay. You cast the event of war, my noble lord, And sum'd the account of chance, before you said, -Let us take head. It is your presum'rism, That in the dole of blows your son might drop: You knew, he walk'd o'er perils, on an edge, More likely to fall in, than to get o'er: You were advis'd, his flesh was capable Of wounds and scars, and that his forward spirit Would lift him where most trade of danger raged; Yet did you say,—Go forth; and none of this, Though strongly apprehended, could restrain The stiff-borne action: what hath then befallen, Or what hath this bold enterprise brought forth, More than that being which was like to be?

Bard. We all, that are engaged to this loss, Knew that we ventur'd on such dangerous seas, That, if we wrought out life, 'twas ten to one; And yet we ventur'd, for the gain propos'd; God the respect of likely peril fear'd, And since we are o'erset, venture again. Come, we will all put forth; body, and goods. Most of us is more than time: and, my most noble lord, I hear for certain, and dare speak the truth, The gentle archbishop of York is up; With well-appointed powers: he is a man, Who with a double surety binds his followers. My lord your son had only but the corps, But shadows and the shows of men to fight; For that same word, rebellion, did divide The action of their bodies from their souls, And they did fight with quesiness, constrain'd As men drink poisons, that their weapons only Seem'd on our side; but, for their spirits and souls, This word, rebellion, it had froze them up; As fish are in a pond. But now, th' archbishop Turns insurrection to religion: Suppos'd sincere and holy in his thoughts, He's follow'd both with body and with mind, And doth enlarge his rising with the blood Of fair king Richard, scrape'd from Pomfret stones; Derives from heaven his quarrel, and his cause; Tells them, he doth bestride a bleeding land, Gasping for life under great Bolingbrooke, And more, and less, do flock to follow him.

North. I knew of this before; but, to speak truth, This present grief had wip'd it from my mind. Go in with me; and counsel every man The aptest way for safety, and revenge. Get posts and letters, and make friends with speed: Never so few, and never yet more need.

[Exeunt }

SCENE II.—London. A Street. Enter Sir John Falstaff, with his Page bearing his Sword and Buckler.

Fal. Sirrah, you giant, what says the doctor to my water?

Page. He said, sir, the water itself was a good healthy water; but for the party that owed it, he might have more diseases than he knew for.

Fal. Men of all sorts take a pride to gird at me: the brain of this foolish-compounded clay, man, is not able to invent any thing that tends to laughter, more than I invent, or is invented on me: I am not only witty in myself, but the cause that wit is in other men. I do here walk before thee, like a sow that hath overwhelmed all her litter but one: if the prince put thee into my service for any other reason than to set me off, why then, I have no judgment. Thou woreson man-drake, thou art fitter to be worn in my cap, than to wait at my heels. I was never married with an agate till now: but I will in-set you neither in gold nor silver, but in vile apparel, and send you back again to your master, for a jewel; the juvinal, the prince your master, whose chin is not yet flegded. I will sooner have a beard grown in the palm of my hand, than he shall get one on his cheek; and yet he will not stick to say, his face is a face-royal. God may finish it when he will, it is not a hair amuse yet: he may keep it still as a face-royal; for a barber shall never earn six-pence out of it: and yet he will be envying, as if he had writ man ever since his father was a bachelor. He may keep his own grace, but he is almost out of mine, I can assure him.—What said Master Dumbleton about the satin for my short cloak, and my slops?

Page. He said, sir, you should procure him better assurance than Bardolph; he would not take his bond and yours: he liked not the security.

Fal. Let him be damned like the glutton: may his tongue be better, wheresoever it lyes: a rascally yea-soorth mint, to bear a gentleman in hand, and then stand upon security!—The woreson smooth-pates to now wear nothing but high shoes, and bunches of keys at their girdles; and if a man is thorough with them in honest taking up, then must they stand upon security. I had as lief they would put ratsbane in my mouth, as offer to stop it with security. I looked he should have sent me two and twenty yards of satin, as I am a true knight, and he sends me security. Well, he may sleep in security; for he hath the horn of abundance, and the lightness of his wife shines through it; and yet cannot he see, though he have his own lantern to light him.—Where's Bardolph?

Page. He's gone into Smithfield to buy your worship a horse.

Fal. I bought him in Paul's, and he'll buy me a horse in Smithfield: an I could get me but a wife in the stewes, I was married, horesed, and wived.

Enter the Lord Chief Justice, and an Attendant.

Page. Sir, here comes the nobleman that committed the prince for striking him about Bardolph.

Fal. Wait close; I will not see him.

Ch. Just. What's he that goes there?

Atten. Falstaff, an't please your lordship.

Ch. Just. He was in question for the robbery?

Atten. He, my lord; but he hath since done good service at Shrewsbury, and, as I hear, is now going with some charge to the lord John of Lancaster.

Atten. Sir John Falstaff!

Fal. Boy, tell him I am deaf.

Page. You must speak louder, my master is deaf.

Ch. Just. I am sure he is, to the hearing of any thing good.—Go, pluck him by the elbow; I must speak with him.

Atten. Sir John,—

Fal. What! a young knave, and begging? Is there not wars? is there not employment? Doth not the king lack subjects? do not the rebels need soldiers? Though it be a shame to be on any side but one, it is worse shame to beg than to be on the worst side, were it worse than the name of rebellion can tell how to make it.

Atten. You mistake me, sir.

Fal. Why, sir, did I say you were an honest man? setting my knighthood and my soldiership aside, I had lied in my throat if I had said so.

Atten. I pray you, sir, set your knighthood and your soldiership aside, and give me leave to tell you, you lie in your throat, if you say I am any other than an honest man.

Fal. I give thee leave to tell me so? I lay aside that which grows to me? If thou get'st any leave of me, hang me: if thou tak'st leave, thou wert better be hanged. You hunt-counter, hence! avault!

Atten. Sir, my lord would speak with you.

Ch. Just. Sir John Falstaff, a word with you.

Fal. My good lord! God give your lordship good time of day. I am glad to see your lordship abroad: I heard say, your lordship was sick: I hope, your lordship goes abroad by advice. Your lordship, though not clean past your youth, hath yet some smack of age in you, some relish of the saltiness of time, and most humbly beseech your lordship to have a reverend care of your health.

Ch. Just. Sir John, I sent for you before your expedition to Shrewsbury.

Fal. An't please your lordship, I hear his majesty returned with some discomfort from Wales.

Ch. Just. I talk not of his majesty.—You would no come when I sent for you.

Fal. And I hear, moreover, his highness is fallen into this same whoreson apoplexy.

Ch. Just. Well, heaven mend him.—I pray you, let me speak with you.

Fal. This apoplexy is, as I take it, a kind of letalergy—an't please your lordship; a kind of sleeping in the blood, with poison flagging.

Ch. Just. What tell you me of it? be it as it is.

Fal. It hath its original from much grief; free study, and perturbation of the brain. I have res the cause of his effects in Galen: it is a kind of deadness.

Ch. Just. I think you are fallen into the disease, & you hear not what I say to you.

Fal. Very well, my lord, very well: rather, an you please, it is the disease of not listening, the maid of not marking, that I am troubled withal.

Ch. Just. To punish you by the heels would smite the attention of your ears; and I care not, if I become your physician.

Fal. I am as poor as Job, my lord, but not so patient: your lordship may minister the potion of ironsom to me, in respect of poverty; but how should your patient to follow your precepts, the wv may make some dram of a scruple, or, indeed, a scrup itself.

Ch. Just. I sent for you, when there were mate against you for your life, to come speak with me.

Fal. As I was then advised by my learned cousin in the laws of this land-service, I did not come.

Ch. Just. Well, the truth is, sir John, you live in great infamy.

Fal. He that buckles him in my belt cannot live less.

Ch. Just. Your means are very slender, and yet waste is great.

Fal. I would it were otherwise: I would my meat were greater, and my waist slenderer.

Ch. Just. You have misled the youthful prince.

Fal. The young prince had misled me: I am a fellow with the great belly, and his dog.

Ch. Just. Well, I am loth to call a new-born wound. Your day's service at Shrewsbury hath a lit gilded over your night's exploit on Gadsheil: you may thank the unquiet time for your quiet o'er-posting the action.

Fal. My lord—

Ch. Just. But since all is well, keep it so: wake a sleeping wolf.

Fal. To wake a wolf, is as bad as to smell a fox.

Ch. Just. What! you are as a candle, the better part burnt out.

Fal. A wassail candle, my lord; all tallow: if I say of wax, my growth would approve the truth.

Ch. Just. There is not a white hair on your face, but should have his effect of gravity.

Fal. His effect of gravy, gravy, gravy.

Ch. Just. You follow the young prince up and down like his ill® angel

Fal. Not so, my lord: your ill angel® is light, but I hope, he that looks upon me will take me with wishing: and yet, in some respects, I grant, I cannot p. I cannot tell; virtue is of so little regard in these outer-monger days, that true value is turned beared. Pregnancy is made a tapster, and hath his sack wrast in giving reckonings: all the other is appertinent to man, as the malice of this age stapes them, are not worth a gooseberry. You, that are old, consider not the capacities of us that are young: you measure the heat of our livres with the bitterness of your gall; and we that are in the vaward of your youth, I must confess, are wags too.

Ch. Just. Do you set down your name in the scroll of youth, that are written down old with all the characters of age? Have you not a moist eye, a dry hand, a yellow cheek, a white beard, a decreasing leg, an increasing belly? Is not your voice broken, your wind short, your chin double, your wit single, and every part about you blasted with antiquity, and will you yet call yourself young? Fie, fie, fie, sir John!

Fal. My lord, I was born, about three of the clock in the afternoon, with a white head, and something a round belly. For my voice,—I have lost it with hollering and singing of anthems. To approve my youth farther, I will not: the truth is, I am only old in judgment and understanding; and he that will caver with me for a thousand marks, let him lend me the money, and have at him. For the box o' the ear that the prince gave you, he gave it like a rude prince, and you took it like a sensible lord. I have checked him for it, and the young lion repents; marry, not in sahoses, and sackcloth, but in new silk, and old sack.

Ch. Just. Well, God send the prince a better companion!

Fal. God send the companion a better prince! I cannot rid my hands of him.

Ch. Just. Well, the king hath severed you and prince Harry. I hear you are going with lord John of Lan caster against the archbishop, and the earl of Northumberland.

Fal. Yes; I thank your pretty sweet wit for it. But look you pray, all you that kiss my lady peace at some, that our armies join not in a hot day; for, by the Lord, I take but two shirts out with me, and I mean not to sweat extraordinarily: if it be a hot day, and I brandish any thing but my bottle, I would I might never spit white again. There is not a dangerous station can keep but his head, but I am thrust upon it: well, I cannot last for ever. But it was always yet the rich of our English nation, if they have a good thing, o make it too common. If you will needs say I am an old man, you should give me rest. I would o God, my name were not so terrible to the enemy as it is: I were better to be eaten to death with rust, than to be scour'd to nothing with perpetual motion.

Ch. Just. Well, be honest, be honest; and God bless where you reverence.

Fal. Will your lordship lend me a thousand pound o' furnish me forth?

Ch. Just. Not a penny, not a penny: you are too impatient to bear crosses. Fare you well: commend me to my cousin Westmoreland.

[Exeunt Chief Justice and Attendant.]

Fal. If I do fillip, with a three-man beetle, a man can no more separate age and covetousness, than he can part young limbs and leeches; but the gout galls the one, and the pox pinches the other, and so both the diseases prevent my curses.—Boy!

Page. Sir?

Fal. What money is in my purse?

Page. Seven groats and two pence.

Fal. I can get no remedy against this consumption of the purse; borrowing onlyingers and lingers it out, but the disease is incurable. Go, bear this letter to my lord of Lancaster; this to the prince; this to the earl of Westmoreland; and this to old mistress Urania, whom I have weakly sworn to marry since I perceived the first white hair o' my chin. About it: you know where to find me. [Exit Page.] A posy of this gout! or, a gout of this posy! for the one, or the other, plays the rogue with my great toe. 'T is no matter, if I do halt; I have the wars for my colour, and my pension shall seem the more reasonable. A good wit will make use of any thing; it will turn diseases to commodity.

[Exit.]

Enter the Archbishop of York, the Lords Hastings, Mowbray, Earl Marshal, and Bardolph.

Arch. Thus have you heard our cause, and know our means; and, my most noble friends, I pray you all, Speak plainly your opinions of our hopes. And first, lord marshal, what say you to it?

Mow. I well allow the occasion of our arms; but gladly would be better satisfied, how, in our means, we should advance ourselves to look with forehead bold and big enough upon the power and puissance of the king.

Hast. Our present musters grow upon the file to five and twenty thousand men of choice; and our supplies live largely in the hope of great Northumberland, whose bosom burns with an incensed fire of injuries.

Bard. The question then, lord Hastings, standeth thus: whether our present five and twenty thousand may hold up head without Northumberland.

Hast. With him, we may.

Bard. Ay, marry, there's the point: but if without him we be thought too feeble, my judgment is, we should not step too far; till we had his assistance by the hand; for in a theme so bloody-fac'd as this, conjecture, expectation, and surmise of aids incertain should not be admitted.

Arch. 'T is very true, lord Bardolph; for, indeed, it was young Hotspur's case at Shrewsbury.

Bard. It was, my lord: who liv'd himself with hope eating the air on promise of supply, flattering himself with project of a power much smaller than the smallest of his thoughts; and so, with great imagination, proper to madmen, led his powers to death, and winked leap'd into destruction.

Hast. But, by your leave, it never yet did hurt, to lay down likelihoods, and forms of hope.

Bard. Yes, in this present quality of war, indeed the instant act, and cause on foot, lives so in hope, as in an early spring we see the appearing buds; which, to prove fruit,
SECOND PART OF

ACT II.

SCENE I.—London. A Street.

Host. Master Fang, have you entered the action?

Fang. It is entered.

Host. Where's your yeoman? Is't a lusty yeoman? will he stand to 't?

Fang. Sirrah, where's Snare?

Host. O lord! ay: good master Snare.

Snare. Here, here.

Fang. Snare, we must arrest sir John Falstaff.

Host. Yes, good master Snare; I have entered him and all.

Snare. It may chance cost some of us our lives, for he will stab.

Host. Alas the day! take heed of him: he stabbed me in mine own house, and that most basely. In good faith, he cares not what mischief he doth, if his weapon be out: he will foin like any devil; he will spare neither man, woman, nor child.

Fang. If I can close with him, I care not for his thrust.

Arch. That he should draw his several straights together, and come against us in full puiuance, need not be dreaded.

Host. If he should do so, he leaves his back unarmed, the French and Welsh buying him at the heels: never fear that.

Bard. Who, is it like, should lead his forces hither?

Host. The duke of Lancaster, and Westmoreland: Against the Welsh, himself, and Harry Monmouth. But who is substituted 'gainst the French, I have no certain notice.

Act. Let us on
And publish the occasion of our arms.
The commonwealth is sick of their own choice;
Their over-greedy love hath surfeited;
An habitation giddy and unsure
Hath he, that buildeth on the vulgar heart.
O, thou fond many! with what loud applause
Didst thou beat heaven with blessing Bolingbroke,
Before he was what thou wouldest have him be;
And being now trim'md in thine own desires,
Thou, beastly feeder, art so full of him,
That thou provok'st thyself to cast him up.
So, so, thou common dog, didst thou disgorge
Thy glutton bosom of the royal Richard,
And now thou wouldest eat thy dead vomit up,
And howl'st to find it. What trust is in these times?
They that, when Richard liv'd, would have him die,
Are now become enamour'd on his grave;
Thou, that threw'st dust upon his goodly head,
When through proud London he came sighing on
After the admired heels of Bolingbroke,
Cry'st now, "O earth, yield us that king again,
And take thou this!" O, thoughts of men assure!
Past, and to come, seem best; things present, worst.

Host. Shall we go draw our numbers, and set on?

Host. We are time's subjects, and time bids be gone

[Exeunt]
KING HENRY IV.

SCENE I. 338

Fad. How now! whose mare's dead; what's the matter?

Fang. Sir John, I arrest you at the suit of mistress Quickly.

Fad. Away, varlets!—Draw, Bardolph: cut me off the villain's head: throw the queen in the channel.

Fad. Keep them off, Bardolph.

Fang. A rescue! a rescue!

Host. Good people, bring a rescue or two.—Thou wilt not? thou wilt not? do, do, thou rogue! do, thou bumpteed!

Fad. Away, you scullion! you rumpallian! you fusillarian! I'll tickle your catastrophe.

Enter the Lord Chief Justice, attended.

Ch. Just. What is the matter? keep the peace here, ho!

Host. Good my lord, be good to me! I beseech you, stand to me.

Ch. Just. How now, sir John! what, are you brawling here?

Dost this become your place, your time, and business? You should have been well on your way to York.—Stand from him, fellow: wherefore hang'st thou on him?

Host. O! my most worshipful lord, an't please your grace, I am a poor widow of Eastcheap, and he is arrested at my suit.

Ch. Just. For what sum?

Host. It is more than for some, my lord; it is for all, all I have. He hath eaten me out of house and home: be hath put all my substance into that fat belly of his; but I will have some of it out again, or I will ride thee o' nights, like the mare.

Fad. I think, I am as like to ride the mare, if I have any vantage of ground to get up.

Ch. Just. How comes this, sir John?—Fie! what man of good temper would endure this tempest of exclamation?—Are you not ashamed to enforce a poor woman so rough a course to come by her own?

Fad. What is the gross sum that I owe thee?

Host. Marry, if thou wert an honest man, thyself, and the money too. Thou didst swear to me upon a parcel-gilt goblet, sitting in my Dolphin-chamber, at the round table, by a sea-coal fire, upon Wednesday in Whitsun week, when the prince broke thy head for likening his father to a singing-man of Windsor; thou didst swear to me then, as I was washing thy wound, to marry me, and make me my lady thy wife. Canst thou deny it? Did not good-wife Keech, the butcher's wife, come in then, and call me госвор Quickly? coming in to borrow a mess of vinegar: telling us, she had a good dish of prawns, whereby thou didst desire to eat some, whereby I told thee, they were ill for a green wound? And didst thou not, when she was gone down stairs, desire me to be no more so familiarity with such poor people; saying, that ere long they should call me madam? And didst thou not kiss me, and bid me fetch thee thirty shillings? I put thee now to thy book-cloth: deny it, if thou canst.

Fad. My lord this is a poor mad soul; and she says, up and down the town, that her eldest son is like you. She hath been in good case, and the truth is, poverty

Fol. Comes the king back from Wales, my noble lord?
Ch. Just. You shall have letters of me presently: come, go along with me, good master Gower.
Fol. My lord!
Ch. Just. What's the matter?
Fol. Master Gower, shall I entreat you with me to dinner?
Ch. I must wait upon my good lord here: I thank you, good sir John.
Ch. Just. Sir John, you loiter here too long, being you are to take soldiers up in counties as you go.
Fol. Will you sup with me, master Gower?
Ch. Just. What foolish master taught you these manners, sir John?
Fol. Master Gower, if they become me not, he was a fool that taught them me. This is the right fencing ground, my lord; tap for tap, and so part fair.
Ch. Just. Now, the Lord lighten thee! thou art a great fool.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—The Same. Another Street.

Enter Prince Henry and Poins.

P. Hen. Trust me, I am exceeding weary.

Poins. Is it come to that? I had thought, weariness durest not have attached one of so high blood.

P. Hen. 'Faith, it does me, though it discourses the complication of my greatness to acknowledge it. Doth it not show visibly in me to desire small beer?

Poins. Why, a prince should not be so loosely studied, as to remember so weak a composition.

P. Hen. Belike then, my appetite was not princely got; for, by my troth, I do now remember the poor creature, small beer. But, indeed, these humble considerations make me out of love with my greatness. What a disgrace is it to me, to remember thy name? or to know thy face to-morrow? or to take note how many pair of silk stockings thou hast; viz., these, and those that were thy pech-coloured ones? or to bear the inventory of thy shirts; as, one for superfluity, and one other for use—but that the tennis-court-keeper knows better than I, for it is a low ebb of linen with thee, when thou keepest not racket there; as thou hast not done a great while, because the rest of thy low-country have made a shift to eat up thy Holland; and God knows, whether those that bawl out the ruins of thy linen, shall inherit his kingdom: but the midwives say, the children are not in the fault, whereupon the world increases, and kindreds are mightily strengthened.

Poins. How ill it follows, after you have laboured so hard, you should talk so idly! Tell me, how many good young princes would do so, their fathers being so sick as yours at this time is?

P. Hen. Shall I tell thee one thing, Poins?

Poins. Yes, faith, and let it be an excellent good thing.

P. Hen. It shall serve among wits of no higher breeding than thine.

Poins. Go to; I stand the push of your one thing that you will tell.

P. Hen. Marry, I tell thee,—it is not meet that I should be sad, now my father is sick: albeit I could tell to thee, (as to one it pleases me, for fault of a better, to call my friend) I could be sad, and sad indeed too.

Poins. Very hardly upon such a subiect.

P. Hen. By this hand, thou think'st me as far is the devil's book, as thou and Falstaff, for obscurity and persistency: let the end try the man. But I tell thee, my heart bleeds inwardly, that my father is so sick; and keeping such vile company as thou art, hath in reason taken from me all sensation of sorrow.

Poins. The reason?

P. Hen. What wouldst thou think of me, if I should weep?

Poins. I would think thee a most princely hypocrize.

P. Hen. It would be every man's thought; and thou art a blessed fellow, to think as every man thinks: never a man's thought in the world keeps the road-way better than thine: every man would think me an hypocrize indeed. And what accites your most worshipful thought to think so?

Poins. Why, because you have been so lewd, and so much engrossed to Falstaff.

P. Hen. And to thee.

Poins. By this light, I am well spoken on; I can hear it with mine own ears: the worst that they can say of me is, that I am a second brother, and that I am a proper fellow of my hands, and those two things. I confess, I cannot help. By the mass, here comes Bardolph.

P. Hen. And the boy that I gave Falstaff: he has him from me Christian; and look, if the fat villain has not transformed him ape.

Enter Bardolph and Page.

Bard. God save your grace.

P. Hen. And yours, most noble Bardolph.

Bard. Come, you virtuous ass, [To the Page.] you bashful fool, must you be blushing? wherefore blush you now? What a maidenly man at arms are you become? Is it such a matter to get a pot-bellied maidenhead?

Page. He called me even now, my lord, through a red lattice, and I could discern no part of his face from the window: at last, I spied his eyes; and, methought, he had made two holes in the ale-wife's new red petticoat, and peeped through.

P. Hen. Hath not the boy profited?

Bard. Away, you whoremonger upright rabbit! away!

Page. Away, you rascally Althea's dream, away!

P. Hen. Instruct us, boy: what dream, boy?

Page. Marry, my lord, Althea's dreamed she was delivered of a fire-brand, and therefore I call him fire.

P. Hen. A crown's worth of good interpretation.—There it is, boy. [Giving him money.]

Poins. O, that this good blossom could be kept from cankers!—Well, there is sixpence to preserve thee.

Bard. An you do not make him be hanged amoset you, the gallows shall have wrong.

P. Hen. And how doth thy master, Bardolph?

Bard. Well, my lord. He heard of your grace coming to town: there's a Letter for you.

Poins. Delivered with good respect.—And how doth the nartelias, your master?

Bard. In bodily health, sir.

Poins. Marry, the immortal part needs a physician; but that moves not him: though that be sick, it dies not.

P. Hen. I do allow this wen to be as familiar with me as my dog; and he holds his place, for look you how he writes.

Poins. [Reads.] "John Falstaff, knight,"—every man must know that, as eft so he has occasion to name

SCENE III.—Warkworth. Before the Castle.

Enter Northumberland, Lady Northumberland, and Lady Percy.

North. I pray thee, loving wife and gentle daughter,
Give even way unto my rough affairs:
Put not you on the visage of the times,
And be like them to Percy troublesome.

Lady N. I have given over, I will speak no more.
Do what you will; your wisdom be your guide.

North. Alas, sweet wife, my honour is at pawn,
And, but my going, nothing can redeem it.

Lady P. O. yet, for God's sake, go not to these wars!
The time was, father, that you broke your word,
When you were more endear'd to it than now;
When your own Percy, when my heart-dear Harry ¹
Threw many a northward look, to see his father
Bring up his powers; but he did long in vain.

Who then persuaded you to stay at home?
There were two honours lost, yours, and your son's:
For yours,—may heavenly glory brighten it!
For his,—it stuck upon him, as the sun
In the grey vault of heaven: and, by his light,
Did all the chivalry of England move.
To do brave acts, he was, indeed, the glass
Wherein the noble youth did dress themselves.²
He had no legs, that practised not his gait;
And speaking thick, which nature made his blemish,
Became the accents of the vauntant;
For those that could speak low, and tardily,
Would turn their own perfection to abuse,
To seem like him: so that, in speech, in gait,
In diet, in affections of delight,
In military rules, humours of blood,
He was the mark and glass copy and book,
That fashion'd others. And him,—O wondrous hie!
O miracle of men!—him did you leave,
(Second to none, unseconded by you)
To look upon the hideous god of war
In disadvantage: to abide a field,
Where nothing but the sound of Hotspur's name
Did seem defensible:—so you left him.

Never, O! never, do his ghost the wrong,
To hold your honour more precise and nice
With others, than you are alone. The marshal,
And the archbishop, are strong:
Had my sweet Harry had but half their numbers,
To-day might I, hanging on Hotspur's neck,
Have talk'd of Monmouth's grave.

North. Beshrow your heart.

Perc. Daughter! you do draw my spirits from me,
With new lamenting ancient oversights.
But I must go, and meet with danger there,
Or it will seek me in another place,
And find me worse provided.

Lady N. O! fly to Scotland.

Till that the nobles, and the armed commons,
Have of their puissance made a little taste.

Lady P. If they get ground and vantage of the king
Then join you with them, like a rib of steel,
To make strength stronger; but, for all our loves,
First let them try themselves. So did your son;
He was so suffer'd; so came I a widow,
And never shall I have enough.
To rain upon remembrance with mine eyes,
That it may grow and sprout as high as heaven,
For recordation to my noble husband.

North. Come, come, go in with me. 'Tis with my mind,

¹ He stern: He stern: not in F. ² Stip. Not in F. ³ declension: in folio. ⁴ heart's dear Harry: in folio. ⁵ The rest of this speech was printed in the folio. ⁶ Speaking rapidly.
As with the tide swell’d up unto its height,
That makes a still-stand, running neither way:
Fain would I go to meet the archbishop,
But many thousand reasons hold me back.—
I will resolve for Scotland: there am I,
Till time and vantage crave my company. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—London. A Room in the Boar’s Head Tavern, in Eastcheap.

Enter Two Drawers.

1 Draw. What the devil hast thou brought there?
apple-Johns! thou knowst sir John cannot endure an apple-John.

2 Draw. Mass, thou sayest true. The prince once set a dish of apple-Johns before him, and told him, the o were five more sir Johns; and, putting off his hat, said, I will now take my leave of these six dry, found, old, withered knights.” It angered him to the heart, but he hath forgot that.

1 Draw. Why then, cover, and set them down: and see if thou canst find out Sneak’s noise; mistress Tear-sheet would fain hear some music*. Dispatch — the room where they supped is too hot; they’ll come in straight.

2 Draw. Sirrah, here will be the prince, and master Pains anon; and they will put on two of our jerkins and aprons, and sir John must not know of it; Bar- dolph hath brought word.

1 Draw. By the mass, here will be old utist*: it will be an excellent stratagem.

2 Draw. I’ll see, if I can find out Sneak. [Exeunt.

Enter Hostess and Doll Tear-sheet.

Host. ‘ faith, sweet heart, methinks now you are in an excellent good temperamency: your pulisidge beats as extra-ordinarily as heart would desire, and your colour, I warrant you, is as red as any rose: but, ‘ faith, you have drunk too much canaries, and that’s a marvellous searching wine, and it perfumes the blood ere one can say, what’s this? How do you now?

Dol. Better than I was. Hem.

Host. Why, that’s well said; a good heart’s worth gold. Lo! here comes sir John.

Enter Falstaff, singing.

Fal. “When Arthur first in court came—Empty the jordan. And was a worthy king.” [Exeunt Drawers.

Host. How now, mistress Doll?

Doll. Sick of a calum: yes, good sooth.

Fal. So is all her sex; an they be once in a calum, they are sick.

Doll. You muddy rascal, is all that the comfort you give me?

Fal. You make fat rascals, mistress Doll.

Dol. I make them? glutony and diseases make them; I make them not.

Fal. If the cook help to make the glutony, you help to make the diseases, Doll: we catch of you, Doll, we catch of you; grant that, my pure* virtue, grant that.

Dol. Yes, joy*; our chains, and our jewels.

Fal. “Your brooches, pearls, and orewches.”*—for to serve bravely, is to come halting off, you know: to come off the breach with his pike bent bravely, and to surgery bravely; to venture upon the charged chambers bravely.

Dol. Hang yourself, you muddy conger, hang your- self*!

Host. By my troth, this is the old fashion: you tw never meet, but you fall to some discord. You are both, in good troth, as rhematic as two dry coasts: you cannot one bear with another’s confirmities. What the good year! one must bear, and that must be you are the weaker vessel; as they say, the empius vessel.

Dol. Can a weak empty vessel bear such a huge full hoghead? there’s a whole merchant’s venture of Boursenix stuff in him: you have not seen a hull better stuffed in the hold.—Come, I’ll be friends with thee, Jack: thou art going to the wars; and whether I shall ever see thee again, or no, there is nobody cares.

Re-enter Drawer.

Draw. Sir, ancient* Pistol’s below, and would speel with you.

Dol. Hang him, swaggering rascal! let him no come hither: it is the soul mouth’d out in Eng- land.

Host. If he swagger, let him not come here: no: my faith; I must live amongst my neighbours; I’ll na swaggerers. I am in good name and fame with the very best.—Shut the door; there comes no swaggerers here: I have not lived all this while, to have swag- gering now.—Shut the door, I pray you.

Fal. Dost thou hear, hostess?

Host. Pray you, pacify yourself, sir John: there comes no swaggerers here.

Fal. Dost thou hear? it is mine ancient.

Host. Tilly-valley, sir John, never tell me: you ancient swaggerer comes not in my doors. I was before master Tisici, the deputy, ’other day; and, a he said to me,—it was no longer ago than Wednesdays last,—“Neighbour Quickly,” says he,—master Dumour our minister, was by then:”—Neighbour Quickly, says he, “receive those that are civil; for,” said he, “you are in an ill name.”—now, he said so, I can’t whereupon: “for,” says he, “you are an honest woman and well thought on; therefore take heed what you receive: “receive,” says he, “no swaggering companiones.”—There comes none here:—you would bie to hear what he said:—No. I’ll no swaggerers.

Fal. He’s no swaggerer, hostess; a tame chase I’d faith; you may stroke him as gently as a puppy grym: he will not swagger with a Barney hen, if his feathers turn back in any show of resistance.—Ce le bed, draw up.

Host. Chester, call you him? I will bar no home man my house, nor no cheoster*: but I do not let swaggering: by my troth, I am the worse, when os says—swaggerer. Feel, masters, how I shake; look ye I warrant you.

Fal. So do you, hostess.

Host. Do I? yes, in very truth do I, an ’t were a aspen leaf. I cannot abide swaggerers.

Enter Pistol, Bardolph, and Page.

Pist. I will discharge upon her, sir John, with ty bullets.

Fal. She is pistol-proof, sir; you shall hardly off his.

Host. Come, I’ll drink no proofs, nor no bulles.

---

I'll drink no more than will do me good, for no man's pleasure, I.

Pist. Then to you, mistress Dorothy: I will charge you.

DoL. Charge me? I scorn you, servile companion. What! you poor, base, rascally, cheating, lack-linen mate! Away, you muddy rogue, away! I am meat for your master.

Pist. I know you, mistress Dorothy.

DoL. Away, you cut-purse rascal! you filthy bung, away! By this wine, I'll thrust my knife in your muddy chaps, an you play the saucy cuttle with me. Away, you bottle-ale rascal! you basket-hilt stroke jigger, you!—Since when, I pray you, sir?—God's light! with two points on your shoulder? much!

Pist. I will murder your ruff for this.

Fal. No more, Pistol: I would not have you go off here. Discharge yourself of our company, Pistol. — Host. No, good captain Pistol; not here, sweet captain.

DoL. Captain! thou abominable damned cheater, art thou not ashamed to be called captain? An captains were of my mind, they would trencheem you out, for taking their names upon you before you have earned them. Yon a captain, you slave! for what? for tearing a poor whore's ruff in a bawdy-house?—He a captain!—Hang him, rogue! He lives upon mouny stewed prunes, and dried cakes. A captain! these villains will make the word captain as odious as the word occupy, which was an excellent good word before it was ill sorted: therefore captains had need look to it.

Bard. Pray thee, go down, good ancient.

Pist. Hark thee, hither, mistress Doll.

Pist. No: I tell thee what, corporal Bardolph; I could tear her.—I'll be revenged of her.

Page. Pray thee, go down.

Pist. I'll see her dammed first;—to Pluto's damned lake, by this hand, to the infernal deep, with Erubus and tortures vile also. Hold hook and line, say I. Down? down, dogs! down fate! Have we not Hiren here?

Host. Good captain Peessel, be quiet; it is very late, i' faith. I beseech you now, aggravate your choler.

Pist. These be good homunculars! Indeed! Shall peck, and hollow-pamper'd jades of Asia, [horses, Which cannot go but thirty miles a day, Compare with Cassars, and with Cannibals, And Trojan Greeks? nay, rather damn them with King Cerberus, and let the welkin roar. Shall we fall foul for toys?

Host. By my troth, captain, these are very bitter words.

DoL. Begone, good ancient; this will grow to a squall about.

Pist. Die men, like dogs; give crowns like pins. Have we not Hiren here?

Host. On my word, captain, there's none such here. What the good year! do you think I would deny her? or God's sake, be quiet.

Pist. Then feed, and be fat, my fair Calipolis.

Some, give 'a some sack.

Fates for them formose, si sperare me contenta.—
Fear we broadsides? no, let the fiend give fire: give me some sack; and, sweetheart, lie thou there. [Laying down his sword.

Come we to full points here, and are et ceteras nothing? Fal. Pistol, I would be quiet.

Pist. Sweet knight, I kiss thy neif. —What! we have seen the seven starks.

DoL. For God's sake, thrust him down stairs: I cannot endure such a fustian rascal.

Pist. Thrust him down stairs! know we not Galloway nags?

Fal. Quoit him down, Bardolph, like a shove-grea shilling; nay, an he do nothing but speak nothing, he shall be nothing here.

Bard. Come, get you down stairs.

Pist. What! shall we have incision? shall we imbrue?

[Snatching up his sword.

Then, death, make me asleep, abridge my doleful days! Why then, let grievous, ghastly, gaping wounds Untwine the sisters three! Come, Atropose, I say! — Host. Here's goodly stuff towards!

Fal. Give me my rapier, boy.

DoL. I pray thee, Jack, I pray thee, do not draw.

Fal. Get you down stairs. —[Drawing.

Host. Here's a goodly tumult! I'll forewear keeping house, afore I'll be in these territs and frights. So; murder, I warrant now.—Alas, alas! put up your naked weapons; put up your naked weapons.

[Exeunt BARDOLPH and Pistol.

DoL. I pray thee, Jack, be quiet: the rascal is gone.

Ah! you whoreson little valiant villain, you.

Host. Are you not hurt? the groin? methought he made a shrewd thrust at your belly.

Re-enter BARDOLPH.

Fal. Have you turned him out of doors?

Bard. Yes, sir: the rascal's drunk. You have hurt him, sir, in the shoulder.

Fal. A rascal, to brave me!

DoL. Ah, you sweet little rogue, you! Alas, poor ape, how thou sweats! Come, let me wipe thy face;—come on, you whoreson chaps.—Ah, rogue! i' faith, I love thee. Thou art as valorous as Hector of Troy, worth five of Agamemnon, and ten times better than the nine worthies. Ah, villain!

Fal. A rascally slave! I will toss the rogue in a blanket.

DoL. Do, if thou darest for thy heart: if thou dost, I'll canvase thee between a pair of sheeats.

Enter Music.

Page. The music is come, sir.

Fal. Let them play.—Play, sirs.—Sit on my knee, Doll.—A rascal bragging slave! the rogue fled from me like quicksilver.

DoL. I' faith, and thou followedst him like a church.

Thou whoreson little tidy Bartholomew boar-pig, when with thou leave fighting o' days, and joining o' nights, and begin to hatch up thine old body for heaven?

[Enter behind, Prince HENRY and Poins, disguised like Drawers.

Fal. Peace, good Doll! do not speak like a death's head: do not bid me remember mine end.

DoL. Sirrah, what humour is the prince of?

Fal. A good shallow young fellow; he would have made a good pantler, he would have chipped bread well.

DoL. They say, Poins has a good wit.

Fal. He a good wit? hang him, baboon! his wit is as thick as Tewksbury mustard: there is no more conceit in him, than is in a mallet.

1 This speech is not in the folio. 2 The rest of this sentence, to the word "therefore," is not in the folio. 3 fates: in quarto; fatours, or mates. 4 A quotation from Marlowe's play of Tamerlane—they are addressed by the hero to the captive kings who drew his chart. 5 A mention from the play of "The Battle of Alcazar," probably by Peele. 6 Pist. The broad shilling of Edward VI.; the game, probably, resembled shuffe-board. 7 Beast pig was a favourite delicacy at Bartholomew Fair.
Dol. Why does the prince love him so, then?
Fal. Because their legs are both of a bigger; and he plays at quits well; and eats conger and fennel; and drinks off candles' ends for flap-drags; and rides the wild mare with the boys; and jumps upon joint-stools; and swears with a good grace; and wears his boot very smooth like unto the sign of the leg; and breeds no bate with telling of discreet stories; and such other gambol faculties he has, that show a weak mind and an able body, for which the prince admits him: for the prince himself is such another; the weight of a hair will turn the scales between their avoidous.
P. Hen. Would not this nave of a wheel have his ears cut off?
Points. Let's beat him before his whore.
P. Hen. Look, whether the withered elder hath not his poll clawed like a parrot.
Points. Is it not strange, that desire should so many years outlive performance?
Fal. Kiss me, Doll.
P. Hen. Saturn and Venus this year in conjunction! What am I in the almanack to that?
Points. And, look, whether the fiery Trigon, his man, be not clapping to his master's old tablois, his note-book, his counsel-keeper.
Fal. Thou dost give me flattering busses.
Dol. Nay, truly; I kiss thee with a most constant heart.
Fal. I am old, I am old.
Dol. I love thee better than I love eter a soury young boy of them all.
Fal. What stuff will have a kirtle of? I shall receive money on Thursday; thou shalt have a cap tomorrow. A merry song! come: it grows late; we'll to bed. Thou'lt forget me, when I am gone.
Dol. By my troth, thou'lt set me a weeping, an thou say'st so: prove that ever I dress myself handsome till thy return.—Well, hearken the end.
Fal. Some sack, Francis!
Fal. Ha! a bastard son of the king's.—And art not thou Points, his brother?
P. Hen. Why, thou globe of sinful continents, what a life dost thou lead.
Fal. A better than thou: I am a gentleman; thou art a drawer.
P. Hen. Very true, sir, and I come to draw you out by the ear.
Host. O, the Lord preserve thy good grace! by my troth, welcome to London.—Now, the Lord bless that sweet face of thine! O Jesus! are you come from Wales?
Fal. Thou worseron mad compound of majesty,—by this light flesh and corrupt blood, thou art welcome.
[Placing his hand upon Doll.
Points. My lord, he will drive you out of your revenge, and turn all to a Merriment, if you take not the heat.
P. Hen. You worseron candle-mine, you, how wiliey did you speak of me even now, before this honest, virtuous, civil gentlemowan. *
Host. God's blessing of your good heart! and so she is, by my troth.
Fal. Didst thou hear me?
P. Hen. Yes; and you knew me, as you did, when you ran away by Gad's-hill: you knew, I was at you back, and spoke it on purpose to try my patience.
Fal. No, no, no; not so; I did not think you within hearing.
P. Hen. I shall drive you, then, to confess the with abuse; and then I know how to handle you.
Fal. No abuse, Hal, on mine honour; no abuse.
P. Hen. Not to depreize me, and call me paisle and bread-chiper, and I know not what?
Fal. No abuse, Hal.
Points. No abuse!
Fal. No abuse, Ned, if the world: honest Ned, as I dispraise him before the wicked, that the web might not fall in love with him,—in which doth have done the part of a careful friend, and a true subject, and thy father is to give me thanks for it. abuse, Hal;—none, Ned, none;—no, 'faith boys, nor
P. Hen. See now, whether pure fear, and couerhide and cowardice, doth not make these wrong this virtuous gentlewoman to close with us? Is she of the wicks is thine hostess here of the wicked? Or is thy boy, the wicked? Or honest Bardolph, whose seal in his nose, of the wicked?
Points. Answer, thou dead elm, answer.
Fal. The feend hath pricked down Bardolph irre verably; and his face is Lucifer's privy keyt where he doth nothing but roast malt-worms. For boy,—there is a good angel about him, but the de outides' him too.
P. Hen. For the women?
Fal. For one of them, she is in hell already, a burns, poor soul. For the other, I owe her money; a what, she be damned for that, I know not.
Host. No, I warrant you.
Fal. No, I think thou art not; I think, thou art for that. Marry, there is another indictment upon for suffering flesh to be eaten in thy house, contrary to the law; for the which, I think, thou wolt have.
Host. All victuals do so: what's a joint of m on or two in a whole Lent?
P. Hen. You, gentlewoman,—
Dol. What says your grace?
Dol. His grace says that which his flesh re against.
[Knocking at
Host. Who knocks so loud at door? look to the there, Francis.

Enter Petro.

P. Hen. Petro, how now! what news?
Peto. The king your father is at Westminster, and there are twenty weak and weared posts come from the north; and as I came along I met, and overtook, a dozen captains, bare-headed, sweating, knocking at the taverns, and sitting every one for sir John Falstaff. [bes

P. Hen. By heaven, Pains, I feel me must So idly to profanne the precious time, When tempest of commotion, like the south Borne with black vapour, doth begin to melt, And drop upon our bare unarmed heads. Give me my sword, and cloak.—Falstaff, good night! [Exit. Prince Henry, Pains, Petro, Bardolph.

Fal. Now comes in the sweetest morsel of the si and we must hence, and leave it unpickes. [Kno hear.] More knocking at the door?

Re-enter Bardolph.

How now? what's the matter?
KING HENRY IV.

"Sord. You must away to court, sir, presently: I mean captains stay at door for you.

Fal. Pay the musicians, sirrah. [To the Page.—] Farewell, hostess;—farewell, Doll. You see, my good Sord. I cannot speak;—if my heart be not ready to writ. Well, sweet Jack, have a care of thyself.

Fal. Farewell, farewell. [Exeunt Fal. and Bard."

ACT III.

SCENE I.—A Room in the Palace.

Enter King Henry in his Nightgown, with a Page.

K. Hen. Go, call the earls of Surrey and of Warwick; let ere they come, bid them o'er-read these letters, and well consider of them. Make good speed.

[Exit Page."

How many thousand of my poorest subjects live at this hour asleep!—O sleep! O gentle sleep! My soul's soft nurse, how have I frightened thee, That thou no more wilt weigh my eyelids down, And keep my senses in forgivens. May rather, sleep, lies hast thou in smoky cribs, Upon weary pallets stretching thee; And budge with bustling night-dies to thy chamber, Than in the perfum'd chambers of the great. Under high canopies of costly state, And lull'd with sound of sweetest melody? Thou dull god! why liest thou with the vile, In beast's beds, and leave'st the kindly couch, A watch-case, or a common 'larm' bell. Wilt thou upon the high and giddy mast Seal up the ship-boy's eyes, and rock his brains In haste of the rude imperious surge, And in the visitation of the winds, Who take the ruffian billows by the top, Coiling their monstrous heads, and hanging them With leafing cloumours in the slipperry shrouds, That with the hurly death itself awakes? Canst thou, O partial sleep! give thy repose To the wet sea-boy in an hour so rude; And in the calmest and most still night, With all appanances and means to boot, Dost thou to a king? Then, happy low, lie down! So easy lies the head that wears a crown."

Enter Warwick and Surrey.

War. Many good morrows to your majesty!

K. Hen. Is it good morrow, lords?

War. 'Tis one o'clock, and past.

K. Hen. Why then, good morrow to you all, my lords.

Have you read o'er the letters that I sent you?

War. We have, my liege.

K. Hen. Then you perceive, the body of our kingdom for foul it is: what rank diseases grow, And with what danger, near the heart of it.

War. It is but a body, yet, distemper'd, Which to his former strength may be restored, With good advice, and little medicine. My Lord Northumberland will soon be cool'd.

K. Hen. O God! that one might read the book of fate.

Host. Well, fare thee well: I have known thee these twenty-nine years, come peacetime; but an homester, and truer-hearted man,—Well, fare thee well.

Bard. [Within.] Mistress Tear-sheet! Host. What's the matter?

Bard. [Within.] Bid Mistress Tear-sheet come to my master.

Host. O! run, Doll, run; run, good Doll: Come.—She comes blubbered.—Yes—will you come, Doll?

[Exeunt."

The rest of the speech is not in the folio. Dyce says, "She comes blubbered," is a stage direction. The in f. a clouds in f. a

Are fifty thousand strong.
War. It cannot be, my lord:
flame doth double, like the voice and echo,
The numbers of the fear'd.—Please it your grace,
To go to bed; upon my soul, my lord,
The powers that you already have sent forth,
Shall bring this prize in very easily.
To comfort you the more, I have receiv'd
A certain instance that Glendower is dead.
Your majesty hath been this fortnight ill,
And these unseason'd hours, perficers, must add
Unto your sickness.
K. Hen. I will take your counsel:
And were these inward wars once out of hand,
We would, dear lords, unto the Holy Land. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Court before Justice Shallow’s House in Gloucestershire.

Enter Shallow and Silence, meeting; Mouldy, Shal-ow, Wart, Feeble, Bull-calf, and Servants, behind.

Shal. Come on, come on, come on, sir; give me your hand, sir, give me your hand, sir: an early stirrer, by the rood. And how doth my good cousin Silence?
Sil. Good morrow, good cousin Shallow.
Shal. And how doth my cousin, your bedfellow? and your fairest daughter and mine, my god-daughter Ellen?
Sil. Alas! a black ouzel, cousin Shallow.
Shal. By yea and nay, sir; I dare say, my cousin William is become a good scholar. He is at Oxford, still, is he not?
Sil. Indeed, sir; to my cost.
Shal. He must then to the inns of court shortly. I was once of Clement’s inn; where, I think, they will talk of mad Shallow yet.
Sil. You were called lusty Shallow then, cousin.
Shal. By the mass, I was called any thing; and I would have done any thing, indeed, and roundly too.
There was I, and little John Doit of Staffordshire, and black George Barnes, and Francis Pickbone, and Will Squille, a Cotswold man; you had not four or six swingepluckers in all the inns of court again; and, I may say to you, we knew where the bana-robas were, and had the best of them all at commandment. Then was Jack Falstaff, now sir John, a boy, and page to Thomas Mowbray, duke of Norfolk. 1

Sil. This sir John, cousin, that comes hither anon about soldiers?
Shal. The same sir John, the very same. I saw him break Skogan’s head at the court gate, when he was a crack not thus high: and the very same day did I fight with one Sampson Stockfish, a fruiterer, behind Gray’s-inn. Jesu! Jesu! the mad days that I have spent! and to see how many of mine old acquaintance are dead!

Sil. We shall all follow, cousin.
Shal. Certain, it is certain; very sure, very sure:
death, as the Psalmist saith, is certain to all; all shall die. How a good yoke of bullocks at Stamford die?
Sil. Truly, cousin, I was not there.
Shal. Death is certain.—Is old Double of your town living yet?
Sil. Dead, sir.
Shal. Jesu! Jesu! Dead!—he drew a good bow;
—and dead!—he shot a fine shot:—John o’ Gaunt loved him well, and betted much money on his head.

1 This passage is cited to prove the identity of Falstaff with Sir John Oldcastle—the latter having been page to Mowbray. 2 The s of a jester. 3 Scogan’s Jest, or a pop. a book in Shakespeare’s time. 4 Hit the pin which held up the target, at twelve score pe everywhere: in folio. 5 Not in folio. 6 On folio.
Fal. Prick him.

Moul. I was prick'd well enough before, an you could have left me alone: my old dame will be undone for one to do her husbandry, and her drudgery. You need not to have prick'd me; there are other men to go out than I.

Fal. Go to, peace, Mouldy! you shall go. Mouldy, is a name you were spelt.

Mouldy. Spent!

Skal. Peace, fellow, peace! stand aside: know you where you are?—For the other, sir John:—let me see.

Simon Shadow.

Fal. Yes marry, let me have him to sit under: he's like to be a cold soldier.

Skal. Where's Shadow?

Skal. Here, sir.

Fal. Shadow, whose son art thou?

Skal. My mother's son, sir.

Fal. Thy mother's son! like enough; and thy father's shadow: so the son of the female is the shadow of the male. It is often so, indeed; but not of the father's substance.

Skal. Do you like him, sir John?

Fal. Shadow will serve for summer, prick him; for we have a number of shadows to fill up the master-book.

Skal. Thomas Wart!

Fal. Where's he?

Wart. Here, sir.

Fal. Is thy name Wart?

Wart. Yes, sir.

Fal. Thou art a very ragged wart.

Skal. Shall I prick him, sir John?

Fal. It were superfluous; for his apparel is built upon his back, and the whole frame stands upon pins: prick him no more.

Skal. Ha, ha, ha!—you can do it, sir; you can do it: I commend you well.—Francis Feeble!

Feeble. Here, sir.

Fal. What trade art thou, Feeble?

Feeble. A woman's tailor, sir.

Skal. Shall I prick him, sir?

Fal. You may; but if he had been a man's tailor, he would have prick'd you.—Will thou make as many holes in an enemy's battle, as thou hast done in a woman's Petticost?

Feeble. I will do my good will, sir: you can have no more.

Feeble. Well said, good woman's tailor! well said, courageous Feeble! Thou wilt be as valiant as the washful dove, or most magnanimous mouse.—Prick the woman's tailor well, master Shallow; deep master Shallow.

Wart. I would Wart might have gone, sir.

Wart. I would thou wert a man's tailor: thou mightest mend him, and make him fit to go. I cannot put him to a private soldier, that is the leader of so many thousands: let that suffice, most forcible Feeble.

Feeble. It shall suffice, sir.

Feeble. I am bound to thee, reverend Feeble.—Who is next?

Skal. Peter Bull-calf of the green!

Fal. Yes, marry, let us see Bull-calf.

Bull. Here, sir.

Fal. 'Fore God, a likely fellow!—Come, prick me Bull-calf till he roar again.

Bull. O lord! good my lord captain...

Fal. What, dost thou roar before thou art prick'd?

Bull. O Lord! sir, I am a diseased man.

Fal. What disease hast thou?
Shal. Sir John, the Lord bless you, and God prosper your affairs, and send us peace. At your return, visit our house. Let our old acquaintance be renewed: peradventure, I will with you to the court.

Ful. "Fare God. I would you would.

Shal. Go to; I have spoke at a word. Fare you well.

[Exeunt Shallow and Silence.

Ful. Fare you well, gentle gentlemen. On, Bardolph; lead the men away.

[Exeunt Bardolph, Recruits, &c.

As I return, I will fetch off these justices: I do see the bottom of justice Shallow. Lord, lord, how subject we old men are to this vice or lying! This same starved justice hath done nothing but prate to me of the wildness of his youth, and the fears he hath done about Turnbull-street; and every third word a lie, duer paid to the bearer than the Turk's tribute. I do remember him at Clement's-inn, like a man made after supper of a cheese-paring: when he was naked, he was, for all the world, like a fuddled rascal, with a head fantastically carved upon it with a knife: he was so forlorn, that his dimensions to any thick sight were invisible; he was the very genius of famine: yet lecherous as a monkey, and the whores called him—mandrake. He came ever in the rearward of the fashion: and sung those tunes to the over-scratched husbands that he heard the carmen whistle, and aware—they were his fancies, or his good-nights. And now is this Vice's dagger become a squire, and talks as familiarly of John of Gaunt, as if he had been a sworn brother to him; and I'll be sworn he never saw him but once in the Till-yard, and then he burst his head, for crowding among the marshal's men. I saw it; and told John of Gaunt, he beat his own name; for you might have thrust him, and all his apparel, into an ed-skin: the one of a treble handboy was a masque for him, a court; and now has he land and beeves. Well, I will be acquainted with him, if I return; and it shall go hard, but I will make him a philosopher's two stones to me. If the young dace be a bait for the old pike, I see no reason in the law of nature but I may snap at him. Let time shape, and there an end.

[Exit.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—A Forest in Yorkshire.

Enter the Archbishop of York, Mowbray, Hastings, and Others.

Arch. What is this forest call'd?

Hast. 'Tis a Gaultree forest, an't shall please your grace.

Arch. Hero stand, my lords; and send discoverers forth.

To know the numbers of our enemies.

Hast. We have sent forth already.

Arch. 'Tis well done.

My friends and brethren in these great affairs, I must acquaint you, that I have receive'd New-dated letters from Northumberland; their cold intent, tenour and substance, thus:—

Here doth he wish his person, with such powers

1 A wood-gun. 2 An exhibition of archery at Mile-end green, where the archers assumed the characters of King Arthur's round-table Sir Dagonet was the fool or buffoon. 3 Arthur's court. 4 As in the folio. 5 My in the folio. 6 Invincible: in f. o. Enter Westmoreland.
Arch. What well-appointed leader fronts us here? MOEB. I think it is my lord of Westmoreland.
WEST. Health and fair greeting from our general, The prince, lord John and duke of Lancaster.
Arch. Say on, my lord of Westmoreland, in peace, What doth concern your coming?
WEST. Then, my lord, I use your grace do I in chief address
The substance of my speech. If that rebellion
Comes like itself, in base and abject routs,
Led on by bloody youth. Such was the rage,
And countenanced by boys, and beggary;
I say, if dam'd commotion so appear'd,
In his true, native, and most proper shape,
You, reverend father, and these noble lords,
Had not been here, to dress the ugly form
Of base and bloody insurrection
To your fair honours. You, lord archbishop,
Where's see is by a civil peace maintain'd;
You heard the silver hand of peace hath touch'd;
You learnt and good letters peace hath tutor'd;
Whose white investments figure innocence,
The dire and very blessed spirit of peace,
Wherefore do you so ill translate yourself,
Out of the speech of peace, that bears such grace,
Into the harsh and boisterous tongue of war?
Turning your books to glaives, your ink to blood,
Your pens to lances, and your tongue divine
To a loud trumpet, and report of war?
ARCH. Wherefore is this?—so the question stands:
Ready to this end.―We are all diseas'd;
And, with our surfeiting, and wanton hours,
Have brought ourselves into a burning fever,
And we must bleed for it: of which disease
Our late king, Richard, being infected, died.
But, my most noble lord of Westmoreland,
Take not on me here as a physician,
Nor do I, as an enemy to peace,
Toop in the throats of military men;
But, rather, show a while like fearful war,
To diet rank minds, ill of haging arms,
And purge th' obstructions, which begin to stop
Our very veins of life. Hear me more plainly.
I have in equal balance justly weigh'd
What wrongs our arms may do, what wrongs we suffer,
And find our grieves heavier than our offences.
We see which way the stream of time doth run,
And are enforc'd from our most quiet chair*
By the rough torrent of occasion;
And we have the summary of all our griefs,
These time shall serve, to show in articles,
Which long ere this, we offer'd to the king,
And might by no suit gain an audience.
Then, we are wrong'd, and would unfold our griefs,
Are denied access unto his person,
Even by those men that most have done us wrong.
Be dangers of the days but newly gone,
Those memory is written on the earth
Yet appearing blood, and the examples
Every minute's instance, present now,
Are put us in, in these bloody arms, to
To break peace, or any branch of it,
To establish here a peace indeed,
Becoming both in name and quality.
WEST. When ever yet was your appeal denied?

Wherein have you been galled by the king?
What peer hath been suborn'd to grate on you,
That you should seal this lawless bloody book
Of forg'd rebellion with a seal divine,
And consecrate commotion's bitter edge?9

ARCH. My brother general, the commonwealth,
To brother born an household cruelty*10
I make my quarrel in particular.
WEST. There is no need of any such redress;
Or, if there were, it not belongs to you.
MOEB. Why not to him, in part, and to us all,
That feel the brunt of this base commotion,
And suffer the condition of these times
To lay a heavy and unequal hand
Upon our honours?
WEST. O! my good lord Mowbray,11
Construe the times to their necessities,
And if you shall say indeed, it is the time,
And not the king, that doth you injuries.
Yet, for your part, it not appears to me,
Either from the king, or in the present time,
That you should have an inch of any ground
To build a grief on. Were you not restor'd
To all the duke of Norfolk's signories,
Your noble and right-well-remember'd father's?
MOEB. What thing, in honour, had my father lost,
That need to be reviv'd, and breath'd in me?
The king that lov'd him, as the state stood then,
Was, force performe, compell'd to banish him:
And when that Harry Bolingbroke, and he,
Being mounted, and both roused in their seats,
Their neighing courser daring of the spur,
Their armed staves in charge, their beavers down,
Their eyes of fire sparkling through sights of steel,
And the loud trumpet blowing them together;
Then, then, when there was nothing could have stay'd
My father from the breast of Bolingbroke,
O! when the king did throw his warder down,
His own life hung upon the staff he threw:
Then threw he down himself, and all their lives,
That, by indictment, and by dint of sword,
Have since mislaid from bounds, Bolingbroke.
WEST. You speak, lord Mowbray, now you know not what.
The earl of Hereford was reputed, then,
In England the most valiant gentleman:
Who knows, on whom fortune would then have smil'd?
But if your father had been victor there,
He ne'er had borne it out of Coventry;
For all the country, in a general voice,
Cried hate upon him; and all their prayers, and love,
Were set on Hereford, whom they doted on,
And bless'd, and grac'd, indeed, more than the king.
But this is mere digression from my purpose.
Here come I from our princely general,
To know your griefs; to tell you from his grace,
That he will give you audience; and wherein
It shall appear that your demands are just,
You shall enjoy them; every thing set off,
That might so much as think you enemies.
MOEB. But he hath for'd us to compel this offer,
And it proceedeth, in these bloody arms.
WEST. Mowbray, you overween, to take it so.
This offer comes from mercy, not from fear;
For, lo! within a ken our army lies,
Upon mine honour, all too confident
To give admittance to a thought of fear.
Our battle is more full of names than yours,
Our men more perfect in the use of arms,
Our armour all as strong, our cause the best:
Then, reason will our hearts should be as good;
Say you not, then, our offer is compell'd?

MOEB. Well, by my will, we shall admit no parley.
WEST. That argues but the shame of your offence:
A rotten case abides no handling here.

HAST. Hath the prince John a full commission,
In very ample virtue of his father,
To hear, and absolutely to determine
Of what conditions we shall stand upon?
WEST. That is intended in the general's name.
I muse you make so slight a question.

ARCH. Then take, my lord of Westmoreland, this schedule,
For this contains our general grievances:
Each several article herein redress'd;
All members of our cause, both here and hence,
That are insinu'd to this action,
Acquitted by a true substantial form;
And present execution of our wills
To us, and to our purposes, confin'd;
We come within our awful banks again,
And knit our powers to the arm of peace.
WEST. This will I show the general. Please you, lords,
In sight of both our battles we may meet:
And either end in peace, which God doth frame,
Or to the place of difference call the swords
Which must decide it.

ARCH. My lord, we will do so. [Exit WEST.
MOEB. There is a thing within my bosom tells me,
That no conditions of our peace can stand.

HAST. Fear you not that: if we can make our peace
Upon such large terms, and so absolute,
As our conditions shall consist upon,
Our peace shall stand as firm as rocky mountains.

MOEB. Ay, but our valuation shall be such,
That every slight and false-derived cause,
Yes, every idle, nice, and wanton reason,
Shall to the king taste of this action:
That were our royal faiths martyrs in love,
We shall be winnow'd with so rough a wind,
That even our corn shall seem as light as chaff,
And grist from bad find no partition.

ARCH. No, no, my lord. Note this,—the king is weary
Of dainty and such picking grievances:
For he hath found, to end one doubt by death
Revives two greater in the heirs of life.
And therefore will he wipe his tables clean,
And keep no tell-tale to his memory,
That may repeat and history his loss
To new remembrance. For full well he knows,
He cannot so precisely weed this land,
As his misdoubts present occasion:
His foes are so enrooted with his friends,
That, plucking to unfix an enemy,
He doth unfasten so, and shake a friend.
So that this land, like an offensive wife,
That hath estrag'd him 2 to offer strokes,
As he is striking, holds his infant up,
And hangs resolv'd correction in the arm
That was usurpt to execution.

HAST. Besides, the king hath wasted all his rods
On late offenders, that he now doth lack
The very instruments of chastisement;
So that his power, like to a fangless lion,
May offer, but not hold.

ARCH. 'Tis very true:
And therefore be assur'd, my good lord marshal,
If we do now make our atonement well,
Our peace will, like a broken limb united,
Grow stronger for the breaking.

MOEB. Here is return'd my lord of Westmoreland.

WEST. The prince is here at hand. Pleadeth you,
To meet his grace just distance 'tween our armies?

MOEB. Your grace of York, in God's name then, set forward.

ARCH. Before, and greet his grace, my lord: we come.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Another Part of the Forest.

ENTER, FROM ONE SIDE, MOWBRAY, THE ARCHBISHOP, HASTINGS, AND OTHERS: FROM THE OTHER SIDE, PRINCE LOUIS OF LANCASTER, WESTMORELAND, OFFICERS AND ATTENDANTS.

P. JOHN. You are well encounter'd here, my cousin Mowbray.

MOEB. Good day to you, gentle lord archbishop;
And so to you, lord Hastings,—and to all.—
My lord of York, it better shou'd with you
When that your flock, assembled by the bell,
Encircled you to hear with reverence
Your exposition on the holy text,
Than now to see you here an iron man,
Cheering a rout of rebels with your drum,
Turning the word to sword, and life to death.
That man, that sits within a monarch's heart,
And ripes in the sunshine of his favour,
Would he abuse the countenance of the king,
Alack! what mischiefs might be set abroach,
In shadow of such greatness. With you, lord bishop,
It is even so. Who hath not heard it spoken,
How deep you were within the books of God?
To us, the speaker in his parliament;
To us, th' imagin'd voice of God himself;
The very opener and intelligence,
Between the grace, the sanctities of heaven,
And our dull workings: O! who shall believe,
But you minis't the reverence of your place,
Empowering the countenance and grace of heaven,
As a false favourite doth his prince's name,
In deeds dishonourable? You have taken up,
Under the counterfeit seal 3 of God,
The subjects of his substitute, my father;
And, both against the peace of heaven and man,
Have here up-awarm'd them.

ARCH. Good my lord of Lancaster:
I am not here against your father's peace;
But, as I told my lord of Westmoreland,
The time disorder'd doth, in common sense,
Crowd us, and crush us to this monstrous form
To hold our safety up. I sent your grace
The parcels and particulars of our griefs;
The which have been with scorn shov'd 4 from the court
Whereon this Hydras-son of war is born;
Whose dangerous eyes may well be charm'd asleep,
With grant of our most just and right desires,
And true obedience, of this madness cur'd,
Snoop tamely to the foot of majesty.

MOEB. If not, we ready are to try our fortunes
To the last man.

1 Malone, and most mod. eds. read: consign'd. 2 estrag'd him on: in f. s. 3 seal: in f. s.
KING HENRY IV.

SCENE II.

Hast. And though we here fall down,
We have supplies to second our attempt;
If they miscarry, theirs shall second them;
And so success of mischief shall be born,
And heir from heir shall hold this quarrel up,
While England shall have generation.

P. John. You are too shallow, Hastings, much too shallow,
To sound the bottom of the after-times.

West. Pleadeth your grace, to answer them directly,
How far-forth you do like their articles.

P. John. I like them all, and do allow them well:
And swear, here, by the honour of my blood,
My father's purposes have been mistook;
And some about him have too lavishly
Wrested his meaning, and authority.—
My lord, these griefs shall be with speed redress'd;
Upon my soul, they shall. If this may please you,
Discharge your powers unto their several counties,
As we will ours; and here, between the armies,
Let's drink together friendly, and embrace,
That all their eyes may bear those tokens home
Of our restored love, and amity.

Arch. I take your princely word for these redresses.

P. John. I give it you, and will maintain my
And thereupon I drink unto your grace. [word:

Hast. Go, captain, [To an Officer] and deliver to the army

This news of peace: let them have pay, and part.
I know, it will please them: his thee, captain.

[Exit Officer.

Arch. To you, my noble lord of Westmoreland;
[Drinks.]

West. I pledge your grace: [Drinks.]* and, if you knew what pains
I have bestow'd to breed this present peace,
You would drink freely; but my love to you
Shall show itself more openly hereafter.

Arch. I do not doubt you.

West. I am glad of it.—

Health to my lord, and gentle cousin, Mowbray.
[Drinks.]

Mowb. You wish me health in very happy season;
For I am, on the sudden, something ill.

Arch. Against ill chances men are ever merry,
But heaviness foreruns the good event.

West. Therefore be merry, coz; since sudden sorrow
Serves to say thus,—some good things come to-morrow.

Arch. Believe me, I am passing light in spirit.

Mowb. So much the worse, if your own rule be true.

[Shouts within.

P. John. The word of peace is render'd. Hark, how they shout!

Mowb. This had been cheerful, after victory.

Arch. A peace is of the nature of a conquest,
For then both parties nobly are subdued,
And neither party loser.

P. John. Go, my lord,
And let our army be discharged too.—

[Exit Westmoreland.

And good my lord, so please you, let your trains
Much by us, that we may peruse the men
We should have cop'd withal.

Arch. Go, good lord Hastings;
And, ere they be dismiss'd, let them march by.

[Exit Hastings.

P. John. I trust, lords, we shall lie to-night togethers.

Re-enter Westmoreland.

Now, cousin, what before stands our army still?
West. The leaders having charge from you to stand
Will not go off until they hear you speak.

P. John. They know their duties.

Hast. My lord, our army is dispers'd already,*
Like youthful steers unyoked, they take their courses
East, west, north, south; or, like a school broke up,
Each hurries towards his home and sporting-place:—

West. Good tidings, my lord Hastings; for the which I do assure thee, traitor, of high treason:—

And you, lord archbishop,—and you, lord Mowbray;
Of capital treason I attach you both.

Mowb. Is this proceeding just and honourable?

West. Is your assembly so?

Arch. Will you thus break your faith?

P. John. I again thee none
I promis'd you redress of these some grievances,
Whereof you did complain; which, by mine honour,
I will perform with a most Christian care.

But, for you, rebels, look to taste the due
Meet for rebellion,* and such acts as yours.
Most shallowly did you these arms commence,
Fondly brought here, and foolishly sent hence.—
Strike up our drums! pursue the scatter'd stray;
Heaven, and not we, hath safely sought to-day.—
Some guard these traitors to the block of death:
Treason's true bed, and yeilder up of breath. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Another Part of the Forest.

Alarums; Excursions. Enter Falstaff and Cook, meeting.

Fal. What's your name, sir? of what condition are you; and of what place, I pray?

Cole. I am a knight, sir; and my name is Colevile of the dale.

Fal. Well then, Colevile is your name, a knight is your degree, and your place, the dale: Colevile shall still be your name, a traitor your degree, and the dungeon your dale,—a dale deep enough; so shall you be still Colevile of the dale.

Cole. Are you not sir John Falstaff?

Fal. As a good a man as he, sir, who'er I am. Do ye yield, sir, or shall I sweat for you? If I do sweat, they are the drops of thy lovers, and they weep for thy death: therefore, ruspe up fear and trembling, and do observance to my mercy.

Cole. I think, you are sir John Falstaff, and in that thought yield me.

Fal. I have a whole school of tongues in this belly of mine, and not a tongue of them all speaks any other word but my name. An I had but a belly of any indifferency, I were simply the most active fellow in Europe: my womb, my womb, my womb undoez me.

—Here comes our general.

Enter Prince John of Lancaster, Westmoreland, and Others.

P. John. The heat is past, follow no farther now.

[Call in the powers, good cousin Westmoreland.—

[Exit West.

Now, Falstaff, where have you been all this while? When every thing is ended, then you come: These tardy tricks of yours will, on my life, One time or other break some gallows' back.

Fal. I would be sorry, my lord, but it should be thus: I never knew yet, but rebuke and check was the reward of valour. Do you think me a swallow, an arrow, or a bullet? have I, in my poor and old

* Not in f. . * In the folio, this line has only: Our army is dispers'd. * The rest of the line is not in the quarto. * ? place: in f.
motion, the expedition of thought? I have speeded hither with the very extremest inch of possibility: I have foundered nine-score and odd posts; and here, travel-tainted as I am, have, in my pure and immaculate valour, taken sir John Coleville of the dale, a most furious knight, and valorous enemy. But what of that? he saw me, and yielded: that I may justly say with the hook-nosed fellow of Rome, I came, saw, and overcame.

"P. John. It was more of his courteous than your deserving.

"Fal. I know not: here he is, and here I yield him, and I beseech your grace, let it be booked with the rest of this day's deeds; or, by the lord, I will have it in a particular ballad close, with mine own picture on the top of it, Coleville kisirng my foot. To the which course if I be enforced, if you do not all show like gilt two-pence to me, and I, in the clear sky of fame, o'ershine you as much as the full moon doth the cin-ders of the element, which show like pins' heads to her, believe not the word of the noble. Therefore let me have right, and let desert mount.

"Fal. Thine's too heavy to mount.

"Fal. Let it shine then.

"Fal. Thine's too thick to shine.

"Fal. Let it do something, my good lord, that may do me good, and call it what you will.

"P. John. Is thy name Coleville?

"Col. It is, my lord.

"P. John. A famous rebel art thou, Coleville.

"Fal. And a famous true subject took him.

"Cole. I am, my lord, but as my betters are, that led me hither: had they been ruled by me, you should have won them dearer than you have.

"Fal. I know not how they sold themselves, but thou, like a kind fellow, gavest thyself away gratis; and I thank thee for thee.

"Re-enter WESTMORELAND.

"P. John. Now, have you left pursuit?

"West. Retreat is made, and execution stay'd.

"P. John. Send Coleville, with his confederates, To York, to present execution.—
Blunt, lead him hence, and see you guard him sure.

"[Exit. COLEVILLE, guarded.

And now despatch we towards the court, my lords. I hear, the king my father is sore sick:
Our news shall go before us to his majesty.—
Which, cousin, you shall bear,—to comfort him;
And we with sober speed will follow you.

"Fal. My lord. I beseech you, give me leave to go through Glosstershire; and, when you come to court, stand my good lord, pray, in your good report.

"P. John. Fare you well, Falstaff; I, in my condition.

Shall better speak of you than you deserve. [Exit.

"Fal. I would, you had but the wit: 'twere better than your dukedom.—Good faith, this same young sober-blooded boy doth not love me, nor a man cannot make him laugh; but that's no marvel, he drinks no wine. There's never any of these demure boys come to any proof, for thin drink doth so over-cool their blood, and making many fish-meals, that they fall into a kind of male green-sickness: and then, when they marry, they get wenchers. They are generally fools and scoundrels, which some of us should be too, but for inflammation. A good sherris-sack hath a two-fold operation in it: it ascends me into the brain; dries me there all the foolish, and dull, and cruddy vapours which environ it; makes it apprehensive, quick, forgetive, full of nimble, fiery, and delectable shapes; which, deliver'd o'er to the voice, (the tongue) which is the birth, becomes excellent wit. The second property of your excellent sherris is, the warming of the blood; which, before cold and settled, left the liver white and pale, which is the badge of pusillanimity and cowardice: but the sherris warms it, and makes it course from the inwards to the parts extreme. It illumineth the face, which, as a beacon, gives warning to all the rest of this little kingdom, man, to arm: and then the vital commoners, and inland petty spirits, muster me all to their captain, the heart, who, great, and puffed up with this reitnue, doth any deed of courage; and this valour comes of sherris. So that skill in the weapon is nothing without sack, for that sets it a-work; and learning, a mere hoard of gold kept by a devil, till sack commences it, and sets it in act and use. Hereof comes it, that prince Harry is valiant: for the cold blood he did naturally inherit of his father, he hath, like lean, sterile, and bare land, manured, husbanded, and tilled, with excellent endeavours of drinking good, and good store of fertile sherris, that he is become very hot, and valiant. If I had a thousand sons, the first human principle I would teach them should be, to fear-shew thin potato, and to addict themselves to sack.

Enter BARDOLPH.

How now, Bardolph?

"Bard. The army is discharged all, and gone.

"Fal. Let them go. I'll through Glosstershire; and there will I visit master Robert Shallow, esquire: I have him already tempering between my finger and my thumb, and shortly will I seal with him. Come away.

[Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—Westminster. A Room in the Palace.

Enter King Henry, Clarence, Prince Humphrey, Warwick, and Others.

K. Hen. Now, lords, if God doth give successful end To this debate that bleedeth at our doors, We will our youth lead on to higher fields.
And draw no swords but what are sanctified. Our navy is address'd, our power collected, Our substitutes in absence, well invested, And every thing lies level to our wish: Only, we want a little personal strength, And pause us, till these rebels, now afoot, Come underneath the yoke of government.

War. Both which, we doubt not but your majesty Shall soon enjoy.

K. Hen. Humphrey, my son of Glos, Where is the prince your brother?

P. Humph. I think, he's gone to hunt, my lord, a Windsor.

K. Hen. And how accompanied?

P. Humph. I do not know, my lord.

K. Hen. Is not his brother, Thomas of Clarence, with him?

P. Humph. No, my good lord: he is in presence here

Cl. What would my lord and father?

K. Hen. Nothing but well to thee, Thomas of Clarence.

How chance thou art not with the prince thy brother? He loves thee, and thou dost neglect him, Thomas. Thou hast a better place in his affection Than all thy brothers: cherish it, my boy, And noble offices thou may'st effect Of mediation, after I am dead, Between his greatness and thy other brethren. Therefore omit him not: blunit not his love,
K. Hen. O Westmoreland! thou art a summer bird, Which ever in the haunch of winter sings.

The lifting up of day. [Enter Harcourt.] Look! here's more news.

Har. From enemies heaven keep your majesty; And, when they stand against you, may they fall As those that I am come to tell you of.
The Earl Northumberland, and the Lord Bardolph, With a great power of English, and of Scots, Are by the sheriff of Yorkshire overthrown.
The manner and rude order of the fight.
This packet, please you, contains at large.

[Giving a packet.]

K. Hen. And wherfore should those good news make me sick?

Will fortune never come with both hands full, But write her fair words still in foulest letters? She either gives a stomach, and no food,—
Such are the poor, in health; or else a feast,
And takes away the stomach,—such are the rich,
That have abundance, and enjoy it not. I should rejoice now at this happy news,
And now my sight fails, and my brain is giddy.—

O me! come near me; now I am much ill. [Falls back.]

P. Humph. Comfort, your majesty!

Cla. O my royal father!

West. My sovereign lord, cheer up yourself: look up!

War. Be patient, princes: you do know, these fits Are with his highness very ordinary.

Stand from him, give him air; he 'll straight be well.

Cla. No, no; he cannot long hold out these pangs.
The incessant care and labour of his mind Hath wrought the mure, that should confine it in.
So thin, that life looks through, and will break out.

P. Humph. The people fear me,° for they do observe Unfather'd heirs, and lostly births of nature:
The seasons change their manners, as the year
Had found some months asleep, and leap'd them over.

Cla. The river hath thrice flow'd, no ebb between;
And the old folk, time's doting chronicles, Say, it did so, a little time before.

That our great grandsire, Edward, sick'd and died.

War. Speak lower, princes, for the king recovers.

P. Humph. This apoplexy will, certain, be his end.

K. Hen. I pray you, take me up, and bear me hence Into some other chamber: softly, pray.

[They place the King on a Bed in an inner part of the room.]

Let there be no noise made, my gentle friends; Unless some dull and favourable hand
Will whisper music to my weary spirit.

War. Call for the music in the other room.

K. Hen. Set me the crown upon my pillow here.

Cla. His eye is hollow, and he changes much.

War. Less noise, less noise!

Enter Prince Henry.

P. Hen. Who saw the duke of Clarence?

Cla. I am here, brother, full of heaviness.

P. Hen. How now! rain within doors, and none abroad?

How doth the king?

P. Humph. Exceeding ill.

P. Hen. Heard he the good news yet?

Tell it him.

P. Humph. He alter'd much upon the hearing it.

P. Hen. If he be sick with joy, he will recover Without physick.

*This its.° Tireperament. * The rest of this line is not in the quarto.  Not in f. a. * Seeoms: in f. a. ° Daniel (Orliq Warr, lir. 1, see. 110), speaking of the illness of Henry IV., says: Wearing the wall so thin, that now the mind, Might wall look thorough, and his frailty find.

SECOND PART OF

ACT IV.

War. Not so much noise, thy lords.—Sweet prince, speak low;
The king your father is dispose’d to sleep.
Cla. Let us withdraw into the other room.
War. Will ’t please your grace to go along with us?
P. Hen. No; I will sit and watch here by the king.

[Exeunt all but Prince Henry.

Why doth the crown lie there, upon his pillow, Being so troublesome a bedfellow? O polish’d perturbation! golden care!
That keepst the ports of Slumber open wide To many a watchful night, sleep with it now! Yet not so sound, and half so deeply sweet As he, whose brow with homely biggin bound, Snores out the watch of night. O majesty! As when thou dost pinch thy bearer, thou dost sit Like a rich armour worn in heat of day, That scales with safety.—By his gates of breath There lies a downey feather, which stirs not:
Did he aspire, that light and weightless down Perform must move—My gracious lord! my father!—This sleep is sound indeed; this is a sleep, That from this golden ring! hath divorc’d So many English kings. Thy due from me Is tears and heavy sorrows of the blood, Which nature, love, and filial tenderness, Shall, O dear father! pay thee plenteously: My due from thee is this imperial crown, Which, as immediate from thy place and blood, Derives itself to me.—Lo! here it stirs, [Putting it on his head.

Which heaven shall guard; and put the world’s whole strength Into one giant arm, it shall not force
This lineal honour from me. This from thee Will I to mine leave, as ’tis left to me. [Exit.
K. Hen. Warwick! Gloster! Clarence!—
Re-enter Warwick, and the rest.

Cla. Doth the king call?
War. What would your majesty? How farce your grace?

K. Hen. Why did you leave me here alone, my lords?
Cla. We let the prince, my brother, here, my liege, Who undertook to sit and watch by you.
K. Hen. The prince of Wales? Where is he? let me see him:
He is not here.
War. The door is open; he is gone this way.
P. Humph. He came not through the chamber where we stay’d.
K. Hen. Where is the crown? who took it from my pillow?
War. When we withdrew, my liege, we left it here.
K. Hen. The prince hath ta’en it hence:—go, seek him out.
Is he so hasty, that he doth suppose My sleep my death?—
Find him, my lord of Warwick; chide him hither.

[Exit Warwick.

This part of his conjoins with my disease, And helps to end me.—See, sons, what things you are; How quickly nature falls into revolt, When gold becomes her object. For this the foolish over-careful fathers Have broke their sleep with thoughts, Their brains with care, their bones with industry: For this they have engrossed and pit’d up The canonker’d heaps of strange-achieved gold; For this they have been thoughtful to invest Their sons with arts, and martial exercises; When, like the bee, tolling from every flower The virtuous sweets, *
Our thighs pack’d with wax, our mouths with honey, We bring it to the hive, and like the bees, Are murder’d for our pains. This bitter taste Yield his engrossments to the ending father.—
Re-enter Warwick.
Now, where is he that will not stay so long, Till his friend sickness’ hands determine me?
War. My lord, I found the prince in the next room, Washing with kindly tears his gentle cheeks; With such a deep demeanour in great sorrow, That tyranny, which never quaff’d but blood, Would, by beholding him, have wash’d his knife With gentle eye-drops. He is coming hither.
K. Hen. But wherfore did he take away the crown?
Re-enter Prince Henry.
Lo, where he comes.—Come hither to me, Harry.—
Depart the chamber, leave us here alone.

[Exeunt Clarence, Prince Humphrey, Lords. &c.
P. Hen. I never thought to hear you speak again.
K. Hen. Thy wish was father, Harry, to that thought I stay too long by thee, I weary thee. Dost thou so hunger for mine empty chair, That thou wilt needs invest thee with mine honours? Before thy hour be ripe? O foolish youth, Thou seek’st the greatness that will overwhelm thee! Stay but a little: for my cloud of dignity Is held from falling with so weak a wind, That it will quickly drop: my day is dim.
Thou hast sol’n that, which, after some few hours, Were thine without offence, and at my death Thou hast seal’d up my expectation: Thy life did manifest thou lovest me not, And thou wilt have me die assured of it.
Thou hidst a thousand daggers in thy thoughts, Which thou hast whetted on thy stony heart, To stab at half an hour of my life.
What! canst thou not forbear me half an hour? Then get thee gone, and dig my grave thyself, And bid the merry bells ring to thine ear That thou art crowned, not that I am dead. Let all the tears that should bedew my hearse, Be drops of balm to sanctify thy head; Only compound me with forgotten dust: Give that which gave the life to the worms Pluck down my officers, break my decrease; For now a time is come to mock at form. Harry the fifth is crown’d!—Up, vanity! Down, royal state! all you sage counsellors, hence; And to the English court assemble now, From every region, apex of idleness! Now, neighbour confine, purge you of your scum: Have you a ruffian that will swear, drink, dance, Revel the night, rob, murder, and commit The oldest sins the newest kind of ways? Be happy, he will trouble you no more: England shall double gild his treble guilt, England shall give him office, honour, might; For the fifth Harry from curb’d licence plucks The muzzle of restraint, and the wild dog Shall flesh his tooth in every innocent. O my poor kingdom, sick with civil blows! When that my care could not withthold thy riots, What wilt thou do when rich thy care? O! thou wilt be a wilderness again, 1 rigid: in f. e.; the word means, a circle. 2 where: in quarto. 3 calling: in folio. 4 This: ne is not in the quarto. 5 hath: in folio. 6 Bedes.
SCENE I.

KING HENRY IV.

Peopled with wolves, thy old inhabitants.

F. Hen. O, pardon me, my liege! but for my tears,

The most impediments unto my speech,
I had forestal'd this dear and deep rebuke,
Ex you with grief had spoke, and I had heard
The course of it so far. There is your crown;
And he that wears the crown immortally,
Lest guard it yours! if I affect it more,
Than as your honour, and as your renown,
Let me no more from this obedience rise,
Which my truest and inward duteous spirit
Took up, the prostrate and exterior bending
Heaven witness with me, when I here came in,
And found no course of breath within your majesty,
How cold it struck my heart! if I do feign,
O! let me in my present wilderness die,
And never live to show th' incredulous world
The noble change that I have purposed.
Cenning to look on you, thinking you dead,
And dead almost, my liege, to think you were,
I spake unto the crown, as having sense,
And thos upbraided it: "The care on thee depending,
Had fed upon the body of my father;
Therefore, thou, best of gold, art worst of gold.
Other, less fine in carat, is more precious,
Preserving life in medicine potable:
But thou, most fine, most honour'd, most renown'd,
Hast eat thy bearer up." Thus, my most royal liege,
Accursing it, I put it on my head;
To try with it, as with an enemy
That had before my face murder'd my father,
The quarrel of a true inheritor:
But if it did infect my blood with joy,
Or well my thoughts to any strain of pride;
Nay rebel or vain spirit of mine
Did, with the least affection of a welcome,
Give entertainment to the weight of it,
Let God for ever keep it from my head,
And make me as the poorest vassal is,
That doth with awe and terror knell to it!
F. Hen. O my son!!

God put it in thy mind to take it hence,
That thou mightst win the more thy father's love,
Fleeting so wisely in excuse of it.
Come hither, Harry; sit thou by my bed,
And hear, I think, the very latest counsel
That ever I shall breathe. God knows, my son,
By what by-paths, and indirect crook'd ways,
I met this crown; and I myself know well
How troublesome it sat upon my head:
That to it shall descend with better quiet,
Better opinion, better confirmation;
For all the soil of the achievement goes
With me into the earth. It seem'd in me,
But as an honour snatch'd with boisterous hand,
And I had many living to upbraid
My gain of it by their assistance;
Whil's daily grew to quarrel, and to bloodshed,
Wounding suppressed peace. All these bold fears,
Thou seest, with peri! I have answered;
For all my reign hath been but as a scene
Acting that argument, and now my death
Changes the mode: for what in me was purchase,
Falls upon thee in a more fairer sort;
So, thou the garland wear'st successively.
Yet, though thou stand'st more sure than I could do,
Thou art not firm enough; since griefs are green,
And all thy friends, which thou must make thy friends,
Have but their stings and teeth newly ta'en out;
By whose fell working I was first advanc'd,
And by whose power I well might lodge a fear
To be again displac'd. Which to avoid,
I cut some off; and had a purpose now
To lead out many to the Holy Land,
Lest rest, and lying still, might make them look Too near unto my state. Therefore, my Harry,
Be it thy course to busy giddy minds
With foreign quarrels; that action, hence borne out,
May waste the memory of the former days.
More would I, but my lungs are wasted so,
That strength of speech is utterly denied me.
How I came by the crown, O God, forgive,
And grant it may with thee in true peace live!

P. Hen. My gracious liege,

You won it, wore it, kept it, gave it me;
Then plain, and right, must my possession be:
Which, I with more than with a common pain,
'Gainst all the world will rightfully maintain.

Enter Prince John of Lancaster, Warwick, Lords, and Others.

P. Hen. My gracious liege,

You won it, wore it, kept it, gave it me;
Then plain, and right, must my possession be:
K. Hen. Thou bring'st me happiness, and peace, son
John:

But health, alack, with youthful wings is flown
From this bare, with'er'd trunk: upon thy sight,
My worldly business makes a period.

Where is my lord of Warwick?

P. Hen. My lord of Warwick!

K. Hen. Doth any name particular belong
Unto the lodging where I first did swoon?
War. 'Tis call'd Jerusalem, my noble lord.
K. Hen. Laud be to God!—even there my life must end.

It hath been prophesied to me many years,
I should not die but in Jerusalem,
Which vainly I suppose'd the Holy Land.—
But bear me to that chamber; there I'll lie:
In that Jerusalem shall Harry die.

[Exeunt

—ACT V.—

Enter Shallow, Falstaff, Bardolph, and Page.

Shal. By cock and pie, sir, you shall not away to-right.—What, Davy, I say!

Fal. You must excuse me, master Robert Shallow.

Shal. I will not excuse you; you shall not be excused; excuses shall not be admitted; there is no excess shall serve; you shall not be excused.—Why, Davy!
Enter Davy.

Davy. Here, sir.

Shal. Davy, Davy, Davy, Davy,—let me see, Davy; let me see:—yea, marry, William cook, bid him come hither.—Sir John, you shall not be excused.

Davy. Marry, sir, thus; those precepts cannot be served: and, again, sir,—shall we sow the headland with wheat?

Shal. With red wheat, Davy. But for William cook:—are there no young pigeons?

Davy. Yes, sir. Here is, now, the smith's note for shoeing, and plough irons.

Shal. Let it be cast, and paid.—Sir John, you shall not be excused.

Davy. Now, sir, a new link to the bucket must needs be had:—and, sir, do you mean to stop any of William's wages, about the sack he lost the other day at Hinckley fair?

Shal. He shall answer it.—Some pigeons, Davy; a couple of short-legged hens, a joint of mutton, and any pretty little tiny kickshaws, tell William cook.

Davy. Doth the man of war stay all night, sir?

Shal. Yes, Davy. I will use him well. A friend i' the court is better than a penny in purse. Use his men well, Davy, for they are arrant knaves, and will backbite.

Davy. No worse than they are back bitten* air; for they have marvellous foul linen.

Shal. Well conceited, Davy. About thy business, Davy.

Davy. I beseech you, sir, to countenance William Visor of Winetcott against Clement Perkes of the hill.

Shal. There are many complaints, Davy, against that Visor: that Visor is an arrant knave, on my knowledge.

Davy. I grant your worship, that he is a knave, sir; but yet. God forbid, sir, but a knave should have some countenance at his friend's request. An honest man, sir, is able to speak for himself, when a knave is not. I have served your worship truly, sir, this eight years; and if I cannot once or twice in a quarter bear out a knave against an honest man, I have but a very little credit with your worship. The knave is mine honest friend, sir; therefore, I beseech your worship, let him be countenanced.

Shal. Go to: I say, he shall have no wrong. Look about, Davy. [Exit Davy.] Where are you, sir John? Come, come, come; off with your boots.—Give me your hand, master Barnolph.

Bard. I am glad to see your worship.

Shal. I thank thee with all my heart, kind master Barnolph.—And welcome, my tall fellow. [To the Page.] Come, sir John. [Exit Shalow.

Pal. I'll follow you, good master Robert Shallow, Barnolph, look to our horses. [Exeunt Bardolph and Page.] If I were sawed into quantities, I should make four dozen of such bearded hermit's slaves as master Shallow. It is a wonderful thing to see the semblable coherences of his men's spirits and his: they, by observing him, do bear themselves like foolish justices; he, by conversing with them, is turned into a justice-like serving man. Their spirits are so married in conjunction with the participation of society, that they flock together in consent, like so many wild geese. If I had a suit to master Shallow, I would humour his men with the imputation of being near their master: if to his men, I would curry with master Shallow, that no man could better command his servants. It is certain, that either wise bearing, or ignorant carriage, is sought, as men take diseases, one of another: therefore, let men take heed of their company. I will devise mate enough out of this Shallow, to keep prince Harry from continual laughter the wearing-out of six fashions (which is four terms, or two actions) and he shall laugh without intervals. O! it is much, that a lie will a slight oath, and a jest with a sad brow, will do wil a fellow that never had the ache in his shoulders. O you shall see him laugh, till his face be like a clock all laid up.

Shal. [Within.] Sir John!

Pal. I come, master Shallow; I come, master Shalow. [Exit Falstaff.

Enter Warwick, and the Lord Chief Justice.

War. How now, my lord chief justice! whither away. Ch. Just. How doth the king?

War. Exceeding well: his cares are now all ended. Ch. Just. I hope, not dead.

War. He's walk'd the way of nature And to our purposes he lives no more.

Ch. Just. I would, his majesty had call'd me with him:

The service that I truly did his life,
Hath left me open to all injuries.

War. Indeed, I think the young king loves you not.

Ch. Just. I know he doth not, and do arm myself To welcome the condition of the time;

Which cannot look more hideously upon me Than I have drawn it in my fantasy.

Enter Prince John, Prince Humphrey, Clarence, Westmoreland, and Others.

War. Here come the heavy issue of dead Harry: O! that the living Harry had the temper Of him, the worst of these three gentlemen! How many nobles then should hold their places, That must strike sail to spirits of vile sort.

Ch. Just. O God! I fear all will be overturn'd.

P. John. Good morrow, cousin Warwick, good morrow.

P. Humph. Cla. Good morrow, cousin.

P. John. We meet like men that had forgot to part.

War. We do remember; but our argument Is all too heavy to admit much talk.

P. John. Well, peace be with us that hath made heavy.

Ch. Just. Peace be with us, lest we be heavier!

P. Humph. O! good my lord, you have lost a trim indeed;

And I dare swear, you borrow not that face Of seeming sorrow, it is, sure, your own.

P. John. Though no man be assured what grace You stand in coldest expectation: [as I am the sorrier; 'would, 't were otherwise.

Cla. Well, you must now speak sir John Falstaff.

Ch. Just. By the th' impartial* conduct of my soul;

And never shall you see, that I will beg A ragged and forestall'd remission.

If truth and upright innocency fail me,

I'll to the king, my master, that is dead,

And tell him who hath sent me after him.

War. Here comes the prince.

Enter King Henry V.

Ch. Just. Good morrow, and heaven save you majesty!
KING HENRY IV.

KING. This new and gorgeous garment, majesty, is not so easy on me as you think.—Brother, you mix your sadness with some fear: this is the English, not the Turkish court; not Amurath an Amurath succeeds. But Harry Harry. Yet be sad, good brothers, for, to speak truth, it very well becomes you: sorrow so royally in you appears, that I will deeply put the fashion on, and wear it in my heart. Why then, be sad; but entertain no more of it, good brothers, than a joint burden laid upon us all. For me, by heaven, I bid you be assured, I'll be your father and your brother too; let me but bear your love, I'll bear your cares: Yet weep, that Harry's dead, and so will I; but Harry lives, that shall convert those tears, by number, into hours of happiness.

P. John, &c. We hope no other from your majesty.

KING. You all look strangely on me—and you must. [To the Chief Justice.

You are, I think, assured I love you not.

Chief Just. I am assured, if I be assured rightly, your majesty hath no just cause to hate me.

KING. No! How might a prince of my great hopes forget so great indignities you laid upon me? What! rate, rebuke, and roughly send to prison? The immediate heir of England! Was this easy? May this be wash'd in Lethe, and forgotten? Chief Just. I then did use the person of your father; the image of his power lay then in me: and, in thy administration of his law, whilst I was busy for the commonwealth, thy highness pleased to forget my place, the majesty and power of law and justice, the image of the king whom I presented, and struck me in my very seat of judgment: whereon, as an enemy to your father, I gave bold way to my authority, and did commit you. If the deed were ill, he could not wrong now the garland. To have a son set your decrees at nought; to pluck down justice from your awful bench; to trip the course of law, and blunt the sword that guards the peace and safety of your person: Nay, more; to spurn at your most royal image, and mock your workings in a second body. Question your royal thoughts, make the case yours, be now the father, and propose a son; hear your own dignity so much profan'd, see your most dreadful laws so loosely slighted, behold yourself so by a son disdain'd, and then imagine me taking your part, and in your power soft silencing your son. After this cold consideration, sentence me; and, as you are a king, speak in your state: What have I done, that misbecame my place, my person, or my liege's sovereignty.

KING. You are right, justice; and you weigh this well. Therefore, still bear the balance, and the sword; and do with your interest, till you do live to see a son of mine offenders, and you obey, as I did. So shall I live to speak my father's words:—"Happy am I, that have a man so bold, that dares do justice on my proper son; and not less happy, having such a son, that would deliver up his greatness so into the hands of justice."—You did commit me, for which, I do commit into your hand the unainted sword that you have used to bear with this remembrance: that you use the same with the like bold, just, and impartial spirit, as you have done against me. There is your hand. You shall be as a father to my youth: my voice shall sound as you do prompt mine ear, and I will stoop and humble my intents to your well-practis'd, wise directions. And, princes all, believe me, I beseech you: My father is gone wild into his grave, for in his tomb lie my affection, and with his spirit, I survive, to mock the expectation of the world, to frustrate prophecies, and to raze out rotten opinion, who hath writ me down after my seeming. The tide of blood in me hath proudly flow'd in vanity till now: now doth it turn, and ebb back to the sea, where it shall mingle with the state of floods, and flow henceforth in formal majesty. Now, call we our high court of parliament, and let us choose such limbs of noble counsel, that the great body of our state may go in equal rank with the best governed nation; that war, or peace, or both at once, may be, as things acquainted and familiar to us, in which you, father, shall have foremost hand. [To the Lord Chief Justice.

Our coronation done, we will succeed, as I before remember'd, all our state; and (God consigning to my good intents) no prince, nor peer, shall have just cause to say, God shorten Harry's happy life one day.

[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Glostershire. The Garden of SHALLOw's House.

Enter Falstaff, Shalow, Silence, Bardolph, the Page, and Davy.

Shal. Nay, you shall see mine orchard; where, in an arbour, we were wont, in youth, to sport, with the pippin of my own grafting, with a dish of carraways, and so forth.—Come, cousin Silence; and then to bed.

Ful. 'Fores God, you have here a goodly dwelling, and a rich.

Shal. Barren, barren, barren; beggars all, beggars all; sir John;—marry, good air. Spread, Davy; spread, Davy; well said, Davy.

Ful. This Davy serves you for good uses: he is your serving-man, and your husband.

Shal. A good varlet, a good varlet, a very good varlet, sir John. By the mass, I have drunk too much sack at supper;—a good varlet. Now sit down, now sit down.—Come, cousin.

Sil. Ah, sirrah! quoth-a, we shall do nothing but eat, and make good cheer, [Singing. And praise heaven for the merry year; When flesh is cheap and females dear, And lusty lads roam here and there, So merrily, And ever among merrily.

Ful. There's a merry heart!—Good master Silence, I'll give you a health for that anon.

Shal. Give master Bardolph some wine, Davy.

Davy. Sweet sir, sit; I'll be with you anon;—most sweet sir, sit.—Master page, good master page, sit: profuse! What you want in meat, we have in drink, but you must bear: the heart's all.
Skal. Be merry, master Bardolph; and my little soldier there, be merry.
Sil. Be merry, be merry, my wife has all; [Singing.
For women are shrets, both short and tall:
'Tis merry in hall, when beards wag all,
And welcome merry shrive-tide.
Be merry, be merry, &c.
Fal. I did not think master Silence had been a man of this mettle.
Sil. Who? I have been merry twice and once, ere now.
Re-enter DAVY.
Davy. There is a dish of leather-coats¹ for you.
[Setting them before BARDOLPH.
Skal. Davy,—
Davy. Your worship.—I'll be with you straight.
A cup of wine, sir?
Sil. A cup of wine, that's brisk and fine, [Singing.
And drink unto the lemon wine;
And a merry heart lives long-a.
Fal. Well said, master Silence.
Sil. An we shall be merry, now comes in the sweet of the night.
Fal. Health and long life to you, master Silence.
Sil. Fill the cup, and let it come;
I'll pledge you a mile to the bottom.
Skal. Honest Bardolph, welcome: if thou wantest any thing, and wilt not call, beshrew thy heart.—Welcome, my little tiny thief; and welcome, indeed, too.
I'll drink to master Bardolph, and to all the cavaliers about London.
Davy. I hope to see London once ere I die.
Bard. An I might see you there, Davy,— Skal. By the mass, you'll crack a quart together.
Ha' will you not, master Bardolph?
Bard. Yea, sir, in a pottle pot.
Skal. By God's legs, I thank thee.—The knave will stick by thee, I can assure thee that: he will not out; he is true bred.
Bard. And I'll stick by him, sir.
Fat. Why now you have done me right.
[To SILENCE, who drinks a bumper.
Sil. Do me right.² [Singing.
And dub me knight:
Samingo.
Is't not so?
Fat. 'Tis so.
Sil. Is't so? Why, then say, an old man can do somewhat.
Re-enter Davy.
Davy. An't please your worship, there's one Pistol come from the court with news.
Fal. From the court? let him come in.—
Enter Pistol.
How now, Pistol?
Pist. Sir John, God save you, sir.
Fal. What wind blew you hither, Pistol?
Pist. Not the ill wind which blows no man⁴ to good.
Sweet knight, th'art now one of the greatest men in the realm.
Puff in thy teeth, most recreant coward base!—
Sir John, I am thy Pist, and thy friend,
And helter-skelter I ride to thee;
And tidings do I bring, and lucky joys,
And golden times, and happy news of price.
Fal. I pr'ythee now, deliver them like a man of the world.
Pist. A foutra for the world, and worldlings base! I speak of Africa, and golden joys.
Fal. O base Assyrian knight! what is thy news
Let king Copheuta know the truth thereof.
Sil. And Robin Hood, Scarlet, and John. [Singing.
Pist. Shall dunghill curs confront the Helicen's
And shall good news be baffled?
Then, Pistol, lay thy head in Furios' lap.
Skal. Honest gentleman, I know not your breeding Pist. Why then, lament therefore.
Skal. Give me pardon, sir;—if, sir, you come with news from the court, I take it, there is but two ways either to utter them, or to conceal them. I am, sir, under the king, in some authority.
Pist. Under which king, Bezonian!³ speak, or die.
Sil. Under king Harry.
Pist. Harry the fourth? or fifth
Skal. Harry the fourth.
Pist. A foutra for thine office.
Sir John, thy tender lambkin now is king;
Harry the fifth 'tis the man. I speak the truth:
When Pistol lies, do this; and fig⁵ me, like
The bragging Spaniard.
Fat. What! is the old king dead?
Pist. Away, Bardolph! saddle my horse.—Mass
Robert Shallow, choose what office thou wilt in th
'thine. —Pistol, I will double-charge thee with dignities.
Bard. O joyful day!—I would not take a knighthood for my fortune.
Pist. What! I do bring good news.
Fal. Carry master Silence to bed.—Master Shallow my lord Shallot, be what thou wilt, I am Fortune's steward. Get on thy boots: we'll ride all night.—Sweet Pistol!—Away, Bardolph. [Exit Bardolph.]
Pist. Pistol, utter more to me; and, withal, devise some thing, to do thyself good.—Boot, boot, master Shallow I know the young king is sick for me. Let us take any man's horses; the laws of England are at my commandment. Happy are they which have been a friend, and were unto my lord chief justice!
Pist. Let vultures vile seize on his lungs also!
"Where is the life that late I led," say they:
Why, here it is: welcome this pleasant day!" [Exeunt

SCENE IV.—London. A Street.
Enter Beadles, dragging in Hostess Quickly, and Do Tear-sheet.
Host. No, thou arrant knave: I would to God might die, that I might have thee hanged; thou hast drawn my shoulder out of joint.
Bead. The constables have delivered her over to me, and she shall have whipping-cheer enough! Warrant her. There hath been a man or two laid killed about her.
Dol. Nut-hook, nut-hook, you lie. Come on: I tell thee what, thou dammed tripe-visaged rascal.⁶ the child I now go with do miscarry, thou hast better thou hast struck thy mother, thou paper-faced villain!
Host. O the Lord, that sir John were come! I would make this a bloody day to somebody. But pray God the fruit of her womb miscarry!

² A phrase used in drinking healths.
³ None: in soles.
⁴ A term of reproach, derived from the Italian sloco, signifying "a fresh, needly soldier."
⁵ Exult, by putting the thumb between the fore and middle finger; frio, has the same signification.
⁶ This quotation is also made in "Taming of the Shrew."³ These pleasant days: in f. e. ⁴ Not in the quarto.
KING HENRY IV.

KING. My lord chief justice, speak to that vain man.

Ch. Just. Have you your wits? know you what's you speak?

Fal. My king! my Jove! I speak to thee, my heart!

King. I know thee not, old man: fal. to thy prayer.

How ill white hairs become a fool, and jester!
I have long dream'd of such a kind of man, So surfeit-swol'd, so old, and so profane;
But, being awak'd, I do despise my dream.
Make less thy body, hence, and more thy grace, Leave gormandizing; know, the grave doth gape
For thee thrice wider than for other men, Reply not to me with a fool-born jest:
Presume not that I am the thing I was;
For God doth know, so shall the world perceive,
That I have turn'd away my former self: So will I those that kept me company.
When thou dost hear I am as I have been,
Approach me, and thou shalt be as thou wast,
The tutor and the feeder of my riots:
Till then, I banish thee, on pain of death,
As I have done the rest of my misleaders,
Not to come near our person by ten mile.
For competence of life I will allow you,
That lack of means ennose you not to evil;
And as we hear you do reform yourselves,
We will, according to your strength and qualities,
Give you advancement.—Be it your charge, my lord,
To see perform'd the tenor of our word.—

Sen. —

Exeunt King and his Train.

Fal. Master Shallow, I owe you a thousand pound.
Skel. Ay, marry, sir John; which I beseech you to let me have home with me.

Fal. That can hardly be, master Shallow. Do not you grieve at this? I shall be sent for in private to him.
Look you, he must seem thus to the world.
Fear not your advancement; I will be the man yet that shall make you great.

Skel. I cannot perceive how, unless you should give me your doublet, and stuff me out with straw. I Acquaint you, good sir John, let me have five hundred of my thousand.

Fal. Sir, I will be as good as my word: this that you heard was but a colour.

Skel. A colour, I fear, that you will die in, sir John.
Fal. Fear no colours: go with me to dinner.
Come, lieutenant Pistol;—come, Bardolph.—I shall be sent for soon at night.

Re-enter Prince John, the Chief Justice, Officers, &c.

Ch. Just. Go, carry sir John Falstaff to the Fleece.
Take all his company along with him.

Fal. My lord, my lord!—

Ch. Just. I cannot now speak: I will hear you soon.
Take them away.

Pist. Se fortuna me tormenta, il sperare me contenta.

P. John. I like this fair proceeding of the king's.
He hath intent, his wonted followers
Shall all be very well provided for;
But all are banished, till their conversations
Appear more wise and modest to the world.

Ch. Just. And so they are.

P. John. The king hath call'd his parliament, my lord.

Ch. Just. He hath.

P. John. I will lay odds, that, ere this year expire,
We bear our civil swords, and native fire,
As far as France. I heard a bird so sing,
Whose music, to my thinking, please'd the king.

Come, will you hence?

[Exeunt.

...
EPilogue,
by One That Can Dance.

First my fear, then my courtesy, last my speech. My fear is your displeasure, my courtesy my duty, and my speech to beg your pardons. If you look for a good speech, now, you undo me; for what I have to say, is of mine own making, and what indeed I should say, will, I doubt, prove mine own marring. But to the purpose, and so to the venture.—Be it known to you (as it is very well) I was lately here in the end of a displeasing play, to pray your patience for it, and to promise you a better. I did mean, indeed, to pay you with this; which, if, like an ill venture, it come unluckily home, I break, and you, my gentle creditors, lose. Here, I promised you, I would be, and here I commit my body to your mercies: bate me some, and I will pay you some; and, as most debtors do, promise you infinitely.

If my tongue cannot entreat you to acquit me, will you command me to use my legs? and yet that were but light payment, to dance out of your debt: but a good conscience will make any possible satisfaction, and so will I. All the gentlewomen here have forgiven me; if the gentlemen will not, then the gentlemen do not agree with the gentlewomen, which was never seen before in such an assembly.

One word more, I beseech you. If you be not too much eloyed with fat meat, our humble author will continue the story, with sir John in it, and make you merry with fair Katharine of France; where, for any thing I know, Falstaff shall die of a sweat, unless already he be killed with your hard opinions; for Oldcastle died a martyr, and this is not the man. My tongue is weary; when my legs are too, I will 'bid you good night: and so kneel down before you; but, indeed, to pray for the queen.

[Exit with a dance]

Lords, Ladies, Officers, French and English Soldiers, Messengers, and Attendants.
The SCENE in England, and in France.

CHORUS.

Enter Chorus, as Prologue.¹

O, for a muse of fire, that would ascend
The brightest heaven of invention!
A kingdom for a stage, princes to act,
And monarchs to behold the swelling scene!
Then should the warlike Harry, like himself,
Assume the port of Mars; and at his heels,
Loath’d in like hounds, should famine, sword, and fire,
Crouch for employment. But pardon, gentle all,
The flat unraised spirit that hath da’d,
On this unworthy scaffold, to bring forth
So great an object: can this cockpit hold
The vasty fields of France? or may we cram
Within this wooden O’ the very casques,
That did affright the air at Agincourt?
O! pardon, since a crooked figure may
Attest in little place a million;
And let us, cyphers to this great accomp’t,
On your imaginary forces work.
Suppose, within the girdle of these walls
Are now confin’d two mighty monarchies,
Whose high upreared and abutting fronts
The perilous, narrow ocean parts asunder.
Piece out our imperfections with your thoughts;
Into a thousand parts divide one man,
And make imaginary puissance:
Think, when we talk of horses, that you see them
Printing their proud hoofs i’ the receiving earth;
For ’t is your thoughts that now must deck our kings,
Carry them here and there, jumping o’er times,
Turning the accomplishment of many years
Into an hour-glass: for which the supply,
Admit me chorus to this history;
Who, prologue-like, your humble patience pray,
Gently to hear, kindly to judge, our play.²

ACT I.

SCENE I.—London. An Antechamber in the King’s Palace.

Enter the Archbishop of Canterbury, and Bishop of Ely.

Cont. My lord, I’ll tell you, that self bill is urg’d,
Whch in th’ eleventh year of the last king’s reign
Was like, and had indeed against us pass’d,
But that the scrabbling⁴ and unquiet time
Did push it out of farther question.

¹ The words, as Prologue: not in f. a. ² The Globe Theatre, where the play was probably first acted. ³ All the choruses were first printed in the folio. ⁴ Scrambling.
Of indigent faint souls, past corporal toil,
A hundred alms-houses, right well supplied;
And to the coffers of the king beside,
A thousand pounds by the year. Thus runs the bill.

Ely. This would drink deep.

Cant. 'T would drink the cup and all.

Ely. But what prevention?

Cant. The king is full of grace, and fair regard.

Ely. And a true lover of the holy church.

Cant. The courses of his youth promised it not.
The breath no sooner left his father's body, But he was mortified in him, seem'd to die too: yea, at that very moment, Consideration like an angel came, And whipp'd the offending Adam out of him, Leaving his body as a paradise, T' envelop and contain celestial spirits.

Never was such a sudden scholar made:
Never came reformation in a flood, With such a heady current, securing faults; Nor never Hydra-headed willfulness
So soon did lose his seat, and all at once, As in this king.

Ely. We are blessed in the change.

Cant. Hear him but reason in divinity, And, all-admiring, with an inward wish You would desire the king were made a prelate: Hear him debate of commonwealth affairs, You would say, it hath been all-in-all his study: List his discourse of war, and you shall hear A fearful battle render'd you in music:

Turn him to any cause of policy, The Gordian knot of it he will unloose, Familiar as his garter; that, when he speaks, The air, a charter'd libertine, is still, And the mute wonder lurketh in men's ears, To steal his sweet and honeyed sentences; So that the art and practice part of life Must be the mistress to this theoretic:

Which is a wonder, how his grace should glean it, Since his addiction was to courses vain:
His companies unletter'd, rude, and shallow; His hours fill'd up with riots, banquets, sports; And never noted in any study,
Any retirement, any sequestration From open haunts and popularity.

Ely. The strawberry grows underneath the nettle, And wholesome berries thrive and ripen best, Neighbour'd by fruit of baser quality: And so the prince obscure'd his contemplation Under the veil of wildness; which, no doubt, Grew like the summer grass, fastest by night, Unseen, yet crevise in his faculty.

Cant. It must be so; for miracles are cease'd, And therefore we must needs admit the means, How things are perfected.

Ely. But, my good lord, How now for mitigation of this bill Urg'd by the commons? Doth his majesty Incline to it, or no?

Cant. He seems indifferent, Or rather, swaying more upon our part, Than cherishing th' exhibitors against us; For I have made an offer to his majesty,— Upon our spiritual conviction,
And in regard of causes now in hand, Which I have open'd to his grace at large, As touching France,—to open a matter sum Than ever at one time the clergy yet

Did to his predecessors part withal.

Ely. How did this offer seem receiv'd, my lord?

Cant. With good acceptance of his majesty;
Save, that there was not time enough to hear (As, I perceive'd, his grace would fain have done) The several, and unhidden passages Of his true titles to some certain dukedoms, And, generally, to the crown and seat of France.

Deriv'd from Edward, his great grandfather.

Ely. What was th' impediment that broke this off? Cant. The French ambassador upon that instant Crav'd audience; and the hour, I think, is come, To give him hearing. Is it four o'clock?

Ely. It is.

Cant. Then go we in, to know his embassy, Which I could with a ready guess declare, Before the Frenchman speak a word of it.

Ely. 'I'll wait upon you, and I long to hear it. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The Same. A Room of State in the Same

Enter King Henry, Gloster, Bedford, Exeter, Warwick, Westmoreland, and Attendants.

K. Hen. Send for him, good uncle West. Shall we call the ambassador, my liege? K. Hen. Not yet, my cousin: we would be resolv'd Before we hear him, of some things of weight, That task our thoughts, concerning us and France.

Enter the Archbishop of Canterbury, and Bishop of Ely.

Cant. God, and his angels, guard your sacred throne, And make you long become it!

K. Hen. Sure, we thank you My learned lord, we pray you to proceed, And justly and religiously unfold, Why the law Salique, that they have in France, Or should, or should not, bar us in our claim.

And God forbid, my dear and faithful lord, That you should fashion, wrett, or bow your reading, Or nicely charge your understanding soul, With opening titles miscreate, whose right Suits not in native colours with the truth; For God doth know, how many, now in health, Shall drop their blood in approbation Of what your reverence shall incite us to.

Therefore, take heed how you impawn our person, How you awake our sleeping sword of war: We charge you in the name of God, take heed; For never two such kingdoms did contend, Without much fall of blood; whose guiltless drop Are every one a woe, a sore complaint, 'Gainst him whose wrongs give edge unto the swords That make such waste in brief mortality. Under this conjunction, speak, my lord, And we will hear, note, and believe in heart, That what you speak is in your conscience wash'd. As pure as sin with baptism.

Cant. Then hear me, gracious sovereign, and you peers, That owe yourselves, your lives, and services, To this imperial throne.—There is no bar To make against your highness' claim to France, But this, which they produce from Pharamond,— In terram Salicam sauleares nes successant: "No woman shall succeed in Salique land." Which Salique and the French unrighteously go, To the realm of France, and Pharamond The founder of this law, and female bar.
KING HENRY V.

1st their own authors faithfully affirm, That the land Salique is in Germany, Between the flood of Saale and of Elbe; Where Charles the great, having subdued the Saxons, There left behind andsettled certain French; Who, holding in disdain the German women For some dishonest manners of their life, Establish'd then this law—to wit, no female Should be inheritrix in Salique land: Which Salique, as I said, twixt Elbe and Saale, Is this day in Germany call'd Meissen. To do it well appear, the Salique law Was not designed for the realm of France; Nor did the French possess the Salique land Until fou. hundred and twenty years After defunction of king Pharamond, My suppos'd the founder of this law; Who died within the year of our redemption Four hundred twenty-six, and Charles the great Sought to subdue the Saxons, and did send the French Beyond the river Saale in the year Eight hundred five. Besides their writers say, King Pepin, which deposed Childerick, D.d. as their general, being decended Of Blithild, which was daughter to king Clothair, Made claim and title to the crown of France. Hugh Capet also,—who usurp'd the crown Of Charles the duke of Lorain. sole heir male Of the true line and stock of Charles the great,— To found his title with some shows of truth, Though, in pure truth, it was corrupt and naught, Convey'd himself as th' heir to the lady Lingare, Daughter to Charlemain, who was the son To Lewis the emperor, and Lewis the son Of Charles the great. Also king Lewis the tenth, Who was sole heir to the usurper Capet, Could not keep quiet in his conscience, Wearing the crown of France, till satisfied That fair Queen Isabel, his grandmother, Was lineal of the lady Ermengarde, Daughter to Charles the foresaid duke of Lorain: By whom he married the line of Charles the great Was reunited to the crown of France. So that, as clear as is the summer's sun, King Pepin's title, and Hugh Capet's claim, King Lewis his satisfaction, all appear To hold in right and title of the female. So do the kings of France unto this day, Howbeit they would hold up this Salique law, To bar your highness claimage from the female; And rather choose to hide them in a net, Than amply to imbar* their crooked titles Surpris'd from you and your progenitors.

K. Hen. May I with right and conscience make this claim?

Cont. The sin upon my head, dread sovereign; For in the book of Numbers is it writ, When the man dies, let the inheritance Descend unto the daughter. Gracious lord, Stand for your own: unwind your bloody flag; Look back into your mighty ancestors: To say dread lord, to your great grand sire's tomb, From whom you claim; invoke his warlike spirit, And your great uncle's, Edward the black prince, Who on the French ground play'd a tragedy, Making defeat on the full power of France, Wakes his most mighty father on a hill Stood smiling, to behold his lion's whelp Forage in blood of French nobility.

O noble English! that could entertain With half their forces the full pride of France, And set another half and laughing by, All out of work, and cold for action.

Ely. Awake remembrance of these valiant dead, And with your puissant arm renew their feats. You are their heir, you sit upon their throne; The blood and courage, that renown'd them, Runs in your veins; and my thrice-puissant liege Is in the very May-morn of his youth, Ripe for exploits, and mighty enterprises.

Exe. Your brother kings, and monarchs of the earth, Do all expect that you should rouse yourself, As did the former lions of your blood.

West. They know your grace hath cause, and means, and might; So hath your highness:—never king of England Had nobles richer, and more loyal subjects, Whose hearts have left their bodies here in England, And lie pavilion'd in the fields of France.

Cont. O! let their bodies follow, my dear liege, With blood, and sword, and fire, to win your right: In aid whereof, we of the spirituality Will raise your highness such a mighty sum, As never did the clergy at one time Bring in to any of your ancestors.

K. Hen. We must not only arm t' invade the French, But lay down our proportions to defend Against the Scot; who will make road upon us With all advantages.

Cont. They of these marches, gracious sovereign, Shall be a wall sufficient to defend Our inland from the pilfering borderers.

K. Hen. We do not mean the coursing matchers only, But fear the main intendment of the Scot, Who hath been still a greedy neighbour to us: For you shall read, that my great grandfather Never went with his forces into France, But that the Scot on his unfinish'd kingdom Came pouring, like the tide into a breach, With ample and brim fulness of his force; Gallied the gleaned land with hot essays, Girding with grievous siege castles and towns; That England, being empty of defence, Hath shook, and trembled at th' ill neighbourhood.

Cont. She hath been then more feard than harm'd, my liege; For hear her but examplied by herself; When all her chivalry hath been in France, And she a mourning widow of her nobles, She hath herself not only well defended, But taken, and impounded as a stray, The king of Scots; whom she did send to France To fill king Edward's train with prisoner kings, And make their chronicle as rich with praise, As is the ozone and bottom of the sea With sunken wreck and sunless treasuries.

West. But there's a saying, very old and true—"If that you will France win, Then with Scotland first begin!" For once the eagle, England, being in prey, To her unguarded nest the weasel, Scot, Comes sneaking, and so sucks her princely eggs, Playing the mouse in absence of the cat, To tear and havore more than she can eat.

Exe. It follows then, the cat must stay at home. Yet that is not a crush'd necessity, Since we have locks to safeguard necessaries,
And pretty traps to catch the petty thieves.
While that the armed hand doth fight abroad,
Th' advised head defends itself at home:
For government, though high, and low, and lower,
Put into parts, doth keep in one consent,
Congreasing in a full and natural close;
Like music.
Cont.
Therefore doth heaven divide
The estate of man in divers functions,
Setting endeavour in continual motion;
To which is fixed, as an aim or butt,
Obedience; for so work the honey bees,
Creatures that by a rule in nature teach
The art of order to a peopled kingdom:
They have a king, and officers of state;
Where some, like magistrates, correct at home,
Others, like merchants, venture trade abroad,
Others, like soldiers, armed in their stings,
Make boot upon the summer's velvet buds;
Which pillage they with merry mirth bring home
To the tent-royal of their emperor:
Who, busied in his majesty, surveys
The singing masons building roofs of gold,
The civil citizens kneading up the honey,
The poor mechanic porters crowding in
Their heavy burdens at his narrow gate,
The sad-eyed justice, with his surly hum,
Delivering o'er to executors pale
The lazy yawning drone. If this infer—
That many things, having full reference
To one consent, may work contrariously;
As many arrows, loosed several ways,
Come to one mark; as many ways unite;^2
As many fresh streams meet in one salt sea;
As many lines close in the dial's center;
So may a thousand actions, once afoot,
End in one purpose, and be all well borne
Without defeat. Therefore, to France, my liege.
Divide your happy England into four;
Whereof you take one quarter into France,
And you withal shall make all Gallia shake.
If we, with thrice such powers left at home,
Cannot defend our own doors from the dog,
Let us be worried, and our nation lose
The name of hardiness, and policy.

K. Hen. Call in the messengers sent from the Dauphin.

[Exit an Attendant.

Now we are well resolv'd: and, by God's help,
And yours, the noble sinews of our power,
France being ours, we'll bend it to our awe,
Or break it all to pieces: or there we'll sit,
Ruling in large and ample empery,
O'er France, and all her almost kingly dukedom,
Or lay these bones in an unworthy urn,
Tombless, with no remembrance over them:
Either our history shall, with a full mouth,
Speak freely of our acts, or else our grave,
Like Turkish mule, shall have a tongueless mouth,
Not worshipp'd with a waxen epistaph.

Enter Ambassadors of France.

Now are we well prepar'd to know the pleasure
Of our fair cousin Dauphin; for, we hear,
Your greeting is from him, not from the king.
Amb. May't please your majesty, to give us leave
Freely to render what we have in charge;
Or shall we sparingly show you far off,
The Dauphin's meaning, and our embassy?

K. Hen. We are no tyrant, but a Christian king,
Unto whose grace our passion is as subject,
As are our wretches fetter'd in our prisons;
Therefore, with frank and with uncurbed plainness,
Tell us the Dauphin's mind.

Amb. Thus then, in few.
Your highness, lately sending into France,
Did claim some certain dukedoms, in the right
Of your great predecessor, Edward third.
In answer of which claim, the prince our master
Says, that you savour too much of your youth,
And bids you be advis'd, there's nought in France
That can be with a nimble galliard won:
You cannot revel into dukedoms there.
He therefore sends you, meeter for your spirit
This tune of treasure; and, in lieu of this. [Sounding it
Desires you, let the dukedoms, that you claim,
Hear no more of you. This the Dauphin speaks.

K. Hen. What treasure, uncle?
Eze. Tennis-balls, my liege. [Opening it
K. Hen. We are glad the Dauphin is so pleasant with us.

His present, and your pains, we thank you for:
When we have match'd our rackets to these balls,
We will, in France, by God's grace, play a set,
Shall strike his father's crown into the hazard.
Tell him, he hath made a match with such a wrangler,
That all the courtes of France will be disturb'd
With chace.4 And we understand him well,
How he comes o'er us with our wilder days,
Not measuring what use we made of them.
We never vul'd this poor seat of England,
And therefore, living hence, did give ourself
To barbarous licence; as 't is ever common,
That men are merriest when they are from home.
But tell the Dauphin,—I will keep my state;
Be like a king, and show my soul of greatness,
When I do rouse me in my throne of France:
For here I have laid by my majesty,
And pieced like a man for working days,
But I will rise there with so full a glory,
That I will dazzle all the eyes of France,
Yea, strike the Dauphin blind to look on us.
And tell the pleasant prince, this mock of his Hath turn'd his balls to gun-stones;^3 and his soul
Shall stand sore charged for the wasteful vengeance
That shall fly with them: for many a thousand widows
Shall this his mock mock out of their dear hus-bands;
Mock mothers from their sons, mock esties down,
And some are yet ungotten, and unborn,
That shall have cause to curse the Dauphin's scorn.
But this lies all within the will of God,
To whom I do appeal; and in whose name,
Tell you the Dauphin, I am coming on,
To venge me as I may, and to put forth
My rightful hand in a well hallow'd cause.
So get you hence in peace; and tell the Dauphin,
His jest will savour but of shallow wit,
When thousands weep, more than did laugh at it—
Convey them with safe conduct.—Fare you well.

[Exeunt Ambassadors.

Eze. This was a merry message.

K. Hen. We hope to make the sender blush at it.

Therefore, my lords, omit no happy hour,
That may give furtherance to our expedition;
For we have now no thought in us but France,
Save those to God, that run before our business.
Therefore, let our proportions for these wars
Be soon collected, and all things thought upon,

^1 sc. in f. a 2 as many ways meet in one town: in f. a.
^3 Not in f. a. 4 A match at tennis, in which the struggle consists in seeing who will keep up the ball the longest. 5 call: in f. a. 6 Cannon balls were, at first, of stone.
That may with seasonable swiftness add
More feathers to our wings; for, God before,
We'll shide this Dauphin at his father's door.

Therefore, let every man now task his thought,
That this fair action may on foot be brought.

[Exeunt

ACT II.

Enter Chorus.

Chor. Now all the youth of England are on fire,
And silken dailiace in the wardrobe lies:
Now strive the armourers, and honour's thought
Reigns solely in the breast of every man.
They sell the pasture now to buy the horse;
Following the mirror of all Christian kings,
With winged heels, as English mercury:
For now sits Expectation in the air;
And hides a sword, from hills unto the point,
With crowns imperial, crowns, and coronets,
Promis'd to Harry and his followers.
The French, adva'd by good intelligence
Of this most dreadful preparation,
Shake in their fear, and with pale policy
Seek to divert the English purposes.

0 England! model to thine inward greatness,
Like little body with a mighty heart,
What mightst thou do, that honour would thee do,
Were all thy children kind and natural.
But see thy fault! France hath in thee found out
A nest of hollow booms, which he fills
With treacherous crowns, and three corrupted men,
One, Richard earl of Cambridge, and the second,
Henry lord Scroop of Marsham, and the third,
Sr Thomas Grey, knight of Northumberland,
Haste, for the gilt of France. (O guilt, indeed!)
Confir'd conspiracy with fearful France:
And by their hands this grace of kings must die,
If hell and treason hold their promises,
Ere he take ship for France, and in Southampton.
Linger your patience on; and well digest
Th' abuse of distance, and so force a play.
The sum is paid; the traitors are agreed;
The king is set from London; and the scene
Is now transported, gentle, to Southampton.
There is the playhouse now, there must you sit,
And thence to France shall we convey you safe,
And bring you back, charming the narrow seas.
To give you gentle pass; for, if we may,
We'll not offend one stomach with our play.
But, till the king come forth, and not till then,
Unto Southampton, do we shift our scene.

[Exit.

Enter Nym and Bardolph.

Nym. Good morrow, lieutenant Bardolph.

Bard. Well met, corporal Nym.

Nym. What, are ancient Pistol and you friends yet?

Bard. That which is ancient Pistol and you friends yet?

Nym. For my part I care not; I say little; but when time shall serve, there shall be smites;—but that shall be as it may. I dare not fight; but I will wink, and hold out mine iron. It is a simple one; but what though? it will toast cheese, and it will endure cold as another man's sword will; and there's an end.

Bard. I will bestow a breakfast to make you friends, and we'll be all three sworn brothers to France: let it be so, good corporal Nym.

Therefore, let every man now task his thought,
That this fair action may on foot be brought.

[Exeunt

Scene II.

Nym. 'Faith, I will live so long as I may, that will be a matter of the certain of it; and when I cannot live any longer, I will do as I may: that is my rest, that is the rendezvous of it.

Bard. It is certainly, corporal, that he is married to Nell Quickly; and, certainly, she did you wrong, or you were troth-plight to her.

Nym. I cannot teach; things must be as they may: men may sleep, and they may have their throats about them at that time, and some say knives have edges. It must be as it may: though patience be a tired jade; yet she will plod. There must be conclusions. Well, I cannot tell.

Enter Pistol and Mrs. Quickly.

Bard. Here comes ancient Pistol, and his wife.—Good corporal, be patient here. How now, mine host? Pistol?

Pist. Base tike, call'st thou me host?

Mrs. Quickly. Now, by this hand I swear, I scorn the term;

Bard. Nor shall my Nell keep lodgers.

Quick. No, by my troth, not long: for we cannot lodge and board a dozen or fourteen gentlewomen, that live honestly by the pick of their needles, but it will be thought we keep a bawdy-house straight.

Bard. Good lieutenant—good corporal, offer nothing here.

Nym. Pistol! Pistol. Pistol for thee, lotham dog; thou pick-eared cur of lotham! [Draws his sword.] Quick. Good corporal Nym, show thy valour, and put up your sword.

Nym. Will you shog off? I would have you solus.

Pist. Solus, egregious dog? O viper vile!

Quick. The solus in thy most marvellous face;
The solus in thy teeth, and in thy throat,
And in thy hateful lungs, yea, in thy maw, perdy;
And, which is worse, within thy nasty mouth!
I do retract the solus in thy bowels:
For I can take, and Pistoll's cock is up,
And flashing fire will follow.

Nym. I am not Barbazon; you cannot conjure me. I have an humour to knock you indifferentely well. If you grow foule with me, Pistol, I will scour you with my rapier, as I may, in fair terms: if you would walk off, I would prick your guts a little, in good terms, as I may; and that is the humour of it.

Pist. O bragart vile, and damned furious wight! The grave doth gap, and doasing death is near;

Quick. Then shall I stamp with the solus, and with my spear draw the solus.

Bard. Hear me; hear me what I say:—he that strikes the first stroke, I'll run him up to the hils, as I am a soldier.

Quick. Great jest, Pistol. An oath of mickle might, and fury shall abate Give me thy flat, thy fore-foot to me give; Thy spirits are most tall.

[Exit.

Scene III.

Bardolph and Nym sheathe their swords.

1 reasonable: in f. e. 2 thrive: in f. e. 3 The words and so: not in f. e. 4 smile: in f. e. 5 and there's the humour of it in quarto. 6 solus: in f. e. 7 A commodus fag, a monstrous. 8 Dyce reads: drawn. 9 These words are usually transferred to the close of the preceding speech—with the superfluous addition of the word Bardolph. 10 Not in f. e. 11 jog: in f. e. 12 Solus: here give the stage direction. 13 The name of a sword. 14 F. e. here give the direction: Pistol and Nym draw. 15 Vollans. 16 Not in f. e.
Nym. I will cut thy throat, one time or other, in fair terms; that is the humour of it.
Pist. Coule le gorge, that's the word?—I defy thee again.
O hound of Crete, think'st thou my spouse to get?
No; to the spital go,
And from the powdering tub of infamy
Fetch forth the Lazar kite of Creesid's kind,
Doll Tear-sheet she by name, and her espouse:
I have, and I will hold, the quadrant Quickly
For the only she; and—pauca, there's enough.

Enter the Boy.

Boy. Mine host Pistol, you must come to my master, and your' hostess.—He is very sick, and would to bed.
—Good Bardolph, put thy face between his sheets, and do the office of a warming-pan: 'faith, he's very ill.

Bard. Away, you rogue.
Quick. By my troth, he'll yield the crow a pudding one of these days: the king has killed his heart.—Good husband, come home presently.

[Exeunt Mrs. Quickly and Boy.

Bard. Come, shall I make you two friends? We must to France together. Why, the devil, should we keep knaves to cut one another's throats?
Pist. Let floods o'erswell, and fiends for food howl on!
Nym. You'll pay me the eight shillings I won of you at betting?

Pist. Base is the slave that pays.
Nym. That now I will have; that's the humour of it.
Pist. As manhood shall compound. Push home.

[Draw again.

Bard. By this sword, he that makes the first thrust, 'll kill him by; by this sword, I will.
Pist. Sword is an oath, and oaths must have their course.

Bard. Corporal Nym, an thou wilt be friends, be friends: an thou wilt not, why then be enemies with me too. Pr'ythee, put up.
Nym. I shall have my eight shillings, I won of you at betting?

Pist. A noble shalt thou have, and present pay;
And liquor likewise will I give to thee.
And friendship shall be mine, and brotherhood:
I'll live by Nym, and Nym shall live by me.
Is not this just? for I shall satter be unto the camp, and profits will accrue.

Sheathes his sword.

Give me thy hand.
Nym. I shall have my noble?
Pist. In cash most justly paid.
Nym. Well then, that's the humour of it.

[They shake hands.

Re-enter Mrs. Quickly.

Quick. As ever you come of women, come in quickly to sir John. Ah, poor heart! he is so shacked of a burning quodlinian tetter, that it is most lamentable to behold. Sweet men, come to him.

Nym. The king hath run bad humours on the knight, that's the even of it.
Pist. Nym, thou hast spoke the right;
His heart is fracted and coryborate.
Nym. The king is a good king; but it must be as it may: he passes some humours, and careers.
Pist. Let us console the knight, for lambkins we will live.

SCENE II.—Southampton. A Council-Chamber.

Enter Exeter, Bedford, and Westmoreland.

Bed. 'Fore God, his grace is bold to trust these traitors
Exe. They shall be apprehended by and by.

West. How smooth and even they do bear themselves,
As if allegiance in their bosoms sat,
Crowned with faith, and constant loyalty.

Bed. The king hath note of all that they intend,
By interception which they dream not of.

Exe. Nay, but the man that was his bedfellow,
Whom he hath dill'd and cloy'd with gracious favours;
That he should, for a foreign purse, so sell
His sovereign's life to death and trencheery!

Trumpets sound. Enter King Henry, Scroop, Cambridge, Grey, Lords, and Attendants.

K. Hen. Now sits the wind fair, and we will aboard.
My lord of Cambridge,—and my kind lord of Mar-

And you, my gentle knight, give me your thoughts.
Think you not, that the powers we bear with us
Will cut their passage through the force of France,
Doing the execution, and the act,
For which we have in head assembled them?

Scroop. No doubt, my liege, if each man do his best.
K. Hen. I doubt not that: since we are well persuaded,
We carry not a heart with us from hence,
That grows not in a fair consent with ours;
Nor leave not one behind, that doth not wish
Success and conquest to attend on us.

Cam. Never was monarch better feared, and lov'd,
Than is your majesty: there's not a subject,
That sits in heart-grief and unnessiness
Under the sweet shade of your government.

Grey. True: those that were your father's enemies,
Have steep'd their galls in honey, and do serve you
With hearts create of duty and of zeal.

K. Hen. We therefore have great cause of thank-
And shall forget the office of our hand,
Sooner than quittance of desert and merit,
According to the weight and worthiness.

Scroop. So service shall with steel'd sinews toil,
And labour shall refresh itself with hope,
To do your grace incessant services.

K. Hen. We judge no less.—Uncle of Exeter,
Enlarge the man committed yesterday,
That rai'd against our person: we consider,
It was excess of wine that set him on;
And, on our more advice, we pardon him.

Scroop. That's mercy, but too much security.
Let him be punish'd, sovereign: last example
Breed by his sufferance more of such a kind.

K. Hen. 0! let us yet be merciful, my lord.
Cam. So may your highness, and yet punish too.

Grey. You show great mercy, if you give him life
After the taste of much correction.

K. Hen. Alas! your too much love and care of me
Are heavy orisons 'gainst this poor wretch
If little faults, proceeding on destemper,
Shall not be wink'd at, how shall we stretch our eye,
When capital crimes, chew'd, swallow'd, and digested
Appear before us?—We'll yet enlarge that man,
Though Cambridge, Scroop, and Grey, in their dear cast
And tender preservation of our person,
Would have him punish'd. And now to our French causes:

Who are the state's commissioners?

Cam. I one, my lord:

---

1 The folio adds: to go to; which mod. eds. usually print: go to.
2 Not in f. s.
3 The practice here alluded to, seems to have been not unusual.

---
Your highness bade me ask for it to-day.
Scoop. So did you me, my liege.
Cam. And I, my royal sovereign.
K. Hen. Thou, Richard, earl of Cambridge, there is yours—
There yours, lord Scoop of Marsham—and, sir knight,
Gray of Northumberland, this same is yours—
Read them; and know, I know your worthiness.
[They read and start.]
My lord of Westmoreland, and uncle Exeter,
We will aboard to-night.—Why, how now, gentlemen! What see you in those papers, that you lose
So much complexion?—look ye, how they change:
Their cheeks are paper.—Why, what read you there,
That hath so cowarded and chased your blood
Out of appearance?
Cam. I do confess my fault,
And do submit me to your highness' mercy,
Gray. Scoop. To which we all appeal.
K. Hen. The mercy that was quick in us but late,
By your own counsel is suppress'd and kill'd:
Your counsel not dead, for shame, to talk of mercy;
For your own reasons turn into your bosoms,
As dogs upon their masters, worrying you—
See you, my princes, and my noble peers,
These English monsters! My lord of Cambridge here,—
You know, how apt our love was to accord
To furnish him with all appoints
Belonging to his honour; and this man
Hath, for a few light crowns, lightly conspir'd,
And sworn unto the practices of France,
To kill us here in Hampton: to the which,
This knight, so less for bounty bound to us
Than Cambridge is, hath likewise sworn.—But O!
What shall I say to thee, lord Scoop? thou cruel, ingrateful, savage, and inhuman creature!
Thou that didst bear the key of all my counsels,
That knewst the very bottom of my soul,
That almost mightest have coin'd me into gold,
Wouldst thou have practis'd on me for thy use? May I not make thee, that foreign hire
Could out of these extract one spark of evil,
That might annoy my finger? it is so strange,
That, though the truth of it stand off as gross
As black and white, my eye will scarcely see it.
Treason and murder ever kept together,
As two yoke-devils sworn to either's purpose,
Working so grossly in a natural course,
That admiration did not whoop at them:
But thou, 'gainst all proportion, didst bring in Wonder to wait on treason, and on murder:
And whatsoever cunning fended it was,
First wrought upon thee so preposterously,
Hath got the voice in hell for excellence,
And other devils, that suggest by treasons,
Do bothch and bungle up damnation
With patches, colours, and with forms, being fetch'd
From glittering semblances of piety:
But he that temper'd thee bade thee stand up,
Have thou no instance why thou shouldst do treason,
Unless to durb thee with the name of traitor.
If that same demon, that hath gull'd thee thus,
Should with his lion gait walk the world whole,
I might return to vaste Tartar back,
And tell the legions—I can never
A soul so easy as this Englishman's.
I how hast thou with jealousy infected
The sweetness of affiance! Show men dutiful?

Why, so didst thou: seem they grave and learned?
Why, so didst thou: come they of noble family?
Why, so didst thou: know they of the religion?
Why, so didst thou: or are they slave in diet;
Free from gross passion, or of mirth or anger;
Constant in spirit, not swerving with the blood;
Garnish'd and deck'd in modest complement;
Not wrangling with the eye without the ear,
And but in purged judgment trusting neither?
Such, and so finely bolted, didst thou seem;
And thus thy fall hath left a kind of blot,
To mark the full-fruited man, and best indued,
With some suspicion. I will weep for thee,
For this revolt of thine, methinks, is like
Another fall of man.—Their faults are open;
Arrest them to the answer of the law,
And God acquit them of their practices.
Exe. I arrest thee of high treason, by the name of Richard earl of Cambridge.
I arrest thee of high treason, by the name of lord Scoop, of Marsham.
I arrest thee of high treason, by the name of Thomas Grey, knight of Northumberland.
Scoop. Our purposes God justly hath discover'd,
And I repent my fault more than my death;
Which I beseech your highness to forgive,
Although my body pay the price of it.
Cam. For me,—the gold of France did not seduce,
Although I did admit it as a motive,
The sooner to effect what I intended:
But God be thanked for prevention;
Which I in suffiicence heartily will rejoice.
Beweeching God and you to pardon me.
Gray. Never did faithful subject more rejoice
At the discovery of most dangerous treason,
Than I do at this hour joy o'er myself,
Prevented from a damned enterprise.
My fault, but not my body, pardon, sovereign.
K. Hen. God quit you in his mercy! Hear your sentence.
You have conspired against our royal person,
Join'd with an enemy proclaim'd, and from his coffers
Receiv'd the golden earnest of our death;
Wherein you would have sold your king to slaughter,
His princes and his peers to servitude,
His subjects to oppression and contempt,
And his whole kingdom unto desolation.
Touching our person, seek we no revenge;
But we our kingdom's safety must so tender,
Whose ruin you have sought, that to her laws
We do deliver you. Get you therefore hence,
Poor miserable wretches, to your death;
The taste whereof, God, of his mercy, give you
Patience to endure, and true repentance
Of all your dear offences.—Bear them hence.
[Exeunt Conspirators, guarded.]
Now, lords, for France; the enterprise whereof
Shall be to you, as us, like glorious.
We doubt not of a fair and lucky war,
Since God so graciously hath brought to light
This dangerous treason, lurking in our way.
To hinder our beginnings: we doubt not now,
But every rub is smoothed on our way.
Then, forth, dear countrymen: let us deliver
Our puissance into the hand of God,
Putting it straight in expedition,
Cheerly to sea; the signs of war advance:
No king of England, if not king of France. [Exeunt.
SCENE III.—London. Mrs. Quickly’s House, in Eastcheap.

Enter Pistol, Mrs. Quickly, Nym, Bardolph, and Boy.

Quick. Pr’ythee, honey-sweet husband, let me bring thee to Staines.

Pist. No; for my manly heart doth yearn.—

Bardolph, be blythe: Nym, rouse thy vaunting veins; Boy, bristle thy courage up; for Falstaff he is dead, And we must yearn therefore.

Quick. Would I were with him, where’some’er he is, either in heaven, or in hell.

Quick. Nay, sure, he’s not in hell: he’s in Arthur’s bosom, if ever man went to Arthur’s bosom. ’A made a fine end and went away, as it had been any christom child; ’a parted ev’n just between twelve and one, ev’n at the turning o’ the tide: for after I saw him humble, with the sheets, and play with flowers, and smile upon his finger’s end, I knew there was but one way; for his nose was as sharp as a pen on a table of green frieze.

How now, sir John? quoth I: what, man! be of good cheer. So ’a cried out—God, God, God! three or four times: now I, to comfort him, bid him, ’a should not think of God; I hoped, there was need to trouble himself with any such thoughts yet. So, ’a bade me lay more clothes on his feet: I put my hand into the bed, and felt them, and they were as cold as any stone; then I felt to his knees, and so upward, and upward, and all was as cold as any stone.

Nym. They say, he cried out of sack.

Quick. Ay, that ’a did.

Bard. And of women.

Quick. Nay, that ’a did not.

Boy. Yes, that ’a did; and said, they were devils incarnate.

Quick. ’A could never abide carnation; ’t was a colour he never liked.

Boy. ’A said once, the devil would have him about women.

Quick. ’A did in some sort, indeed, handle women; but then he was rheumatic, and talked of the whore of Babylon.

Boy. Do you not remember, ’a saw a flea stick upon Bardolph’s nose, and ’a said it was a black soul burning in hell?

Bard. Well, the fuel is gone that maintained that fire: that’s all the riches I got in his service.

Nym. Shall we shog? the king will be gone from Southampton.

Pist. Come, let’s away.—My love, give me thy lips; Look to my chattle, and my moveables: Let senses rule; the word is, “Pitch and pay!” Trust none; For oaths are strawes, men’s faiths are wafer-cakes, And hold-fast is the only dog, my duck: Therefore, careto be thy counsellor.

Go, clear thy crystal.—Yoke-fellows in arms, Let us to France: like horse-leeches, my boys, To suck, to suck, the very blood to suck! Boy. And that is but unworthy food, they say.

Pist. Touch her soft mouth, and march.

Bard. Farewell, hostess. [Kissing her.]

Nym. I cannot kiss, that is the humour of it; but adieu. [command.

SCENE IV.—France. A Room in the Presence.

King’s Palace.

Flourish. Enter the French King attended; the Dauphin, the Duke of Burgundy, the Constable, and Others.

Fr. King. Thus come the English with full power upon us, And more than carefull it us concerns, To answer royally in our defences.

Therefore the dukes of Berry, and of Bretagne, Of Brabant and of Orleans, shall make forth, And you, prince Dauphin, with all swift despatch, To line, and new repair, our towns of war With men of courage, and with means defendant:

For England his approaches makes as fierce, As waters to the sucking of a gulp.
It fits us, then, to be as provident As fear may teach us, out of last examples Left by the fatal and neglected English Upon our fields.

Dau. My most redoubted father, It is most meet we arm us ’gainst the foe; For peace itself should not so dull a kingdom, Though war, nor no known quarrel, were in question But that defences, musters, preparations, Should be maintain’d, assembled, and collected, As were a war in expectation.

Therefore, I say, ’t is meet we all go forth, To view the sick and feeble parts of France; And let us do it with no show of fear; No, with no more, than if we heard that England Were busied with a Whitemorris dance; For, my good liege, she is so idly king’d, Her sceptre so fantastically borne By a vain, giddy, shallow, humorous youth, That fear attends her not.

Con. O peace, prince Dauphin.

You are too much mistaken in this king.

Question your grace the late ambassadors, With what great state he heard their embassy, How well supplied with noble counsellors, How modest in exception, and, withal, How terrible in constant resolution, And you shall find, his vanities forespent Were but the outside of the Roman Brutus, Covering discretion with a coat of folly; As gardeners do with ordure hide those roots That shall first spring, and be most delicate.

Dau. Well, ’t is not so, my lord high constable; But though we think it so, it is no matter: In cases of defence, ’t is best to weigh The enemy more mighty than he seems, So the proportions of defence are fill’d; Which, of a weak and niggardly projection, Doth like a miser, spoil his coat with scanting A little cloth.

Fr. King. Think we king Harry strong; And, princes, look, you strongly arm to meet him. The kindred of him hath been flesh’d upon us, And he is bred out of that bloody strain, That haunted us in our familiar paths: Witness our too much memorable shame, When Cressey battle fatally was struck, And all our princes captiv’d by the hand Of that black name, Edward black prince of Wales,

1 The Arrasoon, was a white cloth placed upon the head of a child after it was anointed with the chrism, or sacred oil. The name was afterward given to the white cloth in which the child was wrapped at the ceremony, and which was used as its shroud, if it died within the months of its birth. Children so dying were called Chiromas, in the old bills of mortality. 2 The old copies read: a table of green fields which Theobald conjecturally altered to, a babbies of green fields.
WHILEST that his mighty sire, on mountain standing,
Up in the air, crown'd with the golden sun,
Saw his herculean seed, and smil'd to see him,
Mangle the work of nature, and deface
The patterns that by God, and by French fathers,
Had twenty years been made. This is a stem
Of that victorious stock; and let us fear
The native slightness and fate of him.
 ENTER A MESSENGER.
MESS. Ambassadors from Henry King of England
Do crave admittance to your majesty.
FR. KING. We'll give them present audience. Go, and bring them.
[Exeunt Mess. and certain Lords.
YOU see, this chase is hotly follow'd, friends.
DOU. Turn head, and stop pursuit; for coward dogs
Most spend their mouths, when what they seem to threaten Runs far before them. Good my sovereign,
Take up the English short, and let them know
Of what a monarch you are the head:
Self-love, my liege, is not so vile a sin
As self-neglecting.
RE-ENTER LORDS, with EXETER and TALBOT.
FR. KING. From our brother of England?
EXE. From him; and thus he greet your majesty.
He wills you, in the name of God Almighty,
That you divert yourself, and lay apart
The borrow'd glories, that by gift of heaven,
By law of nature, and of nations, long
To him, and to his heirs; namely, the crown,
And all wide-stretched honors that pertain,
By custom and the ordinance of times,
Unto the crown of France. That you may know,
'T is no sinister, nor no awkward claim,
Pick'd from the worm-holes of long-vanish'd days,
Nor from the dust of old oblivion rack'd,
He sends you this most memorable line,
[Give a pedigree.
In every branch truly demonstrative;
Willing you overlook this pedigree,
And when you find him evenly deriv'd
From his most fam'd of famous ancestors,
Edward the third, he bids you then resign
Your crown and kingdom, indirectly held
From him, the native and true challenger.
FR. KING. Or else what follows?
EXE. Bloody constraint; for if you hide the crown
Even in your hearts, there will he rage for it:
Therefore, in fierce tempest he is coming,
In thunder, and in earthquake, like a Jove,
That, if requiring fail, he will compel:
And bids you, in the bowels of the Lord,
Deliver up the crown, and take mercy
On the poor souls, for whom this hungry war
Opens his vasty jaws; and on your head
Turning the widows' tears, the orphans' cries,
The dead men's blood, the pining maidens' groans,
For husbands, fathers, and betrothed lovers,
That shall be swallowed in this controversy.
This is his claim, his threat'ning, and my message;
Unless the Dauphin be in presence here,
To whom expressly I bring greeting too.
FR. KING. For us, we will consider of this farther.
To-morrow shall you bear our full intent
Back to our brother of England.
DOU. For the Dauphin, I stand here for him: what to him from England?
EXE. Scorn, and defiance, slight regard, contempt,
And any thing that may not misbecome
The mighty sender, doth he prize you at.
Thus says my king: and, if your father's highness
Do not, in grant of all demands at large,
Sweaten the bitter mock you sent his majesty,
He'll call you to so hot an answer of it,
That caves and wormy vaultages of France
Shall chide your trespass, and return your mock
In second access of his ordinance.
DOU. Say, if my father render fair return,
It is against my will; for I desire
Nothing but odds with England: to that end,
As matching to his youth and vanity,
I did present him with the Paris bails.
EXE. He'll make your Paris Louvre shake for it,
Were it the mistress court of mighty Europe.
And, be assured, you'll find a difference,
As we his subjects have in wonder found,
Between the promise of his greener days,
And these he mantes now. Now he weighs time,
Even to the utmost grain; that you shall read
In your own looses, if he stay in France.
FR. KING. To-morrow shall you know our mind at full.
EXE. Despatch us with all speed, lest that our king
Come here himself to question our delay;
For he is footed in this land already.
FR. KING. You shall be soon despatch'd with fair conditions.
A night is but small breath, and little pause,
To answer matters of this consequence.
[Flourish. EXEUN

ACT III.

ENTER CHORUS.
CHORUS. Thus with imagin'd wing our swift scene flies,
In motion of no less celerity
Than that of thought. Suppose, that you have seen
The well-appointed king at Hampton pier,
Embrace his royalty; and his brave fleet
With silken streamers the young Phoebus faning:
Play with your fancies, and in them behold,
Upon the hempen tackle ship-boys climbing;
Hear the shrill whistle, which doth order give
To sounds confus'd: behold the threaden sails,
Blown with th' invisible and creeping wind,

MOUNTAIN: in f. e.
BERN: in f. e.

DRAW the huge bottoms through the furrow'd sea,
Breasting the lofty surge. O! do but think,
You stand upon the rivage, and behold
A city on th' inconstant billows dancing;
For so appears this fleet majestic,
Holding due course to Harlour. Follow, follow!
Grapple your minds to sternage of this navy;
And leave your England, as dead midnight.......
Guarded with grandees, babes, and old women,
Either past, or not arriv'd to, pith and puissance;
For who is he, whose chin is but enrich'd
With one appearing hair, that will not follow
These call'd and choice-drawn cavaliers to France?
KING HENRY V.

ACT IV.

Work, work your thoughts, and therein see a siege:
Beliol the ordinance on their carriages,
With fatal maws gaping on girded Harfleur,
Suppose, th' ambassador from the French comes back;
Tell Harry that the king doth offer him
Katharine his daughter; and with her, to dowry,
Some petty and unprofitable dukedoms.
The offer likes not: and the nimble gunner
With linstock now the devilish cannon touches.
[Alarum; and Chambers go off.
And down goes all before them. Still be kind,
And eke out our performances with your mind. [Exit.

SCENE I.—France. Before Harfleur.

Alarums. Enter King Henry, Exeter, Bedford, Gloucester, and Soldiers, with Scaiming Ladders.

K. Hen.* Once more unto the breach, dear friends, once more;
Or close the wall up with our English dead!
In peace, there's nothing so becomes a man,
As modest stillness, and humility:
But when the blast of war blows in our ears,
Then imitate the action of the tiger:
Stiffen the sinews, summon up the blood,
Disguise fair nature with hard-favour'd rage:
Then lend the eye a terrible aspect;
Let it pry through the portage of the head.
Like the brass cannon; let the brow o'ermight it,
As fearfully, as doth a gall'd rock
O'erhang and jutty his confounded base,
Swiftly with the wild and wasteful ocean.
Now set the teeth, and stretch the nostril wide;
Hold hard the breath, and bend up every spirit
To his full height!—Oh, on, on, you noblest English! Whose blood is fester'd from fathers of war-proof.
Fathers, that, like so many Alexanders,
Have in these parts from morn till even fought,
And sheathed their swords for lack of argument.
Dishonour not your mothers: now attest,
That those whom you call'd your fathers did beget you.
Be copy now to men of grosser blood,
And teach them how to war.—And you, good yeomen,
Whose limbs were made in England, show us here
The mettle of your pasture: let us swear
That you are worth your breeding; which I doubt not,
For there is none of you so mean and base,
That hath not noble lustre in your eyes.
I see you stand like greyhounds in the slips,
Straining upon the start. The game's afoot:
Follow your spirit; and upon this charge,
Cry—God for Harry! England! and Saint George!
[Exeunt. Alarum, and Chambers go off.

SCENE II.—The Same.

Forces pass over; then enter Nym, Bardolph, Pistol, and Boy.

Bard. On, on, on, on, on! to the breach, to the breach! Nym. Pray thee, corporal, stay: the knacks are too hot; and for mine own part, I have not a case of lives; the humour of it is too hot, that is the very plain-song of it.
Pist. The plain song is most just, for humours do abound;
Knocks go and come,
To all and some, God's vassals feel the same;

And sword and shield,
In bloody field,
Do' win immortal fame.

Boy. Would I were in an alehouse in London! would give all my fame for a pot of ale, and safety.
Pist. And I:
If wishes would prevail with me,
My purpose should not fall with me,
But thither would I now.*

Boy. And as duly,
But not as truly,
As bird doth sing on bough.

Enter Fluellen.

Flu. Up to the preach, you dogs! avanti, you caitions!
[Driving them forren.
Pist. Be merciful, great duke, to men of mould!
Abate thy rage, abate thy manly rage;
Abate thy rage, great duke!
Good bawcock, bate thy rage: use lenity, sweet chief.
Nym. These be good humours! —your honour was Bad humours.

[Fluellenn drives out Nym, Pistol, and Bardolph.

Boy. As young as I am, I have observed these swashers. I am boy to them all three, but all the three, though they would serve me, could not bear to me; for, indeed, three such antiscs do not amount to a man. For Bardolph, he is white-livered, and face; by the means whereof, 2 faces out, but his not. For Pistol, he hath a killing tongue, and a quiet word; by the means whereof, a breaks words of keeps whole weapons. For Nym, he hath heard, the men of few words are the best men; and therefore scorns to say his prayers, lest 'a should be thanked cowardly: but his few bad words are match'd with few good deeds; for 'a never broke any man's back, but his own, and that was against a post when he was drunk. They will steal any thing, and call it purloin: Bardolph stole a lute-case; bore it twelve leagues; sold it for three halfpence. Nym and Bardolph being brothers in fitching, and in Calais they did fire-shovel: I knew by that piece of service the men carried coals. They would have me as fast with men's pockets, as their gloves or their hand chieft: which makes much against my manhood. 'I should take from another's pocket, to put into me for it is plain pocketing up of wrongs. I must let them, and seek some better service: their villainy against my weak stomach, and therefore I must cast up.

Re-enter Fluellen, Gower following.

Gow. Captain Fluellen, you must come presently the mines: the duke of Gloster would speak with y

Flu. To the mines? tell you the duke, it is not good to come to the mines: for, look you, the mine not according to the disciplines of the war: the cavities of it is not sufficient; for, look you, th' ishary (you may discuss unto the duke; look you) is dig himself four yards under the countermines. By Chesh, I think, 2 will plow up all, if there is not better rections.

Gow. The duke of Gloster, to whom the order of siege is given, is altogether directed by an Irishman very valiant gentleman, 1 i' faith.

Flu. It is captain Macmorris, is it not?

Gow. I think it be.

Flu. By Cheshu, he is an ass, as in the world. I verify as much in his beard: he has no more direct SCENE IV.—The Same. Before the Gates of Harfleur.

Enter King Henry, his Train and Forces. The Governor and some Citizens on the Walls.

K. Hen. How yet resolves the governor of the town?

This is the last parle we will admit:

Therefore, to our best mercye give yourselves,

Or, like to men proud of destruction,

Defy us to our worst; for, as I am a soldier,

A name that in my thoughts becomes me best,

If I begin the battery once again,

I will not leave the half-achieved Harfleur,

Till in her ashes she lie buried.

The gates of mercy shall be all shut up;

And the flesh'd soldier, rough and hard of heart,

In liberty of bloody hand shall range

With conscience wide as hell, mowing like grass

Your fresh fair virgins, and your flowering infants.

What is it then to me, if impious war,

Array'd in flames like to the prince of fiends,

Do, with his smirch'd complexion, all fell feats

Enkind'd to waste and desolation?

What is 't to me, when you yourselves are cause,

If your pure reason and the calmness of the man

Of hot and forcing violation?

What rein can hold licentious wickedness,

When down the hill he holds his fierce career?

We may as bootless spend our vain command

Upon th' enraged soldiers in their spoil,

As send precepts to the Leviathan

To come ashore. Therefore, you men of Harfleur

Take pity of your town, and of your people,

Whiles yet my soldiers are in my command;

Whiles yet the cool and temperate wind of grace

O'erblows the filthy and contagious clouds

Of heady murder, spoil, and villainy.

If not, why, in a moment look to see

The blind and bloody soldier with foul hand

Defile the locks of your shrill-shrieking daughters

Your fathers taken by the silver beards,

And their most revered heads dash'd to the walls;

Your naked infants spitted upon pikes,

In hands of murder, sowing the land with blood

Of men and women; for we do deprive

Herod's bloody-hunting slaugthermen.

What say you? will you yield, and this avoid,

Or, guilty in defence, be thus destroyed?

Gov. Our expectation hath this day an end.

The Dauphin, whom of succour we entreated,

Returns us that his powers are not yet ready

To raise so great a siege. Therefore, great king,

We yield our town and lives to thy soft mercy.

Enter our gates: dispose of us, and ours,

For we no longer are defensible.

K. Hen. Open your gates!—Come, uncle Exeter,

Go you and enter Harfleur; there remain, [Gates opened

And fortify it strongly 'gainst the French:

Use mercy to them all. For us, dear uncle,

The winter coming on, and sickness growing

Upon our soldiers, we will retire to Calais.

To-morrow in Harfleur will we be your guest:

To-morrow for the march are we address'd.

[Flourish. The KING, &c. enter the Town.

SCENE IV.—Rouen. A Room in the Palace.

Enter Katharine and Alice.

Kath. Alice, tu es as est en Angleterre, et tu parles bien le langage.

Alice. Un peu, madame.
Kath. Je te prie, m'enseigne; il faut que j'apprenne à parler. Comment appelles vous la main, en Anglais?
Alice. La main? elle est appelée, de hand.
Kath. De hand. Et les doigts?
Alice. Les doigts? ma foi, je oublie les doigts; mais je me souviendrai. Les doigts? je pense, qu'ils sont appelés de fingres; ouy, de fingres.
Kath. La main, de hand: les doigts, de fingres. Je pense, que je suis le bon escolier. J'ai gagné deux mots d'Anglais vistement. Comment appelles vous les ongles?
Alice. Les ongles? les appellois, de naille.
Kath. De nails. Écoutez; dites moi, si je parle bien: de hand, de fingres, de nails.
Alice. C'est bien dit, madame; il est fort bon Anglais.
Kath. Dites moi l'Anglais pour le bras.
Alice. De arm, madame.
Kath. Et le coude.
Alice. De elbow.
Kath. De elbow. Je m'en fait la répition de tous les mots, que vous m'avez appris dès à présent.
Alice. Il est trop difficile, madame. comme je pense.
Kath. Excuses moi. Alice; écoutez: de hand, de fingres, de nails, de arm, de bilbrow.
Alice. De elbow, madame.
Kath. O Seigneur! ma foi, je m'en oublie, de elbow.
Comment appelles vous le col?
Alice. De neck, madame.
Kath. De neck. Et le menton?
Alice. De chin.
Alice. Oui. Sauf votre honnête; en vérité, vous prononcez les mots aussi droit que les nats de l'Angleterre.
Kath. Je ne doute point d'apprendre par la grace de Dieu, et en peu de temps.
Alice. N'avez vous pas déjà oublié ce que je vous ay enseigné?
Kath. Non, je réciterai à vous promptement. De hand, de fingres, de nails—
Alice. De nails, madame.
Kath. De nails, de armes, de bilbrow.
Alice. Sauf votre honnête, de elbow.
Comment appelles vous le pied et la robe?
Alice. De foot, madame; et de con.
Kath. De foot, et de con? O Seigneur Dieu! ces sont mots de son manuvs, corruptible, grosse, et impudique, et non pour les dames d'honneur d'user. Je ne voudrois prononcer ces mots devant les seigneurs de France, pour tout le monde. Il faut de foot, et de con, néantmoins. Je réciterai une autre fois ma leçon ensemble: de hand, de fingres, de nails, de arm, de elbow, de neck, de sin, de foot, de con.
Alice. Excellent, madame!
Kath. C'est assez pour une fois: allons nous à diner. [Exeunt.

SCENE V.—The Same. Another Room in the Same.

Enter the French King, the Dauphin, Duke of Bour- bon, the Constable of France, and others.

Fr. King. 'Tis certain, he hath passed the river Sommen.

Con. And he be not fought withal, my lord, Let us not live in France: let us quit all, And give our vineyards to a barbarous people.

Duc. O Dieu vivant! Shall a few sprays of us, The emptying of our fathers' luxury, Our scions, put in wild and savage stock, Spirit up so suddenly into the clouds,

And overlook their grafters?

Bour. Normans, but bastard Normans, Normans bastards.

Mort de moy! if they march aloft
Unfought withal, but I will sell my dukedom,
To buy a slovenly and a draty farm
In that nook-shotten 1 isle of Albion.

Con. Dieu de batailles! where have they this meat! Is not their climate foggy, raw, and dull,
On whom, as in despite, the sun looks pale,
Killing their fruit with frowns? Can sodden water,
A drench for sur-rein'd jades, their barley bread,
Decoy their cold blood to such valiant heat?
And shall our quick blood, spirited with wine,
Seem frosty? O! for honour of our land,
Let us not hang like roping ieciles
Upon our horses' thatch, whiles a more frosty people
Sweat drops of gallant youth in our rich fields,
Poor we may call them, in their native lords.

Duc. By faith and honour,
Our madams mock at us, and plainly say,
Our mettle is bred out; and they will give
Their bodies to the lust of English youth,
To unseate France with bastard warriors.

Rour. They bid us to the English dancing-schools,
And teach lavollas 2 high, and swift corantos;
Saying, our grace is only in our heels,
And that we are most lofty runaways.

Fr. King. Where is Montjoy, the herald? spee him hence;
Let him greet England with our sharp defiance.—
Up, princes! and, with spirit of honour, edg'd
More sharper than your swords, hie to the field.
Charles De-la-bret, high constable of France;
You dukes of Orleans, Bourbon, and of Berry,
Alençon, Brabant, Bar, and Burgundy;
Jaques Chatillon, Rambures, Vaudemont,
Beaumont, Grandpré, Roussi, and Fauconberg,
Foix, Lestrade, Bouiquault, and Charollos,
High dukes, great princes, barons, lords, and knights,
For your great states, now quít you of great shames.

Bar Harry England, that sweeps through our land With pennons painted in the blood of Harleu;
Rush on his host; as doth the melted snow Upon the valley, whose low vernal seat
The Alps doth spit and void his rheum upon.
Go, down upon him,—you have power enough,— And in a captive chariot into Rouen Bring him our prisoner.

Con. This becomes the great.

Sorry am I, his numbers are so few,
His soldiers sick; and famish'd in their march,
For, I am sure, when he shall see our army, He'll drop his heart into the sink of fear; And for achievement offer us his ransom.

Fr. King. Therefore, lord constable, haste on Mon joy: And let him say to England, that we send To know what willing ransom he will give.—
Prince Dauphin, you shall stay with us in Rouen.

Duc. Not so, I do beseech your majesty.

Fr. King. Be patient, for you shall remain with us. Now, forth, lord constable, and princes all, And quickly bring us word of England's fall. [Exeunt

SCENE VI.—The English Camp in Picardy.

Enter GOWER and FLEULEN.

Gow. How now, captain Fleurelen? come you for the bridge?
KING HENRY V.

I assure you, there is very excellent service committed at the bridge.

Is the duke of Exeter safe?

The duke of Exeter is as magnanimous as Aramnomon; and a man that I love and honour with my soul, and my heart, and my duty, and my life, and my living, and my uttermost power: he is as (God be praised, and pleased!) any hurt in the world; but keeps the pride most valiantly, with excellent discipline. There is an ancient, lieutenant, there, at the bridge,—I think, in my very conscience, he is as valiant a man as Mark Antony, and he is a man of no estimation in the world: but I did see him do as gallant service.

What do you call him?

He is called ancient Pistol.

I know him not.

Enter Pistol.

Here is the man.

Captain, I thee beseech to do me favours:
The duke of Exeter doth love thee well.

Ay, I praise Got; and I have merited some love at his hands.

Pardolph, a soldier firm and sound of heart, And bustom valour, hath, by cruel fate And giddy fortune’s furious fickle wheel, That goddess blind, That stands upon the rolling restless stone,—

By your patience, ancient Pistol. Fortune is plumed plinth, with a muffler afore her eyes, to signify to you that fortune is plind; and she is painted also with a wheel, to signify to you, which is the moral of it, that she is turning, and inconstant, and mutability, and variation: and her foot, look you, is fixed upon a spherical stone, which rolls, and rolls, and rolls. In god truth, the poet makes a most excellent description of it: fortune is an excellent moral.

Pardolph is Pardolph’s foe, and frowns on him; For he hath stole a pace, and hanged must ‘a be. A damned death!

Let fallows gape for dog, let man go free, And let not hem his wine-pipe suffocate. But Exeter hath given the doom of death, For pace of little price:

Therefore, go apace, the duke will hear thy voice, And let not Pardolph’s vital thread be cut With edge of penney cord, and vile reproach: Spain’s main, in his life, and I will thee require.

Ancient Pistol, I do partly understand thy meaning.

Why then, rejoice therefore.

Certainly, ancient, it is not a thing to rejoice at: for if, look you, he were my brother, I would desire the duke to use his good pleasure, and put him to execution, for discipline ought to be used.

Die and be damned; and for thy friendship!

It is well.

The bug of Spain! [Exit Pistol, making the sign.]

Very good.

Why, this is an arrant counterfeit rascal: I remember him now; a bawd; a cutpurse.

I’ll assure you, ’a utter’d as prave words at the bridge, as you shall see in a summer’s day. But it is very well, what he has spoke to thee; that is well, I warrant you, when time is serve.

Why, ’tis a guilt, a fool, a rogue; that now and then goes to the wars, to grace himself at his return into London under the form of a soldier. And such fellows are perfect in the great commanders’ names, and they will learn you by rote where services were done:—at such and such a source, at such a breach, at such a convoy; who came off bravely, who was shot, who disgraced, what terms the enemy stood on: and this they can perfectly in the phrase of war, which they trick up with new-coined oaths: and what a board of the general’s cut, and a horrid suit of the camp, will do among foaming bottles, and ale-washed wits, is wonderful to be thought on. But you must learn to know such slanderers of the age, or else you may be marvellously mistook.

I tell you what, captain Gower; I do perceive he is not the man that he would gladly make his show in the world he is: if I find a hole in his sock, I will tell him my mind. [Drum heard.] Hark you, the king is coming, and I must speak with him from the pridge.

Enter King Henry, Gloucester, and Soldiers sick and tattered.

Got pleas your majesty!

K. Hen. How now, Fluellen? canst thou from the bridge?

Ay, so please your majesty. The duke of Exeter has very gallantly maintained the pridge: the French is gone off, look you, and there is gallant and most prave passages. Marry, the’st awarness was have possession of the pridge but he is enforced to retire, and the duke of Exeter is master of the bridge. I can tell your majesty, the duke is a prave man.

K. Hen. What men have you lost, Fluellen?

The perdicion of the’st awarness hath been very great, reasonable great: marry, for my part, I think the duke hath lost never a man, but one that is like to be executed for robbing a church; one Pardolph, if your majesty know the man: his face is all his sickles, and whelks, and knots, and flames of fire; and his lips plows at his nose, and it is like a coal of fire, sometimes plue, and sometimes red; but his nose is executed, and his fire’s out.

K. Hen. We would have all such offenders so cut off: and we give express charge, that in our marches through the country, there be nothing compelled from the villages, nothing taken but paid for: none of the French upbraided, or abused in disdainful language, for when lenity galls: cruelty play for a kingdom, the gentler gamester is the soonest winner.

Tucket. Enter Montjoy.

Mont. You know me by my habit.

K. Hen. Well then, I know thee: what shall I know of thee?

Mont. My master’s mind.

K. Hen. Unfold it.

Mont. Thus says my king:—Say thou to Harry of England. Though we seemed dead, we did sleep: advantage is a better soldier than rashness. ‘Tell him, we could have rebuked him at Harfleur; but that we thought not good to bruise an injury, till it were full ripe: now we speak upon our cue, and our voice is imperial. England shall repent his folly, see his weakness, and admire our sufferance. Bid him, therefore, consider of his ransom; which must proportion the losses we have borne, the subjects we have lost, the disgrace we have digested; which, in weight to re-answer, his petition would bow under. For our losses, his exchequer is too poor; for the effusion of our blood, the muster of his kingdom too faint a number; and for our disgrace, his own person, kneeling at our feet, but a weak and worthless satisfaction.
To this add defiance: and tell him, for conclusion, he hath betrayed his followers, whose condemnation is pronounced. So far my king and master: so much my office.

K. Hen. What is thy name? I know thy quality.
Mont. Montjoy.

K. Hen. Thou dost thy office fairly. Tis; thee back,
And tell thy king,—I do not seek him now,
But could be willing to march on to Calais
Without imprisonment; for, to say the truth,
Though 't is no wisdom to confess so much
Unto an enemy of craft and vantage,
My people are with sickness much enfeebled;
My numbers lessen'd, and those few I have,
Almost no better than so many French:
Who, when they were in health, I tell thee, herald,
I thought upon one pair of English legs
Did march three Frenchmen.—Yet, forgive me, God,
That I do brag thus!—this thy air of France
Hath blown that vice in me: I must repent.
Go, therefore, tell thy master, here I am:
My ransom is this frail and worthless trunck,
My army but a weak and sickly guard;
Yet, God before, tell him we will come on,
Though France himself, and such another neighbour,
Stand in our way. There's for thy labour, Montjoy.

[Giving a chain.]

Go, bid thy master well advise himself:
If we may pass, we will; if we be hinder'd,
We shall your tawny ground with your red blood
Discolour: and so, Montjoy, fare you well.
The sum of all our answer is but this:
We would not seek a battle, as we are,
Nor, as we are, we say, we will not shun it:
So tell thy master.

Mont. I shall deliver so. Thanks to thy highness.

[Exeunt MONTJOY and GLOUCESTER.

Scene VII. —The French Camp, near Agincourt.

Enter the Constable of France, the Lord RAMBOURK, the Duke of ORLEANS, the Dauphin, and others.

Con. Tutt! I have the best armour of the world.
Would it were day!

Orl. You have an excellent armour; but let my horse have his due.

Con. It is the best horse of Europe.

Orl. Will it never be morning?

Dau. My lord of Orleans, and my lord high consta-table, you talk of horse and armour—

Orl. You are as well provided of both as any prince
In the world.

Dau. What a long night is this!—I will not change my horse with any that treads but on four pasterns.

Ca. ha! He bounds from the earth, as if his entrails were air, le cheval voltant, le Pegasus, qui a les narines de feu! When I bestride him, I soar, I am a hawk;
he trots the air; the earth sighs when he touches it:
the bases horn of his hoof is more musical than the pipe of Hermes.

Orl. He's of the colour of the nutmeg.

1 Not in f. e. 2 bains: i. e. 3 Bare-legged: troopers, or stormers were troopers.
KING HENRY V.

SCENE I.

Enter a Messenger.

Mes. My lord high constable, the English lie within fifteen hundred paces of your tents.

Con. Who hath measured the ground?

Mes. The lord Grandpré.

Con. A valiant and most expert gentleman.—Would it were day!—Alas, poor Harry of England!—he longs not for the dawning, as we do.

Orel. What a wretched and peevish fellow is this king of England, to mope with his fat-brained followers so far out of his knowledge.

Con. If the English had any apprehension, they would run away.

Orel. That they lack; for if their heads had any intellectual armour, they could never wear such heavy head-pieces.

Ram. That island of England breeds very valiant creatures: their mastiffs are of unmatchable courage.

Orel. Foolish ears! that run winkling into the mouth of a Russian bear, and have their heads crushed like rotten apples. You may as well say that’s a valiant fleas, that dare eat his breakfast on the lip of a lion.

Con. Just, just; and the men do sympathize with the mastiffs in robusious and rough coming on, leaving their wits with their wives: and, then, give them great meals of beef, and iron and steel, they will eat like wolves, and fight like devils.

Orel. Ay, but these English are shrewdly out of beef.

Con. Then shall we find to-morrow they have only stomachs to eat, and none to fight. Now is it time to arm: come, shall we about it?

Orel. It is now two o’clock: but, let me see; by ten, we shall have each a hundred Englishmen. [Exit.

ACT IV.

Enter Chorus.

Chor. Now entertain conjecture of a time,
When creeping murmur and the piercing dark,
Fills the wide vessel of the universe.

From camp to camp, through the foul womb of night,
The hum of either army stilly sounds,
That the fix’d sentinels almost receive
The secret whispers of each other’s watch:
Fire answers fire, and through their pale flames
Each battle sees the other’s umber’d face:
Spectre threats dreads, in high and boastful neighs
Pierced the night’s dull ear; and from the tents,
The armoursiers accomplishing the knights,
With busy hammers closing rivets up,
Give dreadful note of preparation.

The great cackles do crow, the clocks do toll,
And the third hour of drowsy morning’s nam’d,
Proud of their numbers, and secure in soul,
The confident and over-lusty French
Do the low-rated English play at dice;
And chide the cripple, tardy-gaited night,
Who, like a fool and ugly witch, doth limp
So tediously away. The poor condemned English,
Like sacrifices, by their watchful fires
Sat patiently, and only ruminate
The morning’s danger; and their gesture sad,
Investing lanc-lean checks, and war-worn coats,
Presenteth them unto the gazing moon
So many horrible sights! O now, who will behold

The royal captain of this ruin’d band,
Walking from watch to watch, from tent to tent,
Let him cry—Praise and glory on his head!
For forth he goes, and visits all his host,
Bids them good-morrow with a modest smile,
And calls them brothers, friends, and countrymen.

Upon his royal face there is no note,
How dread an army hath surrounded him,
Nor doth he dedicate one jot of colour
Unto the weary and all-watch’d night;
But freshely looks, and over-bears attaint,
With cheerful semblance, and sweet majesty;
That every wretch, pining and pale before,
Beholding him, plucks comfort from his looks.
A largess universal, like the sun,
His liberal eye doth give to every one,
Thawing cold fear, that mean and gentle all,
Behold, as may unworthiness define,
A little touch of Harry in the night.
And so our scene must to the battle fly;
Where, O for pity! we shall much disgrace—
With four or five most vile and ragged foils,
Right ill-disposed, in brawl ridiculous,—
The name of Agincourt yet, sit and see;
Minding true things by what their mockeries be. [Exit.

SCENE I.—The English Camp at Agincourt.

Enter King Henry, Bedford, and Gloster.

K. Hen. Gloster, ’t is true that we are in great danger:
The greater, therefore, should our courage be.
Good morrow, brother Bedford.—God Almighty! There is some soul of goodness in things evil, Would one Observingly distil it out, For our bad neighbour makes us early stirrers, Which is both healthful, and good husbandry: Besides, they are our outward consciences, And preachers to us all; admonishing, That we should dress us fairly for our end, Thus may we gather honey from the weed, And make a moral of the devil himself.

Enter ERPINGHAM.

Good morrow, old Sir Thomas Erpingham: A good soft pillow for that great white head Were better than a churlish turf of France.

Erp. Not so, my liege: this lodging likes me better; Since I may say, now lie I like a king.

K. Hen. 'Tis good for men to love their present pains, Upon example: so the spirit is eased. And when the wind is quicken'd, out of doubt, The organs, though defunct and dead before, Break up their drowsy grave, and newly move With ceased slough and fresh legerity. Lend me thy cloak, sir Thomas.—Brothers both, Command me to the princes in our camp; Do my good morrow to them; and, anon, Desire them all to my pavilion.

Glo. We shall, my liege.

[Exeunt GLOSTER and BEDFORD.

Erp. Shall I attend your grace now? K. Hen. No, my good knight; Go with my brothers to my lords of England: I and my bosom must debate a while. And then, I would no other company.

Erp. The Lord in heaven bless thee, noble Harry! [Exit ERPINGHAM.

K. Hen. God-a-mercy, old heart! thou speakest cheerfully.

Enter Pistoll.

Pist. Qui est là?

K. Hen. A friend.

Pist. Discuss unto me; art thou officer? Or art thou base, common, and popular?

K. Hen. I am a gentleman of a company. Pist. Trail'st thou the puissant pike?

K. Hen. Even so. What are thou?

Pist. As good a gentleman as the emperor. K. Hen. Then you are a better than the king. Pist. The king's a base wretch, and a heart of gold, A lad of life, an imp of fame; Of parents good, of might most valiant: I kiss his dirty shoe, and from heart-string I love the lovely bully. What's thy name?

K. Hen. Yes.

Pist. Tell him, I'll knock his leek about his pate, Up some David's day. K. Hen. Do not you wear your dagger in your cap that day, lest he knock that about yours.

Pist. Art thou his friend?

K. Hen. And his kinsman too.

Pist. The fic for thee then! K. Hen. I thank you. God be with you!

Pist. My name is Pistol called. [Exit. K. Hen. It sorts well with your fierceness.

[Exit FLUENELLEN and GOWER, severally.

Gow. Captain Fluellen!
If his cause be wrong, our obedience to the king wipes the crime of it out of us.

Will. But, if the cause be not good, the king himself hath a heavy reckoning to make. when all those legs, and arms, and heads, chopped off in a battle, shall join together at the latter day, and cry all—"We died at such a place?" some swearing, some crying for a surgeon, some upon their wives left poor behind them, some upon the debts they owe, some upon their children rawly left. I am afraid there are few die well, that die in a battle; for how can they charitably dispose of that which is blood in their argument? Now, if these men do not die well, it will be a black matter for the king that led them to it, whom to disobey were against all proportion of subjection.

K. Hen. So, if a son, that is by his father sent about merchandise, do finely miscarry upon the sea, the imputation of his wickedness, by your rule, should be imposed upon his father that sent him: or if a servant, under his master's command, transporting a sum of money, be found with robbers, and die in many irreconciled iniquities, you may call the business of the master the author of the servant's damnation. But this is not so: the king is not bound to answer the particular endings of his soldiers, the father of his son, nor the master of his servant; for they purpose not their death, when they purpose their services. Besides, there is no king, be his cause never so spotless, if it come to the arbitrement of swords, can try it out with all unspotted soldiers. Some, peradventure, have on them the guilt of premeditated and contrived murder; some, of beguiling virgins with the broken seals of perjury; some, making the wars their bulwark, that have before gored the gentle bosom of peace with pilage and robbery. Now, if these men have defeated the law, and outrun native punishment, though they can outstrip men, they have no wings to fly from God: war is his badge: war is his vengeance; so that here men are punished, for before-breath of the king's laws, in now the king's quarrel: where they feared the death, they have borne life away, and where they would be safe, they perish: then, if they die unprovided, no more is the king guilty of their damnation, than he was before guilty of those impieties for the which they are now visited. Every subject's duty is the king's: but every subject's soul is his own. Therefore, should every soldier in the wars do as every sick man in his bed, wash every mote out of his conscience; and dying so, death is to him advantage; or not dying, the time was blessedly lost, wherein such preparation was gained: and, in him that escapes, it were not sin to think, that making God so free an offer, he let him out-live that day to see his greatness, and to teach others how they should prepare.

Will. 'Tis certain, every man that dies ill, the ill upon his own head: the king is not to answer it.

Bater. I do not desire he should answer for me; and yet I determine to fight lustily for him.

K. Hen. If I myself heard the king say, he would not ransom.

Will. Ay, he said so to make us fight cheerfully; but when our throats are cut, he may be ransomed, and we ne'er the wiser.

K. Hen. If I live to see it, I will never trust his word after.

Will. You pay him then! That's a perilous shot out of an elder gun, that a poor and a private displeasure can do against a monarch. You may as well go about to turn the sun to ice with fanning in his face with a peacock's feather. You'll never trust his word after! come. 'tis a foolish saying.

K. Hen. Your reproach is something too round! I should be angry with you, if the time were convenient.

Will. Let it be a quarrel between us, if you live.

K. Hen. I embrace it.

Will. How shall I know thee again?

K. Hen. Give me any gage of thine, and I will wear it in my bonnet: then, if ever thou dost acknowledge it, I will make it my quarrel.

Will. Here's my glove: give me another of thine.

K. Hen. There.

Will. This will I also wear in my cap: if ever thou come to me and say, after to-morrow, "This is my glove," by this hand, I will take thee a box on the ear.

K. Hen. If ever I live to see it, I will challenge it.

Will. Thou darest as well be hanged.

K. Hen. Well, I will do it, though I take thee in the king's company.

Will. Keep thy word: fare thee well.

Bater. Be friends, you English fools, be friends: we have French quarrels enough, if you could tell how to reckon.

K. Hen. Indeed, the French may lay twenty French crowns to one they will beat us, for they bear them on their shoulders; but it is no English treason to cut French crowns, and to-morrow the king himself will be a clipper.

[Exeunt Soldiers.

Upon the king! let us our lives, our souls, Our debts, our careful wives, our children, And our sins, lay on the king!—we must bear all. O hard condition! twin born-with greatness, Subject to the breath of every fool, Whose sense no more can feel but his own wringing.

What infinite heart's ease must kings neglect, That private men enjoy?

And what have kings, that private have not too,

Save ceremony, save general ceremony?

And what art thou, thou idol ceremony?

What kind of god art thou, that suffer'st more

Of mortal griefs, than do thy worshippers?

What are thy rents? what are thy coming-in?

O ceremony, show me but thy worth!

What is thy soul but adulation?

Art thou aught else but place, degree, and form?

Creating awe and fear in other men,

Wherein thou art less happy, being fear'd, Than they in fearing.

What drink'st thou oft, instead of homage sweet,

But poison'd flattering? O! be sick, great greatness,

And bid thy ceremony give thee cure.

Think'st thou, the fiery fever will go out

With titles blown from adulation?

Will it give place to flexure and low bending?

Canst thou, when thou command'st the beggar's knee,

Command the health of it? No, thou proud dream,

That play'st so subtly with a king's repose:

I am a king, that find thee; and I know,

'Tis not the balm, the eucalypt, and the ball,

The sword, the mace, the crown imperial,

The inter-tissued robe of gold and pearl,

The farced title running 'fore the king,

The throne he sits on, nor the tide of pomp

That beats upon the high shore of this world;

No, not all these, thric-e-gorgeous ceremony,

Not all these laid in bed majestical,

Can sleep so soundly as the wretched slave,

Who, with a body fill'd, and vacant mind,

Gets him to rest, cram'd with distasteful bread,
Never see herid night, the child of hell,
But, like a lackey, from the rise to set,
Sweats in the eye of Phebus, and all night
Sleeps in Elysium: next day, after dawn,
Both rise and help Hyperion to his horse,
And follows so the ever running year
With profitable labour to his grave:
And, but for ceremony, such a wretch,
Winding up days with toil, and nights with sleep,
Hath the fore-hand and vantage of a king.
The slave, a member of the country's peace,
Enjoys it, but in gross brain little wots,
What watch the king keeps to maintain the peace,
Whose hours the peasant best advantages.

Enter ERPINGHAM.

Erp. My lord, your nobles, jealous of your absence,
Seek through your camp to find you.
K. Hen. Good old knight,
Collect them all together at my tent:
I'll be there the.

Erp. I shall do 't, my lord. [Exit]

K. Hen. O, God of battles! steel my soldiers' hearts:
Possess them not with fear: take from them now
The sense of reckoning, if' th' opposed numbers
Pluck their hearts from them!—Not to-day, O Lord!
O! not to-day, think not upon the fault
My father made in compassing the crown.
I Richard's body have interred now,
And on it have bestow'd more contrite tears,
Than from it issued forced drops of blood.
Five hundred poor I have in yearly pay,
Who twice a day their wither'd hands hold up
Toward heaven, to pardon blood; and I have built
Two countries, where the sad and solemn priests
Sing still for Richard's soul. More will I do;
Though all that I can do is nothing worth,
Since that my penitence comes after all,
Imploring pardon.

Enter GLOSTER.

Glo. My liege!
K. Hen. My brother Gloster's voice?—Ay; I know thy errand, I will go with thee.—
The day, my friends, and all things stay for me. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—The French Camp.

Enter DAUPHIN, ORLEANS, RAMBURES, and others.

Enter Constable.

Now, my lord Constable!

Con. Hark, how our steeds for present service neigh.

Dau. Mount them, and make incision in their hides,
That their hot blood may spin in English eyes,
And donb them with superfluous courage: Ha!

Ram. What, will you have them weep our horses' blood?
How shall we then behold their natural tears?

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. The English are embattled, you French peers.

Con. To horse, you gallant princes! straight to horse! Do but behold you poor and starved band,
And you shall see shall suck away their souls,
Leaving them but the shales* and husks of men.
There is not work enough for all our hands;
Scarce I look enough in all their sickly veins,
To give each naked curtle-ax a stain,
That our French gallants shall to-day draw out,
And sheath for lack of sport: let us but blow on them,
The vapour of our valour will o'ертurn them.
'Tis positive 'gainst all exceptions, lords,
That our superfluous lackeys, and our peasants,
Who in unnecessary action swarm
About our squares of battles, were enow
To purge this field of such a hindering foe,
Though we upon this mountain's basis by
Took stand for idle speculation;
But that our honours must not. What's to say?
A very little little let us do,
And all is done. Then, let the trumpets sound
The tucket-sonnance, and the note to mount:
For our approach shall so much dare the field,
That England shall cough down in fear, and yield.

Enter GRANDPRIX.

Grnd. Why do you stay so long, my lords of France?
You' island carrions, desperate of their bones,
Ill-favour'dly become the morning field:
Their ragged curtains poorly are let loose,
And our air shakes them passing scornfully.
Big Mars seems bankrupt in their baggart host,
And faintly through a rusty beaver peeps.
The horsemen sit like fixed candlesticks,
With torch-staves in their hands,* and their poor jades
Lob down their heads, drooping the hides and hips,
The gum down-roping from their pale-dead eyes,
And in their pale dull mouths the gimmel* bit
Lies, foul with chew'd grass, still and motionless;
And their executors, the knavish crews,
Fly o'er them, all impatient for their hour.
Description cannot suit itself in words,
To demonstrate the life of such a battle,
In life so lifeless as it shows itself.
[death.

Con. They have said their prayers, and they stay for

Dau. Shall we go send them dinners, and fresh suits,
And give their fasting horses provender,
And after fight with them?

Con. I stay but for my guard. On, to the field! I will the banner from a trumpet take,
And use it for my haste. Come, come away!
The sun is high, and we outwear the day. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The English Camp.

Enter all the English Host; GLOSTER, BEDFORD, EETER, SALISBURY, and WESTMORELAND.

Glo. Where is the king?

Bed. The king himself is rode to view their battle.
West. Of fighting men they have full thousand.

Ezz. There's five to one: besides, they all are fresh
Sti. God's arm strike with us! it is a fearful odds.

Bed. Farewell, good Salisbury; and good luck go with thee!

Ezz. Farewell, kind lord. Fight valiantly to-day:
And yet I do thee wrong, to mind thee of it,
For thou art fram'd of the firm truth of valour.

[Exit Salisbury.

Bed. He is as full of valour, as of kindness;
Princeful in both.

West. O! that we now had here

1 of: in folio: which Singer retains, removing the period from the middle of the next line to its close. 2 Sheels. 3 The bost of a trump pet 4 Candlesticks were often made in the figure of a knight, the candle being set in the hand. 5 Double Enter King Henry.

But one ten thousand of those men in England, That do no work to-day.

K. Hen. What's he, that wishes so? My cousin Westmoreland?—No, my fair cousin: If we are mark'd to die, we are enow To do our country loss; and if to live, The fewer men, the greater share of honour.

God's will! I pray thee, wish not one man more. By Jove, I am not covetous for gold; Nor care I who doth feed upon my cost; It figures not if men my garments wear; Such outward things doth dwell not in my desires: But, if it be a sin to covet honour, I am the most offending soul alive. No, 'faith, my coz, wish not a man from England: God's peace! I would not lose so great an honour, As one man more, methinks. would share from me, For the best hope I have. O! do not wish one more: Rather proclaim it, Westmoreland, through my host, That he, which hath no stomach to this fight, Let him depart; his passport he shall have, And crowns for convoy put into his purse: We would not die in that man's company, That fears his fellowship to die with us. This day is call'd—the feast of Crispian: He, that outlives this day, and comes safe home, Will stand a tip-toe when this day is nam'd, And rouse him at the name of Crispian. He, that shall live this day, and see old age, Will yearly on the vigil feast his friends, And say 'to-morrow is Saint Crispian.' Then will he strip his sleeve, and show his scars. Old men forget; yet all shall be forgot, But he'll remember with advantages What feats he did that day. Then shall our names, Familiar in their mouths as household words,— Harry the king, Bedford and Exeter, Warwick and Talbot, Salisbury and Gloster,— Be in their flowing cups freshly remember'd. This story shall the good man teach his son, And Crispin Crispian shall ne'er go by, From this day to the end of the world, But we in it shall be remembered; We few, we happy few, we band of brothers: For he, to-day that sheds his blood with me, Shall be my brother: be he ne'er so vile, This day shall gentles his condition: And gentlemen in England, now a-bed, Shall think themselves accurs'd they were not here, And hold their manhood cheap, whiles any speaks That fought with us upon Saint Crispin's day. Enter Salisbury.

Sal. My sovereign lord, bestow yourself with speed: The French are bravely in their battles set, And will with all expedition charge on us. K. Hen. All things are ready, if our minds be so. West. Perish the man whose mind is backward now! K. Hen. Thou dost not wish more help from England, cousin? West. God's will! my liege, would you and I alone, Without more help, might fight this royal battle. K. Hen. Why, now thou hast uniwish'd five thousand Which likes me better than to wish us one.—[men, You know your places: God be with you all!—] Tucket. Enter Montjoy.

Mont. Once more I come to know of thee, King Harry,

If for thy ransom thou wilt now compound, Before thy most assured overthrow? For, certainly, thou art so near the gulf, Thou needs must be engulfed. Besides, in mercy, The Constable desires thee thou wilt mind Thy followers of repentance; that their souls May make a peaceful and a sweet retire From off these fields, where, wretches, their poor bodies Must lie and fester.

K. Hen. I pray thee, do not further answer back! Bid them achieve me, and then sell my bones. Good God! why should they mock poor fellows thus? The man, that once did sell the lion's skin While the beast liv'd, was kill'd with hunting him. A many of our bodies shall, no doubt, Find native graves, upon the which, I trust, Shall witness live in brass of this day's work; And those that leave their valiant bones in France, Dying like men, though buried in your dunghills, They shall be fam'ly: for thou shalt grieve them And draw their honours reeking up to heaven, Leaving their earthly parts to choke your clime, The smell whereof shall breed a plague in France. Mark, then, rebonding a valour in our English; That, being dead, like to the bullet's grazing, Break out into a second course of mischief, Killing in reflex' of mortality. Let me speak proudly:—Tell the Constable, We are but warriors for the working-day; Our gawrness and our gift are all besmirched With rainy marching in the painful field; There's not a piece of feather in our host, (Good argument, I hope, we will not fly) And time hath worn us into slovenly:

But, by the mass, our hearts are in the trim; And my poor soldiers tell me, yet ere night They'll be in fresher robes, for they will pluck The gay new coats o'er the French soldiers' heads, And turn them out of service. If they do this, As, if God please, they shall, my ransom then Will soon be levied. Herald, save thou thy labour, Come thou no more for ransom, gentle herald: They shall have none, I swear, by these my joints, Which, if they have as I will leave 'em them, Shall yield them little, tell the Constable. Mont. I shall, king Harry: and so fare thee well. Thou never shall hear herald any more. [Exeunt.

Enter the Duke of York.

York. My lord, most humbly on my knee I beg The leading of the vaward. K. Hen. Take it, brave York,—Now, soldiers, march away: And how thou pleasest, God, dispose the day! [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—The Field of Battle.

Pist. Yield, cur.

Fr. Sol. Je pense, que vous êtes le gentilhomme de bonne qualité.

Pist. Quality? Callisto, castore mi a art thou a gentleman? What is thy name? discuss.

Fr. Sol. O seigneur Dieu!

Pist. O! signieur Dow should a gentleman.
Perpend my words, O signieur Dew, and mark:—
O signieur Dew, thou diest on point of fox;
Except, O signieur, thou do give to me
Egregious ransom.
Fr. Sol. O, prenez mésricorde! ayes pitié de moi!
Pist. Moy shall not serve, I will have forty moys;
For I will fetch thy rim out at thy throat,
In drops of crimson blood.
Fr. Sol. Est il impossible d'échapper la force de ton bras?
Pist. Brass, cur?
Thou darned and luxurious mountain goat,
Offer't me brass?
Fr. Sol. O pardonnez moi!
Pist. Sayst thou me so? is that a ton of moys?
Come hither, boy: ask me this slave in French,
What is his name.
Boy: Escoutez! comment êtes vous appelé?
Fr. Sol. Monsieur le Fer.
Boy. He says his name is master Fer.
Pist. Master Fer! I'll fer him, and firk him, and ferk him.—Discuss the same in French unto him.
Boy. I do not know the French for fer, and ferret, and firk.
Pist. Bid him prepare, for I will cut his throat.
Fr. Sol. Que dit-il, monsieur?
Boy. Il me commande à vous dire que vous faites vous prêt; car ce solat ici est disposé tout à cette heure de couper votre gorge.
Pist. Oui, couper le gerge, par ma foi, pesant,
Unless thou give me crowns, brave crowns;
Or the man of steel shall be by this my sword.
Fr. Sol. O! je vous supplie pour l'amour de Dieu, me pardonnez. Je suis le gentilhomme de bonne maison:
gardez ma vie, et vous donnerez deux cents écus.
Pist. What are his words?
Boy. He prays you to save his life: he is a gentleman of a good house; and for his ransom, he will give you two hundred crowns.
Pist. Tell him,—my fury shall abate, and I
The crowns will take.
Boy. Petit monsieur, que dit-il?
Pist. Escort're qu'il est con sa jurements de pardonne aucun prisonnier; n'entraîme, pour les écus que vous avez promis, il est content à vous donner la liberté, le francissement.
Fr. Sol. Sur mes genoux, je vous donne mille remercicements; et je m'estime heureux que je suis tombé entre les mains d'un chevalier, je pense, le plus brave, valant, et tres distingué seigneur d'Angleterre.
Pist. Expound unto me, boy.
Boy. He gives you, upon his knees, a thousand thanks; and he esteems himself happy that he hath fallen into the hands of one (as he thinks) the most brave, valorous, and thrice-worthy seigneur of England.
Pist. As I suck blood, I will some mercy show.
Follow me!
[Exit Pistol.
Boy. Suivez vous le grand capitaine. I did never [Exit French Soldier.

SCENE V.—Another Part of the Field of Battle.
Retreat sounded. Enter Dauphin, Orleans, Bourbon, Constable, Hamburges, and others.
Con. O diable?
Orl. O seigneur!—le jour est perdu! tout est perdu!
Daup. Mort de ma vie! all is confounded, all!
Reproach and everlasting shame
Sit mocking in our pulses.—O méchante fortune!—
Do not run away.
[Short Alarum.
Con. Why, all our ranks are broke.
Dau. O perdurable shame!—let's stab ourselves.
Be these the wretches that we play'd at dice for?
Orl. Is this the king we sent to for his ransom?
Bour. Shame, and eternal shame. nothing but shame!
Let us not fly:—in! Once more back again;
And he that will not follow Bourbon now.
Let him go hence, and, with his cap in hand,
Like a base pander, hold the chamber-door,
Whilst by a slave, no gentler than my dog,
His fairest daughter is contaminat.
Con. Disorder, that hath spoil'd us, friend us now!
Let us in heaps go offer up our lives.
Orl. We are enough, yet living in the field,
To smother up the English in our throngs,
If any order might be thought upon.
Bour. The devil take order now. I'll to the throne:
Let life be short, else shame will be too long!
[Exit.

SCENE VI.—Another part of the Field.
Alarums. Enter King Henry and Forces; Exeunt and others.
K. Hen. Well, have we done, thrice valiant countrymen;
But all's not done; yet keep the French the field.
Exe. The duke of York commends him to your majesty.
K. Hen. Lives he, good uncle? thince within this hour
I saw him down, thrice up again, and fighting;
From helmet to the spur all blood he was.
Exe. In which array, brave soldier, doth he lie,
Loud to mead and plain, and by his bloody side,
(Yoke-fellow to his honour-owing wounds)
The noble earl of Suffolk also lies.
Suffolk first died: and York, all haggled over,
Comes to him, where in gore he lay instead'p,
And takes him by the beard, kisses the gashes,
That bloodily did yawn upon his face;
He cries aloud,—"Tarry, dear cousin Suffolk!
My soul shall thine keep company to heaven:
Tarry, sweet soul, for mine; then fly a-breast,
As in this glorious and well-foughten field,
We kept together in our chivalry!"
Upon these words I came and cheer'd him up:
He smil'd me in the face, taught me his hand,
And, with a feeble gripe, says, "Dear my lord,
Command my service to my sovereign."
So did he turn, and over Suffolk's neck
He threw his wounded arm, and kiss'd his lips;
And so, espoussé to death, with blood he seal'd
A testament of noble-enduring love.
The pretty young noble-man of it fore'd
Those waters from me, which I would have stopp'd:
But I had not so much of man in me,
But all my mother came into mine eyes, and Gave me up to tears.
K. Hen. I blame you not:
For, hearing this, I must perforce compound

1 A name for a sword.  2 The eau in which the bowels are wrapped.—Code's Dic. 1677.  3 An allusion to the old Morality in which the devil usually took part.  4 Alarums: in f. s.  5 Let us die instant: in f. s.  6 Larding: in f. s.
KING HENRY V.

If they'll do neither, we will come to them,
And make them skirr away, as swift as stones
Enforced from the old Assyrian sling.
Besides, we'll cut the throats of those we have;
And not a man of them that we shall take,
Shall taste our mercy.—Go, and tell them so.

Enter MONJOY.

Ezz. Here comes the herald of the French, my liege.

Glo. His eyes are humberler than they us'ld be to.

K. Hen. How now! what means this, herald? know'st

That I have find'd these bones of mine for ransom?

Com'z'th thou again for ransom?

Mont. No, great king:

I come to thee for charitable license,

That we may wander o'er this bloody field,
To look at our dead, and then to bury them;
To sort our nobles from our common men;
For many of our princes, woe the while!
Lies drowned and soak'd in mercenary blood;
So do our vulgar drench their peasant limbs
In blood of princes, and their wounded steeds
Fret sollock deep in gore, and with wild rage
Yerk out their armed heels at their dead masters,
Killing them twice. O! give us leave, great king,
To view the field in safety, and dispose
Of their dead bodies.

K. Hen. I tell thee truly, herald,
I know not if the day be ours, or no;
For yet a many of your horsemen peer,
And gallop o'er the field.

Mont. The day is yours.

K. Hen. Praised be God, and not our strength, for

What is this castle call'd, that stands hard by?

Mont. They call it Agincourt.

K. Hen. Then call we this the field of Agincourt,

Fought on the day of Crispin Crispianus.

Flu. Your grandfather of famous memory, an't please your majesty, and your great-uncle Edward the plack prince of Wales, as I have read in the chronicles, fought a most prave pattle here in France.

K. Hen. They did, Fluellen.

Flu. Your majesty says very true. If your majesty is remembered of it, the Welshmen did gott service in a garden where leeks did grow, wearing leeks in their Monmouth caps, which your majesty knows, to this hour is an honourable padge of the service; and, I do believe, your majesty takes no scorn to wear the leek upon Saint Tavy's day.

K. Hen. I wear it for a memorial honour:

For I am Welsh, you know, good countryman.

Flu. All the water in Wye cannot wash your majesty's Welsh plood out of your body, I can tell you that: Got pless it, and preserve it, as long as it plesess his grace, and his majesty too!

K. Hen. Thanks, good my countryman.

Flu. By Cheeshu, I am your majesty's countryman, I care not who know it; I will confess it to all the world: I need not to be ashamed of your majesty, praised be God, so long as your majesty is an honest man.

K. Hen. God keep me so!—Our heralds go with him:
Bring me just notice of the numbers dead,
On both our parts.—Call yonder fellow hither.

[Points to WILLIAMS. Exeunt MONJOY and others.

Ezz. Soldier, you must come to the king.

K. Hen. Soldier, why wear'st thou that glove in thy eap?
Wil. An't please your majesty, 't is the gage of one that I should fight withal, if he be alive.
K. Hen. An Englishman?
Wil. An't please your majesty, a rascal that swaggered with me last night; who, if 'a live, and ever dare to challenge this glove, I have sworn to take him a box o' the ear: or, if I can see my glove in his cap, which he swore, as he was a soldier, he would wear, it live) I would strike it out soundly.
K. Hen. What think you, captain Fluellen? is it fit this soldier keep his oath?
Flu. He is a craven and a villain else, an't please your majesty, in my conscience.
K. Hen. It may be, his enemy is a gentleman of great sort, quite from the answer of his degree.
Flu. Though he be as good a gentleman as the tevil is, as Lucifer and Belzebub himself, it is necessary, look your grace, that he keep his vow and his oath. If he be perjured, see you now, his reputation is as arrant a villain, and a Jack-sauce, as ever his plack shoe trod upon God's ground and his earth, in my conscience, la.
K. Hen. Then keep thy vow, sirrah, when thou meet'st the fellow.
Wil. So I will, my liege, as I live.
K. Hen. Who serv'st thou under?
Wil. Under Captain Gower, my liege.
Flu. Gower is a good captain, and is good knowldedge, and literatures in the wars.
K. Hen. Call him hither to me, soldier.
Wil. I will, my liege. [Exit.
K. Hen. Here, Fluellen; wear thou this favour for me, and stick it in thy cap. When Alençon and myself were down together, I plucked this glove from his helmet: if any man challenge this, he is a friend to Alençon, and an enemy to our person; if thou encounter any such, apprehend him, an thou dost me love.
Flu. Your grace does me as great honours, as can be desired in the hearts of his subjects: I would fain see the man, that has but two legs, that shall find himself affrighted at this glove, that is all; but I would fain see it once, and please Got of his grace, that I might see.
K. Hen. Knowest thou Gower?
Flu. He is my dear friend, and please you.
K. Hen. Pray thee, go seek him, and bring him to my tent.
Flu. I will fetch him. [Exit.
K. Hen. My lord of Warwick, and my brother
Gower. Follow Fluellen closely at the heels.
The glove, which I have given him for a favour,
May happily purchase him a box o' the ear:
It is the soldier's; I, by bargain, should Wear it myself. Follow, good cousin Warwick:
If that the soldier strike him, (as I judge
By his blunt bearing, he will keep his word)
Some sudden mischief may arise of it,
For I do know Fluellen valiant,
And, touch'd with choler, hot as gunpowder;
And quickly will return an injury:
Follow, and see there be no harm between them.—
Go you with me, uncle of Exeter.
[Exeunt.

SCENE VIII.—Before King Henry's Pavilion.

Enter Gower and Williams.

Will. I warrant it is to knight you, captain.
Enter Fluellen.

Flu. Got's will wilt be pleas'd, captain, I beseech you now, come space to the king: there is more goot toward you, peradventure, than is in your knowledge to dream of.

Will. Sir, know you this glove?
Flu. Know the glove? I know, the glove is a goot.
Will. I know this, and thus I challenge it.

Flu. 'Sblood! an arrant traitor, as any's in the universal world, or in France, or in England.
Gove. How now, sir! you villain?
Will. Do you think I'll be forsworn?
Flu. Stand away, captain Gower: I will give treasure my payment into plows I warrant you.
Will. I am no traitor.
Flu. That's a lie in thy throat.—I charge you in his majesty's name, apprehend him: he is a friend of the duke Alençon's.

Enter Warwick and Gloster.

War. How now, how now! what's the matter?
Flu. My lord of Warwick, here is, praised be God for it! a most contagious treason come to light. led you, as you shall desire in a summer's day. Here is his majesty.

Enter King Henry and Exeter.

K. Hen. How now! what's the matter?
Flu. My liege, here is a villain, and a traitor, that look your grace, has struck the glove which your majesty is take out of the helmet of Alençon.
Will. My liege, this was my glove; here is the fellow of it: and he that I gave it to in charge promised it wear in his cap. I promised to strike him if he did me this man with my glove in his cap, and I have been as good as my word.
Flu. Your majesty hear now, saving your majesty's manhood, what an arrant, rashly, beggarly, low knave it is. I hope your majesty is peer me testimony and witness, and avouchments, that this is the glove of Alençon, that your majesty is give me, in your conscience now.
K. Hen. Give me thy glove, soldier: look here in the fellow of it.
'T was I, indeed, thou promisedst to strike;
And thou hast given me most bitter terms.
Flu. An please your majesty, let his neck answer for it, if there is any martial law in the world.
K. Hen. How canst thou make me satisfaction?
Will. All offences, my lord, come from the heart never came any from mine, that might offend yon majesty.
K. Hen. It was ourself thou didst abuse.
Will. Your majesty came not like yourself: ye appeared to me but as a common man; witness th night, your garments, your lowliness; and what yec highness suffered under that shape, I beseech you, tak it for your own fault, and not mine: for had you bee as I took you for, I had made no offence; therefore, beseech your highness, pardon me.
K. Hen. Here, uncle Exeter, fill this glove wit crowns,
And give it to this fellow.—Keep it, follow,
And wear it for an honour in thy cap,
Till I do challenge it.—Give him the crowns.—
And, captain, you must needs be friends with him.
Flu. By this day and this light, the fellow has metti enough in his belly.—Hold, there is twelve pence f you, and I pray you to serve Got, and keep you out o pawls, and prabbles, and quarrels, and dimensions and, I warrant you, it is the better for you.
Will. I will none of your money.
Flu. It is with a goot will. I can tell you, it will serve you to mend your shoes: come, whereshould you be so pashful? your shoes is not so goot: 'tis goot silling, I warrant you, or I will change it.
KING HENRY V.

Enter an English Herald.

K. HEN. Now, herald, are the dead number'd?
Her. Here is the number of the slaughter'd French.

[Delivers a Paper.]

K. HEN. What prisoners of good sort are taken, uncle?
Er. Charles, duke of Orleans, nephew to the king;
John duke of Bourbon, and lord Bourguiset;
Of other lords, and barons, knights, and squires,
Fall fifteen hundred, besides common men.

K. HEN. This note doth tell me of ten thousand French
That in the field lie slain: of princes, in this number,
And nobles bearing banners, there lie dead.

One hundred twenty-six: added to these,
Of knights, squires, and gallant gentlemen,
Eight thousand and four hundred; of the which,
Five hundred were but yesterday dub'd knights:
So that, in these ten thousand they have lost,
There are but sixteen hundred mercenaries;
The rest are princes, barons, lords, knights, squires,
And gentlemen of blood and quality.
The names of those their nobles that lie dead—
Charles De-la-bret, high constable of France;
